

A

ABAISSÉ a term used in French cookery for a sheet of rolled-out pastry. Hence, abaisser means to roll out thin, as for a pastry base. The term abaisse is also used for a biscuit (cookie) or a slice of sponge cake on which a filling such as jam or cream is to be spread.

ABALONE See ormer.

ABATTOIR An establishment where livestock are slaughtered for their edible products (meat and offal) and their by-products (leather, bristles, horsehair, horns).

Until 1950, slaughtering was often carried out in France by butchers themselves on their own premises. But since 1972, for reasons of hygiene, it has had to be done in a public abattoir. EU regulations have further reduced the number of abattoirs throughout Europe and imposed strict controls. From the gastronomic point of view it is rather less desirable less than a century ago, beef cattle from Normandy, Limousin or the Nevers region would make their way slowly on foot for a distance of 200 to 400 km (125 to 250 miles) before being slaughtered in the big town, and this made their meat firmer and more tasty.

Rules govern the intake of live animals, and also the inspections of the viscera (internal organs) and the carcass. If all the inspections are satisfactory the carcass is branded as conforming to legal requirements, either national or for exchanges between EU countries.

Present-day abattoirs are becoming increasingly better equipped, incorporating cutting and sometimes packing departments, deep-freeze units or workshop for processing and cooking the meat, particularly pork. Scientific research is constantly leading to improvement.

Slaughtering in former times. In the past the relationship between people and their livestock was much more intimate. "The meat of Greek animals is god-given... For the Greeks, matters relating to butchery, religion and cooking were all mixed up in what they called thusia and what we call sacrifice....The moment when the sacrifice begins, after the procession, the moment when the blood spurts out, belongs to the gods... The altar and the earth receive it all, then with a special implement and vessel it is collected and spread over the altar... The principal ritual act is the extraction of the noble viscera, essentially the liver; then comes the cutting up of the animal, horizontally, according to a strict procedure. According to the nature of the parts, they are grilled (particularly the viscera, whose perfume is offered to the gods), cooked on a spit or boiled (the manner of cooking preferred by the Greeks, particularly as fresh meat, already naturally tough and more so when cut in this way, is difficult to eat when roasted). The portions of meat are placed on the table as an offering to the gods, and afterwards they are at the priest's disposal... The priest also receives that part which, at the start, contained the whole animal: the skin... in taking their fill of the edible parts men recognized, at the same time as they replenished their energy, the inferiority of their mortal state... in the language of Homer, to express the idea of the slaughter of livestock, there are not verbs other than those relating to offering up sacrifices to the god. (la Cuisine du sacrifice en pays grec, by M. Deteienne & J.-P. Vernant, published by Gallimard.)

Even today, in some Greek villages, the public killing of livestock is practiced as part of popular orthodox rites, followed by the distribution and consumption of the meat, boiled in large cauldrons with vegetables and herbs. This is called kourbani.

ABLUTIONS AT THE TABLE. The custom of rinsing the fingers in the course of a meal. The origin of the word (from Church Latin ablutio) is a reminder that ablution was originally a ritual practice; the person offering up a sacrifice had to purify his hands before officiating at the ceremony. Table ablutions were customary in ancient Greece and Rome, when food was taken by hand directly from the plate, as is still the practice today in the East. In Europe, since the introduction of forks, the ewer – a basin used for washing the hands – is no longer needed, and finger bowls appear on the table only with such foods as asparagus, artichokes and sea food. Linked to the practice of ablutions is that of the mouth rinse, still current at the beginning of the 19th century. In the Far East it is customary to offer to each guest, on changing from one course to another, a damp perfumed towel.

ABONDANCE. An Alpine cheese from Savoie (and an AOC one) made from unpasteurized cow's milk (minimum 45% fat content). It is moulded when half-cooked and the crust is rubbed with salt. Made since the 16th century, Abondance takes its name from the valley where it originated and the local breed of dairy cows. It is round, 8-9 cm (3-3 1/2 in) thick, weighing 7-12 kg (15-26 lb), with a colour varying from ochre to brown. The taste is subtle and nutty, with great fruitiness. The best cheese is made from the milk of Alpine herds.

ABOUKIR a French dessert made of a sponge cake cooked in a charlotte mould, then cut horizontally in slices which are sandwiched with chestnut cream. The cake is iced with coffee fondant icing and decorated with chopped pistachio nuts.

Aboukir almonds are glazed petits fours made of blanched almonds pressed. They are glazed by holding them on a skewer and dipping them into caramel or briskly boiled sugar.

ABRICOT-PAVS A fruit from the West Indies, the size of a small melon. Its only resemblance to the apricot is the colour of its flesh, which is, however, firmer than apricot flesh. After removing the thick skin and the harder white parts, the pulp is used to make jams, sorbets and fruit juices.

ABSINTHE. A famous, or infamous liqueur, Absinthe takes its name from an aromatic plant (see Artemisi), which contains an alkaloid used since ancient times as a tonic. Wormwood is the principal one of 14 herbs which are macerated in grape spirit, but hyssop and mint are also included. It is famous for its green colour, and was called the fee vertee ('green muse') in France (Although the Swiss make a blue one).

The liqueur absinthe was first made commercially by H.I. Permod in 1797. Absinthe may be served with water (as pastis are). However, a big part of the old absinthe ritual was first to balance a sugar lump on a special flat, pierced spoon over the glass and pour the spirit over it. The liqueur was hugely popular in France from the middle of the 19th century, and was taken up by the avant-garde poets and painters. It spread to London and Louisiana.

Absinthe contains a powerful drug, which has serious effects on the nervous system, and its manufacture and sale were prohibited by law in France on 16 March 1915 and subsequently across Europe. However, it was never banned totally and has crept back in the 21st century as a specialist drink. Period and the various forms of pastis are now flavoured with aniseed.

In his Grand Dictionnaire de cuisine, Alexandre Dumas relates the following anecdote:

"De Musset's fatal passion for absinthe, which incidentally perhaps gave his poetry its bitter flavour, caused the Academie to make a modest pun. De Musset was, in fact, missing many of the sittings of this august body, aware that he was in no state to attend.

"One day one of the distinguished forty members said to another: "Really, do you not think that Alfred de Musset absents himself rather too often?"

ACCOLADE, EN in France this describes the presentation on the same plate of two similar kinds of foods, leaning against each other, usually poultry and game birds. In former times meat and fish might also have been served in this manner.

ACCOMMODER. A French term meaning to prepare a dish, including the preceding operations as well as the seasoning and cooking.

ACETABULUM in Roman times, a vessel for storing vindegar (acetum in Latin). The word also indicated a measure equivalent to 275 ml (9 fl oz). The Romans used wine vinegar, plain or strongly seasoned with pepper, but in non vine-growing regions they made vinegar from fruit (figs, pears or peaches).

ACETOMEL. A syrupy mixture of honey and vinegar used in sweet-and-sour preserved fruits (such as grapes or quartered pears or quinces). The name comes from two Latin words, acetum (vinegar) and mel (honey).

ACHAR. An Indian term for a pickle. Relished throughout the Indian subcontinent, in Reunion Island, Indonesia and the West Indies and brought to Europe by the English in the 18th century, achar is made from a mixture of fruit and vegetable which are chopped and steeped in a spicy sauce, often oil – based and frequently flavoured with saffron. Exotic achars may be made from palm hearts, limes, dates rose petals, ginger and bamboo sprouts, but onions, pumpkins, cauliflower and caperas can be used in the same way. Some achars are very sharp-flavoured and piquant; others are milder and even sweet.

RECIPE

Vegetable achar with lemon

Cut thin-rinded lemons into quarters and remove the seeds. Cut some carrots, sweet (bell) peppers and seeded cucumbers into strips about 4 cm (1 ½ in) long, and cut some thing green beans and cabbage leaves into tiny florets. Steep the lemons and the vegetables separately in coarse salt. After 12 hours, wash the lemons and soak them in cold water for 24 hours, changing the water several times, then boil them in water until the quarters have become soft. Drain and dry them. When the vegetables have been steeping for 36 hours, dry them too. Finely mince or grate some onion and fresh root ginger (or use a blender). Add cayenne pepper, vinegar and powdered saffron, then some best-quality olive oil. Place the lemon quarters and vegetables in a jar and cover with the aromatized oil, Seal and store in a cool place.

ACHARD, FRANZ KARL German chemist born in Berlin, 1753; died Kunern, Silesia, 1821), whose French forebears had emigrated after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. Carrying out research into a product designed to replace cane sugar, he succeeded in 1796 in perfecting the first industrial process for the extraction of beet sugar. This invention was disregarded by the Institut de France as being of no value, but received the support of the Prussian King Frederick William III, who provided Achard with funds in 1802 for the establishment of a sugar factory in Silesia. This eventually ended in failure as production was too costly, and Achard died in poverty.

ACID The term denotes a taste sensation (it is one of the four fundamental flavours – see taste, flavour) – as well as a chemical function. Any substance is acid which, in a water solution, can give off hydrogenions. The degree of acidity is defined by the hydrogen potential (pH), the scale of which varies from 0 (very acid) to 14 (very alkaline), 7 being the pH value of pure water, which is neutral.

Mineral acids, which are generally ‘strong’ such as sulphuric acid), may be distinguished from the ‘weak’ organic acids, such as citric and malic acid in fruit, phosphoric acid in cheese, meat and fish, and tartaric acid in wine. In addition to organic acids, foods contain other assimilable acids; ascorbic acid, amino acids and fatty acids.

Culinary applications Acid foods and those to which acid (such as acetic acid or vinegar) is added are more easily preserved, for many micro-organisms do not develop when the pH value is low. Also the vitamin C content is better preserved in an acid environment.

A weak acid, such as lemon juice, prevents artichoke hearts, avocados, sliced apples, bananas, chicoy (endive) and peeled potatoes from going black through oxidation.

Acids help proteins to coagulate, which is why vinegar or lemon juice is used in a court-bouillon and in the cooking liquor of a blanquette or of poached eggs.

RECIPE

Vegetable achar with lemon

Cut thin-rinded lemons into quarters and remove the seeds. Cut some carrots, sweet (bell) peppers and seeded cucumbers into strips about 4 cm (1 ½ in) long, and cut some thing green beans and cabbage leaves into small pieces. Separate a cauliflower into tiny florets. Step the lemons and the vegetables separately in coarse salt. After 12 hours, was the lemons and soak them in cold water for 24 hours, changing the water several times, then boil them in water until the quarters have become soft. Drain and dry them. When the vegetables have been steeping for 36 hours, drain and dry them too. Finely mince or grate some onion and fresh root ginger (or use a blender). Add cayene pepper, vinegar and powdered saffron, then some best-quality olive oil. Place the lemon quarters and vegetables in a jar and cover with the aromatized oil. Seal and store in a cool place.

ACID The term denotes a taste sensation (it is one of the four fundamental flavours – see taste, flavour) as well as a chemical function. Any substance is acid which, in a water solution, can give off hydrogen ions. The degree of acidity is defined by the hydrogen potential (pH), the scale of which varies from 0 (very acid) to 14 (very alkaline), 7 being the pH value of pure water, which is neutral.

Mineral acids, which are generally ‘strong’ (such as sulphuric acid), may be distinguished from the ‘weak’ organic acids, such as citric and malic acid in fruit, phosphoric acid in cheese, meat and fish, and tartaric acid in wine. In addition to organic acids, foods contain other assimilable acids; ascorbic acid, amino acids and fatty acids.

Culinary applications. Acid foods and those to which acid (such as acetic acid or vinegar) is added are more easily, for many micro-organisms do not develop when the pH value is low. Also the vitamin C content is better preserved in an acid environment.

A weak acid, such as lemon juice, prevents artichoke hearts, avocados, sliced apples, bananas, chicoy (endive) and peeled potatoes from going black through oxidation.

Acids help proteins to coagulate, which is why vinegar or lemon juice is used in a court-bouillon and in the cooking liquor of a blanguette or of poached eggs.

Acidification is a sign of deterioration. When the lactose in milk becomes lactic acid, the milk is said to have gone sour. Sour cream, however, is sometimes used in cooking; it can be made by adding a few drops of lemon juice to fresh cream.

ACIDULATE To turn a liquid or a dish slightly acid, tart or piquant by adding a little lemon juice, vinegar or the juice of unique fruit. Acidulate also means to make sour cream by adding a few drop of lemon juice to fresh cream.

ACRA Also known as akra. A savoury fritter made by mixing a spiced puree of vegetables or fish with fritter batter. Acras, which are popular in the Caribbean, are served very hot as a starter, or with punch as cocktail snacks. Acras are also known as miranades and bonbons à l’huile, as well as ‘stamp and go’ in Jamaica and surullitos in Puerto Rico. They are most often made with salt cod, but alevin (baby salmon), mackerel and crayfish are also used, as well as breadfruit, aubergines (eggplants), palm hearts, Caribbean cabbage, pumpkin and other vegetable.

RECIPE

Salt-cod acras

Place about 500 g (18 oz) salt cod in cold water for 24 hours to remove the salt, changing the water several times. Make a fritter batter with 200 g (7 oz, 1 ¾ cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, a pinch of salt and enough water to obtain a thick batter, then leave it to stand for 1 hour. Place the desalted cod with a little cold water and a bay leaf in a saucepan; cook gently for 10 minutes. Drain and flake the fish, then mix it with 4 teaspoons olive oil, salt and cayenne pepper. Finely chop 2 shallots and 4-5 chives, then add these to the cod. Stir the cod mixture into the batter. Stiffly whisk 2-3 egg whites and fold gently into the mixture. Drop spoonfuls of the mixture into hot oil and deep-fry until crisp and golden, turning once. Drain and serve hot.

ACROAMA A spectacle which livened up a banquet in Roman times: acrobats, flute players and dancers, mimes and parodies, even combats between men or animals. Of Greek origin, the name meant 'that to which are listens'. The acroama tradition continued in different forms, through the medieval story-tellers, jugglers and mountebanks, to become a musical entertainment or accompaniment.

ADVOCAAT A liqueur made with beaten egg yolks, sugar and spirit, served both before and after meals. The best-known brands are made in the Netherlands. It is sometimes used in mixes, especially the snowball (with fizzy lemonade).

AFRICA See Black Africa, North Africa, South Africa.

AFRICAÏEN, À L' The French term is used to describe an accompaniment of olive-shaped potato pieces, which are browned in butter, and two other vegetables – cucumber, aubergine (eggplant) or courgette (zucchini) - which are sliced and either sautéed in oil or steamed. This accompaniment is served with large joints of roast mutton, which may be flavoured with powdered rosebuds (as in Tunisia) or with a combination of herbs and spices, including thyme, bay, cumin, cloves or coriander (cilantro). The sauce for dishes served à l'africaine is a rich demi-glace flavoured with tomato.

AGAPE A meal that the early Christians took together. The word comes from the Greek agape, meaning love, and was originally used to describe a frugal meal. After the mass the faithful would come together to share a light meal of bread and wine, the aim of which was to recall the ideals of sharing and charity preached by the Christians.

AGAR-AGAR A viscous substance, also known as Bengal isinglass and Japanese or Ceylon moss, agar-agar is an extract of seaweed from the Indian and Pacific Oceans. It is the vegetarian gelling agent - and produces a firmer jelly which does not melt as readily as gelatine. It is principally used in the food industry, in desserts, ice creams, sauces and canned soup. It comes either in the form of small transparent crumpled strips of various colours, or in loaves or powdered form. When dissolved in water over a low heat, its gum blends with the water, on cooling, it sets to a jelly. Called Kanten in Japan, it is added to soups.

AGARIC To psallote Any of genus of field and woodland mushrooms with a white cap, pink then brownish gills, and a stalk bearing a single or a double ring. According to the species, the flesh may be tinted with pink, reddish-brown, brown or yellow. The group includes many edible mushrooms (see mushrooms) with a delicate flavour and smell, often on aniseed.

AGAVE The Latin and popular name of a family of large plants with enormous spiked fleshy leaves, originating from Mexico, of which Maguey is one type. The fermented sap is used in several Latin American countries to make fermented drinks, such as pulque, mescal and tequila.

AGEING Vieillessement The process of keeping a wine with the intention of improving its qualities of taste and bouquet. Most wines spend a period of time in tank after fermentation, but the ageing process usually refers to a period spent in wooden casks, often oak, which allows a gentle form of oxidation to take place, as well as interaction between the wine and wood. Bottle ageing is also an important phase in the maturation of many fine wines, such as traditional red wines of Bordeaux, top-quality Sauternes, vintage port and fine wines from around the world, particularly those made from the Cabernet Sauvignon grape. Wines such as Sherry, Madeira and Vin Doux Naturel are aged in the presence of air to promote controlled oxidation which is an important part of their flavour development.

AGEING OF MEAT The slow change that takes place in a meat when it is left for a period of time and reaches a state in which it is suitable for consumption or further processing. After the animal is killed, the flesh is still warm and it passes through a stage known in France as pantelante (twitching). Then rigor mortis sets in. In the next stage, rassise, the flesh becomes more tender and flavoursome as the sinews are less taut and the muscles relax. The speed and intensity with which meat ages is influenced both by the quality of the meat (which is affected by the animal's diet) and the ambient temperature. See hanging.

AGNES SOREL A French garnish consisting of cooked button mushrooms, breast of chicken and pickled ox (beef) tongue, cut according to the dish being garnished (omelette, fried or braised veal, or supreme of chicken). In Agnes Sorel soup the garnish is cut into thin strips and added to the thickened soup.

Mistress of the French King Charles VII, Agnes Sorel was a celebrated cook who gave her name to several dishes. 'To attract and keep the attentions of Charles VII, she engaged the best chefs of the time. She had no hesitation in making personal appearances in the kitchens. Two of her creations will go down to posterity; woodcock salmis and her little timbales.' (Christian Guy, Une Histoire de la cuisine française, published by les Productions de Paris.)

RECIPES

Agnes Sorel tartlets

Fill tartlet cases with a layer of creamed chicken puree, containing chopped truffles if desired. Surround with a border of small rounds of cold cooked chicken breast and pickled ox (beef) tongue. On each tartlet place a mushroom cap which has been cooked in a white court-bouillon. Warm through in a preheated oven at 160° C (325° F, gas 3) for 10 minutes. Pour cream sauce over the mushrooms before serving.

Agnes Sorel timbales

Butter a dozen dariole moulds, put a very thin layer of chopped truffles in half of them and in the other half a similar layer of chopped cooked pickled ox (beef) tongue. Prepare 500 g (18 oz) chicken mousseline (see forcemeat) and flavour it with a few spoonfuls of soubise* puree; the mixture should be thick. Cover the base and sides of the moulds with the chicken mousseline. Fill the centre with a salpicon of chicken and truffles, bound with a little reduced Madeira sauce, then cover the tops of the moulds with a final layer of chicken mousseline. Place the moulds in shallow pan and cook in bain marie for 12-15 minutes. When ready to serve, turn out of the moulds and arrange on a dish; serve with Madeira sauce separately.

AGRAZ A sorbet made from almonds, verjuice and sugar, popular in North Africa and Spain (its name is the Spanish for verjuice), Agraz, which has an acid flavour, is served in large sorbet glasses and may be sprinkled with kirsch.

AGUARDIENTE An alcoholic spirit from a Spanish-speaking country. In vine-growing regions (like Argentina, Chile and Spain) it is made from grape must, and so is the equivalent of the French marc or the Italian grappa. Spanish ones range from the crudest local Galician spirit to the sophisticated range of anis spirit, sold under brand or regional names. Like grappa they may also be fruit-flavoured (see anisette). Aguardiente may also be made from distilled sugar-cane molasses called caña in the Mediterranean and Central America.

AID A French way of serving flatfish fillets (brill or turbot). It is distinguished from preparations a la florentine by the addition of paprika to the Mornay sauce and the spinach.

AIGO BOULIDO Provençal name for a soup made from boiled water (hence its name, which may also be spelled bouido or bullido) and garlic. It is one of the oldest culinary traditions of this region, where they have the saying I aigo bouldido suave lo vito (garlic soup saves one's life).

RECIPE

Aigo bouldido

Bring 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{3}$ cups) water to the boil. Season with $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt and 6 crushed garlic cloves. Boil for about 10 minutes, then add a small sprig of sage, preferably fresh, one quarter of a bay leaf and a small sprig, preferably fresh, one quarter of a bay leaf and a small sprig of thyme. Remove at once from the heat and leave to infuse for several minutes, remove the herbs. Blend 1 egg yolk with a little of the cooled soup, then stir it back into the soup to thicken it. Pour the soup over slices of bread which have been sprinkled with olive oil.

Aigo bouldido with poached eggs.

Poach some eggs in aigo bouldido stock. Place a slice of bread in each hot soup plate and top this with a poached egg. Ladle the soup over and sprinkle with chopped parsley to serve.

If preferred, 2 chopped and seeded tomatoes, a small sprig of fennel, a pinch of saffron, a piece of dried orange zest and 4 sliced cooked potatoes may be added to the basic aigo bouldido stock. In this case serve the poached eggs separately on the potatoes and pour the flavoured soup over the slices of bread sprinkled with chopped parsley.

AIGUEBELLE A plant-flavoured liqueur made at the Aiguebelle monastery near Montelimar, France.

AIGUILLETTE The French name for a long narrow fillet, taken from either side of the breastbone of poultry (mainly duck) and game birds. This separates easily from the underside of the breast meat and is a popular chef's item for small dishes. An aiguillette can also be a thin strip of any meat. In France the tip of a rump of beef is called atiguillette baronne.

RECIPE

Jellied beef aiguillettes

Put 1 calf's foot and some veal bones in a saucepan, cover with cold water and bring to the boil. Drain, then cool them and wipe dry. Slice 575 g (1 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) new carrots and 1 large onion, quarter 2 tomatoes and peel 2 small garlic cloves.

Heat 2 tablespoons oil in a flameproof casserole and brown 1.25 kg. (2 ¾ lb) slivers of beef aiguillettes which, if possible, have been larded by the butcher. Add the sliced carrots and onion, the calf's foot and the veal bones; continue to cook until the onions are coloured. Remove any excess oil with a small ladle, then add the tomato quarters, a bouquet garni, a small piece of orange zest, a pinch of salt, pepper (a few turns of the pepper mill), a dash of cayenne pepper, 250 ml (8 fl oz, 1 cup) dry white wine and 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) water. Cover and slowly bring to the boil, then place the casserole in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4). Cook for about 2 ½ hours or until the meat is tender, stirring the meat from time.

In a large uncovered pan, simmer 30 small peeled button onions with 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter, 2 teaspoons caster (superfine) sugar, a pinch of salt and just enough water to cover them. Cook until the onions in the caramel which has formed. Drain the aiguillettes (reserving the cooking liquid) and arrange them in a deep dish or terrine with the sliced carrots and the small onions. Set aside until cold, then refrigerate.

Remove the bones from the calf's foot and cut the flesh into cubes, strain the cooking liquid back into a saucepan, add the calf's foot cubes and boil for about 10 minutes, then strain. Dissolve 15 g (½ oz, 2 envelopes) powdered gelatine in the minimum of water, then add the strained cooking liquid and 100 ml (4 fl oz, ½ cup) Madeira; check seasoning, then leave to cool until syrupy. Coat the aiguillettes with the setting liquid, then refrigerate until set and ready to serve.

AILLADE A feature of the cuisine of Southern France, which varies according to the region where it is made. In Provence, it is either a vinaigrette sauce with garlic or a slice of bread rubbed with garlic, soaked in olive oil and grilled (broiled) (pain à l'aillade). In Languedoc, the aillade from the Toulouse area is a variation on aioli mayonnaise made with blanched and ground walnuts, while in the region of Albi aillade is another name for aioli.

RECIPE

Aillade sauce

Peel 4 garlic cloves, crush or finely chop them and place in a basin with salt and pepper. Gradually blend in 2 tablespoons olive oil, stirring well, Mix in 2-3 teaspoons vinegar, a few springs of chopped parsley and, if desired, 2 tablespoons chopped shallots and chives.

AILEE A French condiment of the consistency of mustard, made with breadcrumbs, ground almonds and garlic, mixed with stock. The origin of ailee is uncertain, but it is likely that it originated in Paris, where in the 13th century no fewer than nine merchants are known to have dealt in it.

AIOLI, also known as ailloli, A Provençal emulsion sauce of garlic and olive oil, best known in its mayonnaise form with egg yolks. The Provençal name comes from ail (garlic) and oli (dialect for oil). The Spanish alioli of raw garlic pounded with oil was first recorded by Pliny in the first century AD in Taragona (on the east coast), it too is now made with added yolks. Leon Daudet maintained that the use of garlic in the food of Mediterranean peoples went back to the beginning of cooking, and he considered the culinary use of garlic had achieved its peak of perfection in aioli. Frederick Mistral, who in 1891 founded a journal entitled L'Aioli, wrote epitomizes the heat, the power, and the joy of the Provençal sun, but it has another virtue – it drives away flies'

Aioli is served with cold poached fish, bouillade (fish soup), hard-boiled eggs, salad, snails or cold meats. But when a Provençal talks of a grand aioli, which is eaten only two or three times a year, he means a sumptuous dish which, as well as the sauce, includes poached salt cod, boiled beef and mutton, stewed vegetables – carrots, celery, green beans, beetroot (beef), cauliflower and chick peas – and, as a garnish, snails and hard-boiled eggs.

RECIPES

Aioli

Peel 4 large garlic cloves (split them in two and remove the germ if necessary). Pound the garlic with 1 egg yolk in a mortar or blender. Add salt and pepper and, while pounding or blending, very gradually add 250 ml (8 fl oz, 1 cup) olive oil, as for a mayonnaise. The sauce is ready when it is thick and creamy. The bulk of the sauce is sometimes increased by adding 2 teaspoons mashed boiled potato.

Aioli without eggs

Cook a whole head of garlic, unpeeled, in a hot oven for about 30 minutes. Peel the cloves and mash to a puree. Add salt and pepper and thicken like a mayonnaise working in 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) olive oil and 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) groundnut (peanut) oil.

Cod aioli

Cook 575 (1 ¼ lb) small potatoes in their skins in salted water. Keep a little of the cooking water and thicken it with 100 g (4 oz, ½ cup) aioli (made with egg yolks). Coat the potatoes with the aioli sauce and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Poach 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) soaked and drained salt cod in a mixture of water and milk. Arrange the cod on plates and put the potatoes on top.

AISY CENDRE. A soft cheese from Burgundy made with unpasteurized cow's milk (minimum 45% fat content), with a washed crust. Made in farms in the Monthand region of the core d' Or, it is a round cheese 10 cm (4 in) in diameter and from 3-6 cm is matured beneath a layer of ashes of vine shoots, from which it acquires its name and its powerful earthy flavour.

ALBACORE in cuisine, canned white tuna, and also the two fish from which it comes, of the family scombroidae. In French-speaking countries albacore refers to the yellow-finned tuna, the most gaily coloured of the tunas, a fish that can reach 2 metres (6 ft) long and a weight of 200 kg (440 lb.). it is fished in the tropical waters of the Atlantic, and off the African and Japanese coasts. Its lightly-pink flesh provides the greater part of the white tuna that is canned in Japan it is cooked as sbibi.

In Britain, America and Australia albacore is Tunmus alalunga (germon in French). From this comes the canned white tuna of the highest quality. Known as the long-fin (sometimes the white) tuna, it is half the size of the other – it rarely reaches 1 metre (3 fit). It swims in the warm waters of the world and is an eminent sporting fish. The flesh can be tried, poached or braised, but raw is highly prized in Japan for susbi and sasbini.

ALBERT An English sauce dedicated to Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, husband and consort of Queen Victoria, it is made from a white consomme seasoned with grated horseradish, thickened with breadcrumbs and enriched with cream and egg yolks, Mustard thinned with vinegar or lemon juice is added to give a final piquant touch. This hot sauce accompanies joints of braised beef.

The name Albert is also given to a method of serving sole, dedicated to Albert Blazer, maire d'hotel at Maxim's between the World Wars.

ALBIGOEOISE, A L' This garnish, named for the town of Albi, consists of stuffed tomatoes and potato croquettes; it accompanies joints of meat.

The term is also applied to methods of preparing dishes using products from sought-western France.

RECIPE

Shoulder of lamb a lalbigeoise

Bone the should and fill the bone cavity with a stuffing of half sausagemeat and half chopped pig's liver, seasoned with garlic, chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Roll the shoulder as for a ballotine and tie to secure. Weight the stuffed joint. Brown the rolled shoulder in very hot fat, then place it in a roasting dish; surround with quartered potatoes (or whole small new potatoes) and 12 blanched garlic cloves, season with salt and pepper and sprinkle with a little melted fat. Cook the lamb in a preheated oven at about 200°C (400°F, gas 6), allowing 20 minutes per 450 g (1 lb), plus 20 minutes more. Sprinkle with chopped parsley to serve.

This dish is traditionally cooked and served in an ovenproof earthenware dish.

ALBUFERA, A LA D' The name given to several baute cuisine (notably chicken and duck) dedicated by Careme to Napoleon's Marshal Suchet, Duc d'albufera (the name of the lake at Valencia, near which he won a victory over the English).

RECIPES

Albufera sauce

Prepare a supreme sauce using 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) thick rich children veloute sauce, 400 ml (14 fl oz, 1 ¾ cups) white chicken stock, 400 ml (14 fl oz, 1 ¾ cups) crème fraiche and 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) butter. While the sauce is cooking, sweat 150 g (5 oz) sliced sweet (bell) peppers in 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) butter. Allow to cool, then puree the peppers in a blender. Work in 150 g (5 oz, 2/3 cup) butter and press through a sieve. Reduce the supreme sauce to 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups), then add 3 tablespoons veal stock and 2 teaspoons the pepper butter, Rub through a fine sieve. Serve the sauce hot.

Chicken a la d'albufera

Half-cook some rise in a white stock and add a salpicon of truffles and fole gras. Stuff a chicken with this mixture and poach in the white stock. Arrange it on a serving dish, surrounded with an Albufera garnish – pickled ox (beef) tongue, sliced and sauteed calves' sweetbreads and mushrooms. Coat with Albufera sauce.

Ducklings a la d'Albufera

Dress and truss 2 young ducklings. Cut 12 pieces of smoked Bayonne ham in to heart shapes. Put into a saucepan 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) best butter, the pieces of ham, then the ducklings, a bouquet garni, an onion stuck with 2 cloves and half a glass of Malaga (or another Muscat) wine. Cover the contents of the saucepan with a circle of buttered paper. In a restaurant this is cooked by placing the pan on a paillasse (brick hearth with charcoal fire), with flames above and below but not too fierce, so that the ducklings cook without frying. At home cook in a preheated oven at 200°C (200°F, gas6). After 20 minutes, turn the ducklings and remove the onion and the bouquet. After a further 20 minutes, train them, untruss and place on a serving dish. They should be well browned. Garnish with thins slices of ham. Skin off the fat from the juices in the pan and add 2 tablespoons financiere* sauce with the fat removed. Add 2 punnets of lightly fried very small mushrooms and coat them with the sauce.

Sirloin a la d'Albufera

Aloyau a la d'albufera (from Careme's recipe) Braise a sirloin joint. Make some turtle sauce, add a little butter and some of the beef juice, then stir in a plateful of sliced and sautéed calves. Sweetbreads, a plateful of sliced pickled ox (bee) tongue and some mushrooms. Spoon some of this ragout round the beef and then cook to reheat. Garnish the dish with slices of young rabbit fillet à la d'Orly (egged, crumbed and deep-fried) and 10 skewers laid on the beef, each assembled as follows: first a fine double cockscomb, a slice of young rabbit, à la d'Orly, a cockscomb, a large glazed truffle, a cockscomb, and finally a glazed black truffle. Serve more ragout in two sauceboats.

ALCARRAZA A porous earthenware vessel used for cooling drinks. The name is Spanish and derives from the Arabic al karaz (pitcher). It was introduced into France in the 18th century. The Alcarraza is suspended, preferably in the shade, in a draughty place. Liquid oozes out through the porous surface of the vessel and evaporates, thus lowering the temperature and cooling the contents of the pitcher.

ALCAZAR A French gâteau made with a base of enriched shortcrust pastry covered with a layer of apricot marmalade and topped with a kirsch-flavoured almond meringue mixture. The gâteau is decorated with apricot marmalade and lattice of almond paste. It keeps well for two or three days.

RECIPE

Alcazar gâteau

Line a flan tin (pie pan) with 250 g (9 oz) pâte sucée (see pastry), prick the base and spread with 2 tablespoons apricot marmalade or jam. Whisk 4 egg whites and 125 g (4 ½ oz, 1/2 cup) caster (superfine) sugar over heat to a stiff meringue, then fold in 50 g (2 oz, ½ cup) ground almonds, 50 g (2 oz, ½ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour and 2 tablespoons melted butter mixed with 1 tablespoon kirsch. Pour this mixture into the prepared flan case and cook in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) until the top has browned. Turn the gâteau out of the tin and cool it on a wire tray.

Using a piping bag with a fluted nozzle, pipe softened almond paste into a lozenge-shaped lattice over the top of the gâteau and then as a border around the edge. Replace it in the oven to brown the almond paste. Over a low heat reduce 200 g (7 oz, ¾ cup) apricot marmalade or jam and fill each of the lozenge shapes, then place half a pistachio nut in the centre of each one. If desired, the border may also be glazed with apricot jam and coated with chopped roasted pistachio nuts.

ALCOHOL. The common name for ethanol. The word was first used by alchemists who derived it from the Arabic al kohl., which came to mean any product that represented concentration or the essence of any raw material. From that it came to be known as the product of distillation. In the Middle Ages alcohol was considered an elixir of life (acqua vitae, from which it acquired the name eau-de-vie) and was mostly reserved for therapeutic use. It came to be used as a drink towards the end of the 15th century, when it was infused with all kinds of herbs and plants. Finally, the invention of the rectification process and the continuous still transformed it into a product for the mass market.

Ethanol is produced by the action of yeast on sugars during the fermentation process. These sugars are the naturally occurring sugars in fruit such as grapes, pears, apples and berries or are obtained from starch sources such as cereals, potatoes and sugar beet, modified by the action of malting enzymes into fermentable sugars.

The source of the fermentable sugar gives each product its own character – grapes ferment into wine, pears into perry, apples into cider and cereals into beer. Distillation of these liquors creates another range of drinks such as brandy, eaux-de-vie, marc and whisky. Vegetable substrates usually pass from fermentation to distillation into products such as vodka and gin. In some parts of the world fermentable sugars are provided by plants such as sugar cane, agave and palm, which in turn produce rum, tequila and various alcoholic liquors.

The alcoholic content of a wine or spirit is now usually measured as the percentage by volume of pure ethanol in the liquor, measured at 20°C (69°F). This has largely replaced the Gay-Lussac scale. Alcohol has antiseptic properties and nutritional value, but it becomes toxic when there is more than a certain amount in the blood.

Alcoholic drinks may be drunk on their own or with soft drinks. They are also widely used in cooking. For example wine, beer and spirits can all be used in savoury and sweet recipes.

AL DENTE An Italian expression (meaning literally 'to the tooth') indicating the correct degree of cooking for pasta, which must be removed from the heat and drained while it is still firm enough to bite into. The expression may also be applied to certain vegetables, such as green beans, which are served while still retaining crunchiness.

ALEMBIC Apparatus used in distillation. The name derives from the Arabic al'inhiq (distilling vessel).

The traditional alembic, made of copper, comprises a boiler (called a cucurbit) in which the mixture to be distilled is heated, a cap where the vapours collect, and a bent pipe that carries the vapours to the serpentine, a spiral coil passing through a cold bath, where they condense. This type of alembic, known as charentais, discontinu, or a repasse (because the alcohol passes through it twice), is used for distilling most of the great eaux-de-vie or alcoholic spirits, but alembics of the continuous distillation type are also used - for Armagnac, for example - and double-towered alembics, in which the alcohol does not have to pass through twice, are used in industry.

ALEXANDRA The name given to several French dishes (chicken consomme, parmentier soup with vegetables, fillets of sole, sautéed chicken, potroast quail, noisette uotlets and tournedos steak), served with a sauce and garnished with a thin slice of truffle and with asparagus tips (if the sauce is white) or quartered artichoke hearts (if it is brown).

Alexandra is also the name of a cocktail based on crème de cacao (chocolate liqueur).

RECIPE

Sautéed chicken Alexandra

Joint a chicken and saute the joints in butter until cooked. Remove and keep them hot. Add 100 ml (4 fl oz, ½ cup) white stock to the saute pan and cook briskly to reduce it, then add 1 ½ cup white stock to the saute pan cook briskly to reduce it, then add 1 ½ oz, 3 tablespoons) butter, then strain the sauce. Arrange the chicken in a dish, coat with the sauce and garnish with buttered asparagus tips.

ALGAE Simple plants which constitute the flora of the seas, lakes and coasts. According to their pigmentation, algae are classified as green (including ulva or sea lettuce, chlorella, chondrus), brown (including fucus and laminaria), red (porphyra) or blue-green (primitive organisms resembling bacteria). Some of them are edible.

Ancient Britons, the Irish, the river-dwellers in Chad and the Mexican Indians all appear to have been very early collectors of algae, with which they made bread and a type of pancake. In the Far East algae have always had particular gastronomic value. Their present day role in the food industry worldwide on account of their gum content (see agar-agar, emulsifer, gelling agent) makes growing them big business.

Algae are quite used in Celtic cookery in Europe, the most common being porphyra, rhodymenia and chondrus, (see carrageen, laver, sloke.) Chondrus is used as gelling agent for desserts on both sides of the Atlantic. In Japan six kinds of algae are commonly eaten, constituting 10% of total food production. These algae are either taken from the sea or cultivated along the coasts. Nori, known as laver in the west, is dried and compressed into violet-coloured leaves, then used for wrapping balls of rice or fish. It is also used in powdered form as an iodized condiment. Dried kombu (kelp) is used to season stocks (principally dashi), rice and vegetables. It is also cut into strips and made into little 'nests' which are fried and served with vegetables. Wakame (used for miso soup) and hijiki are used to make soups and to colour various dishes.

ALGERIENNE, A L' This French garnish consists of sweet potato, either as croquettes or sautéed, and chopped tomatoes seasoned with garlic. It is served with large or small pieces of meat (paupiettes) as well as sautéed chicken. Sweet potato puree is used for the soup crème algérienne.

ALHAGI The Latin name of a small Mediterranean shrub also called camel's thorn. It has edible seeds that, in intense heat, exude a sugary substance which can be shaken from the bush. This may be the manna (from the Hebrew manhu, 'what is it?') mentioned in the Bible.

ALI-BAB One of the dishes named in honour of Henri Babinsky (born Paris, 1855, died Paris, 1931), whose pseudonym it was. A professional engineer from the Ecole des Mines, he published Gastronomie pratique under this name in 1907. During his travels throughout the world prospecting for gold and diamonds, he collected many recipes and cooked for his travelling companions. His book was republished several times with various additions, including an interesting study on treatment for obesity among gourmands (1923). This well-documented and humorous work is still of great interest historically and gastronomically, though of limited practical use.

RECIPE

Ali-bab salad

Turn some peeled shrimps in mayonnaise, arrange them in a mound in the centre of a serving dish or salad bowl and sprinkle with chopped fresh herbs. Surround with the following; courgette (zucchini) matchsticks, blanched in salted water; sweet potato, cut into small balls and boiled; hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg cut into quarters; small tomatoes, peeled, seeded and quartered. Sprinkle the salad with vinaigrette and serve garnished with nasturtium flowers.

ALICIA Sermonlina made by the ancient Romans from a variety of semi-hard wheat known as zea, which was crushed in a wooden mortar. After sifting, it was divided into three categories according to its fineness, and whitened by the addition of crushed chalk. Alica was used to prepare gruels, cakes and special bread with raisins known as Picenum bread.

ALIGO A dish from the Auvergne region of France, made from potatoes, garlic and Cantal cheese. The cheese used must not be fully ripe; fresh Tomme cheese may be used instead, the best being Tomme de Planeze. The most difficult part of the preparation is mixing the cheese with the cooked potatoes, either as a puree or simply mashed with a fork.

A sweet aligot may be made by pouring a generous helping of run over the aligot in a gratin dish, and setting light to it.

RECIPE

aligot

smoothly mash 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) soft fondant potatoes (cooked very slowly in butter in a covered pan), add 1-2 crushed garlic cloves, 1 tablespoon bacon fat and sufficient milk to make a puree. Turn the puree into a bain marie, add 575 g (1 ¼ lb) thinly sliced fresh Laguiole cheese and stir vigorously with a wooden spoon until the cheese is evenly blended into the potato. The aligot is cooked when a smooth flowing elastic puree is formed.

ALIGOTE A white grape with high acidity, grown in Burgundy and in part of Eastern Europe. Dry and assertive, it is the traditional base for the aperitif Kir or vin blanc cassis.

ALIZE PAQUAUDE also known as Alise Pacaude. A traditional Easter griddle cake from the Vendee region of France, also called gache vendeenne. It is made with bread dough enriched with butter and eggs, sweetened and flavoured with orange-flower water, and can weigh up to 2 kg (4½ lb). The cake is supposed to be made on Easter Saturday, and the dough is left to rise for only 2 hours. The name means 'badly risen'.

ALLEMANDE A white sauce, described as 'German' to differentiate it from the brown espagnole 'Spanish' sauce, although both these basic sauces are of French origin. Made with veal or poultry stock, allemande sauce and eggs; made with a fish or mushroom fumet, it is served with fish.

RECIPE

allemande sauce

(from Careme's recipe) Prepare some veloute; pour half of it into a saucepan with an equal quantity of good chicken consommé containing some mushroom skin and stalks but no salt. Place the pan on a high heat and stir with a wooden spoon until it boils. Then cover the pan and simmer gently for about an hour to reduce the sauce; skim off the fat and return it to a high heat, stirring with the wooden spoon so that it does not stick to the pan. When the sauce is thoroughly reduced and well thickened, it should leave a fairly thick covering on the surface of the spoon. When poured, it should make a coating similar to that of redcurrant jelly at its final stage of cooking.

Remove the saucepan from the heat and make a liaison of 4 egg yolks mixed with 2 tablespoons cream. Put this through a sieve and add a knob of unsalted butter, the size of a small egg, cut up into small pieces. Pour this a little at a time into the veloute, taking care to stir with the wooden spoon to thicken as the liaison blends in. When completely thickened, place the allemande on a moderate heat, stirring all the time, and as soon as it has begun to bubble slightly, remove from the heat and add a dash of grated nutmeg. When well blended, press through a sieve.

Allemande sauce based on fish stock

This sauce is prepared in the same way as that based on meat stock except that the meat stock used in the preparation is replaced with a rich fish stock. This sauce may also be flavoured with a concentrated mushroom stock.

allemande sauce based on meat stock

Using a wooden spatula, mix together 2 or 3 egg yolks (according to size) and 400 ml (14 fl oz, 1¾ cup) white meat stock in a heavy-based saucepan over a low heat. Then stir in 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) veloute. Bring to the boil, whisking constantly to prevent the sauce from sticking, and constantly to prevent the sauce from sticking, and reduce until it coats the spatula. Check seasoning. Cut 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) butter into small pieces and mix into the sauce. Place in a bain marie, topping up the water from time to time. This sauce may be flavoured with a fumet of truffle or mushrooms.

ALLEMANDE, A L This French description is applied to a dish served with a white allemande sauce (see above). Alternatively it describe a method of preparing marinated game inspired by German cuisine: haunch or saddle of venison, saddle of hare or rabbit roasted with the vegetables from the marinade. A sauce to serve with the game is prepared by deglazing with the marinade.

RECIPE

calves' brains a l'allemande

Poach the brains in a court-bouillon, drain them and cut each into 4 slices. Coat these with flour and cook with alemande sauce.

ALLONGER The French term for extending a sauce, for example adding a liquid (water, stock, wine or bouillon) to a sauce that is too thick or reduced too much. The sauce is thus made thinner, but its flavour is less concentrated.

ALLSPICE A spice, also known as Jamaican pepper and (in France) as power giroflee, that is ground from the unique berries of Pimenta officinalis, a tree which grows in the Caribbean, Honduras and Mexico. Allspice has a strong odour of nutmeg, cinnamon and cloves, which is why it is sometimes mistaken for a mixture of different spices. It is used to season sausages, salt beef and pork, pickles, sauces, soured herrings, stuffings and even Christmas cake.

ALLUMETTE A small pastry strip (the French means 'match') cut from a long rectangle of puff pastry. They are topped with a savoury spread, garnished and baked. If this savoury is to be served hot, the spread whether made from one item (cheese, anchovies or shrimps) or a mixture, may be sandwiched between two layers of pastry. Iced allumettes are small individual pastries. According to Lacam, a pastrycook called Planta, who came from Dinard but was of Swiss origin, created these when using up some leftover icing (frosting).

Allumette potatoes are very thin matchstick-shaped fried potatoes.

Allumette potatoes

Cut some potatoes into small matchsticks 5 mm (1/4 in) thick, using a variety that does not disintegrate in cooking. Wash and dry them, then plunge into very hot fat and cook without letting them change colour. Drain, then plunge them back into the hot fat and cook until just golden. Drain and serve.

Iced sweet allumettes

Roll out some puff pastry to a thickness of 3 mm (1/8 in), and cut it into strips 8 cm (3 in) wide. Spread with a thin layer of royal icing (frosting). Cut the strips into 2.5-3 cm (1 - 1 1/4 in) lengths and place them on a baking sheet. Bake in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) until the icing turns cream-coloured (about 10 minutes).

Savoury allumettes

Roll out some puff pastry to about 5 mm (1/4 in) thickness, and divide it into strips 8 cm (3 in) wide. Spread these with the chosen well-chilled filling, and top, if desired, a pastry strip or a selected garnish. Cut the bands into rectangles 2-3 cm (3/4 - 1 1/4 in) wide, and place them on a baking sheet. Bake in a preheated oven at about 200°C (400°F, Gas 6) for 12-15 minutes. Serve very hot.

Savoury allumettes can be prepared with the following fillings.

- with anchovies Anchovy butter filling, garnished with anchovy fillets (may be served cold).
- a fandalouse Chicken filling with paprika and a salpicon of lean ham and onions cooked slowly in butter.
- a la chalonaise Chicken filling with cockscombs and kidneys and diced mushrooms.
- a la chavetter Fish filling with crayfish butter, garnished with crayfish tails and truffles.
- a la carlate Veal filling with a salpicon of pickled tongue.
- A la florentine Spinach gently cooked in butter, mixed with bechamel sauce and grated Gruyere; dust allumettes with Parmesan cheese before baking.
- a la toscane when giving the last 3 folds to puff pastry, sprinkle with very finely grated cheese. Dust allumettes with parmesan cheese before baking.

ALMOND the fruit of the almond tree. On France the term is more loosely used for the almond kernel and is extended to the kernels within the stones, pits – of such fruits as the apricot and peach.) the outer layer of the almond is oval, green and velvety to the touch, it encloses a thick-shelled nut containing one or two seeds. Originating in Asia and known by the Romans as Greek nuts, it was explained by the Arabs for a range of culinary possibilities. Almonds were widely used in the Middle Ages to make soups, as well as sweet desserts (see blameange).

There are two varieties of almond both rich in sugar, albumen and oil: the edible sweet almond and the bitter almond, which has a very strong taste and poisonous in large amounts, containing hydrocyanic acid. California supplies half the world crop of almonds, followed by Spain and Sicily. The so-called Jordan almond (along, flat and slender -- and the best cocktail almond) is in fact from Spain, the name being a corruption of Jardin (a garden). French almonds grow in Provence and Corsica.

Fresh almonds appear early in the year. They are opened with a nutcracker and eaten for dessert. But almonds are mainly used dried and are served salted with apertifs.

Dried bitter almonds are used in small quantities to flavour cakes, pastries and confectionery and to make an essence. Dried sweet almonds whole, flaked (silvered), ground or made into paste or cream - are used in making cakes, biscuits (cookies), sweet and various sweetmeats. Celebrated among these are the sugar-coated dragee's and various forms of nougat. They flavour drinks like orgeat and Amaretto di Sarrano, and make a fine-quality oil, used in baking.

In cooking almonds may be accompany certain fish, in particularly trout, or meat such as chicken or pigeon. They are used as ingredients in such preparations as couscous, rice dishes, stuffings, pounded sauces with garlic, and compound butters.

RECIPES

blanched almonds

Put some dried almonds into a strainer and plunge into a saucepan of boiling water, then take the pan off the heat. As soon as their skin gives under the finger, drain some of the almonds, peel them straight away and plunge them into cold water. Do the same with the rest of the almonds, a few at a time. Drain and blot them, then dry them in a sieve over a very low heat; they must not go yellow. Store in a box or well-sealed jar, away from the light.

chopped almonds

Whole blanched almonds may be chopped by hand or in a blender. Flaked (slivered) almonds are thinly sliced lengthways by hand.

salted almonds

Heat some sweet blanched almonds in the oven until they turn slightly yellow, turning them once. Then fry them until golden in butter in a saute pan with a pinch of saffron, cayenne pepper and ginger. Drain on a cloth. To store, when cold, coat with a clear solution of gum Arabic and dust with fine salt.

toasted almonds

Spread flaked (silvered) almonds on a baking sheet and dry them in the oven, without any fat, until lightly brown.

ALMOND MILK A liquid preparation used on ground almonds. In the Middle Ages almond milk was a soup made with crushed almonds, balanced onions, wine and spices, heated with water until it thickened. The soup was served hot, either as a main dish or as a course between savoury dishes. Later on, almond milk became almost synonymous with blancmange, a cold dessert made from ground almonds and sugar, which are stirred into hot milk and then strained, setting to a jelly when cooled. This dish, which is not as popular as it once was, is now set with gelatine and is used as a base for cold desserts or sundaes, finished off with fruit and ice cream.

The French term latt d'mande is also used in classic patisserie for a round cake made from a paste coated with an apricot glaze, topped with a thin layer of almond paste, glazed again, iced (frosted) and then decorated with chopped roasted almonds.

RECIPE

almond milk jelly

Soak 3 leaves of gelatine in a little water. (3/4 oz, 1 1/2 envelopes of dissolved powdered gelatine may alternatively be added to the hot milk). Blanch 250 g (9 oz. Scant 2 cups) sweet almonds and 15 g (1/2 oz 1 tablespoon) bitter almonds in 500 ml (17 fl. oz, 2 cups) water for 2 minutes – or use all sweet, nuts. Drain and skin the almonds and pound them thoroughly in a mortar, adding a few drops of iced water to prevent the nuts turning into oil. When the paste is completely smooth, strain the gelatine liquid into the almond paste (reserving the leaves) and stir. Stretch some muslin (cheesecloth) over a bowl and pour the mixture on the cloth. Twist and squeeze the muslin to obtain 500 ml (17 fl oz., 2 cups) almond milk. Pour the milk into a saucepan. Crush the leaves of gelatine and add to the almond milk, together with 200 g (7 oz 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar. Bring slowly to the boil, stirring continuously. Then strain through a fine sieve. Spoon into individual dishes or into a ring mould. Chill until set.

ALMOND PASTE A confectionery preparation consisting of ground sweet almonds mixed with their own weight of icing (confectioner's) sugar and a little glucose syrup. Almond paste was traditionally prepared by adding the ground almonds to a sugar syrup, then crushing the mixture.

Colored and flavoured, almond paste is sold in slabs or as individual sweets in the form of vegetables, fruits and animals (see marzipan). It is also used to fill sweet (candies), chocolates and dried fruits (such as dates and prunes) served as petits fours.

Almond paste is used extensively in patisserie, particularly for decorating or covering cakes. Granulated almond paste – in which half the icing sugar is replaced with caster (superfine) sugar, and egg yolk often replaces the glucose syrup – is used for coating cakes and petits fours.

RECIPE

Almonds paste

Grind 250g (9 oz, 2 cups) blanched sweet almonds in a blender, in small quantities, as they turn oily if too many are worked together. Cook 500 g (18 oz., 3 cups) caster (superfine) sugar, 50 g (2 oz., 1/3 cup) glucose and 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) water to the 'small ball' stage (see sugar). Remove the saucepan from the heat, add the ground almonds and stir briskly with a wooden spoon until the mixture becomes granular. Leave to cool completely, then knead the paste by hand in small quantities until it is soft and easy to work.

ALOXE-CORTON – A commune of the Cote de Beaune in eastern France which produces some of the greatest Burgundy wines : both red and white are equally good, which is rare. Its reputation is centered on two grands crus, both situated on the hill of corton, is planted with vineyards on three sides and includes the grands cruz, Corton for red wines and Corton-Charlemagne for whites, Red wines are made only from the Pinot Noir grape and those from Corton may be described as such or may annex the name of their specific vineyard, such as Bressandes and Renardes. Each vineyard produces wine with its own particular characteristics; overall, the red wines of Cortons are of exceptional quality—dense and tannic when young maturing to fine wines with excellent aromas and fine palates.

Corton-Charlemagne is the largest white grand cru appellation in Burgundy. The wines, made only from Chardonnay grapes, are refined, concentrated and capable of long ageing.

Of a total vineyard area of 265 hectares (655 acres), over half is grand cru. The remainder is given the communal appellation. Aloxe-Corton and produces notable, but not exceptional, red and white wines.

ALSACE See page 12

ALSACIENNE, A L' This French description is given to dishes garnished with sauerkraut, ham, salted bacon and/or Strasbourg sausages. This garnish goes with roast or braised pork, fried pheasant, braised duck and goose. A l'alsacienne is also used to describe timbales (pies and terrines containing foie gras), as well as fruit tarts covered with an egg mixture.

RECEIPE

Fried eggs a l'alsacienne

Fry some eggs in goose fat, then arrange them on a bed of braised sauerkraut, alternating them with half-slices of ham. Surrounding with a border of demiglace sauce.

Pheasant a l'alsacienne

Truss the pheasant and cook it (unbarded) in butter in a flameproof casserole, turning until it is lightly brown, about 25 minutes. Braise some sauerkraut and bacon rashers (slices) in goose fat and put the sauerkraut in the casserole, placing the pheasant on to of it. Cover and cook in a preheated oven at 190°C (375°F, gas 5) for about another 25 minutes, or until the pheasant is tender. Cut the pheasant into portions. Slice some heated saveloys and cut up the hot bacon. Make a bed of sauerkraut on a hot serving dish, and garnish with the pieces of pheasant, bacon and saveloy.

Soft-boiled or poached eggs a l'alsacienne

Cook the eggs. Put layer of braised sauerkraut on a dish and place the boiled or poached eggs on it, alternating them with large strips of bacon which have been cooked in their own fat. Coat with a demi-glace sauce.

MANDINE An almond-based fancy pastry, of which there are several French kinds. It may be a tart or individual tartlets made with enriched short crust pastry, filled with a mixture of whole eggs, sugar, ground almonds, flour and melted butter, flavoured with rum and sprinkled with flaked (silvered) almonds. After cooking, the top is glazed with apricot jam and decorated with crystallized (candied) whiteheart cherries.

A classic variation is to make a sponge cake with sugar, egg yolks, vanilla, ground almonds, flour, stiffly whisked egg whites and butter. The mixture is poured into a savarin (ring) mould and, after cooking, is iced with white fondant (frosting).

The flavour of an amandine cake may be enhanced with lemon peel or bitter-almonds essence.

Tartelettes amandines are small almond cakes, attributed to the pastrycook-poet Ragueneau, whose recipe Edmond Rostand gives in verse in Cyrano de Bergerac.

AMANITA A genus of mushrooms including some edible as well as many poisonous, indeed deadly, species, the latter include A. phalloides (death cap), A. verna and A. virosa (destroying angel). The most sought-after edible species is A. caesareea, the Italian orange (see Caesar's mushroom). Two other species are regarded as delicacies, both eaten cooked, Amanita rubescens is called 'the blusher' because its reddish-brown cap turns purplish-red in contact with the air. Amanita naganata is France's common gromette, named for its delicate grey cap, which is ribbed around the edges. Common under beech trees, it is one of the best wild fungi.

AMARANTH Plants of the Amaranthus family have a wide variety of good uses. One was used to make a red food dye from the purple flower (the name comes from the Greek and means 'unfading'). This was synthesized to make the food dye E123, which was banned everywhere by the late 1970s.

A relative of spinach (and similar flavour), varieties are eaten in India, Africa (where they may be called 'bush green's) and South-east Asia. There are two sorts of Chinese spinach, eaten fresh or salt-pickled. The better, and very early, one has red stems and is known as red in snow.

AMARETTO DI SARANNO An Italian liqueur flavoured with apricot kernels, almonds and aromatic extracts. It may be used to flavour fruit salads and whipped cream.

AMBASSADEUR Also known as ambassadrice. A dish involving very elaborate preparation, typical of classic cuisine on a grand scale. For large joints ambassadeur or ambassadrice garnish includes artichoke hearts studied with duxelles, and duchess potatoes piped into roasters and browned in the oven. The dish is accompanied by grated horseradish served separately. Ambassadeur soup is made with fresh peas.

RECIPES

Ambassadeur soup

To 1.5 litres (2/14 pints, 6 ½ cups) Saint-Germain soup, add 3 tablespoons shredded sorrel or a mixture of sorrel and lettuce softened in butter together with 1 ¼ tablespoons rice cooked in consommé, and finally some sprigs of chervil.

Boiled or poached eggs ambassadrice

Bind a mixture of chopped truffles and foie gras with a well reduced demi-glace flavoured with sherry. Fill puff pastry tartlet cases with this mixture and arrange the eggs on top. In the centre place a bunch of asparagus tips. Coat with supreme sauce.

Chicken ambassadrice

Use a veloute sauce to bind a mixture of chopped lamb's sweebreads, truffles and mushrooms; stuff a good-sized chicken with this mixture. Cook the chicken until tender in a flamerpoof casserole with a puree of vegetables cooked in meat stock. Arrange the fowl on a round dish and surround it with tartlets filled with sauteed chicken livers (formerly cockscombs and kidneys would have been added). Place a thin slice of truffle on each tartlet. Deglaze the casserole with Madeira and veal stock, and coat the fowl with this sauce.

Chicken croutes ambassadrices

Fill some small croutes with chicken puree. Top each with a thin slice of truffle and 1 teaspoon vegetable mirepoix",

Eggs en cocotte ambassadrice

Butter some remekin dishes and spread the bottoms with a layer of foie grass puree sprinkled with chopped truffle. Break an egg into each remekin and cook in a bain marie. Coat with supreme sauce flavoured with sherry and garnish with hot asparagus tips.

Supremes of chicken ambassadeur

Sauce the supreme in butter. Fry some croutons in butter and cover them with the supremes, each garnished with a thin slice of truffle. Surround the croutons with mushrooms cooked in cream and with buttered asparagus. Coat lightly with supreme sauce.

AMBERGRIS A waxy substance of greyish colour, giving off a strong masky scent, which is secreted in the intestine of the sperm whale and collected from the surface of tropical seas, where it floats. The Chinese were the first to use it as a spice. Throughout the Middle Ages it was used in ragouts, pies, custards and jams. Ricbelieu was particularly fond of ambergris pastilles, and hot ambergris chocolate was a very popular drink in the 18th century. Supposedly having aphrodisiac and restorative qualities. Today ambergris is almost entirely used in perfumery.

AMBRE A French cake with almond flavoured crème mousseline and chocolate cones, Square or rectangular, depending on its size, amber (amber) has become a classic. Since it was created in 1986 by the French pastry chef Lucien Peltier.

AMBROSIA In Greek mythology, ambrosia was the food of the gods and gave them immortality. Ancient authors are rather vague as to the nature of ambrosia, implying only that it was solid (while nectar, on the other hand, was liquid). This mysterious substance is described by the poet Ibycus as nine times sweeter than honey'.

The name ambrosia was also given to an aperitif liqueur with a sweet taste, for which Larousse en cuisine gives the following recipe.

Macerate for one month in 10 liters (17 pints 10 ½ quarts) old eau-de-vie, 80 g (3 oz) container 20 g (¾ oz) cloves and 20 g (¼ oz) aniseed. Decant and filter it, then add 5 litres (8 ½ pints 5 ½ quarts) white wine and finally a syrup made with 5 kg (11 lb) sugar in 6 litres (10 pints, 6 ½ quarts) water.

AMERICA see United States of America.

AMERICAINE, A L' This description is given to a classic French dish of shellfish, chef known as Peter who settled in Paris about 1860 after having worked in America.

The term is also applied to fish garnishes containing thin slices of lobster tail and americaine sauce, as well as to dishes consisting of egg and grilled (broiled) poultry or meat -- chicken, steak, kidneys -- garnished with tomatoes and bacon.

A l'Americaine or a l'armoricaine. The description a l'armoricaine applied to lobster has given rise to much controversy, and continues to do so many claiming that a l'armoricaine is the only valid name. Armorica is an old name for Brittany and a French regional origin has been claimed for the best French lobster dish. But the region is scarcely associated with tomatoes, essential to the dish. Cummonsly received the following letter from a Monsieur Garrique, a restaurateur, on this subject.

I think I can tell you the exact name given to this dish by its inventor.

“As you quite rightly say, lobster a l'americane was created in France and, of course, by a Franchman, Peter, Horn in Sete and whose real name was Fraisse.

‘I knew Peters about 1900, when at about 78 or 80 years of age he was living quietly with his wife in the Roe German-Pilon. One evening when he felt in a confiding mood, he talked to me about this famous lobster. On returning to Paris from America where he had been a chef in Chicago, he founded the Peters restaurant; if I remember correctly, this was a little before 1860.

‘Now one evening when dinner was long over, eight or ten customers turned up almost at closing time and insisted that Peters serve them dinner on the pretend that they had only one hour to spare.

‘Peter, who was kindness itself, agreed to return to his kitchen, not without wondering anxiously what he was going to be able to serve to them. “While they are eating the soup and the hors-d’ocuvre.” He said to himself ‘I’ve got time to prepare a fish dish.” But there was no fish. There were only some live lobsters, reserved for the following morning but there was not enough, time to cook them in a court bouillon.

It was then that Peters, in a flash of inspiration, throw into a pan some butter, tomatoes, crushed garnish, .. then some white wine, a little of and finally a good helping of brandy... when it was all boiling. Peters said to himself . “There is only one way to cook the lobster quickly – that is to cut it into pieces and throw them into the sauce.”

This he did, and the result was marvelous. He enthusiastic customers asked the great restaurant what this exquisite deals was and what he called. And Peters still under the influence of his recent stay in America, said without thinking. Lobster of Famericaine!”

Peters himself gave me the recipe and it is the one I always use. As far as the history of the creation of this famous dish is concerned, I believe is to be completely authentic, as Peters was the soul of frankness, honesty and goodness.

RECIPES

Boiled or poached egg a l'americaine fry some croutons and top them with boiled or poached eggs and slices of lobster a l'americane. Cover with the americaine sauce in which the lobster was cooked (not all the sauce produced will be required for this dish).

Fried eggs a Pamericaine

Fry the eggs and garnish with slices of bacon and grilled (broiled) tomato halves.

Scrambled eggs a l'americaine

Add cubes of smoked bacon fried in butter to some beaten eggs. Mix them together and cook. Arrange them in a mound and garnish with slices of grilled (broiled) bacon and small grilled tomato halves.

Additional recipe See lobster.

AMIRAL, A L' The term used to describe a French garnish for such superior fish dishes (good enough for an admiral) as poached sole, fillets of sole, stuffed turbot or braised salmon. It contain some of the following ingredients; fried oysters and mussels, crayfish tails or whole crayfish, mushroom caps and truffle slices. The dish is coated with nantua sauce.

RECIPE

Consommé' a l'amiral

Lightly thicken a fish consommé with arrowroot and garnish with small pike quenelles in crayfish butter, poached oyster halves, julienne of truffles cooked in Maderna and sprigs of chervil.

AMOURETTE French for the delicately flavoured bone marrow of bee, mutton or veal. Amourettes may be prepared and dressed like calves' brains they can be cut into small pieces and used in filling for croutes, timbales, tarts and vol-au-vent or used as an ingredient for salads.

RECIPES

Preparation

Clean the amourettes in cold water, remove the membranes, poach for a few minutes in a court-bouillon and allow them to cool.

Amourettes au gratin

Butter a gratin dish and cover the base with mushroom duxelles. Arrange the cold cooked amourettes on the mushroom layer and sprinkle with a little lemon juice. Cover with duxelles sauce and scatter with golden breadcrumbs. Pour melted butter over and brown in the oven or under the grill (broiler).

Amourette fritters.

Marinate the amourettes in a mixture of olive oil and lemon juice seasoned with chopped parsley, salt and pepper for about 30 minutes. Drain, coat with fritter batter and cook them in boiling hot oil until crisp and golden. Drain, then salt the fritters and serve them piping hot on a napkin, garnished with fried parsley. Serve with a well-seasoned tomato sauce.

AMPHICLES. A probability fictional chef of ancient Greece, noted for his opposition to very complicated dishes and the excessive use of spices. For him, a host had to be served rare, roasted on a spit and barely seasoned with fenel. He would cook red mullet in a fig leaf and lark in a wine lead, among cinders. A defender of natural foods and apposed to the disguising of natural flavours the disguising of natural flavours, Amphicles can still serve as an example. He is probably an invention of the al be batthelemy (author, in 1788, of Voyage du penne Anacharsts en Grace an IV siecle de l'ere vulgate) included and embellished by Proper Montagne in his dictionary.

AMPHITRYON. A person who entertains guests at his table. According to mythology, Zeus wishing to seduce the mortalakmene, took on the appearance of her husband. Amphitryon, and gave her a son, heracles. In Moliere's comedy inspired by this fable, the servant Sosie, embarrassed at having to serve two masters and deciding finally for the one who guarantees him board and lodging says. The real amphirvon is the host who provides dinner.

But the provide dinner is not sufficient ; one has to know the art of how to do it. Rimond de la Reymiere was one of the first to indicate in his Manuel des amphoriones (1880) the rules of correct behavior at the table according to him, tact in necessary, as well as generosity, organization, a good chef and the appreciation of good food. More recently, Auguste Michel, in the Manuel de amphitryons aud debut on x siecle and Maurine des Omblaux, in l'Amphryon d'angourd 'but (1936), have brought these rules into accord with modern tastes. Although the term is hardly used nowadays, one rule, decreed by Brilliant Savarin, remains unchanged. To invite someone to be our guest is to undertake responsibility for his happiness all the time that he is under our roof.

AMPHORA. A Greek or Roman two-handled jar (the Greek word means carried from both sides) that was used to store oil and wine. Some amphorae (psykters) had double walls between which iced water was poured to keep the contents of the jar cool. The stamnos, sometimes compared to a cooking pot, was also used for storing wine; it had a fairly narrow mouth with small horizontal handles, and was very popular in the 5th century BC.

Amphorae used for transporting wine were closed with clay corks and sealed with pitch or plaster. A label indicating the vineyard, the year, the capacity either tied to the pur or engraved on it.

AMPHOUX, MADAME 19th-century French distiller. She owned a distillery in Martinique (Caribbean) and the liqueurs des lies made from vanilla, tea, cocoa and coffee) were named after her. These liqueurs were very fashionable at the time of the consulate and the Empire. Balzac refers to them several times, notably in La Vieille-Fille: 'Finally, Mademoiselle sacrificed three bottles of the celebrated liqueurs of Madame Amphoux, the most illustrious of overseas distillers, a name dear to lovers of liqueurs'; and, further on: 'Bless my soul, there is nothing but liqueurs of Madame Amphoux, which are only brought out on high days and holidays.'

AMUNATEGUE, FRANCIS French author of gastronomic articles and Looks (born Santiago, Chile, 1890s, died Paris, 1972) who abandoned his career as an engineer in 1947 in order to write. He was responsible for one of the earlier series of articles dedicated to restaurants, which came into their own again after the Occupation. These appeared in the periodical Aux écoutes. He published l'Art des mets (1959), le Plaisir des mets (1964) and Gastronomiquement vu (1971). He was a member of the "Academy of the Psychologists of Taste" and founded the AAAAAA, which extols the virtues of amouillettes. His style blends humour and historical and literary reference with an acute observation for everything connected with regional cuisine.

ANCHOVA A small sea fish, maximum length 20 cm. (8 in), with a greenish-blue back and silvery sides. The anchovy is very abundant in the Mediterranean, the Black Sea, and the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. It lives in tightly packed shoals and is fished for the canning industry. When sold fresh – which is rare – it may be fried, while the usual Italian and Spanish method is to marinate the split-open raw fish.

Anchovies are sold layered with salt, as whole fish in oil, in jars or cans as fillets (or rolled round a caper) in oil, and in pungent sauce. These must be stored in the refrigerator once opened. Salted anchovies may be sold whole, and need filleting. Skinning and washing under water. In Asia, salted, then sun-dried, they are the principal fermented fish product. Anchovies also constitute such traditional seasonings as ready-cooked anchovy butter, bottled English anchovy sauce and the spread gentleman's relish.

In ancient times, anchovies were used to make a condiment (garum). There has always been a European trade in anchovies, which were transported in special small casks called barrots. They are a characteristic feature of the cuisines of southern Europe. In Italy they are used in sauces like that of bagnat cauda, in pasta sauces like the tomato, garlic and caper alla puttanesca, and for pizza toppings in the south. Jansson's Temptation, an extremely popular Swedish dish, is a gratin of anchovies and potatoes. See also kika, sprat.

RECIPES

anchovy fillets à la portugaise

Cut desalted anchovy fillets into thin strips. Place a layer of tomato sauce cooked in oil in the base of an hors d'oeuvre dish and arrange the anchovy fillets on top in a crisscross pattern. Garnish with capers, chopped parsley and lemon slices with the skin and pith removed.

Moisten with a little olive oil before serving.

Anchovy filets a la silesenne

Poach some fresh soft herring roe in stock and then either rub through a line sieve puree in a blender. For 300 g (11 oz) roe, add 2-3 chopped shallots and a few sprigs of parsley (chopped). Place the mixture in an hors d'oeuvre dish and arrange a lattice of pickled anchovy fillets over the top. Make a salad with diced potatoes, dessert (eating) apples and beetroot (beet) moistened with a well-seasoned vinaigrette, and arrange it around the puree. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Anchovy fillets a la suledoise

Cut desalted anchovy fillets into thin strips. Arrange them on a layer of diced dessert (eating) apples and beetroot (beet) seasoned with vinaigrette. Garnish with parsley sprigs and with the yolks and whites of hard-boiled (hard-cooked) eggs, chopped separately. Moisten with more vinaigrette.

Anchovy filets with hard-boiled eggs

Cut desalted anchovy fillets into thin strips and arrange them in an hors d'oeuvre dish. Garnish with small black Nice olives, hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg whites and yolks (chopped separately), capers and chopped parsley. Moisten with a little olive oil.

Anchovy puree

Add 2 tablespoons desalted anchovies to 150 ml (1/4 pint. 1/2 cup) well-reduced bechamel sauce and mix in 2 blender. Then rub the mixture through a sieve. Stir in some heated butter just before serving. Anchovy puree may be used in frcters, vol-au-vent and rissoles.

Cold anchovy courstades

Flatten some well-wiped anchovy fillets previously desalted in milk. Spread them with anchovy butter containing chopped tarragon and roll them up into paupiettes. Put a layer of pureed tuna fish with mayonnaise in the base of some very small puff pastry cases and then place an anchovy paupiette on top of each. Pipe a rosette of anchovy butter on each paupiette and sprinkle with fresh chopped parsley.

Cold anchovy sauce

Thoroughly desalt 6-8 anchovy fillets by soaking them in milk. Drain, wipe and puree them in a blender with 1 tablespoon capers, 100 ml (4 fl oz. 1/2 cup) oil, the juice of half a lemon and salt and pepper. Serve as a dip with an assortment of raw vegetables - small artichokes, cauliflower florets, small sticks of carrot and seeded cucumber, thin slices of green or red sweet (bell) peppers, small quarters of fennel or raw mushrooms - or with fish poached in a court-bouillon, either hot or cold.

Fried anchovies

Take fresh anchovies, remove the heads and gut (clean) by pressing with the thumb. Wipe, but do not wash the fish as their flesh is very fragile. Dip them in milk, then drain, and roll each one in flour. Plunge them, a few at a time, into very hot fat, then drain, dust with fine salt and arrange them in a pyramid on a napkin. Garnish with fried parsley and quarters of lemon.

Fried eggs with anchovies

Fry some slices of very stale round sandwich bread in butter. Cover each of these croutons with a fried egg and 2 desalted anchovy fillets arranged in the form of a cross. The fillets may be moistened with noisette butter.

Freezing anchovies

After preparing and cleaning, arrange fresh anchovies in layers separated by plastic sheets and place inside large plastic bags. Then seal each bag, place in a freezer box and put into a freezer. When the fish are frozen, remove the bags from the boxes and place in a second bag to prevent the strong smell of the fish from escaping. Then label the bags and replace in the freezer for storage.

Hard-boiled eggs stuffed with anchovies reduce some desalted anchovy filets to a puree in a mortar or blender. Halve some hard-boiled (hard-cooked) eggs and remove the yolks. Mix the yolks with the anchovy puree and a little mayonnaise, replace in the egg cases. Dip some anchovy fillets in oil and roll each around a stoned (pitted) black olive. Place one on each egg case.

Hot anchovy sauce

Add 2 tablespoons anchovy butter to 200 ml. (7 fl oz, ¼ cup) bechamel sauce. Check the seasoning. This sauce can be served with any fish poached in a court-bouillon.

Hot anchovy toast

Fry some scale breadcrumbs in butter. Toast some sliced sandwich bread and cut it into rectangles. Garnish the toast with desalted anchovy fillets, sprinkle with the fried breadcrumbs and brown in the oven or under the grill (broiler) for a few minutes.

Marinated anchovies

Prepare 500 g (8.18 oz) fresh anchovies as in the recipe for fried anchovies. Lay them on a plate, dust with salt and leave for 2 hours. Pat the anchovies dry, then fry in very hot oil just long enough to stiffen them. Drain and place them in a dish. Prepare a marinade as follows. Add 5-6 tablespoons fresh oil to the oil in which the anchovies were cooked. Fry a medium onion and a carrot (both finely sliced) with 3 unpeeled garlic cloves and add 100 ml (4 fl oz, ½ cup) vinegar and an equal quantity of water. Season with salt and add a sprig of thyme, half a bay leaf, a few parsley stalks and a few crushed peppercorns. Boil for 10 minutes and pour the hot marinade over the anchovies. Leave to marinate for 24 hours, serve on a hors d'oeuvre dish garnish with slices of lemon.

Soft-boiled or poached eggs with anchovies take some small warm bread or pastry cases and place either a soft-boiled or a poached egg in each. Coat with anchovy sauce. Place a desalted anchovy fillet rolled into a ring on each egg.

Other recipes See barquette, brioche (filled savoury brioches), butter (flavoured butters), canope, dortois, fritter, mayonnaise, olive, omelettes (cooked with their flavouring), pannequet, puree, tournedos.

ANCHOYADE Also known as anchoiade. A Provençal dish consisting of a puree of anchovies mixed with crushed garlic and olive oil, and sometimes a few drops of vinegar. It is usually served with raw vegetables and may also be spread on slices of bread and heated in the oven. At draguignan, anchovyade à la dracenoise is an anchovy puree mixed with onions and chopped hard-boiled (hard-cooked) eggs. The mixture is spread in a thick layer on slices of home-baked bread moistened generously with olive oil and browned in a hot oven.

ANCIENNE, A L' The description of l'ancienne is given to certain fricassees (thicken or lamb) or white stews (turkey, veal or lamb) in which the garnish includes small sliced onions and button mushrooms (see bonne femme). This term, widely used in bourgeois cookery, may also be applied to braised dishes (sweetbreads, beef or fowl) and to pastry cases (pie shells) baked blind and filled with ragouts of cockscombs and kidneys or quenelles of truffles and mushrooms.

See beatilles, feuilleton, talmouse.

RECEPIS

Scrambled eggs a l'ancienne

Toss some diced mushrooms and truffles in butter. Add them to some scrambled eggs and place the mixture in a flan case (pie shell) which has been baked blind. Garnish with chicken kidneys in a sherry-flavoured veloutte sauce with cream. Surround with fried stockscombs and sherry-flavoured supreme sauce.

Soft-boiled or poached eggs a l'ancienne

Arrange the eggs on a bed of rice that has been cooked in meat stock. Coat them with veloute sauce and place between each egg 1 tablespoon julienne of truffles bound with a highly reduced Madeira sauce.

ANCIENT GREECE The Homeric heroes apparently feasted on shoulder of mutton or roasted chine of pork, flavoured with oregano and cumin, and on olives, figs, walnuts, goat's cheese and cakes made with flour and honey. Vegetables, which were difficult to grow in the dry soil, are rarely mentioned. Nevertheless, they formed the basic diet of the common peoples, mainly in the form of cabbage and lentil purees. The ancient Greeks in a country surrounded by sea teeming with fish were very fond of seafood and fish. Salted tuna, eels, red mullet, sole, turbot, octopus, sea bream, porgy, torpedo fish and conger eels are often mentioned in the text. Game was also abundant, apart from pheasant, partridges and wood pigeons, the ancient Greeks also hunted jackdaws, owl, flamingos and even seagulls. Ground game included roebuck, wild boar, hares, foxes, white-breasted martens, moles and even cats! The ancient Greeks originally drank hydromel, but from 2000 BC onward this was superseded by heavy strong wines, always drunk with water (sometimes even sea water).

The earliest cooks in Homer's time, cooks as such did not exist. Female slaves around the corn and prepared the food. According to the Iliad and the Odyssey, the host himself, however exalted, prepared and cooked the meals with the help of friends when he received distinguished guests. Later, the baker (mageriros) cooked as well as baked for his masters. In time he became arihimagoirta (chef de cuisine) and was given assistants. Great houses had a hierarchy of slaves of slaves, under a steward, the eleatros. Each slave had definite duties. The opsonomos or agorastes (from agora or market place) bought the food, while the opsrtyle looked after the fires, did rough jobs and prepared food for the household slaves. A woman, the demiourga, made sweetmeats and other delicacies. Women had free access to the kitchen. Other slaves prepared meals or served at tables: the trapezopotos laid the table and washed the dishes, the amophoros had charge of the wine; the ainochoikos, a young slave, filled the wine cups of the guests.

In the 4th century BC, Athenian cooks were often slaves. They played an important role in the life of the city and ruled as masters over all the other slaves in the household. A special law permitted the cook who invented a new dish the privilege of making it and selling it to the public.

Many Greek cooks became famous. Cadmos was cook to the king of Sidon in Phoenicia, and, according to legend, introduced writing into Greece. As a result of the burning of the library in Alexandria, only a few fragments and the authors' names remain from Greek literature of gastronomy.

Hippocrates and dietetics. Even though there were few refined gourmets, the ancient Greeks, especially the Spartans and the Athenians, were discriminating in their eating habits, unlike the Boeotians, the Thessalians and the Macedonians. Epicurus recommended 'simple dishes that satisfy us as much as sumptuous feasts'. In the Republic, Plan defines, through Socrates, the diet of the model citizen bread, olives, cheese, vegetables and fruit. Both Hippocrates (5th century BC) and later Galen (2nd century AD) studied the effects of food both on the sick and those in good health.

In De la gastronomie française, R. Dumay acknowledges that the ancient Greeks made four major contributions to cookery. First, they established the market (agora), where the master of the house himself often went to choose the food for his household. Secondly, they knew how to appreciate both their cooks and culinary art general-in the town of Sybaris, in Magna Graecia, famous for its refined way of life, chefs were awarded patents to protect their recipes. Thirdly, they cultivated a simplicity in their cooking, using few basic ingredients preferring roasts and grills to dishes with sources and including herbs to bring out the authentic flavour of the food. Finally, they left us a legacy of various recipes that have been handed down through the generations – black pudding (blood sausage), fried sampi (jumbo shrimp), turbox with herbs, thrushes with honey and grilled (broiled) frog's legs.

ANCIENT ROME The ancient Romans were pioneers of gastronomy, adding to their own culinary habits those of the Greeks and the peoples of Asia Minor and eagerly adopting new methods and ingredients. The traditional picture of orgies where great quantities of rare foods were served, drowned in spiced sauces and cooked in the most lavish fashion, is false. If the works of Petronius, Juvenal and Martial are full of detailed accounts of sumptuous banquets, it is because these were the exception flaminos' tongues, comels' heels, dormice stuffed with chestnuts, wild bear stuffed with thrushes and other extravagant fancies were far from being everyday fare.

True, Maecenas was the first to mention mule flesh, which epicureans considered less tasty than wild ass, and Elagabalus feasted on elephant trunk and roasts comed. To amuse the Emperor Aurelian the actor Farron is said to have swallowed a ewe, a sucking pig and a wild boar, with a hundred small loaves and as many bottles of wine petrontus, in the Satyricon, paints an evocative portraits of Trimalcion. Nevertheless, true Latin cooking had its origins in a humble and frugal tradition. Stockrearing and agriculture were carried out in the Tiber valley, but it was due to the trade in salt, a commodity produced by evaporation at the river mouth, that commercial links were established with the Greek and Etruscan colonies.

From the earliest times, the staple food of the Romans was pulmentum, a porridge of millet, barley or chick pea flour, sometimes diluted with milk. As the art of bread-making developed, the first bakers appeared in Rome. Other basic foods were ewe's milk cheese, boiled mutton, cabbage, cardoons and broad (fava) beans. Fruit was important in the Roman diets apples were no longer a scarce commodity, as they had been in ancient Greece, but imported apricots from Armenia and peaches from Persia were very expensive. Lucullus is credited with introducing the cherry tree, figs grew in abundance and dates were imported from Africa. Melon growing developed in the region round Cantalupo (which gave its name to the cantaloupe melon).

It was after the defeat of Antiochus III the Great (189 BC) that the Romans, advancing into Asia Minor, gradually discovered the refinement of the Greek courts in the Hellenized East. The best-known fact about the General Lucullus is that he adopted their lifestyle. According to Livy: "The army returning from Asia brought foreign luxury to Rome. It became a lengthy and costly business to prepare a meal. Cooks who used to be regarded as slaves, began to demand high wages. That which had been toil became art."

In order to meet the tastes and needs of her citizens, Rome began to develop a more complex system of food production and distribution, operating chiefly through large warehouse and markets. The most famous of these was that of Trajan, where Romans could buy corn from Egypt, olive oil from Spain, spices from Asia, hams from Gaul, numerous varieties of fish, which were often farmed (Moray eels sea bass, monkfish, plaice and turbot), and various types of shellfish, including whelks. Sea urchins and especially oysters, which Sergius Orata believed where the first to be reared in oyster beds. It was the Romans who invented the process of force-feeding geese with figs, to enlarge their livers. Wealthy Romans ate large quantities of meat, preferring pork to mutton. They enjoyed, for example, pork stuffed with oysters and small birds roasted on one side, then spread with a paste of oats, wine and oil and poached in boiling water on the other side. Apicius, author of many recipes, mentioned, among other things, fresh ham painted with honey and cooked in a pastry case with figs and bay leaves. Poultry was much esteemed: capons, Numidian fowl (guinea fowl), domestic pigeons, wild duck (of which only the brain and breast were eaten) and roast goose. In Marguerite Yourcenar's book Memoirs of Hadrian, the emperor reflects, that I began to think of the relatively recent origins of our riches and of this nation of thrifty farmers and frugal soldiers, who formerly ate garlic and barley, now suddenly enabled by our conquests to revel in the cooking of Asia, devouring this complicated food with the greed of starving peasants'.

Several modern Italian recipes go back to the days of ancient Rome, such as gnocchi and ricotta cheese tart. Another very common cake made with cheese was libum (or savillun), flavoured with honey and poppy seeds.

Roman cooking was characterized by the use of quite highly special sources, including garum based on fermented fish. Particularly popular was sweet-and-sour condiment for which Apicius gave the recipe pepper, mint, pine nuts, raisins, grated carrot, honey, vinegar, oil, wine and musk. As sugar was not available, the Romans sweetened their food with either honey or grape syrup. They made a variety of different cheeses, most of them from ewe's milk. Great wine lovers, they preferred to drink their wines young and diluted with water. Several types of wine were produced which were sold quite cheaply straw wine (passum), honey wine (mulsum), vinegar diluted with water (posca), which was a thirst-quenching drink favoured by soldier on campaign imitation wines (flavoured with wormwood, roses and violets) and fruit wines.

The most highly prized wines, however, were the grands crus from the Campania region capua, Pompeii, Naples Vesuvius and Cumae. The most famous of these, the red and white Falernian wines were aged over a long period. These high quality wines were stored in amphorae and were usually filtered at table before serving to, improve their clarity.

Wine was common offering to the gods and its use in religious ceremonies gave rise to great wine festival. A law of Romulus forbade women to drink wine though apparently this prohibition applied only to fermented wines.

ANDALOUSE. A French garnish usually served with large joints of meat, particularly beef and saddle of Lamb inspired by Andalucia in southern Spain it includes sweet (bell) peppers (stuffed or sautéed tomatoes in some form, rice (pilaf or risotto with peppers), fried aubergine (eggplant) slices and sometimes chorizo. It may also be served either a consommé or with sole fillets.

RECIPES

Andalouse salad

Boil some rice in salted water, drain it well and mix with a well-seasoned vinaigrette containing chopped onion, parsley and a touch of crushed garlic. Place the rice in a mound in a salad bowl surrounded by thin strips of peeled green and red sweet (bell) peppers and tomato quarters, arranged so that the colours alternate around the dish. Sprinkle with chopped chervil.

Andalouse sauce

Reduce 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 1/4 cups) velouté sauce by one-third and add 2 tablespoons tomato puree (paste). Mix and reduce further. Add a crushed garlic clove and salt and pepper. Wash and chop a small bunch of parsley a green sweet (bell) pepper and half a red (bell) pepper in boiling water, then peel and cool. Remove the seeds and dice the flesh (2 tablespoons altogether). Add the diced peppers to the reduced veloute and the chopped parsley.

Beefsteaks a l'andalouse

Soften 50 g (2 oz) chopped onion and a chopped garlic clove in butter. Add salt and pepper. Mix with 400 g (14 oz, 2 cups) minced (ground) beef and form into 4 rounds. Coat these with flour and fry in oil. Saute 4 large tomato halves in oil and place a cooked hamburger on each. Arrange them on a plate with a rice pilaf in the centre. Deglaze the cooking juices of the steaks with 2-3 tablespoons sherry. Reduce, add some butter, and pour the sauce over the steaks.

Fried eggs a Pandalouse

Grill (broil) some small tomatoes, sweet some green and red (bell) peppers and fry some onion slices and eggs in oil. Arrange the eggs around the edge of a round plate and place the garnishes in the centre. The tomatoes may be replaced with slices of aubergine (eggplant).

Additional recipe see squid.

ANDOUILLE a type of French sausage made from the stomach and intestines of the pig to which may be added other parts of the animal (neck, breast, head or heart, the whole enclosed in a black skin. Rebelais, in Pantagruel, names andouille as one of the favourite dishes of his contemporaries. It features in the war of the Andoyles against Quaresmeprenant., Variotas sausages, bearing the name of the region where their recipes originated, are now called andouilles, but there are only two authentic varieties – those of Vire and those of Guemen. Andouille is cut into thin slices and eaten cold in hors d'oeuvres.

Guemene andouille, which is protected by a trademark, has the appearance of concentric circles when sliced, as the intestines are placed one inside another, according to their size, during preparation. The andouille is then tied up, dried smoked and, lastly, either cooked in a bouillon or steamed.

The 'genuine' Vire andouille' (with guaranteed method and area of production) includes both intestines and stomach, cleaned, washed, cut up and salted. Then enclosed in a skin. The andouille is smoked over beech wood for two months, which allows the natural black colour of the coating to develop. It is then tied and cooked, either in water or in an aromatized court-bouillon. It measures 25-30 cm (10-12 in) in length and 4-6 cm (1 ½-2 ½ in) in diameter.

The 'Vire andouille' (without guarantee) is made all over France by similar methods, using the same ingredients as for the genuine vire andouille with the addition of the neck and the breast, which make it more fatty. The locality made andouilles de pays also contain pig's heart and pig's head without the skin removed. The andouille of Val-d'Ajol and that of Aire-sur-la-Lys should also be mentioned. The andouille of jargeau, made from shoulder and breast without any intestines, is not sold ready-cooked. Andouilles made from pork rind are a specialty of south-western France.

ANDOUILLETTE A type of sausage made from pork intestines (chaudins), often with the addition of pork stomach and calf's mesentery, precoked in stock or milk and packed into a skin. Andouillettes, which are sold in 10-15 cm (4-6 in.) lengths and are sometimes coated with breadcrumbs, aspic jelly or lard, are eaten either grilled (broiled) or fried. Several regions are known for their production of andouillettes. The Troyes andouillette, made solely from pork, has a greasy consistency and is prepared from the intestines and belly of pork, cut into fairly wide strips. The andouillette from Cambrai is usually made from veal only. The Lyonnais andouillette is made from calf's mesentery with, sometimes, a bit of pork belly, while the Provincial andouillette consist of a mixture of thin slices of pork intestines and neck plus the rind. The drier andouillette from Rouen is made from pig's bowels without the belly and calf's mesentery. The andouillette is traditionally served with mustard and garnished with fried potatoes, red beans, lenals and a puree of celery, apples or red cabbage. In Strasbourg it is served on a bed of sauerkraut.

The Association Amicale des Amateurs d'Authentiques Andouillettes (A.A.A.A.), a gastronomic society founded by F. Amunategui, upholds the tradition, and Charles Monselet dedicated a sonnet to the andouillette.

RECIPE

Andouillettes a la lyonnaise

Lightly prick the andouillettes. Soften some onion slices in butter without browning. Fry the andouillettes in a pan with little lard, and add the softened onion 5 minutes before the end of the cooking time. Just before serving, pour some vinegar into the pan (1 tablespoon per 2 portions of andouillette), heat and serve the andouillettes very chopped parsley.

Andouillettes a la tourangelle

Lightly slit 6 andouillettes, pour some Armagnac over them let them steep for 24 hours. Slice 500 g (18 oz, 5-6 cups) button mushrooms and sprinkle them with lemon juice. Butter a cooking dish, place the mushrooms in it, add salt and pepper and arrange the andouillettes on top. Pour a glass of dry Vouvray wine over the food and cook in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) for 40 minutes, turning the andouillettes several times and bating them. Add a little more wine or boiling water if needed.

Grilled anouillette

Prick the andouillette and grill (broil) it slowly preferably over charcoal, so that it warms right through.

ANGELICA An aromatic umbelliferous plant growing in the cold north from Scandinavia to central Russia, which was introduced into France by the Viking and cultivated by the monks. Its young green stalks are candied in sugar and used in cakes, gingerbreads, puddings and souffles. It is a specialty of the town of Niort, and Austin de Croze has described lyrically what he considers to be the best way to enjoy it: 'have a dozen choice briodes kept hot, a fruit dish filled with sticks of candied angelica, a bottle of angelica liqueur, a carafe of iced water and boxy of Egyptian cigarette. Light a cigarette, take a draught of iced water, crunch a piece of Niort angelica with a mouthful of very hot brioche, inhale, draw in and distil a few drops of angelica liqueur in the mouth, then start again. Then you only need the room to be sprayed with a light fresh perfume, such as verbena or citronella, to know what blissful enjoyment a discreet sybaritism can give.'

Liqueur manufacturers also use the crushed stems and roots of angelica in the production of Melissa cordial, Chattrouse, Vespetto and gin.

RECIPES

Angelica liqueur

Put 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) young angelica stalks, cut into small pieces, and 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 ½ cups) brandy in a bottling jar. Macerate for a month. See that the jar is hermetically sealed. Expose it to the sun whenever possible.

Add 575-800 g (1 ¼ - 1 ¾ lb) lump sugar dissolved in a very little water. Press the whole through a silk or fine muslin (cheesecloth) sieve. Leave to stand for a few hours, then pour the liqueur through filter paper. Bottle, cork and seal.

Candied angelica

Cut some young angelica stems into 15-20 cm. (6-8 in) lengths. Soak them for 3-4 hours in cold water, then plunge into boiling water until the pulp softens. Drain, cool and peel carefully to remove all the stringy parts. Macerate the stems for 24 hours in a syrup to 102°C (215°F) and pour it over the pieces of angelica. Repeat this operation once a day for three days. On the fourth day cook the syrup until it reaches the 'pearl' stage, 105°C (221°F). Add the angelica and boil for a few moments. Remove the pan from the heat, cool and drain the angelica in a sieve. When the angelica pieces are dry, lay them out on a slab, dust with caster (superfine) sugar and dry in a slow oven. Store in hermetically sealed containers.

ANGELOT The original name of several cheeses made in Normandy, including Pont-l'Évêque, Livorot and of course Neufchâtel. Guillaume de Lorris mentioned it in Le Roman de la Rose (The Romance of the Rose). 1230-35. The name refers to the region of Auge, where the cheeses are made.

ANGEL SHARK ange de mer A fish of the shark family (squatinae) that resembles a skate with its wing-shaped pectoral fins. It is cooked in the same way as skate. There are several species, which are widespread in temperate European coastal regions and in tropical seas. The average size of the angel shark varies from 90 cm (4 ft.) to 1.2 m (4 ft.), but some specimens may reach 2 m (6 ½ ft.) and weigh more than 60 kg (132 lb.). Its skin is wrinkled, its back greenish-brown flecked with grey and its underside a creamy-white colour. The flesh is quite tasty, but is not considered to be as palatable as that of the skate.

ANGLAISE, A L' This description, given to vegetables, meat and fish prepared in a variety of straightforward ways, reflects the French view of English cooking. Various dishes from the British gastronomic repertory are named a Fanglaise, including sauces, desserts, pies and egg dishes. Crème anglaise is a basic preparation of classic cuisine see custard.

For example, vegetables a l'anglaise are cooked in water and served plain with chopped parsley, knots of butter, melted butter or a herb sauce. Meat and poultry a l'anglaise are poached, boiled or cooked in a white stock. According to the dish, vegetables are cooked at the same time or separately, either boiled or steamed.

Fish or pieces of meat which are coated in bread crumbs before being sautéed or fried are also described as a l'anglaise. Fish grilled a l'anglaise (cut into steaks if they are large or slit if they are small) are brushed with oil or melted butter (and coated with flour if they have a delicate flesh) they must be cooked over a low heat. They are served with melted butter or maitre d'hôtel butter and, if desired, with steamed or boiled potatoes or with other boiled vegetables such as spinach or the white part of leeks.

RECIPES

Eggs au plat a l'anglaise

Grill a rasher (slice) or bacon and put it on a small buttered plate. Break 2 eggs on top and cook in the oven until set.

Panure anglaise

A coating for various foods (croquettes, vegetables, fish fillets and escalopes) that are to be fried or sautéed a l'anglaise. It is made of eggs beaten with a few drops of oil, salt and ground pepper. A little water can be added if necessary. It is applied after coating with flour and before dipping in breadcrumbs.

Sauce a l'anglaise

(from Carême's recipe) chop 4 hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolks very finely and mix them in a saucepan with some fairly thick veloute of the kind used as a sauce for an entrée. Then add a dash of pepper, some grated nutmeg, the juice of a lemon and a little anchovy butter.

ANGOSTURA BITTERS a browneish-red bitters made with various herbs (its exact formula is a secret) it has tonic and fever reducing properties as it includes quinine and it was created at Angostura, Venezuela (renamed Ciudad Bolivar in 1846) by a surgeon of Bolivar's army to combat the effects of the tropical climate. Angostura is now made in Trinidad and is used mainly for flavouring cocktails and 'ink gins' the cocktail associated with the British Royal Navy. It may also be used successfully in salads and dessert.

ANIMELLES Animal testicles used for meat, especially those of the ram, the lamb, and bull calves animelles were formerly very popular in the East, in Mediterranean countries, and in France under Louis XV. They are still popular in Italy and in Spain as 'white kidneys' (fried criadillas). They are either prepared in the same way as kidneys or served with a vinaigrette.

RECIPES

Preparation

Plunge the animelles into boiling water for about 2 minutes, cool under cold water and immediately skin them. Soak them in cold water for about 10 hours to remove impurities, then drain and press between 2 plates.

Animelles a la creme

Cut the animelles into thin slices, season with salt and pepper and partly cook them in butter of 6-7 minutes. Then moisten with a few tablespoons cream sauce and slowly finish cooking. Add a little butter at the last moment and check the seasoning. Blanched or sautéed sliced mushrooms may also be added.

Fried animelles

Skin 3 fresh animelles and cut each into 8 similar pieces. Put them into a terrine dish with salt, pepper, 2 tablespoons each tarragon vinegar and olive oil, a little thyme, half a bay leaf, a sliced onion and a few springs of parsley. Cover the dish. Drain them after an hour and replace in the terrine with all the ingredients and the juice of half a lemon, just before serving, drain the animelles on a cloth and press lightly. Coat them with flour and fry them until lightly browned. Arrange in a pyramid on a napkin and garnish with fried parsley.

ANISE An aromatic umbelliferous plant originating in the Near East, known to the ancient Egyptians and Romans, and taken to India. The seed (aniseed) are used particularly in Germany and Central Europe for flavouring bread such as knackebrot, biscuits (cookies), and especially for gingerbread. Aniseed is also used in confectionery – sugar-coated for comfits and Flavigny dragees. In southern Europe the oil anethole flavours many spirits.

The seeds are stronger and less subtle than those of dill, but are used with fish in Tuscany, while the chopped leaves may be used to season pickled vegetables, salads and fish soups in the south of France.

RECIPES

Aniseed biscuits

Whisk together 500 g (18 oz. 2 ¼ cups) caster (superfine) sugar and 12 eggs in a copper basin, as for an ordinary sponge cake.

When pale and light-textured, add 500 g (18 oz. 4 ½ cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, 200 g

(7 g oz. ¼ cup) comflour (cornstarch) and 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) aniseed. Mix well. Drop tablespoons of the mixture on to a wetted baking sheets. Place in a warm place to dry. When the biscuits (cookies) begin to rise slightly, bake in a preheated oven at 160°C (325°F, gas 3) for about 15 minutes.

Aniseed liqueur

Put 25 g (1 oz) crushed aniseeds, ¾ teaspoon cinnamon (and 1 ½ tablespoons coriander (cilantro) into 1 litre (1/34 pints, 4 1/3 cups) spirits. Infuse for a month. Add 500 g (18 oz. 2 ¼ cups) sugar dissolved in a little water. Filter and bottle.

ANISETTE The flavour of the many liqueurs known as anisette or anise varies according to which seeds are used – aniseed or star anise. These liqueurs are very popular as digestives. Well known in France are the anisettes of Bondeaux (especially that of Maries Brizard) while pachanin is Spain's most popular liqueur, flavoured also with sloes and drunk on the rock's Anise has long been the favourite flavouring of Mediterranean aperitifs - pastis ouzo and arak. They are drunk either diluted with water or with water as an accompaniment.

ANNA The name of a French potato dish created by Adolphe Duglere to accompany roast meat and poultry. It was dedicated for Anna Deslions, a woman of fashion at the time of the Second Empire. The dish is cooked in a special round two-handled casserole with an interlocking lid. The potatoes are sliced and covered during cooking. When the potatoes are cut into strips rather than rounds, the dish is called Annette potatoes.

RECIPE

Pommes Anna

Peel 1 kg 2 ¼ lb) potatoes and cut into thin even round slices. Wash, wipe and season with salt and pepper. Slightly brown 75 g (3 oz, 6 tablespoons) butter in a special casserole (or in a sauté pan) and arrange the potatoes in circular layers, making sure that they are evenly coated with butter; then compress them into a cake with a wooden spatula. Cover and cook in a hot oven for 25 minutes. Quickly turn the whole cake on to a flat dish and slide it back into the casserole to brown the other side.

ANNATTO rocou A food colouring extracted from the red coating around the seeds of the annatto tree of Central America. In the west it is used to give an orange, yellow or red colour to items of characuterie, various cheeses (Edam, Mimolette, Cheslire and Cheddar), dried salted, and smoked fish (notoriously haddock), and also to sweets and butter Annatto is widely used in Latin American cooking. The seeds are fried in oil which then imparts a distinct flavour as well as colour to food. Spanish traders took annatto to China, where it is now used to colour roast pork.

ANTELOPE Aruminant mammal belonging to the cattle family found chiefly in Africa and Asia. There are more than a hundred species of antelope, varying in size from that of a lamb to that of a horse. Their habits are similar to those of the European deer, but their meat is firmer and sometimes has a very strong flavour. According to the culinary traditions of the aboriginal populations who eat antelope, the meat be roasted, braised or boiled, although it is sometimes necessary to marinate if first or ripen it in the sun. the highly regarded meat of the gazelle (a small antelope) is prepared in the same way as venison.

ANTIBOISE, A L' this description to various Provençal dishes that are specialties of Antibes. They include eggs cooked in the oven with browned nomants (tiny mediterranean fish), crushed garlic and chopped parsley; a gratin and scrambled eggs in layers alternating with sautéed courgettes (zucchini) and a fondue of tomatoes in oil; oven-grilled tomatoes garnished with anchovy fillets, pieces of tuna and breadcrumbs crushed with garlic; and cold stuffed tomatoes.

ANTILLAISE, A L' This French description referring to the Antilles in the Caribbean, is applied to numerous ways of preparing fish. Shellfish and poultry, generally served accompanied either with rice coated with a thick sauce of small vegetables and tomato or with pineapple or banana. Desserts à l'antillaise are made by combining exotic fruits with rum or vanilla. All dishes à la créole are very similar.

ANTILLES CUCUMBER A variety of cucumber that is common in the West Indies; they are oval in shape and prickly like a hop chestnut. Known as anguries in French, they are eaten in salads or pickled in vinegar, like gherkins.

ANTIPASTO An Italian term for cold hors d'œuvres. The name is derived from the Italian word pasto (meal), with the Latin prefix ante (before). An antipasto might consist of Parma with fresh fig, or a Piedmontese cheese fondue (raw vegetables accompanied by condiments and a melted cheese sauce), but is more usually a colourful assortment of starters served either as cocktail snacks with the aperitif or at the beginning of a meal instead of pasta. Typical antipasto, which may be served with warm, crusty bread or grissini (bread sticks), include marinated vegetables and fish, seafood with lemon, olives, cooked fork products, mushroom salad or antichoke hearts arranged in hors d'œuvre dishes.

ANVERSOISE, A L' the French description is given to a garnish, in the style of Antwerp (Belgium), composed essentially of young hop shoots cooked slowly in butter or cream. Primarily a garnish for eggs (soft-boiled, poached or sur le plat), it may sometimes be used with potatoes (boiled or browned) or with contre-filet and veal paupiettes.

Hop shoots may also be served in tartlets or on antichoke hearts.

RECIPES

Lamb cutlets with hop shoots

Sauté some lamb cutlets in butter. Arrange them in a ring on a round dish, alternating with triangular croutons which have been fried in butter. Garnish the centre of the dish with hop shoots in a cream sauce. Deglaze the cooking juices in the sauté pan with a little dry white wine and pour over the cutlets.

Veal sweetbreads with hop shoots.

Braise the sweetbreads in white stocks. Strain and reduce the cooking juices to make a sauce. Coat the sweetbreads with the sauce and serve surrounded with hop shoots in cream sauce and small potatoes browned in butter.

AOC See Appellation D'origine.

APERITIF Since time immemorial, certain plants have been known to have the property of restoring or 'opening' (from Latin aperire 'to open'). The appetite drinks were made from such plants, but these were more therapeutic than gastronomic and were not drunk before meals. The Romans had a liking for wine with honey, and in the Middle Ages people believed in the benefits of wines mixed with herbs or spices. Then hippocras (an old English spiced wine), vermouths, bitters and sweet wines came into being. The word aperitif has been in use as a noun only since the late 19th century, and it was not until the 20th century that the habit of taking an aperitif before a meal became a generally accepted custom. Aperitifs include drinks based on wine (such as vermouth) and certain spirits and the less sweet liqueurs (such as anise and bitters).

The custom of having an aperitif following fashions and indeed rituals, which vary according to the country, the surroundings and the circumstances. It is better to avoid very strong alcoholic drinks that may spoil the palate. Lavoursse menager (1926) recommended: 'a bowl of bouillon with the fat skimmed off taken half an hour before a meal is an excellent aperitif. It stimulates the salivary and stomach secretions and promotes the production of pepsin in the gastric juice'. Some people would prefer a glass of champagne.

APICUS The name of three Romans famous for their taste for good living. The first, a contemporary of Sulla (2nd-1st century BC), is known only for his gluttony. The third Apicius, who lived in the 2nd century AD, deserves mention for having discovered a way of keeping oysters fresh, even at the end of a long journey. The most famous is Marcus Gavius Apicius, born about AD 25 who is reputed to have compiled a recipe book, De re coquinaria libri decem ('Cuisine in Ten Books'), which was used as a reference work for several centuries. Regarded by some as a refined connoisseur, by others as a libertine, he was known for his extravagance and expensive tastes. He is credited with inventing a process for force-feeding sows with dried figs in order to fatten their livers, as well as devising recipes for flaming or nightingale tongues, camel's heels, sow's udder and a large number of cakes and sauces. Athenaeus relates that Apicius chartered a ship to go and check if the Libyan squillas (scampi or jumbo shrimp) were as large as they were reputed to be. Disappointed, he did not even set foot on land. He spent all his fortune on sumptuous banquets until the day when, calculating how much money he had left, he decided to poison himself rather than turn to a more modest way of living.

APLATIR The French term for beating and thus flattening a small piece of meat (entrecote, escalope) or fish with the flat part of a meat mallet. As this process breaks down muscle fibres, the flesh becomes more tender and easier to cook.

APOTHEKA A storeroom in which the ancient Greeks kept wine. (The Roman equivalent is a fumarium). The wine was placed near the chimney shafts and developed a very good flavour. As the effects of the heat made it more concentrated until it acquired the consistency of honey, it had to be diluted before serving.

APPAREIL The French term for the mixture of different ingredients necessary to prepare a dish for cooking. The word masse is also used. Appareils are particularly common in cake and pastry-making.

APPELLATION D'ORIGINE This, according to French law, is the name of a country, region or locality used to designate a product which originates there, the quality and characteristics of which are due to the geographical situation, including natural and human factors. Its use, which is strictly regulated, concerns wines, spirits, certain cheeses and such local products as Le Puy lentils and Bresse poultry. It is a system that has been adopted for wine and foods by the EC itself and many nations within it.

Present legislation in France concerning appellations d'origine has been inherited from laws that were in force up to the French Revolution (1792). At the beginning of the 20th century the quality of French wines had deteriorated as the vineyards, deteriorated as the vineyards, decimated by phylloxera in the previous century, had been replanted with inferior varieties. Series of laws passed in 1905 and 1909 were designed to protect the consumer. In 1919 under pressure from the vine-growers' lobby, further legislation ensured the protection of both the producer, who agreed to abide by precise regulations, and the consumer. The relevant law dates from 6 May 1919 and was modified by that of 6 July 1966.

To maintain the quality of French wines, an order in Council of 1955 created in organization that united the wine professionals with the representatives of other interested bodies this was the institute National des Appellations d'Origine (INAO). It controls the production of wine of all stages. The organization has legal powers and has codified quality wines to determine their prescribe origin.

Four categories of appellation d'origine exist in France.

- AOC (Appellation d'Origine Controlee). This is reserved for the greatest wines. AOC lays down strict rules concerning not only the place of production also the varieties of vines, the yield per hectare, and the cultivation and vinification methods. Today there are more than 250 AOCs, constituting the aristocracy of French viticulture.
- VDS (rins delimities de qualite superiere) a regional designation which effectively acts as a testing ground for small wine regions, most of which are eventually promoted to full AC status.
- VINS THE PAYS Country wines
- VINS OF TABLE BANK French wine.

APPENZELL A Swiss cheese with a golden-brown rind made from unpasteurized cow's milk (45% fat content). This compressed cooked cheese has holes and is very firm without being hard or brittle. It must be full-flavoured and tangy, but never pungent. Originating from the canton of Appenzell, the cheese is manufactured in the form of a round from summer to winter. Appenzell is eaten at the end of a meal and can replace Gruere cheese in cooking. It is used in the preparation of the Swiss speciality chashappen – spirals of pastry (made with melted cheese, milk, flours, yeast and eggs) piped through a piping (pastry) bag into a pan and fried. They are drained and served very hot with a salad.

APPERT, NICOLAS French inventor and father of the canning industry (born Chalons-sur-Marne, 1749, died Massy, 1841). He learned the art of cooking from his father, who was an hotelier. He worked at first in the service of the Duke of Deux-Ponts and was officer de bouche to the Princess of Forbach. In 1780 he established himself in business as a confectioner in the Rue des Lombards in Paris. The Directory government offered a prize of 12,000 francs for the discovery of a process to preserve the food destined for the Army. Appert perfected a sterilization method after him – appertisation. In 1794 he built a factory at Massy (on land where peas and beans had been cultivated) and started had cultivated) and started up the production of bottled preserved foods. In 1810 the government officially recognized his discovery and awarded him the prize. In the same year, Appert published L'Art de conserver pendant plusieurs années toutes les substances animales et végétales, which generously made his process available to all. Moreover, his work was republished in 1811 and 1813 under the title Livre de tous les ménages. The fall of the Empire ruined him, but in 1822 (by which time others had become rich on his discovery) the state recognized his invention by granting him a small income. In the premises which were then allowed him, he pursued his experiments on the clarification of wines, the purification of bone gelatin and preservation and preservation in cans, but he subsequently died in poverty.

APPETITE psychologists define under the term 'natural appetite' the tendencies which instinctively cause us to satisfy the needs of the body.

In physiology appetite is defined as something rather different from hunger. Hunger in reality is nothing more than the need to eat, whereas appetite is the lure of pleasure experienced while eating.

The sensation of hunger, which usually develops at regular mealtimes, sometimes disappears if it is not satisfied at the usual hour. The appetite is stimulated by the sight and smell of foods; bitter substances frequently awaken lost appetite by releasing digestive secretions.

In certain psychiatric conditions, appetite can degenerate into a craving for offensive and nonedible substances. The opposite of appetite is anorexia, which means distaste for food.

In France spring onions (scallions), chives and the small onions used for seasoning are known generally as appetits, as they all stimulate the appetite.

APPLE The fruit of the apple tree, the most widely cultivated fruit tree in the world, which originated in Asia Minor and was growing wild in Europe by prehistoric times. Known throughout the ancient world, the apple was cultivated early in many varieties and features in many ancient recipes. In his Traite du sidre (1) Julien Le Paulmier lists several dozen varieties. De Serres refers to the pomme apple (today known as pomme d'apt: small, red and sweet), named after Claudius Appius, who brought it to Rome from the Peloponnese; he also mentions the Court-Pendu, the Reinette, the Rambure (from Rambures in the Somme region), the Grillot, the Rougelet and the Curetin.

Several different types of apple are of food use. They can be grouped as apples for cider, crab apples (close to wild apples and used for getting) and dessert apples. They are grown in temperate climates from the Asturias in Spain, through the Ukraine, to China (where production equals that of the US); and from Tasmania (once called Apple Island), to South Africa and South America. Some 15,000 varieties are known, almost half of them American, with about 2,000 each in Britain and China. In the past, orchard art consisted in cultivating different species to produce a continuing supply of fresh apples throughout the autumn and winter. Now differing season round the world, and cold storage with a whiff of carbon dioxide, ensure a year-round supply of a few reliable types, accounts for half the apples in commerce. Nevertheless, the apple remains a totem fruit in many countries, with powerful regional movements to preserve the loved, old varieties.

The apple is the most popular fruit in the US, Britain, Germany and France. France is known for its exports of Golden Delicious, but it continues to grow many traditional varieties, such as Reine des Reinettes, Grise du Mans, Belle de Boskoop and rarer ones like the scented Calville Blanche d'Ivry (describe as the most delicious of all, and dating to the 15th century in Normandy).

American as 'apple pie' expresses the US dedication to the first fruit to be planted on the continent. Carried westward after Independence by the legendary Johnny Appleseed (Joshua Chapman; died 14), apples are turned into desserts like apple grunt, cobbler and pandowdy. Golden Delicious, first raised in West Virginia, has become the leading apple of warmer countries, but there are thousands of local varieties, and loved old ones, like Corland (1998), Rome Beauty (1848) and Newton Pippin (1759).

Britain grows a wide diversity of seasonal fruit and claims some of the finest flavours. Favorites are the aromatic, crisp Cox's Orange Pippin (1852), with a long heritage from pippins, the densely sweet Worcester Permain, going back to the 13th century pearmain, and the brown-skinned Egremont Russet, praised by Edward Bunyard in The Anatomy of Dessert (1929) as one of 'the richest late autumn fruits'. An English specialty is the 'cooking' apple, typically the late-summer Bramley Seedling that disintegrates to a fluff (in contrast to dessert apples, which hold a shape when cooked).

Particular apples are associated with different countries. Notable among them is Granny Smith, found fruiting in a Sydney backyard in the 1860s by Mrs. Ann Smith, and an Australian export by the 1930s; Canada's juicy white-fleshed purplish McIntosh; pink-flushed Gravenstein (possibly German) with savoury, juicy flesh, and important in northern areas like Scandinavia, Canada and Russia; and the greenish Japanese honey-flavoured Crispin (renamed from Mutsu), much used in pies.

Apples are best as dessert fruit from October to April. They should be firm, without blemishes or wrinkles, and red and yellow-skinned varieties should not be too green. Picked when ripe, apples can be stored in a ventilated room (stalk down, away from damp, heat and draughts) or in cold store. They can also be sliced into thin rings and dried while cooked apple freezes well.

The apple can be preserved in the form of jellies (or jam); in syrup, as apple paste or the American apple butter; and as apple sugar. English specialties are apple cheese and apple chutney. The high pectin in apple seeds and peel is helpful in jelling other foods, while the juice obtained from crushing fresh apples helps to make jellies from water fruits, because it does not alter their flavour. Apple juice is a popular drink, special varieties of apple are used for cider, while apple brandies, American apple jack and notably, Calvados are produced by distilling.

Stewed apple can be flavoured with cinnamon, vanilla, cloves or lemon juice, and is excellent with fresh cream. Desserts are legion and include fritters, turnovers, charlottes, puddings, compotes and mousses. Each country has its favourites well known are the Normandy apple tart with its wheel of slices, the British top-crushed pie (sometimes accompanied by cheese) and the Austria apple and raisin studded.

In savoury dishes, the apple is traditionally associated with black pudding (blood sausage), grilled (broiled) chitterlings and roast pork (especially as sauce), but is also used with poultry (roast chicken, goose, duck and turkey) and with grilled herring or mackerel instead of gooseberries (as an unsweetened compote or in quarters fried in butter) and with red cabbage or braised chestnuts. The French joke has it that they are pommes en Vair (apples in the air) as opposed to pommes de terre (potatoes, literally earth apples). Apple goes well with dishes cooked in cider. It is also used for salads, especially with celery, lamb's lettuce (corn salad) walnuts, raisins and beefroot (beet) together with mustard vinaigrette or a remoulade sauce.

RECIPES

Apple charlotte with brown sugar

Peel core and quarter 4 Belle de Baskoop or Granny Smith apples. Remove the crusts from 10 slices of white bread and fry in 65 g (2 ½ oz, ¼ cup) butter. Drain and use to line the bottom and the sides of a charlotte mould. Melt about 75 g (3 oz, 1 ¼ cups) soft brown sugar, then the apple quarters, and cook for 10 minutes, stirring from time to time. Flame with 1 ½ tablespoons warmed calvados. Heap this mixture in the lined mould and bake in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 30 minutes. Cook under a press, then turn out and serve with custard cream.

Apple conserve

Marmelade de pommes Peel and core some apples, cut into quarters and weigh. For 500 g (18 oz) apples, allow 300 g (11 oz, 1 ½ cups) sugar. Put the apples and sugar in a preserving pan with 2 tablespoons water. Cook gently until the apples crush under a spoon. Rub them through a strainer over a bowl. Put the puree back into the pan, bring to the boil, stirring continuously, and cook until the puree reaches a temperature of 106°C (223°F). pot in the usual way.

Apple crown a la normande

Peel and core some dessert apples, and poach in a vanilla-flavoured syrup. Leave to cool in the syrup, then drain. Prepare an egg custard (see custard) flavoured with calvados, and cook in a plain ring mould in a bain marie. Leave to cool, then turn out on to a serving dish. Arrange the drained apple halves in the centre in a dome. Decorate with very thick Chantilly cream using a piping (pastry) bag with a fluted nozzle. Serve with an apricot sauce flavoured with Calvados.

Apple crumble

Into a food processor put 150 g (5 oz, 1 ¼ cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, add 150 g (5 oz, 2/3 cup) butter cut into pieces, and 150 g (5 oz, ¾ cup) caster (superfine) sugar. Process until the mixture looks like breadcrumbs. Peel and core 1.5 kg (3/4 lb) apples. Cut into quarters, arrange in an ovenproof dish and cover with the crumble mixture. Cook for 35 minutes in a preheated oven at 200°C (400 °F, gas 6). Serve with custard or thickcreme frache.

Apple flan grimaldi

Peel and core 4 dessert (eating) apples and cut into quarters. Cook in a vanilla-flavoured syrup. Make a pastry dough with 250 g (9 oz, 2 ¼ cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, 125 g (4 ½ oz, ½ cup) butter, 1 egg yolk, a pinch of salt and 2 tablespoons water. Roll into a ball and leave in a cool place for 1 hour. Roll it out, line a 22 cm (9 in) flan ring, and bake blind.

Prepare some rice in milk (see rice) using 150 g (5 oz, ¾ cup) round-grain rice. When it is cold, mix in 100 g (4 oz., ½ cup) chopped crystallized (candied) fruit, 100 g (4 oz, ½ cup) chopped candied orange peel, a small liqueur glass of Curacao and 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) butter. Fill the flan case with this mixture, level it off, then arrange the drained apple quarters on top. Sprinkle with crushed macarons and caster (superfine) sugar and glaze in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9).

Apple gratine

Make 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 ½ cups) syrup per 1 kg (2/4 lb) apples, using 500 g (18 oz, 2 ¼ cups) sugar per 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) water. Peel some firm dessert (eating) apples, cut them in half and poach gently in the syrup, making sure that they do not disintegrate. Drain and leave to cool. Prepare an apple conserve (see recipe above) and use it to line a buttered ovenproof dish, then arrange the apple halves on top. Mix some fine breadcrumbs with half as much ground almonds. Scatter liberally over the apples, sprinkle with melted butter and brown in a preheated oven at 220°F, gas 7).

The syrup in which the apples have been cooked can be strained and used to cook apples or other fruit.

Apple jelly

Wash 3 kg (6 1/2 lb) apples (Granny Smiths or Cox's0, cut into quarters or eighths without peeling or coring, and sprinkle lemon juice over the cut surfaces. Place in a preserving pan with 3 litres (5 pints, 13 cups) water. Bring quickly to the boil, then cook for about 30 minutes (the apples must disintegrate). Place a strainer over a large container and pour the contents of the pan into it. Allow the juice to drain away on its own, without pressing so as not cloud it. Measure the juice obtained and the pour it back into the pan, adding the same weight of granulated sugar and the juice of 2-3 lemons. Bring quickly to the boil, then boil uncovered, reducing the heat slightly when the syrup begins to froth. Continue cooking until setting point is reached; the temperature should then be 105°C (220°F). Pot and seal in the usual way.

Apples flamed with calvados

Pomes flambees au calvados Peel some apples, core them and arrange in a buttered ovenproof dish. Sprinkle with sugar and melted butter and cook in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) until just tender. Arrange the apples in a silver timbale or flameproof dish and heat it. Sprinkle with warmed Calvados and set alight.

Apple soufflés

Cut 8 large dessert apples in half, core them and then scoop out half the pulp without piercing the skin. Cook the pulp for 5 minutes with 2 tablespoons water, without stirring, in a covered saucepan. Then add 300 g (11 oz, 1 1/3 cups) caster (superfine) sugar and continue cooking, stirring to obtain a very smooth puree. Sprinkle the inside of the fruit halves with 100 ml (4 fl oz, ½ cup) brandy to the apple puree. Stiffly whisk 5 egg whites and fold them into the apple puree. Arrange the apple halves in a well-buttered ovenproof dish, use a spoon or piping bag to fill them with apple puree and sprinkle with 50 g (2 oz, 1/3 cup) icing (confectioner's) sugar. Cook in a preheated oven at 230°C (450°F, gas 8) for 10-12 minutes until browned. Served immediately. The pommes souffles may be served on a caramel sauce, made by adding single (light) cream to caramel, or a caramel dessert sauce based on a custard, flavored with light caramel. Diced red, yellow and green apple make an attractive decoration.

Apples with honey and salted butter

Peel, halve and core 8 dessert (eating) apples. Pour 20 g (9 oz, 3/4 cup) liquid acacia honey into a flameproof baking dish, spreading it evenly. Place this dish over a brisk heat until the honey has browned. Remove from the heat and arrange the apple halves in the dish with their curved sides underneath and a small knob of salted butter in each. Cook in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) for 10 minutes

Baked apples

Pommes bonne femme Make a light circular incision round the middle of some firm cooking apples, core them and then place in a large buttered ovenproof dish. Fill the hollow in each apple with butter mixed with caster (superfine) sugar. Pour a few tablespoons of water into the dish. Cook in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) until the apples are just tender, about 30 minutes. Service the apples in the dish in which they were cooked.

Buttered apples

Core and peel some apples and place them for 2 minutes in boiling water with some lemon juice added to it (or squeeze the lemon juice over the apples). Drain arrange in a buttered ovenproof dish, sprinkle with caster (superfine) sugar and moisten with a few drops of water. Cover and cook in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) until tender. Place each apple on a round slice of bread fried in butter. Add a few tablespoons of sugar or golden (corn) syrup and some butter to the cooking juices and pour over the apples.

Le jeu de pommes

Make a fine pastry by combining in a processor 200 g (7 oz, 1 3/4 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, 150 g (5 oz 2/3 cup) rather firm butter, a pinch of salt, 1 tablespoon sugar and a little olive oil. Incorporate 100 ml (4 fl oz, 1/2 cup) water and work together briefly (the particles of butter should still be visible). Remove the dough and roll it out finely; cut out 16 circles about 17 cm (5 in) in diameter using a pastry (cookie) cutter. Place them on non stick baking sheets, cover them with very thin slices of apple brush with 50 g (2 oz, 1/4 cup) melted butter and sprinkle lightly with caster (superfine) sugar. Bake in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) for 15 minutes.

Turn each tartlets over on the baking sheet using a spatula and dust the reverse side with icing (confectioner's) sugar. Put the tartlets under the grill (broiler). As it caramelizes, the sugar forms a glossy crackly film. Leave to cool for 15 minutes. Take 4 dessert plates and place 4 tartlets on top of each other on each plate (apples upwards). Just before serving, cover each jeu de pommes with 1 tablespoons warmed acacia honey and sprinkle with a little Calvados and a few drops of lemon juice. The dessert may be accompanied by a lemon sorbet.

Other recipes see charlotte, compote, crepe, fritter, fruit paste, kirsch, pudding sauce, tart, turnover.

APPLE-CORER A small kitchen gadget consisting of a tabular steel gouge attached to a handle, used for taking the cores out of apples. Apples are cored before being baked in the oven or sliced into rings to be made into fritters. In France an apple-cover was formerly known as a colonne.

APPLE SUGAR sucre de pomme A. confectionery speciality of the city of Rouen, where it was created towards the middle of the 16th century.

Apple sugar was formerly prepared by mixing one part of concentrated juice of cooked dessert apples to three parts of sugar syrup cooked to the hand crack stage (see sugar). This mixture was used to form little sticks, tables or pastilles, which were coated with a layer of sugar. This recipe has been improved by adding a little glucose initially, then adding some natural apple essence and a little lemon juice to obtain a perfectly transparent apple sugar, which keeps well without softening.

It is sold in traditional 10 cm (4 in) sticks in a grey, gold and white wrapper, decorated with the famous clock tower of Rouen; this design was created in 1865.

APPRET. The French word to describe all the culinary processes involved in the preparation of a dish APPRICOT A round yellow-orange fruit with velvety skin, having tender, sweet and fragrant flesh and very little juice. The smooth stone (pit), which comes away easily, contains an edible kernel (almond in French) which is used to flavour apricot jam. The name is derived from the Latin praecoquus, meaning precocious or early-ripening.

The apricot a tree grew wild in China several thousand years ago. It was later grown in India, then in Persia and Armenia, from where it gets its Latin name, Prunus armeniaca. It was probably introduced into Europe after the conquest by Alexander the Great. The ancient Greeks called the apricot the 'golden eggs of the Sun' Introduced to Sicily and Spain by the Moors, it was not cultivated in France until the 17th century. Apricots are now cultivated in the warmer temperature regions of the world, in China, parts of the former USSR, the Mediterranean, North America, South Africa and Australasia. Popular brands in Britain are Moorpark, and Blenherim in California. Also noteworthy is the Kecskeme apricot of Hungary; intensely flavoured and fragrant, this ugly pock-marked fruits is used to make brandy.

- Uses. The apricot should be bought properly ripe, since once picked it stops ripening and might either be hard and bitter or become, soft and floury. Apricots usually do not travel well and may therefore be canned (plain or in syrup, whole or in halves). They are also made into fruit juices, used to flavour brandies and to make alcohol spirit like the Hungarian barrack palingka.

The apricot is delicious eaten fresh. Its skin may be removed, if in boiling water. The apricot is one of the fruits most widely used in sweet dishes (hot and cold desserts, cakes and pastries, fruit salads and ices) and in preserves (candied fruits, jams and conserves).

- Dried apricots. Dried apricot are produced in Iran, California and Australia: fairly large, pale and a little dull-looking. Turkish dried apricots are renowned and are dark orange with a muscatel flavour. Hunza in a Kashmir is known for fine marble-size apricots. These need 24-hours soaking (but no cooking). Dried apricots have a much higher calorific value than the fresh fruit and are sold ready-to-eat. Others must be rehydrated by immersing them in tepid water for two hours. They are used in much the same way as fresh apricots in desserts, particularly stewed in winter. Amardine, dried and pressed apricots, is a ready source of sugar to break the Ramadan fast in the Middle East and makes some famous sweetmeats. Dried apricots are prized for the intense flavour they bring to dessert. They are also good in some meat ragouts.

Apricots can be dried at home, by splitting them to remove the stones (pits), leaving them in the sun on a wooden rack until they become dark red. After drying, the apricots should be flattered with the fingers to give them a regular shape

RECIPES

Apricot marmalade

Slowly cook 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) stoned (pitted) apricots in 100 ml (4 fl oz. ½ cup) water for 15-20 minutes. Puree the fruits in a blender, then press it through a sieve to make a smooth thick puree. Return the puree to the pan, add 575 g (1 ¼ lb. 2 ½ cups) sugar and cook slowly, stirring until the sugar has dissolved, then increase the heat and continue cooking. To determine whether the marmalade is cooked, drop a little on to a plate. If it remains in a blob without spreading out, the marmalade is cooked. Pot as for jam.

APRICOT

Apricots a l'ancienne

Poach large apricot halves in a vanilla-flavoured syrup. Drain them and arrange on a layer of sponge cake which has been soaked with rum and coated with sweet apple puree. Sprinkle the apricots with chopped almonds and sugar, spoon over a little melted butter and bake in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F., gas 7) until brown on top. Serve with a sauce made of apricot jam diluted with a little hot water, sieved and then flavoured with rum.

Apricots Colbert

Poach apricot halves in a sugar syrup until barely tender, then pat dry. Fill each half with thick cold rice pudding sandwich the halves together and coat with egg and breadcrumbs. Deep-fry the coated apricots, drain and serve with an apricot sauce flavoured with kirsch.

Apricots Conde

Poach apricot halves in a sugar syrup and arrange around a thick ring of cold rice pudding. Decorative with glace (candied) cherries and angelica. Insert split blanched almonds between the apricots. Heat the apricot ring in a preheated oven at 160 °C (325°F, gas 3) and serve with a kirsch-flavoured apricot sauce.

Apricots flambe

Allow 4-6 poached and drained apricot halves per persons, while still hot place in individual dishes. Spoon 2-3 tablespoon of the hot poaching syrup over each portion, warm a scent tablespoon kirsch for each portion and set alight.

Apricot preserved au naturel

Wipe the apricots and cut in halves together and pack tightly into preserving jars, without adding water or sugar. Screw on the lids (loosen bands a quarter turn), then immerse the jars in a large saucepan of lukewarm water. Bring the water up to 90°C (194°F) and maintain at this temperature for 15-20 minutes. Remove the jars, seal, dry and store when cold.

Apricot varieties

Appearance

Bergeron	Large, firm and elongated
Canino	Large and fairly soft
Early Colomer	Small
Jumbocot	Large and firm, orange
Luizer	Large and elongated
Polonais or orange de	Large and firm, light pinkish-orange
Provence
Rouge du	Medium-sized and firm, golden
Rousesillon	red speckled with black
Rouget de	Medium-sized, highly coloured

Sernhac

Apricot varieties	Quality and uses
Bergeron	Fragrant, good for preserving
Canino	Medium quality
Early Colomer	Travels well
Jumbocot	Acidic, good for cooking
Luizer	Fragrant but fragile
Polonais or orange de Provence	Rather tart, best in syrup or jams
Rouge du Rousesillon	Excellent eaten fresh or preserved
Rouget de Sernhac	fragrant

Apricots preserved in syrup

Choose slightly under-ripe fruit prick them and put in a basin. Cover with a very heavy syrup. Soak in the syrup for 3 hours. While the fruit is soaking prepare a 26" syrup (see sugar) with lump sugar, clarify the syrup with egg white – one white for 2 litres (3 ½ pints, 9 cups) syrup. Strain the syrup through a straining bag or cloth. Leave to cool. Drain the apricot. Put them into wide-mouthed jars and cover with the boiling clarified syrup so that it reaches at least 3 cm (1 ¼ in) above the level of the fruit. Fix on the tops and screw bands tightly, then give the bands one half-turn to loosen them. Place a wire rack in the bottom of a large preserving pan and arrange the bottles on it so they do not touch. Fill the pan with cold water, making sure it covers the jars. Boil rapidly for a full 10 minutes remove the bottles, wipe and seal them. Keep in a cool place, away from the light.

Halved apricots can also be used for this recipe. Put in a basin and soak in a very heavy syrup. Crack half the number of stones (pits), peel the kernels and put into the preserving jars with the apricots.

Apricot water Ice

Cook some stoned (pitted) apricots with a little water until soft. Drain and press the fruit through a sieve (or puree in a blender), adding sufficient cooking juice to make a puree of pouring consistency. Prepare a sugar syrup by heating 225 g (8 oz, 1 cup) sugar to time until the sugar has completely dissolved. This yields 750 ml (1 ¼ pints, 3 ¼ cups) syrup. Combine equal quantities of apricot puree and sugar syrup, and flavour to taste with lemon juice – 1 lemon to each 600 ml (1 pint, 2 ½ cups) mixture. Either pour the cooked mixture into a prepared ice cream maker, or freeze until slushy in a freezer, then beat thoroughly before refreezing until firm.

Preserved apricots or apricot conditions in eau-de-vie

Choose very small firm apricots of uniform size. Put them, a few at a time, in a copper pan full of cold water, so that they are completely covered. Place the pan over a low flame. As soon as the apricot rise to the surface, take them out the water with a perforated spoon and feel them to see if they are thoroughly softened; this is the blanching operation. Soak them in cold water for one hour, drain and put them in syrup, which should be brought up to 25° (see sugar).

Leave them in the syrup at this degree for 4 days, then drain and put them into preserving jars. Fill with the following mixture: the syrup in which the fruit was candied. 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 ½ cups); neutral tasteless alcohol of 90° 1 litre (1/34 pints, 4 1/3 cups). Add a piece of vanilla pod (bean) or 1 teaspoon vanilla essence, or 100 ml (4 fl oz ½ cup) rum or kirsch per 2 litres (3 ½ pints, 9 cups) liquid. Mix well. When the jars have been filled, seal them with their special tops or with cork lids.

Keep in a cool place, protected both from heat and humidity for one month before use.

Other recipe. See Bourdouloué; jams, jellies and marmalades, sauce.

APRICOTING abricoter. The process of spreading a thin layer of sieved apricot jam over the surface of a sweet or a cake, in order to give it a glossy appearance. If a cake is to be covered with fondant king (frosting), this is made easier by apricoting the cake beforehand.

APRIL FOOL poisson d'avril practical joke that is played on an unsuspecting victim on 1 April, April Fool's Day or All Fool's Day. In France, it is traditional to eat chocolate, marzipan or sugar fish, and in Alsace cakes are moulded into the shape of fish.

Apparently, the origin of April fool goes back to the 16th century, at which time the new year started on 1 April in France. In 1564, Charles IX issued a decree that fixed the beginning of the year at 1 January instead of 1 April. This innovation was not very popular, and on 1 April 1565, both as a protest and as a joke, people started sending one another worthless presents as mock New Year's gifts. As the sun happened to be in the constellation of Pisces on this date, the gifts became sweetmeats in the shape of fish (poisson d'avril).

AQUAVIT Also known as akvavit. A grain-based spirit often flavoured with cumin, aniseed or fennel, which has been manufactured in Scandinavia since the 15th century. Its name comes from the Latin aquavita (water of life). It has a high alcoholic content and should be served really cold-ideally the bottle should be chilled in the freezer. Aquavit may also be distilled from potatoes (schnapps).

ARAIGNEE The name given in French to the muscle in an ox that lines the socket of its hock bone. The membrane that covers it is streaked with veins like a spider's web (hence the name, which means 'spider'). As a highly prized piece of meat that is rarely for sale, the araignee is best eaten grilled (broiled) because of its succulence.

ARAK. A strong alcohol spirit, usually flavoured with aniseed and popular in Eastern countries. Its name comes from the Arabic (juice, sap). Arak is distilled from dates in Egypt and the Middle East; grapes and seeds in Greece, where it is called raki; palm sap in India, and sugar-cane juice in Java.

ARBELLOT DE VACQUEUR, SIMON French journalist, novelist and historian (born Limoges, 1897; died St. Sulpice d'Excideuil, 1965). A member of the Academy of Gastronomes, he was one of the last witnesses of the Belle Époque. As well as J'ai vu mourir le Boulevard and I'm gastronome se penche sur son passé, he wrote tel plat, tel vin (1963) on the selection of the correct wines for the correct dishes and in 1965 published the biography of his master and friend Cumonsky.

He wrote a large number of articles, particularly in Cuisine et Vins de France, in which he described the Parisian appreciation of good food in all walks of life. For example, of the modest Laveur guesthouse he wrote: 'A good smell of vegetable soup, the memory of tripe, the scent of a jam omelette comes back at once to my nostrils and keeps running through my mind, evoking the good eating experience of our studious youth which, in some aspects, are well worthy of those of today. On the other hand, at a sumptuous dinner at Larue, 'We heard one evening, under the eye of the impeturbable Paul, a foreign lady ask for a milk chocolate drink to accompany a fillet of sole Cubat, the chef's speciality. Sactilege! Just as well that Marcel Proust and Boni de Castellane were not here to see that.'

ARBOIS An AOC wine from Franche-Comté, in the Jura. Two famous men have contributed to the fame of the wines of this district - the gourmet Brillat-Savarin and the great scientist Louis

Pasteur. The latter did much of his work in the region and it was because of the curious nature of certain of the Jura wines – those that form a ‘veil’ on the surface while they are in cask – that he worked out his theories about the action of bacteria.

The three main districts are Arbois, Chateau-Chalon and l’Etoile; although until very recently the wines were seldom outside their locality, even within France, some of them are beginning to feature on export lists. As well as red, white and rose wines, sparkling wines are produced. The grapes used for white wines are Savagnin, Melon d’Arbois (ChardonnaY) and Pinot Blanc; for the reds the varieties are Pouland, Trousseau, and Gros Noiren (Pinot Noir). Two very curious wines of the Cotes du Jura are the vin de paille (straw wine) and the vin jaune (yellow wine).

ARBOLADE Also known as arboulastré. In the cuisine of former times, either a sweetened cream custard made with eggs, or savoury omelette. The arboulastré mentioned in the Menager de Paris) is a thick omelette made with a mixture of chopped herbs (such as wild celery, tansy, sage, beet, spinach, lettuce and mint) and sprinkled with grated cheese La Varenne’s recipe for arbolade (1651) is a sweet desert.

RECIPE

Arbolade

(from La Varenne’s recipe) Melt butter and add some cream, egg yolks, pear juice, sugar and a pinch of salt. Cook this mixture lightly, sweeten with flower water and serve.

ARBUTUS BERRY The fruit of the strawberry tree or shrub called madrono in Spanish and in American. It grows in the forests of North America, Ireland and southern Europe and is cultivated in the south of France. The rather tart red berries have a stippled surface and are pulpy inside, but do not have the flavour of strawberries. They are used to make a fruit wine, spirits and a liqueur, as well as jellies and jams. The city of Madrid was formerly surrounded by forests and has a strawberry tree and a bear on its coat of arms.

ARCHESTRATUS Greek poet and gastronome of the 4th century BC, who came from Gela, in Sicily. He wrote a long poem entitled Gastronomy (also known under the names of Gastrology, Deipnology or Hedyphathy). Only a few fragments,, quoted by Athenæus, remain they are presented as a body of advice for the aesthete, the gourmet and the gastronome. A great traveller, the author shares his discoveries with the reader, presenting such dishes as dog’s or sow’s abdomen cooked in oil and sprinkled with; cumin, and dispensing his advice on where to obtain the best products, such as wild boar from Lucana or sturgeon from Rhodes. Above all he reveals his tastes, particularly with regard to fish, his recipe include conger eel boiled in brine and wrapped in herbs and eels cooked in beef leaves.

ARCHIDUC. The name given to Friends dishes inspired by Austro-Hungarian cuisine at the time of the Belle Epoque. Eggs, sole and poultry are cooked with onion and paprika and coated with hongroise sauce. The pan juices are deglazed with either a fumet of fish or a demi-glace sauce, whichever is appropriate, and flavoured with brandy, whisky, Madeira or port.

RECIPE

Oeufs sur le plat archiduc

Soften some sliced onions seasoned with paprika in a little butter in a small dish. Break the eggs and cook them on top of the onions. Garnish if desired with a salpicon of truffles heated in butter, or surround with a border of supreme sauce with paprika .

Poulet saute archiduc

Joint a chicken and saute the pieces in butter. When half-cooked, add 2 tablespoons chopped onions softened in butter and ¼ teaspoon paprika. Drain the chicken pieces and keep hot. Deglaze the juices in the pan with 100 ml (4 fl oz, ½ cup) dry white wine and heat to reduce. Add 1 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) double (heavy) cream and reduce further. Finally, add a trickle of lemon juice and 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) butter. Strain the sauce (if desired) and use it to coat the chicken pieces. Sliced cucumber, steamed in butter, may be served at the same time.

ARDENNAISE, A L. The term, meaning in the style of the French Ardennes, is given to several dishes of game, either birds (such as thrush) or animals (such as pickled hare or boar), in which juniper is used (in the form of spirit or berries).

ARGENTEUL. The French name given to dishes with a sauce or garnish containing either asparagus tips or asparagus puree. The Argenteuil area of the Val-d'Oise has been famous for the cultivation of asparagus since the 17 century – there is even a society, the Compagnons de l'asperge d'Argenteuil. The description may also be applied generally to 'white' dishes such as poached or soft boiled eggs, sole or fillets of sole, and poached fowl.

RECIPES

Salad argenteuil

Cook some potatoes in their skins, dice them and dress with tarragon mayonnaise. Pile into a salad bowl and garnish with white asparagus tips seasoned with oil and lemon. Make a border with shredded lettuce and quartered hard-boiled (hard-cooked) eggs.

Scrambled eggs argenteuil

Scramble some eggs and garnish with asparagus tips that have been parboiled in salted water and then slowly cooked in butter. Serve with triangular croutons fried in butter and a cream sauce.

Soft boiled (or poached) eggs argenteuil

Arrange the cooked eggs on croutons fried in butter. Coat with a white asparagus puree and garnish with asparagus tips which have been slowly cooked in butter.

ARGENTINA (see opposite)

ARIEGEOISE, A L' this description is given to typical dishes of the cuisine of south-western France, particularly chicken and boned breast of mutton, which are served with stuffed cabbage and potatoes. The chicken is poached in a broth (which is served first, as a soup) and then served with stuffed green cabbage leaves, pickled pork and potatoes.

RECEIPE

Stuffed breast of mutton a l'ariegeoise

Make a cavity in a 'breast of mutton, season with salt and pepper, and fill with a fairly firm stuffing made with breadcrumbs soaked in stock and squeezed, fat and lean unsmoked bacon, chopped parsley and garlic, bound together with eggs and well seasoned. Sew up the opening in the breast. Put the meat in a buttered braising pan, lined with fresh pork rinds and sliced onions and carrots. Add a bouquet garni, cover and cook gently for 15 minutes. Moisten with 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) dry white wine and reduce. Add 3 teaspoons tomato puree(paste) and 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¾ cups) thickened brown gravy. Keep covered and cook in the oven for a further 45-60 minutes. Drain the mutton breast and arrange it on a long dish. Surround with a garnish consisting of balls of stuffed cabbage and potatoes cooked in stock and butter. Strain the cooking juices, skim off the fat, reduce and pour over the meat.

ARGENTINA

There are few traces of the Spanish occupation in the culinary tradition of this country. Since the country's economy is largely based on cattle breeding, Argentinians eat a large amount of meat. Gastronomic differences therefore lie mainly in the preparation of the meat, particularly beef, prepared as large quarters which are roasted (asados) or grilled (churrascos), accompanied by red kidney beans, rice, sweetcorn or fresh pasta, an inheritance from Italian settlers.

Besides these very straightforward dishes, there is also a more elaborate cuisine, such as a stew garnished with pumpkin and corn on the cob; matambre ('hunger stopper'), a dish of salt beef stuffed with vegetables and hard-boiled (hand-cooked) egg roasted and boiled, served cold as a starter; and carbonara criolla, a ragout simmered in a pumpkin skin.

Argentina also produces many cheeses which are much appreciated locally, such as tafi (a hard cheese like the French Cantal), and the speciality famous throughout South America, dulce de leche (sweetened, flavoured concentrated milk).

WINE Argentina's wine industry was created by Jesuit missionaries in 1557, near Santiago del Estero. Today wine growing has become so important that Argentina is the largest wine-producing country in South America, and the fifth largest producer in the world. The quality of Argentinean wine, in particular the reds, has greatly improved in recent years.

Of Argentina's production, 70% comes from the state of Mendoza at the foot of the Andes mountains, where the melting snows provide water for controlled irrigation. Together with the region of San Juan, slightly to the north, this central area to the west accounts for 91% of Argentina's production. Wine grape plantings are dominated by Bonarda, a light, fruity red variety, and Torrontés, a dry white aromatic grape, but increased plantings of Malbec, Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, Syrah and a range of Italian grape varieties (such as tempranillo, Sangiovese and Barbera) are now responsible for much of the red wine sent for export. Chenin Blanc, Ugni Blanc and Chardonnay are the important white grapes after Torrontés.

Much of the new impetus for quality wine production has been generated by flying winemakers from France, Australia and California. Foreign investment, particularly in the sparkling wine industry by major Champagne houses, such as Moët and Chandon, Mumm and Piper-Heidsieck have contributed to the rate of change.

ARLEQUIN in popular 19th-century French parlance, an assortment of leftover food from restaurants or large houses that was made to look palatable and resold at low prices either in certain markets or in cheap restaurants. Today in France they would be called rogatons (leftovers). In Paris a table (1846) Eugène Briffault recalls, 'all the remains that are thrown out which take on the lively name of orlequin. This olla podrida (pot pourri) of the Paris Bohemians' The sellers were called 'jewellers', because of the way they took care of the presentation of these disparate remnants, as colourful as harlequin's coat.

ARLESIENNE, A L' The term, meaning in the style of Arles, is given to dishes with a garnish of aubergines (eggplants) fried in oil, sautéed tomatoes, and onion rings dredged in flour and fried. The garnish accompanies sole, tourmedos steaks (filet mignons) or noisettes of lamb).

RECIPE

Escargots à l'arlesienne

Take some medium-sized snails, stand them in tepid water to remove the impurities and then blanch with a handful of salt. Remove them from their shells and drain. Put a little diced bacon into a saucepan, sprinkle with flour, moisten with dry white wine and add the snails, together with some garlic and plenty of herbs. Bring to the boil and cook gently for about 10 minutes. When the snails are cooked, drain and replace in their shells. Make a sauce with a glass of Madeira, a pinch of cayenne pepper and the juice of a lemon. Pour the sauce over the snails and sprinkles with chopped parsley.

Other recipes see egg (scrambled eggs), salad.

ARMAGNAC. Brandy made from wine from a region in Gascony almost entirely in the department of Gers. It has an appellation d'origine contrôlée.

The main production zone is Bas-Armagnac (d'Armagnac, Cassaubon, Eauze and Nogaro, up to Villeneuve-de-Marsan and Aire-sur-l'Adour), which produces very fine Armagnac with a particular bouquet. The Tenarèze region completes the Bas-Armagnac region to the east (around Nerac, Condom, Vic-Fezensac and Aignan) and produce strongly scented and supple brandies. Haut-Armagnac, which extends to the east and south, around Miranda, Auch and Lectoure, produce less of the total production.

Armagnac's name (and presumably the spirit itself) has been recorded as early as 1411, but since 1909 certain controls have defined its area and how it should be made and labelled. The main grapes used are Piquepoul, St. Emilion, Colombard, Jurangcon, Blanquette, Mauzac and Clairette Meslier. A special type of still is used to handle the white wines and this is now done by a continuous process, although the Armagnac still is quite different from the continuous still (Coffey or patent still) used in making other spirits. (Some of the stills were, until the mid 20th century, travelling stills, going around the country making the brandy for the wine growers. These still exist, but the big firms mostly carry out their own distilling in their headquarters or buy from growers who distill.)

Armagnac is matured in oak and the age of the spirit, when bottled, can be three star or XXX (three years old) VO (from five to ten years) or VSOP (up to 15 years) 'Hors d'Age' means that the brandy is at least 25 years old, although, like Cognac, it will not improve indefinitely in wood. Sometimes bottled in a flagon-shaped bottle known as a basquaise, armagnac may also be put into tall bottles. It should be served in a small tulip or flattish goblet-type glass, able to be cupped in the hand when it is drunk neat as a liqueur, although the more ordinary Armagnacs are useful in mixed drinks. Armagnac is different from useful in mixed drinks. Armagnac is different from Cognac but – a common delusion – is not weaker in any way, nor is its quality for quality cheaper.

ARMENONVILLE A garnish that bears the name of a Parisian restaurant in the Bois de Boulogne. The basic ingredients are either Anna or casserole potatoes, together with morel mushrooms. In cream sauce. It is served with noisettes of lamb, tournedos steaks (filet mignons), sautéed or casserole children and soft-boiled or poached eggs. These are coated with demi-glace sauce flavoured with either Cognac or Madeira. The name is also given to a dish of sole or sole fillets.

RECIPE

Sole armenonville

Prepare a panck of Anna potatoes. Skin prepare 2 good sole and poach them in a very shallow dish in fish stock. Make a white wine sauce and air in the cooking juices from the sole. Cut some cep mushrooms into thin strips, cook them gently in butter in a covered pan and add them to the sauce. Arrange the Anna potatoes on the serving dish, place the sole on top, coat with sauce and serve immediately. In the traditional recipe, the sole is served surrounded by a border of duchesse potatoes enriched with truffles.

ARMORICAINE, A L' The description a l'armoricains is given to dishes with a sauce of prawns and shrimp which are cooked a l'americanaine. These days it is acknowledged that armoricaine is a corruption of americaine, itself a Parisian dish. Moreover, the incorporation of garlic, tomatoes and oil in the sauce and the fact that it was created by a chef of southern French origins, proves that the recipe has nothing to do with Brittany (Armorica is the ancient name for Brittany).

AROMA The distinctive smell of a food that is produced by a complex mixture of volatile compounds, A product is aromatized by introducing into it an aroma, natural or otherwise, that gives it a flavour or reinforces one that it has already.

Natural aromas or flavours are extracted from plants, such as mint, vanilla or the zest of citrus fruits. Certain processes, such as smoking or maceration in alcohol, also give a natural flavour.

To keep costs down, and to maintain the quality and keeping properties of its products, the food industry has increasingly used artificial and synthetic flavourings. Artificial flavourings have chemical formulae identical to those of natural flavours, such as vanillin or menthol, while synthetic flavourings have chemical formulae that do not exist in nature. For example, amyl acetate, which smells of bananas, is used in liqueurs and processed cheeses, diacetyl is in margarine; and the valerianates are widely used in preserves because of their fruity smell.

In France flavourings are not regarded as additives and their use is not governed by the same set of regulations. On the other hand, it is obligatory to include the word 'fontaisle (imitation) on labels for aromatized alcohols and syrups, and the words 'natural flavour', 'reinforced natural flavour' or 'artificial flavour' on other food labels, depending on the circumstances. However, the actual nature of the flavouring remains a secret of the manufacturer.

The name aromes is given to Lyonnais cheeses, such as Rigotte and Pelardon, which are referred in grape marc or white wine to give them a piquant flavour.

AROMATIC. An fragrant plant that is used as a condiment or for flavouring. Various parts of the plant may be used the leaves (basil, marjoram, mint, chervil and tarragon), the flower buds (caper and nasturtium), the seeds (dill, aniseed, caraway, coriander and mustard), the fruit (Jumper and pimento), the roots (horseradish), the stems (angelica, savory and wild thyme) or the bulbs (garlic and onion). Certain vegetables, such as carrots, celery, parsnips and leeks, are also used in cooking as aromatics.

Although they have no nutritional value, aromatics constitute an indispensable item in cooking. They may be added directly to the preparation during cooking to achieve a suitable blending of flavours and aromas (particularly for dishes that are boiled or braised for a long time), or are used indirectly in vinegars and oil, mustards, condiments, stuffings court-bouillon, marinades, fumets and macerations. They are also widely used to make alcoholic and nonalcoholic drinks and in the preserving industries.

Aromatics may be used fresh or they may be preserved by refrigeration, freezing or drying; dried aromatics, whole or crushed, should be stored in opaque well-sealed pots.

Aromatics are distinguished from spices in that the latter are of exotic origin; for example, pepper, nutmeg, saffron, vanilla and betel. A spice is necessarily aromatic but it may also be very pungent, while the aromatic is used essentially for its fragrance. To spice means 'to give taste to', while to aromatize means 'to perfume'. In ancient times, substances such as benzoin, myrrh and rosewater were frequently used in cooking. In the Middle Ages, simples and herbs, both medicinal and culinary, played an essential role. Later, oriental spices competed with them, but different regions continued to local practice of aromatic cooking using indigenous plants, such as garlic, anise, basil, oregano and thyme in the Mediterranean countries, dill and fennel in Scandinavia, and artemisia, juniper and cumin in the East. In France, the situation is summarized by Raymond Dumay: ‘We have only one condiment, in three shapes: garlic in Marseilles, shallots in Bordeaux and onions in Dunkirk; these are the three pillars of our national cuisine.

RECIPE

Aromatic sauce

Cover and infuse for 20 minutes a mixture consisting of 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) boiling consommé, a pinch each of chopped chives, savory, marjoram, sage and basil, a chopped shallot, 4 papercorns and a little grated nutmeg, strain the infusion and then add it to a white roux made with 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter and an equal amount of flour. Cook for 10 minutes. Add a trickle of lemon juice and a teaspoon each of chopped chervil and chopped tarragon. This sauce can be served with poached fish.

ARQUEBUSE a herby liqueur that was originally supposed to possess therapeutic qualities in case of gunshot wounds. The recipe for eau d’arquebuse or d’arquebusade was recorded in the 19th century by a marist monk from the Hermitage Abbey (Loire) and includes agrimony and gentian. Today it is used as a digestive and ‘pick-me-up’ – it is said to be the French answer to Fernet Branca!

ARRACACIA ROOT pomme de terre-celeri. The standby long rhizome (underground stem) of the arracacia, also known as the celery potato, native to Colombia. It can be ground to produce flour or cooked like the yam or the sweet potato.

ARROWROOT. The starch extracted from the rhizomes (underground stems) of several tropical plants. It is so called because of the therapeutic qualities attributed to it by American Indian in the treatment of arrow wounds. A fine white powder, it is useful in the kitchen as a last-minute thickener of sauces. Arrowroot should be blended to a smooth, thin paste with a little cold liquid before added to hot liquid. Unlike cornflour (cornstarch), which gives a cloudy sauce, arrowroot clears when it boils. It reaches optimum thickness at boiling point and should be removed from the heat immediately as further cooking makes the arrowroot thin down slightly. Being clear and requiring brief cooking, arrowroot is the ideal thickener for fruit glazes, sauces and to prepare gruels for invalids and desserts.

RECIPES

Arrowroot glaze

To make a thick set cold glaze for fruit, thicken fruit juice or a light fruit syrup as for Thin fruit sauce, below but using 5 teaspoons arrowroot to 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 1/4 cups) liquids. Use while hot or warm.

Thin fruit sauce

To thicken a fruit juice sauce to a thin pouring consistency, use 1 tablespoon arrowroot for every 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 1/4 cup) liquid. Shake the arrowroot with a little cold water or juice. Stir in a little of the hot sauce, then pour the arrowroot mixture into the main batch of sauce. Bring to the boil, stirring continuously, and remove from the heat. Serve at once or cover the surface of the sauce with cling film (Plastic wrap) to prevent a skin from forming and leave to cool.

ARTAGNAN, A LA D’ the name of the fourth musketeer is given to a garnish consisting of cep mushrooms à la béarnaise (his province), small stuffed tomatoes and croquette potatoes. It is served with poultry and meat joints.

ARTEMISIA armoise A genus of aromatic plants with a scent of camphor growing throughout Europe and Asia. Wormwood (A. absinthium) has been used as a vermifuge (hence the name) for thousands of years. It has also been used as afebrifuge (no abate fever). One of the principal herbs in absinthe, it also gives its name to vermouth, via the German Wermud. It is aromatic, but very bitter. Indeed, a flavouring for spirits (and perhaps a tonic) is one of the principal uses for herbs of this family, an Alpine variety being used for the Swiss genpi. The leaves of some varieties are used as a fresh condiment to flavour fatty meats and fish, such as pork and eel, and may also be an ingredient in certain marinades. Antemisia is mainly used in Germany, the Balkans and Italy.

ARTICHOKE, GLOVE A perennial vegetable related to the thistle, whose edible immature flower head is formed of a fleshy base (fond) and heart surrounded by scaly leaves or bracts. The base is eaten after the inedible hairy central core (choke) has been removed. The bases of the leaves cradle a small portion of tender flesh that is also edible. Each leaf is dipped in a little sauce or dressing and the tender edible part nibbled off before the rest of the leaf is described.

The heart is the central clump of close-packed tender and completely edible leaves from young vegetables in which the choke has not formed. Very young vegetables are edible, with the minimum of trimming necessary to remove a few outer leaves. At this stage the small artichokes may be sliced, quartered or cooked whole, in fritters or braised. Very young artichokes are also eaten raw.

Originating from Sicily and still very widely used in Italian cooking, the artichoke was first regarded in France mainly as a remedy for various ailments. At the beginning of the 18th century, Louis Lemery said in his Treatise on food "Artichokes suit elderly people at all times, and those of a phlegmatic and melancholy disposition." It was also reputed to be an aphrodisiac and women were often forbidden to eat it. Catherine de Medici, who was fond of artichokes, encouraged their cultivation in France.

Artichokes are grown in many parts of Europe, while California is the major region in the US. In France they are grown in Brittany, producing the large round hearted Camus with a large heart; around Paris known for the large green Paris or Laon (with more spiky leaves), and in Provence, where the violet artichokes of spring and autumn may be eaten raw, or braised and eaten whole.

- Selecting and cooking. Artichokes are best in the summer. Choose one that is firm and heavy, with still tightly packed leaves (these may be brilliant green. Blue-green or violet-colored, according to the variety). Because the artichoke is a flower bud, open leaves indicate that it is overripe and will therefore be hard and have too large a choke. When it has been kept for a long time after picking the tops of the scales go black. Uncooked artichokes may be kept fresh for 1-3 days if their stalks are put into water, like a bunch of flowers. Placing them in the salad compartment of the refrigerator is the practical alternative. After cooking, they will keep for 24 hours in the refrigerator.

Artichokes are an essential item in the Italian diet. Young small hearts (such as the Chioggi or Venice violet, and the Tuscan violet) are eaten raw, dipped in olive oil or are cooked whole and preserved in oil, to serve as an antipasto. Big globe artichokes are grown in Rome, and the city boasts recipes such as carciofi alla giudia (fried whole in oil).

Large artichokes, cooked in water or steamed, are served whole, either hot or cold with central choke removed, and accompanied by a sauce or vinaigrette, (sometimes a second source within the leaves) they are eaten by pulling off the leaves dipping the base in the sauce, eating this and discarding the leaves. Finally the base or bottom (fond) is eaten. When young and tender, artichokes can be served au gratin, sliced for an omelette filling and even fried. The bottoms may be topped with a stuffing, cooked à la horigoule, used as a garnish for hot or cold dishes, or served in a salad. Only the small violet ones can be eaten raw with salt.

Artichoke bottoms and hearts may be sold ready-prepared in Italy and are available canned (the bottom sometimes with a fringe of leaf) or frozen. The whole artichoke, or the heart only, may be preserved in brine. A mixture of water, olive oil, lemon, thyme, bay leaf and coriander (cilantro), is often used for small artichokes.

RECIPES

Artichoke hearts preparation

Break off the stalk of the artichoke by bending it until it comes away from the base; the stringy parts will come away with the stalk. Using a very sharp knife, cut the base flat and then remove the tough outer leaves. Neatly trim the outside of the artichoke, then cut off the top and remove the choke. Rub with lemon to prevent it going black, even if it is to be used immediately.

Artichokes a la cevenole

Blanch the artichokes and gently cook them in butter. Garnish with chestnut puree flavoured with soubise puree. Sprinkle with grated parmesan cheese and melted butter and brown in the oven or under the grill (broiler).

Artichokes a la duxelles

Blanch the artichokes and cook in butter, then stuff with mushroom duxelles.

Artichokes a la nicoise

Blanch the artichokes and sauté in olive oil. Garnish with thick tomato sauce, sprinkle with white breadcrumbs and olive oil, and brown in the oven or under the grill (broiler).

Artichokes a la portugaise

Gently cook the prepared artichokes in oil with chopped onion. Add 2 peeled seeded chopped tomatoes, a little grated garlic and some chopped parsley. Over and cook over a very low heat. Garnish with a well-reduced tomato sauce and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Artichokes aux fines herbes

Lightly blanch the artichokes, then sauté them (either whole or sliced) in butter, arrange in a vegetable dish and sprinkled with chopped chervil and parsley. If the artichokes are very tender, the raw hearts may be sliced. Rubbed with lemon and sautéed in butter.

Examples of the types of globe artichoke – there are many green or purple, large and small varieties.

Artichokes a la lyonnaise

(from Paul Bacuse's recipe) choose medium-sized artichokes with long spread-out long leaves, either the green or the violet variety. Break off the stalks, cut the artichokes into four, cut the leaves down to two-thirds their length and remove the choke. Plunge them into a saucepan of boiling water, half-cook them and then drain. Heat a mixture of equal parts of oil and butter in a flameproof pan and soften a chopped onion in it. Add the artichokes, season with salt and pepper and cook over a moderate heat until the vegetables begin to brown. Add 1 table spoon flour and about 300 ml (1/2 pint. 1 ¼ cups) stock. When the artichokes are cooked, arrange them on a dish and keep them hot. Add a little more stock to the pan and reduce. Add some chopped parsley and then stir in a good sized piece of unsalted butter and the juice of half a lemon. Pour the sauce over the artichokes and serve.

Boiled artichokes

Using scissors or a very sharp knife, trim off the top third of the outer leaves of the artichokes and wash the heads in plenty of water. Break off the stringy parts which will come away with the stalk. Tie up each artichoke with string so that the head retains its shape during cooking and plunge the vegetables into acidulated boiling salted water. Keep the water boiling vigorously. The cooking time (average 30 minutes) depends on the size and freshness of the artichokes. (allow 10-12 minutes after the steam begins to escape when using a pressure cooker.) the artichokes are cooked when the outside leaves come away when pulled upwards. Drain the artichokes by placing them upside down in a colander, remove the string and serve immediately. If they are to be eaten cold, put them under the cold tap as soon as they are cooked and then drain them; do not untie them until the last moment. To serve, take out and discard the centre leaves which hide the choke and remove the choke with a small spoon.

Artichokes may be eaten hot with melted butter, a white sauce (prepared with the cooking water enriched with fresh cream), a cream sauce (or simply cream flavoured with lemon and heated), a hollandaise sauce or a mousseline sauce. Cold artichokes may be served with mayonnaise, mustard sauce, tartare sauce, or vinaigrette and flavoured. If desired, with chopped parsley or chervil.

Braised stuffed artichokes

Cut and prepare large artichokes as in the previous recipe. Blanch for 5 minutes in boiling water, cool under the tap, drain and remove the small central leaves and the choke. Season with salt and pepper. Fill the artichokes with a meat stuffing (made, for example, with 4 parts sausage meat to 1 part onion softened in butter, and some chopped parsley). Wrap them in thin slices of fat bacon and tie them. Butter a sauté dish and line base with bacon rashers (slices), and sliced onions and carrots. Place the artichokes on top, season with salt and pepper, and add a bouquet garni. Cover and begin cooking over a low heat. Moisten with a small quantity of dry white wine, and reduce. Add a few tablespoons of veal stock, cover and cook in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) for about an hour, basting frequently. Drain the artichokes, untie them and remove the bacon rashers. Arrange the artichokes on a round dish, strain and skim fat from the cooking liquor, add some demi-glace or any other reduced sauce, and use to coat the artichokes.

Casseroled artichokes

Choose small Italian or violet Provençal artichokes, and trim the leaves to two-thirds of their length. Blanch the artichokes in a boiling water, drain, remove the centre leaves and chokes, and fill them with a stuffing made from breadcrumbs, chopped garlic, capers, parsley and salt and pepper. Arrange the artichokes close together in a casserole, moisten with a generous quantity of olive oil and season with salt and pepper. Cook in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4), uncovered, for about 50 minutes, basting from time to time. To serve, arrange the artichokes on a dish and pour the cooking juices over them.

Young whole trimmed artichokes

These may be braised without stuffing, devilled, cooked à la lyonnaise or à la mirepoix, or used in any of the recipes for artichokes.

Other recipes See barigoule, Clamart, Crecy, florentine, piemontaise.

ARTOIS, D' in classic cuisine, the name of the future Charles X of France (reigned 1824-30) is given to a haricot (navy) bean soup and a garnish for roast baron of lamb made with small potato croustades filled with young garden peas and accompanied by madeira sauce.

RECIPE

Potage d'artois

To 1.5 litres (2 ¼ pints, 6 ½ cups) haricot (navy) bean soup, add 4 tablespoons finely shredded vegetables softened in butter. Sprinkle the soup with 1 tablespoon chopped chervil.

ARTUSI, PELLEGRINO Italian banker, man of letters and gastronome (born in Formimpopoli 1820.died Florence 1921). Author of La stoniza in cucina a l'arte dt mangular bene ('Science in cooking and the art of eating well'). This work, first published in 1891, enjoyed an unprecedented success in Italy, with 14 still the great classic of Italian cuisine and it is also a great pleasure to read. His original style combines technical accuracy, literary imagination, hygienic education and ethnographic or historical observation.

ASAFOETIDA a milky resin extracted from the tap root of an oriental umbelliferous plant widely cultivated in the Middle East. It is dried and crushed and sold as powder in Iran, India and Afghanistan, where it is commonly used as a condiment. The first impression of this spice is off its foul smell and powerful unpleasant flavour if sampled raw. The Germans call it Teufelsdreck, or devil's dung. When it is cooked in minute quantities, its smell diminishes and it gives a slightly onion-garlic flavour to food. It is valued seasoning in many Indian vegetable and pulse dishes. It was popular with the Roman (see silphium), but was later used mainly as a medicine to treat flatulence.

ASH A tree of the genus Fraxinus, which grows in temperate climates. The leaves of the European ash (F. excelsior) are used for a fermented drink called frenette, or to make a type of tea, of tea. The very young green keys can be preserved in vinegar and used instead of capers.

RECIPE

Boil 50 g (2 oz) as leaves with the thinly sliced zest of 10 orange in 2 liters (3/12 pints, 9 cups) water for 30 minutes. Strained infusion and add 50 g (2 oz) citric acid. Pour into a barrel with a capacity of about 50 litres (11 gallons, 14 US gallons) Dissolve 25 g (1 oz, 2 cakes) fresh (comperssed) yeast in 2 tablespoons cold caramel and pour the mixture into the barrel. Fill with water, leave to ferment for 8 days, bottle and cork.

ASIAGO An Italian DOP cheese made from unpasteurized cow's milk. It has a supple but sliceable texture with numerous small holes. The flavour is slightly nutty, with lemon tones which take on a more tangy nature as the cheese mature. It was first manufactured from ewe's milk in the village of Asiago in the province of Vicenza. The cheese comes in rounds weighing 7-10 kg (16-22 lb). According to its maturing time (one, two or six months), it is eaten fresh, medium or mature respectively. (Mature cheese are graded as vecchio, time months, and stravocchio, two years).

Asiago Presato is a much more common and commercial type of Asiago. Made from pastuerized cow's milk, it is pressed to speed up the ripening potatoes and then matured for a very short time. The texture is rather rubbery and the flavour is very mild.

ASPARAGUS A perennial plant with an under-ground stem (crown) that produces edible shoots, with a nascent bud of different colours, which are regarded as a delicacy. It is a native of central and southern Europe, North Africa and central and West Asia. Known to the Egyptians and the Romans, it was not cultivated in France until the time of Louis XIV: the Sun King had a great liking for this vegetable and received supplies from La Quintinie from December onwards. In about 1875, the Orleans district become the faourite area for growing asparagus – thanks to Charles Depezay, a cavalryman who took grafts from plants near Argenteuil during the siege of Paris, and afterwards dedicated himself to growing asparagus.

- Types Three varieties of asparagus are grown in continental Europe, the season starting in March. Holland and Belgium (in continental Europe, the season starting in March. Holland and Belgium (in Brabant in the south and around Limburg) flavour white asparagus, earthed up as it grows, with a yellowish tip. Fat and white is the favourite in Alsace and southern Germany, and in Spain, where huge quantities are canned in the Ebro valley. White, but lavender tipped, asparagus, allowed to colour naturally, has rather more flavour. It grows in Italy round Bassano (in the Veneto) and, in France round Angenteuil, in Aquitaine, the Charentes and the Loire. All-green asparagus which extends the European season until June) has the best flavour of all. It is harvested when the stalks are about 15 cm (6 in.) long, and is the favourite in California (the US is the largest commercial producer) and Britain, where the Vale of Evesham is celebrated, 'Sparrow grass' is a local name there, and 'sprue', for the thinner stalks. In France green asparagus is grown on the Rhone (Lauris) – thanks to the efforts of the chef Auguste Escoffier.

Several types of wild asparagus grow in Europe, from Britain to Poland and Turkey, and in California and Australia. The one from a thorny bush is best. These feature in regional dishes; for example, Italian asparagus tips with Pamesan cheese. Wild asparagus tends to be bitter.

- Selecting, cooking and serving. Fresh asparagus stems should be firm and uniformly coloured. The cut ends of the shoots should be white. They may be kept for a maximum of three days if the ends are wrapped in a damp cloth or in an airtight polythene bag or container. Store in the refrigerator. Allow a bunch per person when serving the vegetable as a starter – usually 250 g (9 oz). Asparagus is always cooked in water or steamed before further use. The French serve it hot and plain with butter. The Italians also eat it cold with vinaigrette. It can also be served in a hot or cold sauce, in a salad, in a tart, au gratin, as a pie, in veloute sauce, as an omelette filling or with scrambled eggs. Canned white asparagus or green tips may be used.

A variety of kitchen equipment is associated with asparagus. There is a special tall steamer that keeps the tips out of the water and handsome dishes with draining racks, or with followers for sauces, plus various scoops and tongs. The tips may be eaten with a fork and the rest of the stem with the fingers, or the whole vegetable may be eaten with the fingers. A finger bowl may be provided (tin (pan) which will act as a bain marie. Cook 100 g (4 oz) green asparagus tips, 5 cm (2 in) long (check that there are sufficient asparagus tips to line the sides of the rings; reduce or increase the quantity as necessary) carefully arrange vertically at regular intervals around the edge of each ring, with the flat side turned inwards. Next fill the rings to the top with the asparagus mousse so that the asparagus tips stick out by 1 cm (1/2 in). Pour water into the tin up to one-third the height of the rings. Cook in a preheated oven at 110°C (225°F, gas 1/4) for 20 minutes.

In a small sauté pan, reduce the juice of an orange with the blanched, finely shredded zest of 1/2 orange. (Reserve the remaining blanched zest for garnishing). Whisking continually, add 100 g (4 oz) butter cut into small pieces. Season with salt and pepper. Put aside in a warm place. Carefully transfer each stainless steel ring to serving dish, slide a thin knife blade round the ring to loosen the mousse and remove the ring slowly upwards. Gently pour the orange butter around the asparagus mousse. Garnish with orange segments and blanched zest.

Asparagus ragout with young garden peas Take equal quantities of shelled young garden peas and peeled asparagus. Cut the asparagus into 2 cm (3/4 in) lengths. Sauté some new small onions in a casserole with butter, oil, or preferably, goose fat. When they have browned, add the asparagus and peas, cover, and sweat for 5 minutes. Add salt, pepper, a little sugar and enough poultry stock to just cover. Cover the casserole and cook over a low heat for 15 minutes. Arrange the ragout in a vegetable dish and serve.

Asparagus tart

Cover a pastry case (pie shell), baked blind, with a layer of creamed chicken puree. Garnish with asparagus tips that have been gently cooked in butter. Coat with cream sauce or supreme sauce.

Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs and brown in this oven.

Asparagus tips cooking

Break or cut off the tips of a suitable variety of green asparagus, discarding the stalks where they start to become hard. Tie up these tips, about 10 cm (4 in) long, in bundles of 10 or 12. Peel the lower parts of the asparagus stems and cut into small pieces. Cook them in boiling salted water for 4 minutes, then add the bundles of asparagus tips. Cook them, uncovered, for 7-8 minutes, then drain the bundles and the pieces. Dip the bundles of tips in cold water. The asparagus pieces together with the cooking water, maybe used for soup or a garnish. White asparagus should be cut into tips 5-6 cm (2-2 ¼) long.

Asparagus tips for cold garnishes

Asparagus tips used for garnished or cold salads should be dipped in cold water as soon as they have finished cooking and then well drained. Depending on the dish being garnish, they may either be dressed with vinaigrette or mayonnaise, or glazed with meat aspic jelly.

Asparagus tips with butter or cream

The tips should be well drained and, if necessary, dried for a few seconds over heat or in the oven. Add melted butter or cream and arrange in a vegetable dish. Alternatively, the tips may be used as a garnish for poached, scrambled, or soft-boiled eggs, fish dishes, small meat joints, veal sweetbreads, roasting chicken or game.

Other recipes . see aspic, buisson, cream soup, flamande, omelette (filled omelettes: Arageneul, polonaise, royale, salpicon (vegetables salpicons), soup.

ASPARTAME. A very strong artificial sweetener, 180 TO 200 times sweeter than sacchar(sugar) with a very low calorie content. It is the artificial sweetener with a flavour most closely resembling sugar. It is harmless and its lack of aftertaste means that it is an ingredients of thousands of dietary products; on the other hand it is not so stable when heated.

ASPIC A way of presenting cold food (meat, poultry, foie gras, fish, shellfish, vegetables or even fruit), by setting it in a moulded and decorated aspic jelly. Many authors believe that this name comes from tehasp, a serpent whose icy coldness recalls that of the jelly, but it is more probably derived from the Greek word aspis, which means buckler or shield, it was in fact, in this form that the first moulds were made; others were made in the shape of a coiled snake, doubtless to justify the name aspic. Today, aspics are made in plain moulds, charlotte moulds, savarin (ring) moulds or in individual ramekins or darioles; aspic moulds may also be fluted or decorated. the type of aspic used (made from meat, poultry or fish, or pectin-based for fruits) varies according to the nature of the principal ingredients (poultry shows, sole fillets, medallions of foie gras, sliced fresh vegetables or fruit segments.) it is flavoured with port, Madeira, Marsala or sherry.

RECIPES

Preparation of aspic moulds and dishes

Place the selected mould in the refrigerator until it is very cold. Prepare some aspic jelly. Pour into the mould some jelly (which has cooled but not set), turning it so that it coats the base and sides.. replace the mould in the refrigerator so that the aspic just sets but is not too firm, and then place the items used for garnishing on the base and around the sides. The garnish (which should be chosen accordingly to the principal item to go in the aspic). Should be cut up into small pieces; for example slices of truffle, rounds of hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg, slices of lean ham or tongue, tarragon leaves or smoked salmon may be used. When adding these items, the appearance of the jelly when it is turned out of the mould must be considered. Replace the mould in the refrigerator to allow the garnish to set firmly. Then carefully fill the mould with the prepared filling and press it down into the jelly. The preparation may be placed in layers alternating with layers of jelly, in which case, the jelly should be allowed to set before the subsequent layer of prepared food is laid on to. Alternatively, the mould can be filled with the prepared food then filled with jelly. Replace the filled mould in the refrigerator until the moment of serving. Unmould the firmly set aspic by plunging the mould for a few seconds into boiling water. Turn it upside down on to a cold plate and replace in the refrigerator for a few moments before serving.

Asparagus aspic

Coat the base and sides of remekins with aspic jelly. Cut asparagus tips to the height of the remekins and arrange them so that they stand upright around the edge, closely pressed together. Fill the centre with a puree of foie gras. Cover with aspic and leave in the refrigerator for several hours before serving.

Aspic of ham and veal (or chicken)

Prepare an aspic jelly flavoured with herbs, and coat the mould with it. Garnish the mould with some diced cooked ham and some casseroled veal (or chicken) cut into even-sized slices. Fill the centre with a layer of ham mousse, then a layer of Russian salad, finishing with a layer of aspic jelly. Place in the refrigerator to set. Unmould before serving.

Crab aspic (or aspic of shrimps, lobster or llongouste).

Prepare a fish fume with 500 g (18oz) white fish bones and trimmings, 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) dry white wine, an onion stuck with 2 cloves, a bouquet garni, a small bunch of herbs and 5 or 6 peppercorns. Do not add salt. Add 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) water, cover bring to the boil and cook gently for 30 minutes. Hardboil hardcook 2 eggs, cool them under running water, and shell them. Strain the fish fumes through a sieve and allow it to cool use a small amount of the fumet to dissolve 45 g (1 ½ oz. 6 envelopes) powdered gelatine. Whisk 3 egg whites and add the remainder of the fumet, whisking constantly. Add the dissolved gelatine and mix in. Bring the mixture to the boil, still whisking constantly. Check the seasoning, take off the heat and leave to settle for 10 minutes. Strain the fumet through a sieve or fine cloth and set aside to cool.

Slice the hard-boiled eggs and 3 small tomatoes. Wash and dry a few tarragon leaves. Coat the mould with the jelly and arrange the slices of tomato and egg and the tarragon leaves over it. Pour a little more jelly over them and leave to set in the refrigerator.

For an aspic of lobster or longouste, cut the tail into sections and remove the shell from the claws and feet. For crab aspic, shell the claws and feet and take out the flesh from the body. For shrimp aspic use the shrimps shelled but whole. Place the shellfish or shrimps in the mould and finish with shrimp mousse, heaping it up a little. Pour in the rest of the jelly and leave in the refrigerator for 5 or 6 hours.

Unmould and serve on a plate garnish with asparagus tips or lettuce leaves.

Fish aspic

This is prepared as for crab aspic, but replacing the shellfish by fillets or slices of fish, and the shrimp mousse with fish mousse. The mousse may alternatively be replaced by Russian salad.

Foie gras aspic

Prepare an aspic jelly flavoured with herbs, and use it to coat the mould. Arrange slices of foie gras and thick slices of truffle in the mould. Fill the mould with half-set aspic and allow to set completely in the coldest part of the refrigerator. Unmould just before serving.

Smoked salmon aspic

Prepare an aspic jelly flavoured with herbs, and use it to coat the mould. Place some Russian salad on slices of smoked salmon and roll them up. Arrange in the mould, alternating a layer of salmon rolls with a layer of salmon mousse, and finishing with the aspic jelly. Place in the refrigerator to set. Unmould before serving.

ASPIC JELLY A clear savoury jelly prepared from basic white or brown stocks (fish, poultry, game or meat). They are produced naturally when the stock is prepared with items rich in gelatine such as veal knuckle, calf's foot, bacon hock and rind, poultry bones and some fish trimmings. Gelatine is added when the ingredients used for the stock are not rich in gelatinous substances to ensure a good set. Leaf or powdered gelatine is soaked in cold water, then dissolved in the stock before it is clarified. Clarification ensures that an aspic is sparkling clear. Aspic jelly powder is readily available for fish or poultry; it is simply dissolved in water and left to cool.

Fish, poultry, meat, eggs or vegetables can be set in aspic, then turned out to make a savoury mould.

Aspic is also used to glaze cold preparations (sippets of chicken, quails, steaks or fillets of fish). As a garnish, aspic is used to line containers for chilled terrines or savoury mousses, so that they are coated in an attractive glistening jelly when turned out. Garnishes are usually set in the aspic. Aspic is also poured over the top of such cold dishes that are served in their containers. Set aspic can be diced or chopped and used to garnish cold foods.

Depending on their use, aspic jellies can be coloured (with caramel or edible carmine to obtain a wine or spirit, such as port, madeira, sherry or brandy).

RECIPES

Fish aspic

Prepare a strong fumet. Put 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) whitefish trimmings (bones and heads of brill, hake, whiting, sole or turbot), 2 onions, 150 g (5oz) mushroom parings, 2 shredded carrots, a large bouquet garni, salt, pepper, 7 tablespoons dry white wine (or red wine when cooking salmon, salmon trout or carp) and 2 litres (3 ½ pints, 9 cups) cold water in a large saucepan. Bring to the boil and then simmer for 30 minutes. Dissolve 45-75 g (1 ½-3oz, 6-12 envelopes) gelatine, depending on the degree of firmness required for the aspic in a little water. Chop up 2 whiting fillets. Mix the dissolved gelatine with the whiting flesh and 2 or 3 egg whites. Strain the fish fumet, pressing the liquid out of the ingredients, and pour it back into the clean saucepan. Add the whiting mixture and bring to the boil, stirring continuously. When it boils, stop stirring and simmer for 30 minutes. Gently strain through a fine cloth and flavour the aspic with champagne or sherry.

Meat aspic

Brown 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) leg of beef and 500 g (18 oz) knuckle of veal. Cut into pieces. 1 calf's foot, 500 g (18 oz) veal bones, and 250 g (9 oz) bacon rind, trimmed of fat. In a preheated oven at 200 °C (400°F, gas 6). Peel and shred 2 onions, 4 carrots and 1 leek. Place all these ingredients in a stockpot together with a large bouquet garni, 1 tablespoon salt and pepper. Add 3 litres (5 pints, 13 cups) water and bring to the boil. Skim, then add a ladleful of very cold water and simmer for 5 hours. Carefully strain the liquid through a strainer lined with muslin (cheesecloth), let it cool completely and put it in the refrigerator so that the fat which solidifies on the surface can be removed easily. Clarify the stock with 200 g (7 oz) lean beef, 2 egg whites and a small bouquet of chervil and tarragon.

The aspic can be flavoured with Madeira, port, sherry or with any other liquor. If this is done, the flavouring is added just before straining the aspic. White aspic is obtained in a similar fashion, but the meat and bones are not browned. Game aspic is obtained by adding to meat aspic 1.25 kg (2 1/4lb) game carcasses and trimmings, which have been previously browned in the oven, and several juniper berries.

Chicken aspic is obtained by adding to meat aspic either a whole chicken or 1.5 kg. (3 1/4 lb) chicken carcasses and giblets, both browned in the oven.

ASSIETTE ANGLAISE An assortment of cold meats arranged on a plate or dish – the French idea of simple English cooking. It may consist of cooked ham, roast beef, tongue or gelatine, garnished with herkins (sweet dill pickles) and jelly and served with mustard and condiments. The term assiette froide (cold plate) is also used. The Italian affectato is a selection of pork sausages only.

ASTI. A town in Piedmont, Italy, south of Turin, and centre of an important wine region, in particular well-known for production of a sparkling Moscatobased wine which used to be known as Asti Spumante but is now renamed Asti. It is made by a unique variation on the Charmat (cuve close method. Asti is light, graper and relatively low in alcohol at around 9 0/0. Moscato d'Asti is less effervescent and even lower in alcohol at around 5.5%

ATHENAEUS Greek writer and grammarian, born at Naucratis, lower Egypt, in the 3rd century AD. His compilation Deipnosophistai ('Authorities on Banquets') is a mine of information about the daily and cultural life of ancient Greece. There are numerous references to chefs and their recipes, discoveries, cooking utensils and special dishes.

ATHENIENNE, A L. The description given in France to dishes thought to be of Greek origin such as poultry, lamb or kebabs) that are cooked with olive oil and lightly fried onion. They are usually garnish with aubergines (eggplants) – fried, sautéed or stuffed – sweet (bell) peppers (sautéed or stuffed) and rice pilaf à la grecque.

ATTELET A small ornamental skewer with a decorative head in the shape of a hare, boar or fish. The word comes from the Latin basta (a rod or staff), and these skewers were used for garnishing hot or cold dishes served in the grand style, sometimes being threaded with kidneys, sweetbreads and other small items of food. Le Nouveau Cuisinier royal et bourgeois (1714) recommends a plat du milieu (a dish served between the main courses and the dessert) consisting of 'a piece of beef garnished with small plates and hatelettes of sweetbreads.'

Attelets were never used during cooking, as the soldering on the decorative muffs would melt

Today this form of garnish is hardly ever seen, as modern cooks tend to avoid any garnish that is not actually edible.

ATTEREAU A hot hors d'oeuvre consisting of various raw or cooked ingredients that are threaded on to a skewer, dipped in a reduced sauce, coated with breadcrumbs and fried. The skewer used, also called an atterau, is made of wood or metal. The word comes from the Latin hasta (spear).

The principal ingredients of attarevent is usually offal, either cut in pieces or sliced, but it can also be made with seafood or vegetables. The supplementaries like mushrooms, tongue or ham, may be used and the sauce for coating is varied. An athereau may also be a hot dessert, in which case it is made with fruit and pastry, dipped in a fried custard mixture (see custard), coated with breadcrumbs and then fried.

The name attareau is also given to a Burgundian speciality consisting of minced (ground) liver and neck of pork, wrapped in a caul. Shaped like large balls, they are baked side by side in an earthenware dish and are eaten cold

RECIPES

Savoury Atteraux

Atteraux a la nicoise

Assemble the atteraux with large stoned (pitted) olives, mushrooms, pieces of tuna fish (marinated in olive oil and lemon) and anchovy fillets. Make a Villarol sauce and add to it 1 tablespoon reduced tomato sauce and chopped tarragon. Coat the atteraux with sauce, then with breadcrumbs, and fry.

Atteraux of chicken livers a la mirepoix saute some chicken livers in butter, drain and allow to cool. Dice some cooked ham and clean some small button mushrooms. Assemble the atteraux with these 3 ingredients, threading the mushrooms on lengthways. Roll them in a mirepoix and coat them with breadcrumbs. Plunge them into very hot fat, drain and season with salt and pepper. Serve with fried parsley.

Atteraux of muscles

Prepare the mussels a la mariniere and remove them from their shells. Drain them and roll them in mustard. Thread them on skewers alternating with small button mushrooms. Coat with breadcrumbs and complete as for atteraux of oysters.

Atteraux of oysters

Poach and drain several large oysters. Cut some mushrooms into thick slices and saute them in butter. Assemble the atteraux by alternating the oysters with mushrooms. Dip them in villaeroi sauce made with a fish fumet, coat them with breadcrumbs and plunge them into very hot fat. Serve with fried parsley and lemon halves.

Sweet Atteraux

Atteraux of pineapple

Peel a fresh pineapple and cut into cubes. Thread the cubes on the skewers, dip them into a crème frite mixture (see custard). Coat with breadcrumbs and plunge them into the frying fat.

ATTRIAU A type of sausage in the form of a flattened ball, made with a mixture of minced (ground) pork liver, veal, onion and herbs and cooked in a frying pan (skillet). This rustic dish is found in several French provinces.

AUBERGINE (EGGPLANT) An elongated or rounded vegetable (which is, in botanical terms, a fruit) with a firm shiny skin covering pale, creamy white or greenish flesh aubergines are familiar as purple vegetables, though early European versions were white, the shape and size of eggs (with white flesh), hence the American name.

Originating in India and known very early in China, they were brought by the Arabs to Sicily in the 11th century. The French name comes from the Catalan herenjema, which has the same Arab derivation as the Indian brinjal. They reached north Italy by the 15th century, but were not grown north of the Loire until the time of the French Revolution requiring warmth and abundant irrigation, they are now cultivated in the US, West Indies, Israel and Africa.

Colours and sizes vary enormously, from the small cylindrical 7.5 cm (3 in) Japanese ones, to the huge black Enorma, grown in the US. Northern Italy favours a long one, while the Italian south boasts pink ones and several striped varieties, like the listada de Gandia. Oriental and Indian aubergines are generally slimmer and not so bitter. Check the weight at time of purchase the aubergine should feel heavy.

The aubergine has a delicate flavour and is used as a vegetable in numerous Eastern and Mediterranean dishes. Typical is the Italian melanzane parmigiana, layered with tomato sauce, mozzarella and grated Pamesan cheese. For popular dishes with tomatoes, courgettes (zucchini), garlic and olives, see iman bayildi, mousska, ratatouille, than. It is delicious as an accompaniment to mutton and white meats. It may be eaten hot, either as a main dish (stuffed or in a souffle) or as a garnish (sauteed, in fritters crumbed and fried, or pureed), or cold (in the form of a puree or as a salad ingredient). See baba ghanmouf, caponata.

RECIPES

Preparation of aubergines

Formerly, it was the custom to peel aubergines (eggplants), but is no longer done except for so-called 'white

' dishes. Traditionally, the lightly bitter taste of the vegetable was minimized by sprinkling the sliced or cut up flesh with salt and leaving it for 30 minutes to draw out bitter juices. The aubergine was then rinsed and dried before cooking. This process of degorging is no longer necessary as commercially cultivated aubergines are not as bitter as they used to be.

Aubergines may be stuffed in two ways depending on their size and shape. They may be cut in half lengthways and the flesh scooped out of each half. Alternatively, the top may be removed and the aubergine hollowed out inside. Use a sharp knife to remove the flesh, leaving a thickness of 5 mm (1/4 in) around the edge, and scoop out the remainder of the flesh from the base with a grapefruit knife. Sprinkle the empty case and the flesh with lemon juice to prevent discoloration.

Aubergine caiviar.

Cook 3 big, heavy, whole aubergines (eggplants), in a preheated oven at about 200 °C (400°F, gas 6) for.

Today, however, sauce aurore is a light bechamel sauce flavoured with tomato puree (paste) and butter.

Soft-boiled or poached eggs aurore

Arrange the boiled or poached eggs on croutons fried in butter and coat with sauce aurore. Sprinkle with chopped hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolks. Surround with a border of tomato sauce.

Stuffed hard-boiled eggs aurore

Hard boil (hard cook) some eggs and cut in half. Mash most of the yolks with an equal volume of sauce aurore containing chopped herbs. Fill the egg whites with the mixture. Put a layer of sauce aurore in a gratin dish and arrange the egg halves on it. Cover with grated Parmesan or Gruyere cheese. Sprinkle a little melted butter over the cheese and brown in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9). Remove from the oven and sprinkle with the remaining chopped egg yolks.

AUSLESE A category of German or Austrian wines made with late-harvested grapes, which in the best years are affected by noble rot. Depending on the concentration of sugar, these wines may be dry (trocken) or sweeter (balibrocken, süss).

AUSONIUS Roman poet (born at Burdigala (Bordeaux) c. AD 310; died c. AD 395), who was tutor to Gratian, a son of Emperor Valentinian I. Ausonius was made a consul in 379 and retired in 383 to the region around present-day Saint-Emilion. He wrote: 'Happy are the inhabitants of Bordeaux, for whom living and drinking are one and the same!' His name survives in the red Bordeaux wine, Chateau-Ausone, he left a work concerning the breeding of oysters.

AUSTRALIA

AUSTRIA

AUTOCLAVE A hermetically sealed vessel designed for sterilizing food products. The food is immersed in water that is heated under pressure so that the temperature rises to 120-180°C (250-350°F). No bacteria can survive in temperature of 120°C (250°F) or above. The apparatus is provided with an adjustable safety valve.

The principle of the autoclave, derived directly from the Papin marimite (invented by Denis Papin), enabled Nicolas Appaen to perfect his method of food preservation. The preserving industry still uses autoclaves. See pressure cooker.

AUTRICHIENNE, A L' The French name, is given to numerous dishes made with products of the auvergne. Pickled pork, bacon and ham (used in stews, stuffed cabbage and lentil and potato dishes), and also cheese, such as blue cheese (for soup) and Cantal (for aligot and truffade).

Auvergne

AUXEY-DRUESSES A village in Burgundy, close to Meursault, producing red and white wines. Many are labelled as Gote de Becaune Village.

AVGOLEMONO A simple Greek sauce, or soup, of egg yolks and fresh lemon juice beaten together, with a suitable hot liquid then added. Once made, it must be placed in a bain marie, or it will curdle.

AVICE, JEAN French pastrycook at the beginning of the 19th century. A chef in the best patisserie of the time – Bailly, in the Rue Vivienne, Paris, he was also appointed purveyor to Talleyrand. He trained the young Carene who, when he became famous, paid tribute to the illustrious Avice, master of choux pastry'. Avice is considered by some to be the creator of the madeleine.

AVOCADO A pear-shaped or round fruit from a tropical tree originating in Central America. The name comes from the Mexican ahuacatl, which means 'testicle'. Its skin, which may be grained or smooth and shiny, is dark green or purplish-brown in colour. It has pale-green flesh surrounding a large hard round stone (pit), which comes away easily. The flesh has a buttery consistency and a slight flavour of hazelnuts. A fruit like no other, it is ripe when it gives under the pressure of the finger. It has the virtue of ripening off the tree so it can be retarded in the refrigerator, or ripened at room temperature. Occasionally, miniature 'cocktail' avocados are seen, without the stone (pit).

The Spanish discovered the avocado tree and sent saplings to several tropical countries. The fruit's popularity was slow to spread, only being cultivated in the US at the end of the 19th century. It did not reach French recipe books until the 1950s and it was the huge investment by Israel in the fruit after World War II that established its popularity in Europe. It is now cultivated in America, Israel, Australia, the West Indies and many areas of Europe with Mediterranean climates, in many varieties. Popular American ones are Fuerte, large and green (which reflects the West Indian type) and Hass, wrinkled and dark-skinned (like Guatemalan avocados). The latter explains one of the earlier names of 'alligator pear'.

Avocados discolour on exposure to the air, so are either prepared at the last minute or need acidulating. They are commonly served halved with a sauce or stuffing such as seafood. Sliced, they are popular in salads, and may also make mousses and even ice cream.

The fruit is popular in Mexico in such dishes as guacamole (crushed avocado with chilli and garlic), climates. Flavouring ingredients may be added, for example salt, rosewater, lemon, cucumber or spices such as cardimons, ginger or even chilles.

AYU Japanese river fish, known as sweefish in English. The ayu is caught from June through to the end of summer, and it is considered a delicacy for its excellent, slightly sweet, flavour. The fish is small, growing to about 30 cm (12 in) but caught at 13-15 cm (5-6 in). Traditionally, trained cormorants are used to catch the fish. Working at night, the cormorant handles train their leashed birds to dive into the water and catch the fish, then they retrieve the fish from the bird's grasp. Line and rod fishing methods are mainly used now. Salt grilling – shioyaki-is a popular methods of cooking freshy caught ayu. The fish are rubbed with salt and allowed to stand for 30 minutes. A dipping sauce of seasoned dashi (stock) and vinegar may be served with the fish.

AZAROLE A large red or orange Crataegus azarolus, related to the hawthorn. It is grown in southern France, Spain and the US, through at its best in Italy. The fruit needs a ripening period after picking, when it becomes fragrant and sugary, so can be eaten raw. It is used for confectionery and jelly, especially in northern Italy, and is fermented for a drink.

AZUKI BEAN also known as aduki bean. A tiny, dull-red bean very squat in shape and sweetish in flavour. It is a native of Japan, India and South East and keeps for many years. After soy, it is the most-used bean in Japanese cookery, mixed with rice, or red bean paste and used in many desserts and cakes, both as an ingredients in the main mixture and as a filling when made into a sweetened paste. In Japanese tradition, eating azuki beans was thought to bring good luck.

B

BABA A cake made from leavened dough that contains raisins and is steeped, after baking, in rum or kirsch syrup. Typically it is served either as individual small cakes baked in dariole moulds or individual ring moulds but may be a large cake, often decorated with angelica and glaze (candled) cherries.

The origin of this cake is attributed to the greediness of the Polish king Stanislas Leszcynski, who was exiled in Lorraine. He found the traditional konglof to dry and improved it by adding rum. As a dedicated reader of The Thousand and One Nights, he is said to have named this creation after his favourite hero, Ali Baba. This recipe was a great success at the court of Nancy, where it was usually served with a sauce of sweet Malaga wine. Careme write, however. It was well known that the true Polish baba should be made with rye flour and Hungarian wine.

Sthorer, a pastry cook who attended the court of the Polish King, perfected the recipe using a brioche steeped in alcohol, he made it the speciality of his house in the Rue Montorgueil in Paris and called it bab". Around 1850, several renowned pastrycooks, taking their inspiration from the baba, created the fribourg in Bordeaux, the brillat-savarin (later known as the savarin) in Paris, and the gorenflot.

RECIPE

Rum babas

Soak 100 g (4 oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) raisins in 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ cups) rum and soften 100 g (4oz. 1./2 cup) butter at room temperature.

Mix 25 g (1 oz. 2 cakes) fresh (compressed) yeast or 2 teaspoons dried yeast with 2 tablespoons warm water. Make a well in 250 g (9 oz, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ cups) sifted strong plain (bread) flour and add 2 tablespoons sugar, a generous pinch of salt, 2 whole eggs and the yeast mixture. Mix with a wooden spatula until the ingredients are combined, then add another egg. Work this in, and then add a further egg and work that in. Finally add the softened butter and work the dough until it is elastic before adding the drained raisins. Reserve the rum from the raisins for soaking the babas.

rum from the raisins for soaking the babas.

Melt 50 g (2oz. $\frac{1}{4}$ cup) butter over a low heat and use to brush the insides of 16 dariole moulds or individual ring moulds. Divide the dough equally among the moulds. Leave in a warm place until the dough has risen to fill the moulds. Bake in a preheated oven at about 200 C (400 F, gas 6) for 15-20 minutes. Turn the babas out immediately on to a rack and allow to cool completely.

Prepare a syrup using 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{3}$ cups) water and 500 g (18 oz. 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ cups) sugar. Dip each baba in the boiling syrup and leave submerged until no more air bubbles are released. Drain and place on a wire rack resting over a dish. When the babas have cooled slightly, soak them in the reserved rum, adding extra rum as necessary to soak the babas generously. As the rum syrup collects in the dish repeatedly spoon it back over the babas to ensure they are very moist.

Serve the babas topped or filled with whipped cream and fresh fruit, such as raspberries.

Crème anglaise may be served with the babas, streak the sauce with a little chocolate sauce and add a few rum-soaked raisins for decoration.

BABA CHANNOUJ – A mezze or vegetable side dish eaten throughout the Middle East. The smoky flesh of grilled (broiled) aubergine (eggplant) is pureed with garlic, salt, lemon juice and good olive oil (sometimes tahini) to make a paste known as poor man's caviar. Widely eaten in the West, the dish started the whole tradition of vegetable caviars, while this name is an inspired translation of spoiled old daddy;, which is its Lebanese meaning.

BABACO – A fruit related to the papaya, originating in the highlands of Ecuador, it is grown in temperate climates in New Zealand, Britain and America. Also known as chamburo. Resembling an elongated, fluted melon with a star shaped cross-section when cut, the babaco can measure up to 30 cm (12 in) but it is usually smaller. The whole greenish to yellow fruit is edible for it has a soft skin and no pips. The babaco is juicy but low in sugar, so not especially sweet dishes when sweetened.

BACCHUS In Roman mythology, the god of vines and wine, the counterpart of the Greek god Dionysus. His functions were many he represent Nature (symbolized by the rod he carried, which was wrapped in ivy and vine leaves, with a pine cone at one end), he was the father of viticulture, since he had taught man to cultivate the vine and make wine, and he was the incarnation of fertility and became the god of procreation, often symbolized by a goat or a bull. Bacchus is usually accompanied by a cortege of satyrs, sirens and bacchantes. Dionysus, in whose honour mysteries were celebrated, inspired the birth of Greek dramatic poetry, whereas Bacchus has essentially remained part of the sensual and carnal world of drunkenness and the pleasure of drinking (hence bacchic).

BACON Lean cured sides of pork, generally sold as thin slices, rashers in Britain, which are eaten fried or grilled (broiled), especially with eggs (see breakfast), principally in the British Isles and Canada. The cured side of pig, smoked in one piece, keeps almost indefinitely. In Britain it has been a traditional cottage food for centuries. Large scale bacon curing dates to the 1770s in Wiltshire, still a bacon centre. Cures may be dry (in salt), like the classic Wiltshire cure, or wet (in brine) of which Danish exports are the leading example. Since the introduction of refrigeration the amount of salt used has dropped considerably, though regional tastes (and cures) persist and the Irish and the Scots like their bacon salty.

Bacon remains a gourmet product in the English breakfast world, with differing cures and types of smoking on offer, for example over apple wood.

Sides are cut to give slices consisting of lean back meat and a fatty streaky belly end. Sold with or without the cured skin (rind), which may be retained for cooking. As well as slices, in Britain larger steaks (thick slices) or joints are prepared, the latter for boiling or roasting. The traditional pigs, bred for bacon, were the Gloucester Old Spot, Blacks, Saddleback and Tamworth, now the white Danish Landrace is the prominent breed.

The Italian pancetta is belly with a slightly sweeter cure than the English type. It is best known in its rolled form, which is flavoured with cloves and pepper, and sliced for use. Some is smoked. German Specke, Spanish tocino and Polish słonina are streaky fatty products, sold as slabs with rind, so they may be used for barding. Many pan dishes are started with a fried mixture of onions and bacon, called soffritto in Italy. In France lard has the same uses, cured loin, dried, steamed and smoked.

French bacon is cured loin, dried, steamed and smoked, either could go into quiche lorraine. Strips, or lardons, of fatty bacon are used for larding, cut short, they are fried and used to flavour cooked dishes or salads.

The word derives from the old French bakko, meaning ham, itself from the German for pig. In pork or even the whole pig (a repas baconique was a festive meal where only pork dishes were served). The word was then adopted by the English and returned to France with its present meaning.

RECIPES

Bacon omelette

Cut thick slices of rindless bacon into cubes and fry in butter. Add to the eggs, beat together and make an omelette. It may be

Calves' liver with bacon

Season slices of calves' liver with salt and pepper and then coat in flour, shaking them to remove any excess. Fry and then drain two thin slices of rindless bacon for each slice of liver. Cook the liver for about 10 minutes in the same frying pan, arrange on a plate, and garnish with the bacon and slices of lemon. Keep warm. Make a sauce in the frying pan using the meat juices and lemon juice or vinegar. Pour over the liver and sprinkle with parsley.

BAEKENOFE Also known as backenoff, An Alsatian dish comprising a stew of various meats. The origin of this speciality is linked to the traditional way of life in the country. On their way to the earthenware pots prepared by their wives (containing meat marinated overnight, onions, potatoes and seasoning added that morning) with the village baker, who would bake (baeken) them in his oven (ofen) after batch of bread. The baekenofe was usually prepared on Mondays (washing day) when the housewife was too busy to cook. The baker himself sealed the pots with bread dough.

The baekenofe, which is still prepared in Alsace, requires long slow cooking in the oven to bring out the full flavour. It is often served with a green salad.

BAGEL

RECIPE

Backenofe

Cut 450 g (1 lb) shoulder of mutton, 450 g (1 lb) shoulder of pork and 450 g (1 lb) beef into large cubes and marinate overnight in 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) Alsace wine. 1 large finely chopped onion, 1 onion stuck with 2-3 cloves, 2 crushed garlic cloves, a bouquet garni and salt and pepper. The next day peel and slice 2 kg (4 ½ lb) potatoes and 225 g (8 oz) onions. Grease a large casserole with lard, then fill with layers of the ingredients, as follows: a layer of potatoes, a layer of meat and a layer of onions. Repeat until all the ingredients have been used, ending with a layer of potatoes. Remove the bouquet garni and the onion stuck with cloves from the marinade and pour the liquid into the casserole. The liquid should just reach the top layer, if necessary top up with water. Cover and cook in a preheated oven at about 160 °C (325 °F gas 3) for 4 hours.

BAGEL A small Jewish roll-with a hole, bagels are also identified with the American East Coast from the turn of the 20th century, and with New York in particular, where a breakfast may be bagels, lox (pickled salmon) and cream cheese. Created by a Jewish baker in Vienna in 1683, the dough includes both yeast and egg (and nowadays a choice of other flavorings). The dough is left to rise, then shaped into overlapping rings. Traditionally these are poached briefly in boiling, salted water until they rise to the surface, giving them a characteristically close texture and firm, moist crust which is slightly chewy. They are then glazed with egg and may be sprinkled with poppy or caraway seeds before baking until golden.

BAGNA CAUDA A hot dip (literally a hot bath) this speciality of Piedmont in northern Italy is a festival dish, dating back to the 16th century. The puree is made from olive oil with a little butter, pounded garlic and anchovy fillets, heated for some minutes, then served over a lamp, like a fondue. White truffles may be added in season. It is scooped up with pieces of raw vegetables, for example cabbage strips, celery, fennel, cauliflower and peppers, Cardoons are also traditional for dipping. Red wine goes with bagna cauda which is not eaten at a meal, but as a party snack.

BAGNES A Swiss cheese made from cow's milk (45% fat content), it is a cooked pressed cheese with a slightly rough brushed crust. Firm but springy to the touch, it has a fruity flavour which makes it suitable for the table, but it is most widely known along with Conches, Gomser and Orsieres, as a cheese for making raclettes. A product of Valais (particularly the Bagnes valley), it is a flat round cheese, 35-40 cm (14-16in) in diameter, 7-8 cm (3-4in) thick, and weighing about 7 kg (16 lb). Some gourmets prefer it slightly more mature (up to six months old instead of the usual three), which makes it quite a strong cheese.

BAGRATION The name given to various dishes inspired by recipes dedicated by Careme to Princess Bagration, whose service he entered on his return from Russia in August 1819. These recipes often include macaroni (to accompany meat soups, salad and stuffed eggs) Russian salad (to accompany cray fish and fillet of sole), creamed chicken or salpicon of truffles and pickled ox (beef) tongue, but the garnishes have changed and are now more simple than in the original recipes.

RECIPES

Bagration egg

Butter a number of dariole moulds and line with cooked chopped macaroni mixed with quenelle forcemeat. Break 1 egg into each mould. Cook in a bain marie for 6-8 minutes. Turn out into small pastry cases. Coat with a cream sauce and garnish with a slice of truffle warmed through in butter.

Bagration fish soup

Prepare in the same way as Bagration meat soup, but use 225 g (8 oz) fillet of sole instead of veal, Reduce cooking time to 30 minutes.

Bagration meat soup

Saute 450 g (1 lb) diced lean veal in butter to seal in the meat juices. Add to 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) veloute soup and simmer for 1 hour. Strain the veal, chop it finely, and return to the veloute. Stir in 3 egg yolks mixed with 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 table spoons) cream to bind the soup and adjust the seasoning. Stir in about 50 g (2 oz ¼ cup) butter and hot chopped macaroni. Serve accompanied by grated cheese.

Bagration salad

This dish is composed of equal quantities of blanched artichoke hearts and celeriac (celery root), cut into thin strips, and cold chopped macaroni. The ingredients are bound together with tomato mayonnaise and shaped into a mound, sprinkled with chopped hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolk and chopped parsley, and garnished with a salpicon of truffles and pickled ox (beef) tongue.

Bagration timbales

Butter a number of dariole moulds. Stick small pieces of truffle and pickled tongue to the sides of the moulds. Line with smooth chicken forcemeat. Fill with a mixture of cooked macaroni (chopped and mixed with cream) and salpicon of truffles and pickled ox (beef) tongue. Cook in a bain marie for about 15 minutes. Turn out on to a plate and coat with supreme sauce.

BAHUT A deep cylindrical container with two handles. Of variable size, it has no lid and is made of tin, stainless steel or aluminium (enamelled plate is to be avoided). This catering vessel is designed for storing cooked food, sauces, creams or anything that needs keeping.

BAIN MARIE A water bath for keeping cooked food or dishes, such as sauces and soups, warm or without allowing them to continue cooking. A bain marie is also used for melting ingredients without burning them or for cooking delicate foods and dishes very slowly.

Bain marie was originally a term used in alchemy. It was then referred to as bain de marie (Mary's bath) after Mose's sister, who was known to be an alchemist. It was also considered to refer to the Virgin Mary, the symbol of gentleness, since the term implies the gentleness of this method of cooking.

In the classic catering kitchen a cylindrical bain marie (with a handle and a lid) is used to hold soups, sauces and creams. This is placed in a shallow rectangular bain marie dish, containing warm water, which may be large enough to hold up to ten such containers. Large restaurants and cafeterias have heated was arranged on these principles.

A special double saucepan (double boiler) is used for cooking individual sauces. This pan is in two parts which slot one inside the other (the lower part contains hot water) In domestic cookery, a gratin dish or baking tin (pan) containing water is often used as a bain marie for cooking delicate ingredients or mixtures, such as pates, custards, chicken-liver mouse or baked eggs, either on top of the stove or in the oven. Whichever method is used, the water must not be allowed to boil in case the mixture inside overheats and then curdles, or water in the form of condensation gets into the preparation.

BAISER A French petit four consisting of two small meringues, joined together with thick cream, butter cream or ice cream.

BAKE BLIND Also referred to as blind bake, this is a method of cooking an empty pastry flan case (pie shell). Pastry cases are part-cooked before adding a liquid or creamy mixture, which would otherwise soak into the pastry base, or completely cooked before filling with fruit or any other filling that does not need to be cooked.

Prepared a short pastry and use to line the flan dish or tin Prick the base all over, then leave to rest in the refrigerator for at least 1 hour. The pastry case can be covered with cling film (plastic wrap) and chilled for up to 24 hours.

Line the pastry case with greaseproof (waxed) paper and sprinkle with baking beans or dried beans. Bake for 10-15 minutes in a preheated oven at 200°C (100° C gas 6) Remove the paper and beans and add any filling, then continue baking as required. Alternatively, to cook the pastry case completely, after 15 minutes baking, remove the paper and beans, then return the pastry case to the oven for a further 10 minutes or until the pastry is cooked and lightly browned. Cool before adding a cold filling that does not require cooking.

BAKED ALASKA. The novelty of this dessert lies in the contrast between the ice cream inside and the very hot meringue surrounding it. The classic baked Alaska consists of a base of Genoese sponge soaked in liqueur on which is placed a block of vanilla ice cream, the whole thing being masked with plain or Italian meringue. This is cooked in a hot oven for a very short time so that the meringue is coloured but the ice cream is not melted. It is served immediately, sometimes flamed.

The original recipe is said to have been perfected, or rather brought back into fashion, at the Hotel de Paris in Monte Carlo, by the chef Jean Giroix. An American doctor, and investor, honoured as Count Rumford, is credited with the invention of this dessert, which is based on the principle that beaten egg white is a poor conductor of heat. However, according to Baron Brisse, in his cookery column in La Liberte (6 June 1866), a chef to a Chinese delegation visiting Paris introduced this dessert to the French:

During the stay of the Chinese delegation in Paris, the chefs of the Celestial Empire exchange courtesies and recipes with the chefs at the Grand Hotel. The French dessert chef was delighted at this opportunity, his Chinese colleague taught him the art of cooking vanilla and ginger ices in the oven. This is how the delicate operation is performed, very firm ice cream is enveloped in an extremely light pastry crust and baked in the oven. The crust insulates the interior and is cooked before the ice cream can melt. Gourmands can then enjoy the twofold pleasure of biting into a crisp crust and at the same time refreshing the palate with the flavoured ice cream.

RECIPE

Baked Alaska

First prepare some vanilla ice cream, make a custard using 7-8 egg yolks, 200 g (7 oz. 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, 750 ml (1 ¼ pints, 3 cups) single (light) cream and a vanilla pod (bean) or 1 teaspoon vanilla sugar. Freeze in an ice-cream churn. When the ice cream is fairly hard, pack it into a square cake tin (pan) and leave it in the freezer for 1 hour.

Meanwhile, make a sponge by beating 125 g (4 oz., ½ cup) caster sugar with 4 egg yolks until the mixture turns thick and white. Sprinkle with 150 g (5 oz. 1 ¼ cups) sifted plain (all-purpose) flour, then add 40 g (1 ½ oz. 3 tablespoons) melted butter and fold in 4 egg whites whisked to stiff peaks with a pinch of salt. Pour the batter into a greased square cake tin and bake in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for 35 minutes. Turn the sponge out and leave it to cool.

Immediately before serving make a meringue mixture whisking 4 egg whites, a pinch of salt and 6 tablespoons caster sugar and put the mixture into a large piping (pastry) bag. Split the sponge in two through the middle and trim the edges neatly, if necessary, then arrange the pieces side by side on a baking sheet. Sprinkle with 3 tablespoons sugar flavoured with Cointreau or Grand Marnier. Unmould the ice cream and place on the sponge. Mask the sponge and ice cream entirely with half of the meringue, smoothing it with a metal spatula. Use the rest of the meringue to decorate the top with swirls. Dredge with icing (confectioner's) sugar and place in a preheated oven at 250 °C (475 °F, gas 9) until the meringue is coloured. Serve immediately. Baked Alaska can be flamed when it is taken out of the oven, using the same liqueur that was used to flavour the sponge.

BAKERY The place where bread is manufactured and sold. The application of industry to the production of bread, the ability to distribute it, once made very widely and quickly, and the knowledge of how to produce and package loaves that do not become stale immediately were all made possible during the 20th century. The latter part of the century, however was marked by a movement back towards better quality bread and more diversity of choice. Many industrial countries elected consciously for smaller, and more local, bakeries. While the uses of industry were obvious- bread available in supermarkets and grocers shops customers wanted more choice. In France, bread was baked at home until after World War I, and bread making is still carried out largely in small-scale establishments. French history provides an example of the organization of this envied food over the years.

History of Baking. Well organized bakeries were depicted on the frescoes of ancient Egyptian tombs. These establishments produced mainly unleavened griddle cakes but also, for the upper classes, bread leavened with brewer's yeast. Herodotus reported that the Greeks learned the secret of leavened bread from the Egyptians.

In 168 BC, following the victorious campaign against Perseus, King of Macedonia, the bakers who travelled with the Greek army were taken as slaves by the Romans. They were known as pistores (grinders) because they ground the corn with a mortar. Even today many Italian bakers have Greek names. In AD 100, the emperor Trajan created a bakers guild that was granted many privileges. In this way, he compelled the measures taken by his predecessors to ensure that Rome was supplied with food thus avoiding insurrection. Bread was distributed free to the poorest citizens, numbering about 300,000 to 400,000 people. In the reign of Augustus, there were 326 bakers in Rome catering for a million inhabitants. This led eventually to the nationalization of the bakers, who were paid directly by the state and were not allowed to sell their business. The brick ovens that were found in the bakeries among the ruins of Pompeii had flat beds and vaulted roofs and were very similar to those used in rural France today.

After the Roman conquest and under Roman law, the Gallic bakers were united into organizations, and in this way the oldest food profession was created. As early as the beginning of the Middle Ages, feudal lords raised taxes by making their serfs grind their corn in the baronial mill and bake the dough in the communal oven.

In the 12th century the guild of bakers was established in France they were known as lameliers (silters) because they had to sift the flour that was delivered to them. There were 62 of them at the time and Philip Augustus granted them the monopoly on the manufacture of bread within the boundaries of Paris. According to the Fier des métiers of Etienne Boileau (1268) the tannery bought his entitlement from the king (the Grand Baker). He served an apprenticeship of four years and had to complete various formalities. The master baker had a junior, or first boy, at his command. The guild also provided insurance against illness every day the baker delivered one or two loaves to a hospital and in return was guaranteed free priority hospitalization. The baker who supplied free bread to the executioner placed the bread that was intended for him upside down so that the other customers could be sure that the executioner's hand would not touch any other loaves. This gave rise to the superstition that it is unlucky to place bread upside down. The word boudanger which eventually replaced the word lamelier, comes from the Provençal word boulenic, meaning one who makes round bread. The quality, weight and price of bread were precisely fixed by royal decree. Any loaves below the prescribed weight were confiscated and distributed to the poor. The Grand Panetier judged the bakers' misdemeanours.

Bakery reforms in France Philip the Fair reformed baking legislation so that any times mixed out became proportional to the misdemeanour. He also reduced the bakers' privileges and authorized private individuals to buy grain. In 1366 Charles V. introduced regulations concerning the places and times for the sale of bread, as well as the price, which varied according to the type of flour used. Charles VII introduced further regulations and imposed limits on the places and times wheat and flour could be bought. In the meantime, it became more and more usual to make bread at home.

The 17th century saw many changes in the Parisian bakery trade. Bread manufacture was improved, flour (without bran) was delivered in larger quantities, the use of brewer's yeast was prohibited, and the number of markets increased. In 1635 Richelieu introduced the following measures. Bakers of bread rolls and pastry cooks will not buy grain before eleven o'clock in winter and noon in summer, bakers of large loaves will not buy grain in the town to obtain their supply first. Bakers shall put a distinctive trademark on their loaves, and keep weights and scales in their shops, under penalty of having their licences removed. Bakers were also obliged to sell their own bread, and not through a third party.

Towards 1710, markets were established in Paris for the sale of bread and they were frequented by 600-600 bakers from Paris and the suburbs. A further thousand came from the surrounding area because the bread they produced was famous from Gonesse, Corbeil, Chilly and Saint German en Laye. In 1721 there were 1521 bakers most of whom sold their bread in the Great Hall in the Place Maubert, at the Marche Neuf de la Gite in the Rue Saint Honore, and at the market of Marais-du Temple Marie de Medici brought in Italian bakers who introduced new products. Gradually the Parisians became more and more partial to light white bread made with pure wheat flour.

From the French Revolution During the 18th century methods of wheat cultivation and production made real progress, and the spectre of famine was gradually eradicated. But the farsighted royal administration accumulated large quantities of grain. When a shortage of food occurred in 1775, the people accused the laminers and merchants of signing a pact of famine in order to speculate on grain. In reality, these preventative purchase were to be resold at the normal price.

In 1771 Turgot decided that there should be free trade in grain throughout France. Unfortunately, this decision was premature and in the following year there was noting and pillaging of grain stores. This was called the war of famine.

The day after the storming of the Bastille, the continuing shortage of food exasperated the people the bakers asked for sentries to protect them and prevent their shops from being ransacked Paris did not have enough bread and to cries of let's get the baker, the baker's wife and the baker's assistant, the people led by the market women, took the road to Versailles. On 2 march 1791 the Constitution did away with guild wardenships and masterships, and bakery supposedly become free but was still subject to the regulations of the public authorities. Bakery products continued to evolve in 1810, Viennese products became popular and many Austrian bakers came to Paris.

Modern times Bread continues to be an essential part of the daily diet in France, as in most European countries. Though there is now the convenience of being able to buy bread elsewhere, the bakery is a part of small town life. In France, however, the craze for the Parisian baguette has resulted in the disappearance of many regional breads, while some regional bakeries have now become merely bread shops.

In former times, the village baker's oven was often the only one locally, and certain slow cooked dishes, such as meat stews, including Boston baked beans in Puritan America, and even roast and pastries, were taken by the villagers to the baker, to be cooked in the residual oven heat after the bread had been removed. In some Mediterranean countries peppers are still baked this way and sold by bread shops, but the social function of a communal village oven has passed away now that domestic ovens are commonplace. Commercial bakeries have been in operation in France since 1959, but in the latter part of the 20th century only accounted for about 10% of the total production. Most and this is typical throughout continental Europe – bread-making continues to be carried on in numerous small scale bakers.

Bakery equipment From antiquity to the beginning of the 20th century the baker's equipment changed very slowly. Roman frescoes show a kneading machine driven by animals and it is known that the workers of this period wore hygienic masks. The mechanical kneader used in modern bakeries dates from 1920. Ovens, formerly heated by burning wood and then coal, are now heated by gas, electricity or oil. Since the original Roman vault shaped cooking chamber, the bread oven has seen the introduction of the rotating disc and stacking in layers. The most commonly used oven nowadays rotates internally and contains a vertical trolley which can be removed when the bread is cooked.

There have been many improvements. High speed kneading machines oxygenate and bread. Refrigerated fermentation chambers (instead of incubators) means that the baker can prepare the bread the previous evening because the fermentation process taken longer. However, the high proportion of yeast required does not improve the quality. Deep-freezing is very commonly practiced in the United States.

In addition to various types of bread, many local bakers also make pastries and sell confectionery.

BAKING POWDER A raising (leavening) agent invented in America and introduced to Europe in the 1840s, it consists of 2 parts bicarbonate of soda and 1 part cream of tartar mixed with a flour of starch. Several types are distinguished in America. Fast action baking powder works immediately in the cold dough, another type only on the dough going into the oven. Baking powder is commonly used in domestic baking, particularly for cakes and scones (biscuits)

BAKING SHEET. A tray, with only a very slightly raised edge, on which all kinds of unmoulded pastries, biscuits, (cookies), small cakes and tarts are placed to be baked in the oven. It can be lined with grease proof (waxed) paper or greased and coated with flour if required.

BAKING TIN (PAN) A wide flat cooking utensil that comes in various sizes and depths. The roasting tin (pan), made of aluminum or tinned copper plate, is usually rectangular with two handles and shallow vertical sides, it may be fitted with a grid so that the meat or poultry does not rest in its own cooking juices.

BAKLAVA A sweet pastry widely eaten in the Middle East consisting of several very thin layers of filo pastry filled with chopped toasted almonds, pistachios and walnuts mixed with sugar and then cut into lozenges (diamonds) before baking. When they are taken out of the oven, a honey or sugar syrup flavoured with rose water and lemon juice is poured over the baklavas.

RECIPE

Baklavas with pistachio nuts

In a food processor mix 575 g (1 ¼ lb. 5 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, 25 g (1 oz) salt and enough water to obtain a firm, elastic dough. Make 12 balls, of equal size. Flatten the first ball with the hand. Sprinkle a pinch of cornflour (cornstarch) over it to prevent it from sticking. Place a second ball on top. Flatten this with the hand and sprinkle a pinch of cornflour over it. Repeat with the other 10 balls. This results in a pastry consisting of 12 layers. Gradually flatten this pastry with a rolling pin, taking care not to crush or tear it, stretching it gently along the edges in order to obtain a circle of about 30 cm (12 in) in diameter. Cover the pastry with a cloth and allow to rest for 1 hour.

Then remove the first layer of the pastry, turn it over and sprinkle it with a pinch of cornflour. Repeat with the other layers, so that both sides of each layer are coated with cornflour, and pile them on top of each other again. Sprinkle cornflour on a marble surface and place the stack of pastry on top, then stretch it out gently with the hands into a circle 50 cm (20 in) in diameter and 3-4 cm (1 ¼ -1 ½ in) thick. Because the top stretches more than the bottom, turn the stack of pastry over and repeat the stretching operation. Roll out carefully with a very long rolling pin into a circle about 80 cm (32 in) in diameter. Place the rolling pin in the middle of the pastry and roll 6 layers around it, one, sprinkling each with cornflour, then roll them on the table. Repeat the operation with a second rolling pin and the 6 remaining layers. Finally, bring the 12 layers together, by now they will have become extremely thin.

Chop shelled pistachio nuts. Place the pastry over an overproof dish 70 cm (28 in) in diameter. The edges will overhang by about 20 cm (8 in) cut out the circle of pastry and set aside. Cut the rest into 4-6 lozenge (diamond) shapes. Divide in two (6 layers). Decorate with the chopped pistachio nuts and cover with the other half (6 layers). Cover the lozenges with the circle of pastry and carefully seal the edges. Melt 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb, 6 ½ cups) butter and pour slowly on to the pastry. Allow to rest for 30 minutes.

Bake in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for 20-30 minutes. Take the baklavas out of the oven and allow to cool. Mix 7 parts of sugar, 2 parts of water and 2 tablespoons orange flower water and cook gently for 5 minutes. Pour the hot syrup over the baklavas and leave them to cool.

BALLON A round French bread roll made from fleur (French white flour), with a crisp, crumbly crust. It must be eaten very fresh.

BALLOTINE A hot or cold dish based on meat, poultry, game birds or fish in aspic. The flesh is boned, stuffed, rolled and tied, up with string, usually wrapped in muslin (cheese cloth) sometimes in the skin then braised or poached

RECIPES

Ballotine of chicken in aspic

Bone a 2.5 kg (5 ½ lb) chicken as in the recipe for braised ballotine of chicken. Dice the flesh from the chicken together with 150 g (5 oz.) cooked ham, 150 g (5 oz) pickled tongue and 150 g (5 oz) bacon. Combine this meat with 225 g (8 oz) sausagemeat, 225 g (8 oz) lean minced (ground) veal, 2 eggs, 7 tablespoons Cognac, 150 g (5 oz) chopped truffles or pistachios, a generous pinch of mixed spice and salt and pepper. Knead the mixture well with wet hands. Shape the stuffing into an oblong, place on the bone chicken and shape the ballotine by drawing the skin all round the stuffing. Rinse and squeeze out a piece of muslin (cheesecloth) and roll up the ballotine tightly in it. Tie with string at both ends, slightly compressing, the ballotine, then tie in the middle and between the middle and each end.

Prepare a jelly (aspic) stock using 2 calf's feet, 300 g (11 oz) pork rind, 800 g (1 ¼ lb) knuckle of veal, 2 carrots, 1 onion, 2 leeks (white part only) a bouquet garni, about 3.5 litres (6 pints, 3 ½ quarts) chicken stock (or water,) and 400 ml (14 fl oz, 1 ¾ cups) Madeira, adding the chicken carcass and giblets (except the liver) and other giblets if desired. Simmer the ballotine gently in the prepared stock for 1 ¾ hours. Remove from the stock and allow to cool. Unwrap, Rinse the muslin in warm water, squeeze out thoroughly, and wrap up the ballotine again. Tie up and allow to cool for 12 hours under a weight. Clarify the stock, adding gelatine if necessary, and coat the cold ballotine with the half-set aspic, then chill and serve when completely cold.

Ballotine of chicken in chaud froid sauce

Prepare the ballotine as for ballotine of chicken in aspic, but coat with chaud-froid sauce instead of aspic.

Ballotine of duck

Bone a 2.5 kg (5 ½ lb) duck, remove all the flesh and dice the breast meat. Draw the sinews from the rest of the meat and finely chop with an equal weight of unsmoked fatty bacon, half this weight of lean veal, and 75 g (3 oz, 1 ½ cups) fresh bread crumbs soaked in milk. Combine these ingredients in a food processor with 4 egg yolks. Season with salt, pepper and allspice. Add to this stuffing 150 g (5 oz) fresh foie gras, cut into large cubes and quickly fried in butter, 1 truffle and the diced breast meat. Add 2 tablespoons Cognac and mix well.

Wet and squeeze out a piece of muslin (cheesecloth) and spread out on the table. Place the duck skin, opened flat, on the muslin and spread evenly with the stuffing. Roll into the ballotine shape. Tie at both ends and in the middle.

Boil the ballotine immersed in a rich stock for 2-3 hours, arrange on a serving dish, and garnish as desired (chatelaine, chipolata, forestiere, Godard, Lucullus, braised chestnuts, or lettuce and other vegetables braised or cooked in butter. Baste the ballotine with a few spoonfuls of reduced sautéed pan juices. Serve the remainder of this liquid separately.

To serve the ballotine cold, increase the foie gras to at least 200 g (7 oz). Once the cooked ballotine has been unwrapped, rewrap it very tightly in the same muslin, rinsed and wrung out, and allow to cool between two plates, under a weight. Refrigerate overnight, then glaze with aspic jelly made from the well reduced stock and chill to set before serving.

Ballotine of guinea fowl Jeanne d'Albret

Bone 2 raw guinea fowl without damaging the skin and reserve the breasts whole. Make a forcemeat with the flesh of the thighs and their trimmings, 300 g (11 oz) lean Bayonne ham, 300 g (11 oz.) fat bacon and 200 g (7 oz) mushrooms. Use a food processor to reduce these ingredients to a paste or mince (grind) them finely, then bind together with 2 raw eggs. Press through a sieve. Spread a piece of muslin (cheesecloth) on the table, place on it two strips of uncured fat bacon, and spread the skin of the guinea fowls over these. Spread with half of the forcemeat. Slice the breasts into thin strips and arrange half of them on the forcemeat, add a slice of foie gras and two truffles on either side, lengthways. Make two more layers with the rest of the sliced breasts and the remaining forcemeat.

Roll into a ballotine in a muslin cloth and tie it up at both ends and in the middle. Place in a braising pan with a good white stock and a crushed calf's foot, the bones and carcasses of the guinea fowls, a carrot, a small bouquet garni, the white part of a leek and 100 g (4 oz) of bacon rind or pork rind. Cook for 1 ½ hours.

The following day, strain the stock through a cloth and clarify it using 2-3 eggs to obtain a full flavoured aspic jelly. Turn out the ballotine on to a long dish and glaze with the half-set aspic. Make a crown with a piece of truffle and some chopped aspic and garnish the ballotine with cubes of aspic jelly and truffles.

Ballotine of lamb in aspic

Make a stuffing of a salpicon of picked tongue, ham and stoned (pitted) black olives. Spread this mixture on a boned flattened shoulder of lamb, roll it up, wrap it in muslin (cheesecloth) and tie with string. Cook the lamb in a casserole on a bed of vegetables with bacon and stock for about 1 ¾ hours, as in the recipe for braised ballotine of lamb. Drain and unwrap the ballotine (straining and reserving the liquor), squeeze out the muslin and use it to wrap up the ballotine again. Tie at both ends and in the middle and allow to cool for 12 hours under a weight. Unwrap and place in a dish. Warm the liquor and pour it over the ballotine, adding more warmed jellied stock, if necessary, to cover. Chill for at least 24 hours until firmly set before serving.

Ballotine of pork

Prepare a boned shoulder of pork in the same way as for braised ballotine of lamb.

Ballotine of veal

Prepare using boned shoulder or breast of veal, in the same way as for ballotine of lamb.

Braised ballotine of chicken

Cut off the feet and pinions (wing tips) of a chicken. To bone, cut through the middle of the back from the neck to the tail and then, using a small sharp knife, working one side of the backbone at a time, gently ease the flesh away from the bone, taking care not to pierce the skin. Then carefully remove the bones from the legs and wings. Spread the chicken out flat on the table. Remove the breast meat and as much as possible of the legs and wings and cut it into cubes.

Prepare a stuffing from finely minced (ground) pork and veal – about 225 g (8 oz) of each – mixed with 100 g (4 oz) cooked ham, 2 eggs, 7 table spoons Cognac, a generous pinch of allspice, and salt and pepper. Continue as for braised ballotine of lamb.

The same method can be used to make hot or cold ballotines of turkey or pigeon, adding foie gras and truffles, if required, in proportions corresponding to the size of the bird.

Braised ballotine of lamb

Ask the butcher to bone a shoulder of lamb. To prepare the stuffing, first finely chop 3 onions, and cook in 20 g (3/4 oz, 1 ½ tablespoons) butter until soft. Mince together a bunch of parsley and 2 garlic cloves. Combine this mixture with the onions, cloves. Combine this mixture with the onions, 450 g (1 lb) sausagemeat and salt and pepper and work together by hand or in a food processor. Open out the boned shoulder, spread with the stuffing, then roll up and tie with string.

Dice 100 g (4 oz) carrots, 3 onions, 1 celery stick and 100 g (4 oz) bacon. Melt 25 g (1 oz. 2 table spoons) butter in a large flameproof casserole and brown the stuffed lamb. Remove and set aside. Cook the vegetable mixture in the butter remaining in the pan until soft. Add a small sprig of thyme, then replace the vegetables. Add 200 ml (7 ft oz, ¾) cup dry white wine, 200 ml (7 ft. oz, ¾ cup) stock or meat juices, a bouquet garni, salt and pepper. Bring to the boil and cook, uncovered, for 5 minutes. Turn the shoulder over in the vegetables, cover the casserole and continue cooking in a preheated oven at 200 °C(400 °F, gas 6) for 1 ½ hours. Remove the bouquet garni. Untie the ballotine and serve very hot, either on its own or with spinach, mixed vegetables, noodles, pilaf or risotto.

Cold ballotine of eel

Prepare and cook the ballotine as for hot ballotine of eel. Drain and unwrap, squeeze out the muslin (cheesecloth), and wrap the balltoine up again in the same cloth, tie up with string and cool for 12 hours under a weight. In the meantime, make a fish aspic using the stock in which the ballotine was cooked. Unwrap the eel and place in a dish, coat with aspic and chill until firmly set.

Hot ballotine of eel

Skin a large eel weighing at least 900 g (2 lb) cut off the head and tail, open out and remove the backbone. Flatten the eel and season with salt and pepper. Spread with forcemeat for fish and reshape the eel, taking care to ensure that it is the same thickness all the way along. Wrap it in muslin (cheesecloth), tie it up with string and place on a grid in a fish kettle. Prepare enough fish court bouillon to cover the eel in its pan. Allow to cool, then pour over the eel. Cover and poach very gently for about 20 minutes. Drain the ballotine, unwrap it and put it in an ovenproof dish. Strain the stock and reduce by boiling until syrupy. Coat the fish with the stock and put in the oven for a few minutes. Serve very hot.

Hot ballotine of eel bourguignonne

Add chopped parsley to godiveau Lyonnais (pike forcemeat) or a foremeat made from whiting. Use to stuff an eel which has been prepared according to the previous recipe. Poach in a court-bouillon of red wine, drain and keep warm. Prepare a bourguignonne sauce with the cooking stock and pour over the eel. This dish can be garnished with small fried croutons.

Small ballotines of chicken

Bone and stuff legs of chicken and cook until tender in the same way as for ballotine of chicken in aspic.

BALTHAZAR This word is used to describe both a magnificent feast and, since 1800, a large bottle of champagne. In both cases it refers to an episode in the Old Testament in which Balthazar, the last king of Babylon, offers a sumptuous banquet to a thousand of his dignitaries. During the banquet he has the wine served in sacred vases which his father, Nebuchadnezzar, stole from the Temple in Jerusalem. That same night the sacrilege is punished by the hand of God. The word Balthazar has an ironic meaning when applied to a banquet. However, it still remains the technical name for a bottle of champagne containing the equivalent of 16 ordinary bottles. The next size up, containing 20 bottles, is known as a Nebuchadnezzr.

BALZAC, HONORE DE French author (born periods Balzac, the author of La Comedie Humaine, shut himself away, drinking too much coffee and he displayed a gargantuan appetite. At the very restaurant, he was seen to devour a hundred Ostend oysters, twelve cutlets of salt-meadow mutton, a duck with turnips, two partridges and a Normandy sole, followed by desserts, fruit, coffee and liquors.

Balzac has created a number of gourmets in his novels, such as Cousin Pons, who loved escargots and gratin and bœuf à la mode. Pere Rouget (from La Raboutheuse), who considered that an omelette was more delicate when the whites and the yolks were beaten separately, and the Vidame de Pamiers (from Le Cabinet des antiques), who decreed that for a dinner party to be successful no more than six guests must be present.

The author often used famous restaurants of the Paris of the 1830s as his setting and described their specialties in his books: turbot with oysters from the Rocher de Cancale, oysters from the Café de Paris, cod in garlic from the Freres Provenaux and grilled meats from the Café Anglais, where Rastignac gave a princely welcome to Delphine de Nucingen. However, provincial cooking was often more highly esteemed by Balzac because dishes were more studied and better thought out: Angevin potted meat (Le Lys dans la vallée), cling peach jam (Eugenie Grandet) and I soudun mazzipan (La Raboutheuse) were considered worthy of his praise.

Balzac also edited a collection of gastronomic texts (Le Gastronomes français ou l'art de bien vivre, 1828), for which he wrote an unsigned preface, and published the Physiologie gastronomique in 1830. He also published a study of contemporary stimulants (1838) and wrote a treatise on the same subject as an appendix to the new edition (1839) of the Physiologie du goût by Brillat-Savarin.

BAMBOCHE, EN The French term applied to a preparation of fried cod, sometimes served with fried eggs. The word is derived from the Italian bamboccio, meaning jumping jack, perhaps facetiously referring to the way the pieces of cod jump around in the hot fat.

RECIPES

Fried eggs bamboche

Bind together a mixture of hot cooked vegetables with cream and arrange in a ring on a serving dish. Fill the centre with strips of fried cod. Arrange fried eggs on the ring of vegetables.

Salt cod en bamboche

Soak the fish to remove the salt and cut into thick slices the size of fillets of sole. Moisten with milk, dust with flour and plunge into boiling fat. Drain, pat dry and arrange on a bed of assorted vegetables mixed with butter or cream.

BAMBOO A plant several metres tall, common throughout tropical Asia, whose young, tender and slightly crunchy shoots are served as a vegetable. The Japanese also enjoy bamboo seeds, which have a slightly floury texture, and in Vietnam and China food is steamed in bamboo leaves. In Cambodia, the bamboo canes themselves are used for cooking minced (ground) meat in.

Bamboo shoots used for cooking are ivory white in colour, spring from the base of the plant and are cut when conical in shape, averaging 7 cm (2 ½ in) in diameter at the base and 10 cm (4 in) in length. When fresh, the fine needle sharp hairs which cover them must be removed before use. In Europe they are usually found dried or canned in water, brine or vinegar (under their Japanese name of takenoko or their Chinese name of sun ki). Once opened keep preserved bamboo shoots in the refrigerator in a closed container filled with water.

Popular throughout Chinese and the whole of tropical Asia, bamboo shoots cut into stripes or sticks are an ingredient of many dishes, including soups, stews and braised dishes, and stir fries. In China the shoots are salted, dried in the sun and macerated in sweet wine with star anise and rose petals to make a seasoning. In Japan bamboo shoots are the basic spring time vegetable.

added to sukiyaki. They are used in family stews and in the delicate dishes of the tea ceremony all year round.

Strips of mature fine bamboo are used in the Far East for making lattice mats, on which to cook food or to roll sushi, and also for Chinese steamers, which are set over a wok.

RECIPE

Chicken with bamboo shoots

Place a chicken in a large pan and cover with water. Bring to the boil. Immediately remove and drain the chicken. Cool the stock by standing the container in cold water. Skim the stock, replace the chicken and bring back to the boil. Add 5-6 shiitake mushrooms, 1-2 scented Chinese mushrooms, 100 ml (4 fl oz., 7 tablespoons) soy sauce, 3 tablespoons sugar, salt and pepper, and continue cooking. After 1 hour, drain 225 g (8 oz) preserved bamboo shoots, rinse in a colander with cold water, then cut into thick sticks, add to the pan and simmer gently until the chicken is cooked- about 20 minutes for a tender bird or 1 hour for a boiling fowl.

Drain the chicken, remove the skin and cut all the meat into thin strips. Arrange the chicken on a serving dish and surround with the mushrooms and bamboo shoots. Just before serving trim 3-4 spring onions (scallions) and fry quickly in oil. Add 2 tablespoons soy sauce and use to garnish the dish. The stock, highly seasoned with pepper and with fine rice stick vermicelli added, can be served at the end of the meal.

BANANA The fruit of the banana tree, a long leaved plant originating in India and cultivated in tropical regions (West Indies, Africa and South America), Each plant bears clusters of 50-200 fruits with sweet, white, floury and fleshy pulp.

There are two major kinds of banana: fruit bananas, which are eaten cooked or raw, and plantain bananas, which are cooked as vegetables.

* Fruit bananas According to an Indian legend, where Paradise is on the island of Sri Lanka, the banana was the forbidden fruit and Adam and Eve, banished from the Garden of Eden, covered their bodies with banana leaves. Because Europeans first called bananas figs, this explains the ancient names of Adam's fig" and paradise banana" Still rare in the Renaissance, bananas, introduced to France by the Portuguese, became from the 18th century onwards.

Indigenous varieties bear a short roundish fruit with a purplish red skin and highly scented flesh Bananas cultivated for export in South America (poyo, gros Michel, Cavendish, grande name) are long with brown-stained yellow skin. They are harvested green, shipped in banana boats at a temperature of about 13 °C (55 °F), and stored in a humid environment where they ripen at a temperature between 16.5 °C (61.5 °F) and 20 °C (68 °F). There are also sweet dwarf Canary bananas, lady fingers from Thailand and apple bananas from East Africa and Malaysia.

Cooking bananas brings out their full flavour and, when combined with sugar, butter or alcohol, they make a delicious, if heavy dessert.

Bananas also contain pectins, which contribute to the smoothness of the flesh, and malic acid, which makes them refreshing when eaten raw. Well protected by their thick skin, they are transported unripe so continue to ripen after purchase. (They should not, however, be put in the refrigerator because they turn black at very low temperatures) The skin is generally removed, as are the white threads which cling to the flesh. Bananas make many sweet dishes poached, sauteed, flambéed, fritters, fruit salads, sweet omelettes, ice cream, flans and purees.

Dried bananas are black in colour and sweet with a good flavour. Slices of unripe fruit are made into banana chips.

In South America and the Far East, curled banana leaves are used to steam or wrap food such as rice or minced (ground) meat.

Plantain With its green skin and fairly firm pink flesh, the plantain is the staple food of East Africa and accounts for roughly half of banana production. The plantain is usually flatter and longer than the fruit banana and contains more starch and less sugar. They are firmer in texture and have a slightly dry flavour. Cooking time varies according to the variety and state of maturity, but they are baked, boiled (in salted water for 15-45 minutes) fried, mashed or used in stews. Plantains are served as an accompaniment to many West Indian, South American or African dishes.

RECIPES

Savoury Banana Recipe

Bananas with bacon

Peel the required number of bananas. Wrap a rasher (slice) of rindless smoked or unsmoked bacon around each banana as it is peeled and secure with wooden cocktail sticks (toothicks). Cook the bacon wrapped bananas under a hot grill (broiler) until the bacon is browned. Turn and cook the second side. Serve at once. Alternatively, the bananas can be fried in a little olive oil.

Chunks of bananas can be wrapped in short lengths of bacon and threaded on metal skewers, then grilled on both sides until golden.

Serve with cooked rice tossed with raisins, a pinch of cayenne, a few roasted peanuts and a little grated fresh root ginger.

Bananas fried in a little unsalted butter are delicious with grilled bacon for breakfast or a light lunch serve with warm crusty bread or on warm waffles or lightly toasted English muffins.

Sweet Bananas Recipes

Baked bananas

Bake unpeeled bananas in a preheated oven at 200 °C (425 °F, gas 7) for 10-20 minutes. Peel off a third of the skin lengthways to form a boat shape and serve with melted butter and caster (superfine) sugar or with redcurrant jelly.

Banana ice cream

Peel firm, ripe bananas and puree in a food processor or blender with lemon juice (use 1 lemon for 6 bananas). Mix with an equal volume of sugar syrup. Flavour with rum and freeze in the usual way.

Bananas a la creole au gratin

Select firm bananas and peel off a wide strip of skin from each. Remove the flesh in one piece, without crushing and sprinkle with lemon juice. Blanch the skins for 2 minutes in boiling water, cool by dipping in cold water and pat dry. Slice the flesh and soak for 30 minutes in lemon juice. Blanch the skins for 2 minutes in boiling water, cool by dipping in cold water and pat dry. Slice the flesh and soak for 30 minutes in lemon juice, sugar and rum. Put a layer of cooked rice pudding mixed with finely chopped crystallized (candied) fruit into each skin. Arrange the banana slices vertically on top and cover with finely crushed macaroons. Coat with melted butter and place under a hot grill broiler).

They can be served with a rum-flavoured apricot sauce.

Bananas flambe

Peel some firm bananas and cook in butter or a vanilla-flavoured sugar syrup, without allowing them to become soft. Drain. Warm some rum, Calvados, Armagnac or Cognac and pour over the bananas. Set alight and serve immediately.

Bananas in butter

Peel some just-ripe bananas and arrange in a buttered overproof dish. Pour some melted butter over and dust with sugar. Bake in a preheated oven at about 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for 15 minutes.

Banana souffles

Select some firm ripe bananas. Peel off a strip of skin and remove the flesh. Sprinkle the flesh with lemon juice, mash and mix with a very little confectioner's custard (pastry cream). Fold in whisked egg whites to prepare a souffle mixture. Fill the skins with the souffle mixture. Smooth the surface. Bake in a preheated oven at about 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for 8-9 minutes, Serve immediately.

Grilled bananas

Peel some bananas, brush with melted butter and grill (broil) gently for 15 minutes. Arrange the bananas in a dish, dust with caster (superfine) sugar and coat with sour cream, soft (whipped) cream cheese or a dessert sauce.

BANANA SPLIT. An ice-cream dish created in the United States, the main ingredient of which is a banana split in two lengthways. This is topped with three balls of ice cream (of the same or different flavours, vanilla, chocolate and strawberry) coated with chocolate sauce and decorated with whipped cream and glace (candied) marashino cherries. The melted chocolate may be replaced by strawberry sauce. An alternative decoration is sliced almonds or chopped walnuts, with a meringue shell on either side.

BAN DES VENDANGES. In medieval times, the proclamation of the date when the picking of grapes for the wine harvest could begin depended on the condition of the grapes and certain local traditions, for example, the Hundred days after the flowering of the lilies in Burgundy or the flowering of the vine anywhere else. The Ban des Vendanges might be subject to the control of the overlord or vineyard owner in feudal times there were equally strict dates when pruning, sowing and so on might start and prevented anyone from making wine from grapes not fully ripe. Even today the earliest date for harvest is arrived at by discussion between the growers and the wine authorities of each region. Some wine fraternities still proclaim the Ban des Vendanges, holding reunions and ceremonies, such as that of the Jurade de Saint Emillion, second oldest of all the wine orders, when the vintage is announced from the top of the Tour du Roi.

BANDOL An AOC wine produced in the wine growing region of Bandol, a small Provencal port between Toulon and La Ciotat. The vines are cultivated in terraces (Provencal: restanques) on red and rose wines are mostly Mourvedre (50% minimum) Cinsault and Grenache. Other varieties cannot exceed 20% of the entire crop. The main varieties grown for white wine are L Clairette, Ugni Blanc and Bourbculenc. A subsidiary variety is Sauvignon, which does not exceed 40% of the crop.

Red wines of this region are rare but it is to these that Bandol owes its reputation. Clean, solid, generous and harmonious, they have a good dark-red colour. They are a little rough when young, but mellow during the compulsory 18 month (at least) aging period and become remarkably velvety thanks to the Mourvedre grape. The white and rose wines are fresh and versatile with a pleasant bouquet and are best drunk fairly young.

BANON A French cheese bearing the name of a village in Haute Provence. Made from cow's goat's or ewe's milk (45% fat content), it has a soft texture, a natural crust and is a squat round shape, 7-8 cm (3 in) in diameter and 3 cm (1 ¼ in) thick. It is presented wrapped in chestnut leaves steeped in brandy and tied up with raffia. With its sweet or nutty flavour, Banon is very good from May to November. It is sometimes scented with springs of savory and is then known as Banon au pebre d'al, pebre d'al being the Provencal name for savory.

BANQUET An ostentatious or formal meal for a large number of guests, either for a festival or to mark the occasion of a political or social event. In view of the large amount of food to be prepared and served, banquets are rarely of great gastronomic quality, but their purpose is to unite people rather than to feed them lavishly. The word, which dates from the 14th century, comes from the Italian bancheto, meaning a small bench on which the guests used to sit.

- Sacred rite and civic function. Since the earliest times the idea of the communal meal has been associated with magical rite. Every man had to gain the favour of the mysterious forces of nature to be lucky in the chase, by eating the animal he had killed with his companions, he regenerated his mental and physical strength. Greek sacrifices were also followed by a banquet, the meat was roasted, distributed amongst the participants and eaten close to the altar. This was one of the rare occasions on which citizens ate meat (especially beef). In this way, the banquet was a very important act of communion, as it was for the early Christians in their love feasts (see agape). There were also banquets in ancient Greece where the main purpose was conversation, philosophical debate, games and song. Plato describes one of these in The Banquet.
- The Greeks also held civic banquets to commemorate the Elders. These ceremonial city meals took place within the Prytaneum and were attended by chosen citizens dressed in white and wearing a crown of flowers. They even became obligatory in Sparta with Lacedaemonian Tables for the nation to hold its great banquet in the hope of seeing rich and poor united in joyful public reunions drinking toasts to the sound of all the bells. But these convivial meals were short-lived.
- Private and public celebrations. With the Romans, the banquet became an occasion for ostentatious luxury with great attention to the setting, regardless of whether the occasion was public or private. From the time of Charlemagne, custom required that vassals offered a banquet to their lords at least once a year. Pomp and circumstance were the order of the day. Table settings, even richer, were part of the sumptuous ostentation. Banquets were organized whenever an occasion brought the people and their sovereign together. In February 1548 Swiss ambassadors visiting Fontainebleau for the baptism of Claude, seventh child of Henry II and Catherine de Medici, were invited to an historical banquet. As this was during Lent, fish was served instead of meat and included lamprey, turtle, trout, char, anchovy, herring, snails, frog, pike, carp and eels. In 1571 the City of Paris celebrated the arrival of Elizabeth of Austria in the capital with a lavish banquet which included whale on the menu.
- Power and politics. Banquets inevitably became more numerous when used as the tool of political ambition. When Louis XIV entertained hundreds of courtiers at Versailles, he sought to demonstrate his power by the splendour of the reception. Talleyrand, who used culinary art in the service of diplomacy, said to Louis XVIII: Sire, I have greater need of cooking pots than of instructions.

The banquet was also an instrument of internal politics. Under Louis-Philippe, minister Guizot removed the right to hold public meetings of political purposes, so voters met at banquets where they discussed politics under the guidance of famous men such as Lamartine and Ledru-Rollin. Guizot eventually prohibited these banquets, but he was too late. It is reported that the King declared confidently that the Parisians will never trade a throne for a banquet.

* The biggest banquet in the world. On 14 July 1889 Gambetta assembled all the mayors of France at the Palace of Industry in Paris to celebrate the centenary of the storming of the Bastille. Eleven years later, the idea was repeated by Emile Loubet for the famous mayors banquet on 22 September 1900. The menu included fillet of beef, Bellevue, Rouen duck loaf, chicken from Bresse and ballotine of pheasant. This menu was designed to revive the republican spirit in the city officials. 22,295 mayors were entertained in the Tuileries Gardens in tents specially erected for the occasion and served by waiters from Porel and Chabot, who covered the 7 kilometres (4 miles) of tables on bicycles.

Nowadays banquets are less extravagant. Although still fashionable for heads of state, they hardly ever take place otherwise, except for associations, corporations and fellowships in banqueting halls rented out by restaurants equipped to provide this kind of service. Social events now tend to be celebrated at luncheons, cocktail parties and garden parties.

BANQUIRE A rich French garnish (hence the name, which means banker) composed of quenelles of chicken, mushrooms and slivers of truffle, served as an accompaniment to poultry and calves sweet breads and used as a filling for pies and vol-au-vent with banquiere sauce. The same garnish (without mushrooms) also accompanies tournedos (filet mignons) or sauteed noisettes of lamb arranged on croutons and coated with the pan juices mixed with Madeira and stock.

RECIPES

Banquiere sauce

3 tablespoons Madeira to 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup) supreme sauce. Sieve, then add 2 tablespoons chopped truffle or truffle peelings.

BANYULS A high-class French vin doux naturel that rivals port. Its name comes from one of the four communes of Roussillon where it is produced (Banyuls, Cerbere, Colloure and Port-Vendres). The vineyards, where the grape traditionally grown is the Grenache noir, are situated on the steep dry hillsides where the work of the vine growers is particularly hard. Little arable soil is available and this is washed away each year by torrential rain and must be brought back to the tops of the slopes. This happens in spite of the terraces which have been built on the hillsides in an attempt to control the run-off effect and to protect the vines from the icy blast of the north wind.

The grapes are picked when extremely ripe. After partial fermentation, alcohol is added to stop the action of the yeast (a process known as mutage). The wine is aged in barrels or large glass jars. The AOC Banyuls requires that the mutage takes place before the end of the year in which the grapes are harvested and that the wine remains in the cellars until 1 September of the following year. The Banyuls grand cru (vintage Banyuls) must be aged in wooden barrels for at least 30 months before sale. It is classed as sec or brut (dry) when it contains less than 54 g (about 2 oz) natural sugar per 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) The name rancho is given to the vintage when particular ageing conditions have given it a mature taste.

BAR A retail outlet for drinks, which are generally consumed standing up (or sitting on a bar stool) in front of a counter which may be fitted with a copper or wooden bar as a foot rest (hence the name). The word appeared in the French language in 1837 and also applies to the counter itself.

The tradition of the American bar began in Paris in about 1910 and developed between the wars with the fashion for cocktails. Some bars frequented by celebrities became famous. This fashion has been in decline in France since the 1950s but the neighbourhood bar flourished in the USA.

Some French restaurants, such as the Coupole or the Closerie des Lilas, and some hotels, such as the Crillon or the George V, have bars reserved for their own customers, and these are sometimes used as a background for political, society or artistic events. Other establishments, opening in the evening and sometimes all night, often with musical entertainment, are simply bars where only alcoholic beverages are consumed. Among the famous bars of Paris are Fouquet's, a meeting place for the world of cinema, the Bar Romain, a favourite haunt of show business artistes, and the Pont-Royal, a focal point of literary life.

In France, as elsewhere, by far the majority are café bars or bars cafés tabacs, which are open all day and serve snacks, as well as alcoholic and non alcoholic drinks.

BARACK PALINKA. An unsweetened apricot brandy produced in Hungary from a distillation of fresh apricots, the best of which come from the orchards of Keeskemel, Barack Palinka from

Austria and Hungary are often sold in long necked bottles known as futyulos

BARBADINE African name for the giant granadilla, related to passion fruit.

BARBARESCO A red Italian wine from Piedmont made from the Nebbiolo grape. It comes from the communes of Barbaresco and Neive and is characterized by its line fruity flavour.

BARBECUE. An open-air cooking apparatus or outdoor grill, usually charcoal burning, for grilling or split-roasting meat or fish and, by extension, a social occasion, much favoured in America and Australia.

Charcoal cookery is the most ancient of cooking methods, still the common way of cooking in Mediterranean and tropical climates, while roasting an animal on a fire has been a way of feasting in all places and in all eras. In America the outdoor grill is associated with the push westward and opening up the new continent. In its modern form, out door cookery has become a leisure activity, characterized by tongs and the apron and, sometimes, expensive cooking equipment, and is distinct from day to day cookery.

The word probably comes from the Haitian barbacoa, meaning grill, but some attribute its origin to the French de la barbe a la queue (from the beard to the tail), referring to the method of impaling the animal on the roasting spit. There may even be a connection with the French barbaque, which comes from the Romanian berbec, meaning roast mutton. In Japan the bibachi or table barbecue is a small castiron hearth, equipped with a grid. Traditionally, each guest grills his or her own kebabs or other items, which have been cut up in advance. Hibachi grills are now popular outdoor alternatives to large barbecues, used in the same way.

Equipment. Types of barbecue vary according to the site. The most basic consist of a hearth containing charcoal and grid (rack). The most complex are complete garden cookers with a spit (often electric) removable hood, oven and dripping pan. Camping barbecues are made to fold away and are equipped with a wind break.

A hearth barbecue is made either of cast iron (they do not lose their shape but are heavy and breakable) or steel plate (this must be fairly thick) which sometimes tips to a vertical position. The rectangular or circular grid is made of steel and the height is adjustable.

The most commonly used fuel is wood charcoal, specially prepared from carbon purified sticks, which greatly prolong the intense heat of the charcoal. When wood is used, its type affects both the speed of cooking and the flavour the smoke gives to the food. Very hard wood gives intense heat and in Europe vine prunings have always been used, in America mesquite. The US also favours hickory and oak. A classic addition to the fire in France, to flavour fish, is fennel stalks.

Some barbecues operate with lava stones heated by butane gas or even solar energy. There are various accessories which may come in handy, poker, tongs, bellows, oven gloves, long-handled spoon and fork, and a variety of racks for enclosing fish and meat and enabling them to be turned neatly.

* Cooking methods. Almost anything can be grilled or roasted on a barbecue, with the exception of thin veal and delicate fish. Corn cobs, peppers, tomatoes and large mushrooms can be cooked directly on the grid, brushed with oil or melted butter and other vegetables (such as potatoes) can be enclosed in foil, or be chopped and cooked inside sealed foil parcels. Cooking begins when the charcoal has reached the glowing ember stage.

Some meats have a better flavour if they have been marinated. Barbecued food can be served with any of the sauces which traditionally accompany grills and fondue bourguignonne (pepper, bearnaise or tartare).

- Spit-Roast Meat Distribute the weight of the meat to be cooked evenly along the length of the spit. If chicken is being cooked, hold the limbs in place with small wooden skewers so that they do not become charred. Initially place the meat close to the embers so that the heat causes a crust to form, sealing in the juices, and then move it further away so that the meat will cook slowly right through.

- Grilled Fish or Meat. Since they are either enclosed in a folding grill rack or cooked directly on the grid, each item must be brushed with oil over so that it does not stick to the hot metal. Large fish should be gutted (cleaned) and washed, but not scaled (so that the flesh remains tender). Remove the scales and skin together before serving. Split a small chicken in two, remove the giblets, flatten and season. Scamp (Gumbo shrimp) and oysters (in their shells) can be placed directly on the grid without further preparation.
- Kebabs Brush each piece of food with oil before putting the kebabs on the grill. Wrap fragile pieces (such as shellfish and liver) in a thin slice of lean bacon.

BARBEL Barbeau A freshwater fish related to carp with a brown back, yellowish sides and white abdomen, named for the beardlike projections from its lower jaw. It is found in many rivers in Europe, Asia and Africa. In France the common river barbel is about 50 cm (20 in) long, weighing up to 2 kg (4 ½ lb), while the southern barbel is smaller. Its flesh is bland and full of bones. In the Loire and Burgundy regions it is served poached or braised and flavoured with red wine and herbs, Young barbel are either fried or grilled (broiled).

BARBERA. An Italian grape which has given its name to a red wine produced in large quantities in Piedmont. Barbera is a full-bodied dark wine, often drunk when young.

BARBERRY A quickly European shrub, also found in America, that favours dry soil and sunny spots. In October it produces tart, bright red very slim berries in bunches. They are rich in tartaric and malic acids, which are used to make jellies and syrups, and also for flavouring rice pilaf in Iran. Cooked and dried they can be made into a fine powder, which was formerly used as a seasoning. The unripe green berries can be preserved in vinegar, like capers.

BARD. Thin slices of pork or bacon fat which are placed around meat, some game birds and poultry, and even some fish before roasting to prevent them from drying out in the heat of the oven. Barding is not advised for some very tender meats as the strong flavour of the bard might overshadow the taste of the meat. Bards are also used as a lining for pates cooked in pastry or terrines.

In order to bard a roast, the meat is covered with strips of bard held in place with string. To bard terrines and pates, the inside of the pie crust or mould is lined with bards.

The bards are generally removed before serving, but it is usual to serve partridge, other game and pates still barded.

BARDATTE A Breton speciality from the region of Nantes, which used to be prepared at harvest time and eaten cold by the peasants in the fields. It consists of a cabbage stuffed with rabbit or hare meat flavoured with herbs, which is wrapped in a thick wide slice of bacon (barde, hence its name), put in an earthenware dish, moistened with stock and baked slowly in the oven.

BARIGOULE, A LA The French term used to describe a particular method of preparing stuffed braised artichokes. Barigoule is the Provençal name for the milk cap mushroom, once solely used in the recipe. Originally, the country recipe consisted of cooking the artichokes like mushrooms, that is, cut off flat at the base, sprinkled with oil and grilled (broiled). Provençal cooks subsequently developed a stuffing of ham and mushrooms for the artichokes.

RECIPE

artichokes a la barigoule

Prepare the artichokes for stuffing. Clean and chop 76 g (3 oz. 1 cup) mushrooms for each artichoke. Mince (grind) 50 g (2 oz) fat bacon and the same quantity of ham. Mix these ingredients together with chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Fill the artichokes with the mixture, bard, tie up with string, and braise in white wine to which a little olive oil has been added. Thicken the cooking liquor with a very small amount of softened butter.

BARLEY The earliest known cereal to be cultivated, used formerly for bread and, still, for beer. Barley is the staple grain of northern lands, where it is too cold for wheat, and has been grown in the Near East since 8000 BC. High in starch, it produces a low gluten flour and consequently a heavy, flat nourishing loaf (but one that keeps well). Until the 16th century it supplied Europe's main bread. Its flat loaves were used as plates, which were then eaten. Something of this tradition continues in the ever popular Scandinavian flat breads, and its Scottish use for griddle cakes like bannocks (and for porridge).

It is also used for drinks, like barley water (with lemon juice), gives its name to orgeat and makes barley beer. The grain's main modern use is a basic ingredient in malting and beer brewing (the best varieties for brewing are those with a double row of seeds).

Pearl barley is the hulled and milled grain, pot barley is unhulled, both are used chiefly in soups, broths and stews, such as oxtail soup, cholent and Scotch broth. Pearl barley can be boiled and served as an alternative to rice.

RECIPES

Consomme with pearl barley

Wash 100 g (4 oz, ½ cup) pearl barley in warm water and add it, with 1 celery stick to 2.5 litres (4 ¼ pints, 11 cups) clarified beef stock. Simmer for 2 hours, then remove the celery and serve the soup in cups.

Cream of barley soup

Wash 300 g (11 oz, 1 ½ cups) pearl barley and soak it for 1 hour in warm water. Add the barley and 1 sliced celery stick to 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) clear white stock and simmer for 2 ½ hours. Rub the soup through a fine sieve and dilute with a few tablespoons of stock or milk. Heat the soup through again and add 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup) double (heavy) cream.

BARLEY BEER cervoise An alcoholic drink that the Gauls made from fermented barley, oats, rye or sometimes wheat, flavoured with various spices. It was an earlier form of beer, which appeared with the introduction of hops in the 14th century. The French word possibly derives from the Gallic cerevista, a combination of Ceres, Roman goddess of harvests, and the Latin vis (strength). Barley beer was originally matured in pottery jars and later in casks. Throughout the Middle Ages, because of privileges granted by Charlemagne, monks were the major producers. In 1268 the Livre de metiers laid down regulations for the cervoister (barley-beer maker) No one may brew barley beer from anything except water and grain, either barley, wheat and rye mixture, or dragie (barley residue). The maker was forbidden to add to it berries, spiced honey sweetened wine or resin. In present day Iberian languages, cerveza and cerveja are words for beer.

BARLEY SUGAR A traditional sweet (candy) of cooked sugar in both France and Britain, made originally from a mixture of hot sugar syrup and a decoction of barley to colour it.

Back in fashion under the French Second Empire because Napoleon III enjoyed it, barley sugar became a speciality of the spa towns of France (Evian, Plombières, Caudebec and Vichy, in particular) It has been made in the form of small cylindrical sticks (from a ribbon of drawn sugar rolled by hand, then wrapped in coloured cellophane), twisted sticks and flat tablets, cut out on an oiled baking sheet. Modern forms are made of cooked sugar without barley, with various flavourings, shaped into a round stick or cut out by a pressing machine.

Two specialities are worth mentioning. Tours barley sugar, flavoured with apple or cherry, and Moret barley sugar, amber coloured, in the shape of a heart marked with a cross. The latter was created in 1638 by the nuns of the convent of Moretsur-Loing (Seine-et-Marne) and its recipe remains a secret, lost under the Revolution, it was preserved by one of the nuns and later sold to a lay confectioner of the town.

The Nancy bergamot, the Vosges granit, and the honey flavoured pastille of Saint Benoit sur-Loire (in the shape of a little monk) are also barley sugar.

RECIPES

Old fashioned barley sugar

Gently cook 250 g (9 oz. 1 ¼ cups) hulled barley in 5 litres (8 ½ pints, 5 ½ quarts) water for 5 hours. Strain this liquid (which resembles white jelly) and return it to the pan. Add 1 kg (2 ¼ lb, 4 cups) warmed sugar, stir until dissolved over a gentle heat, then boil the mixture just to the hard crack stage (see sugar) and pour it over an oiled marble slab. As soon as the barley sugar begins to cool, cut it into long strips and twist them.

BARNACLE, GOOSE pouce-pied A crustacean which lives on sea washed rocks, fixed at the foot and standing about 5 cm (2 in) high. It is difficult to harvest and therefore very expensive. The outside is blackish and mottled and, fancifully, a group look like a gaggle of geese with upstretched necks because the tips are whitish, like parted beaks. Found on the stormiest parts of Europe's Atlantic coast, and in Canada, it is a speciality in Galicia. The Spanish name is percebe.

Cooked briefly in court-bouillon or boiling water, it is eaten with or without vinaigrette after peeling, or squeezing out the soft orange cylindrical inside.

BAROLO An Italian red wine from the hills of Piedmont around the village of Barolo. It is a wine with a fairly high alcoholic content made from the Nebbiolo grape, which is improved by being aged in flavour giving hints of raspberries, truffles and chocolate, Barolo is a powerful but smooth wine with a burnt aftertaste.

BARON The cut of mutton or lamb that includes the saddle (loins) and both hind legs. The term was applied originally to beef, but since a baron of beef is so big, it is hardly ever cooked as such. Baron of lamb is oven or spit-roast, and is served with vegetables such as braised chicory (endive), green beans, flageolets and potatoes, and moistened with the meat juices. It is one of the most spectacular roasts of French cuisine.

The noble title given to this cut has an historical origin. Henry VIII of England was presented with a spit-roast double sirloin and was so impressed by this magnificent joint that he dubbed it Sir Loin, Baron of Beef. The corresponding cut of mutton was subsequently given the same name.

In 1952 the Academie Francaise attempted to impose the name has-roud but, because of the protests, it was decided that the French would keep to the original English name.

RECIPES

Baron of lamb a la perigourdine

Cook and shell 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) chestnuts. Cover the baron with a light even coat of butter and season with salt and pepper. Roast in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for about 20 minutes. Turn out and allow to cool on a wire rack. Coat each barquette with sieved apricot jam and decorate with 2 blanched almonds. Puff pastry can also be used. Alternatively, the pastry boats may be baked blind, filled with crème au beurre and topped with apricots cooked in a syrup.

Barquettes a Pamericaine

Fill cooked barquette cases with a salpicon of shell fish a l'americaine. Sprinkle with fried breadcrumbs and bake in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F, gas 8) until the filling is hot and the crumbs are crisp.

Cheese barquettes

Finely chop some mushrooms and saute them. Prepare a bechamel sauce and add some grated Gruyere cheese, then the sauteed mushrooms. Fill the cooked barquettes with the mixture, sprinkle with white breadcrumbs and melted butter, then brown under the grill (broiler).

Mushroom barquettes

Prepare some scrambled eggs and a mushroom duxelles. Spread a layer of scrambled eggs and a layer of mushrooms in each cooked barquette. Fry some breadcrumbs and sprinkle over the barquettes. Bake for a few minutes in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F gas 6) just to warm the barquettes through.

Scrambled egg and asparagus barquettes

Prepare some scrambled eggs and asparagus tips. Fill the cooked barquettes with scrambled eggs. Garnish with asparagus tips, sprinkle with melted butter and warm through in the oven.

Soft-roe barquettes

Poach some soft roe (carp, herring or mackerel) in court bouillon. Finely chop and saute some mushrooms. Prepare a small quantity of bechamel sauce. Fill the botton of each cooked barquette with mushrooms. Place one piece of roe in each barquette. Coat with bechamel sauce, sprinkle with grated Gruyere cheese and brown under the grill (broiler).

Other recipes See Bagration, Beauharmais, bouquetiere, normande.

Sweet Barquettes

Apricot barquettes

For about 15 barquettes, prepare pastry using 225 g (8 oz, 2 cups) sifted flour, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon sugar, 1 egg yolk., 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) butter, and about 7 tablespoons water. Roll out the pastry to a thickness of 3 mm (1/8 in). Cut with a fluted oval pastry (cookie) cutter. Line the moulds with the pastry, prick the botton of each one, and sprinkle with a little icing (confectioner's) sugar. Remove the stones (pits) from the apricots and cut each one into four. Lay the apricot quarters length ways in the pastry boats, skin-side down. Bake in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for about 20 minutes. Turn out and allow to cool on a wire rack. Coat each barquette with sieved apricot jam and decorate with 2 blanched almonds. Puff pastry can also be used. Alternatively, the pastry boats may be baked blind, filled with crème au beurre and topped with apricots cooked in a syrup.

Chestnut barquettes

Bake some pastry barquette cases blind and then fill them with chestnut cream. They can be decorated with piped whipped cream and a sugar violet. Alternatively, shaped the cream into a dome with two sides and ice (frost) one side with coffee icing and top with pipe crème au beurre.

BARRACUDA A tropical fish of the Sphyrenidae family. There are several species, all with an elongated body, a long, wide head and a pointed muzzle. The small barracuda, seldom longer than 1 metre (3 ft 3 in), has a golden band along its side, and is sometimes called false pike (faux brochet) It is fished off the coast of Africa and sold fresh in french markets. The Pacific barracuda is a sporting fish, weighing up to 5.5 kg (12 lb), and prized for cooking in California. Easy to cook, either grill (broil) or eat as carpaccio, thinly sliced and raw.

The great barracuda, common in the Western Atlantic and the Caribbean islands, is not recommended, as it may cause ciguatera poisoning.

BARRAMUNDI The giant perch of the Lates family of northern Australia, named by the aboriginals. This is the best eating fish in Australia. Golden brown, up to 1.5 m (5 ft.) long and prized as a game fish, the barramundi ranges from the Philippines to the Persian Gulf.

BARREL. Probably developed by the Celts for transporting many types of goods, the wine barrel has an important influence on wine styles. Barrels are made in many sizes, from a standard Bordelaise at 225 litres (49 UK gallons, 61 US gallons) to traditional large Italian or German casks which may contain 10 or 20 times more. Wood is shaped into staves and held in a cylindrical shape by iron hoops – nails are not used in the construction of a barrel. Oak, from forests in France, Eastern Europe or America, is most favoured although other woods, such as chestnut, may be used for large casks.

BARSAC A sweet wine from Bordeaux, Barsac is the largest of the five communes in Sauternes and may call its wine either AOC Barsac or AOC Sauternes. Made from Botrytis affected Semillon and Sauvignon grapes, Barsac wines are often slightly less sweet and more fruity than Sauternes.

BASELLA A tropical climbing plant, also known as vine spinach, Ceylon spinach or Malabar spinach. Ceylon spinach is used for the red-leaved variety while Malabar spinach refers to the green leaved plant. The stem, which can grow as high as 2 m (7 ft), bears leaves which are harvested as the plant grows and are eaten like spinach. Thought to be native to India, basella is grown in China, Southeast Asia and Africa. In the West Indies, basella is prepared like bledes.

BASIL An aromatic herb, both the main types originated in India, its name is derived from Greek basilikos, meaning royal, for only the sovereign (Obastleus) was allowed to cut it. It is still important in the cooking of Thailand, Laos and Vietnam, in salads and curries.

Sweet basil is now widely grown as a herb with many cultivars. Common basil has large soft leaves 3 cm (1 ¼ in) long, but there are ruffled, lettuce-leaved and purple varieties, with lemon and cinnamon among their smells. Basil is a warm weather annual, one reason why it is grown in pots inside windows, another is that it keeps away flies. In France it is associated with Provence, but the strongest association is with Liguria in northern Italy, and Genoa, where it is ground with Parmesan to make the famous pesto sauce. The leaves have a strong flavour of lemon and jasmine. Basil has an affinity with tomatoes, and is used in salads, stuffings, sauces and omelettes as well as soups (see pistou and pasta dishes).

BASIN. Originally, a basin in France was a wide deep circular container made of copper or tin, which was used to collect the water poured over the hands during table ablutions. These gradually became richly worked gold pieces used more as ornaments on side boards and dressers. From the 17th century onwards pottery basins were used in France either for ablutions or, more commonly, for serving meat or fruit. Some reached such dimensions that it required two men to carry them. They disappeared as serving dishes in the 18th century and were replaced by smaller bowls or dishes.

BASQUAISE, A LA The French term used to describe several recipes (particularly for omelettes and sautéed chicken) using tomatoes, sweet peppers, garlic and often Bayonne ham associated with the French Basque country. A basquaise garnish, for large cuts of meat, consists of Bayonne ham with cep mushrooms and Anna potatoes.

RECIPES

Consomme a la basquaise

Cook 4 tablespoons rice and 3 tablespoons diced red pepper cut into strips in 1.5 litres (2 ¼ pints, 6 ½ cups) clear beef or chicken broth. Add 2 table spoons diced tomatoes 5 minutes before the rice is cooked. Sprinkle with chopped chervil before serving.

Sauced squid a la basquaise

Wash and dry 500 g (18 oz) ready cleaned white squid and cut it into strips. Seed and chop 4-5 red and green peppers, finely chop 4 onions, and peel and finely chop 500 g (18 oz) fresh tomatoes. Fry the peppers in oil, then add the onions, the squid and 1-2 crushed garlic clove. After cooking for 15 minutes, add the tomatoes and a bouquet garni and season with salt and pepper. Half-cover and cook gently for 10 minutes. Sprinkle with chopped parsley before serving.

Stuffed potatoes a la basquaise

Prepare a tomato sauce flavoured with garlic. Dice some red and green peppers and fry in oil. Hollow out some large peeled potatoes, place in boiling water for 5 minutes and wipe dry. Dice some Bayonne ham and moisten it with the tomato sauce, adding the peppers. Fill the potatoes with the mixture. Oil a dish, arrange the potatoes in it and season them with salt and pepper. Sprinkle with oil or melted goose fat. Cover the dish and bake in a preheated oven at about 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for 30-40 minutes. When the potatoes are cooked, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and melted fat and brown under the grill (broiler).

BASS bar A fish of the family percichthyidae, the sea bass is caught principally in the Mediterranean. Also known as sea perch (because of its similarity to the perch) and around the Provençal coast as loup (wolf) and lubina in Spanish, because of its reputed ferocity, it is a voracious predator, 35-80 cm (14-32 in) in length. It is also relatively rare and, therefore, expensive. Valued since Roman times, the sea bass has fine, compact and delicate flesh with few bones. It is served poached, grilled (broiled) braised, stuffed or flabeed. Normally fillets are only prepared from very large fish which are difficult to cook whole. Once the skin has been removed, these fillets can be cooked simply by frying in a little butter or olive oil.

The striped bass (bar tachete) has an olive green back and is distinguished from the sea bass by its many horizontal black stripes, it is normally up to (60 cm 24 in) long. It lives off the Atlantic coast from the Bay of Biscay to Senegal, off the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the Gulf of Mexico, and has successfully been introduced to the Pacific as a sporting fish. It is an inshore fish, preferring calm muddy water. In France it is caught only off the Vendée, where it is baked covered with sea salt.

The black sea bass ranges north from Florida, and is a common catch off Cape Cod. It is another excellent fish for frying and baking. The speckled bass, which is smaller and has less flavour, is fished off the coasts of Morocco.

RECIPE

Preparation of bass

Clean the fish through the gills and through a small incision at the base of the stomach in order to grasp the end of the gut. If the bass is to be braised, fried or grilled (broiled), remove the scales, working from the tail to the head. Do not remove the scales if it is to be poached because the scales help to hold the fragile flesh intact. Wash and dry the fish. When grilling, make a few shallow incisions with a sharp knife in the fleshy part of the back.

bass a la livournaise

Scale and clean 4 bass each weighing 250-300 g (9-11 oz). Season with salt and pepper. Butter or oil an ovenproof dish. Spread 200 ml (7 fl. oz, ¾ cup) well seasoned tomato sauce over the bottom and arrange the bass on top. Sprinkle with breadcrumbs and melted butter or olive oil and bake in a preheated oven at about 230 °C (450 °F, gas 8) for about 15 minutes. Sprinkle with chopped parsley before serving.

bass a la portugaise

Scale and clean 2 bass each weighing about 400 g (14 oz). Make incisions in the back and season with salt and pepper. Butter an ovenproof dish, arrange the bass in the dish, and moisten with a mixture of equal proportions of dry white wine and fish stock. Bake in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F, gas 8) for about 15 minutes, basting the fish two or three times during cooking. Drain the fish. Pour the liquor into a small pan, reduce and add butter. Cover the bottom of the cooking dish with tomato sauce, arrange the bass on top and cover with the remaining sauce. Glaze in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F gas 9) and serve sprinkled with chopped parsley.

Bass braised in red Graves wine

Fillet a 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb) sea bass. Season with salt and pepper and fry both sides quickly in butter in a frying pan. Drain, in the same butter, fry 100g (4 oz) thinly sliced mushrooms and 100 g (4 oz) small white onions. Put the fillets, back on top of the mushrooms and onions. Add ½ bottle red Graves and a little fish stock. Cover with buttered grease proof (waxed) paper and simmer for 5 minutes over a low heat. Drain the fillets on paper towels, remove the skin and place them in an oven proof dish. Drain the garnish and arrange it around the fish. Reduce the cooking juices and thicken with butter, just before serving stir, in a little hollandaise sauce, strain and pour over the fillets. Brown under the grill (broiler) and garnish with croutons fried in butter.

Braised bass

Select a bass weighing 1.25 kg (2 ¾ lb). Peel and finely chop 2-3 carrots, 2 onions and 1 shallot. Melt 25 g (1 oz. 1 tablespoon) butter in a frying pan, add the chopped vegetables and cook until they begin to change colour. Chop a small bunch of parsley and mix with 1 tablespoon butter, salt and pepper. Stuff the fish with the parsley butter. Spread the partly cooked vegetables in a large buttered ovenproof dish and gently place the fish on top of the vegetables. Add a bouquet garni and 300 ml. Vegetable. Add a bouquet garni and 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) dry white wine. Melt 25 g (1 oz. 1 tablespoon) butter and pour over the bass, then cover the dish. Bake in a preheated oven at about 220 °C (425 °F, gas 7) for about 25 minutes. Drain the fish, arrange on a serving dish and keep warm. Discard the bouquet garni, sieve the pan juices and reduce. If desired, beat in butter to thicken the sauce. Skin the bass and cover in sauce. The braised bass may be served on a bed of mushroom duxelles or sorrel fondue, or surrounded by slices of aubergine (eggplant) lightly fried in oil.

cold poached bass

Prepare as for hot poached bass and allow the fish to cool in the poaching liquor. Drain, arrange on a napkin and remove the skin. Garnish with lemon halves, artichoke hearts and small tomatoes stuffed with chopped vegetables. Serve with mayonnaise, vinaigrette or any other sauce suitable for cold fish.

Cream of ginger bass

Prepare the cream of ginger: soften 4 chopped shallots in butter, add 100 ml (4 fl. oz ¾ cup) fish fumes, and reduce. Add 325 ml (11 fl. oz. 18 cups) double (heavy) cream and a pinch of salt. Reduce by half, until you have the required consistency. Add 1 tablespoon grated fresh root ginger and allow to simmer for 2 minutes. Strain through muslin (cheesecloth) or a fine strainer. Thicken the sauce with 75 g (3 oz. 6 tablespoons) butter (cut into small knobs) beating with a whisk.

Prepare 400 g (14 oz) well washed spinach without stalks and braise in butter. Take 4 escalopes (scallops) of sea bass, each weighing 175 g (6 oz), and season with ground white pepper and salt. Fry quickly in oil. Drain them on paper towels so as to remove all traces of cooking oil. Make a bed of spinach in the middle of each plate and arrange the sea bass on top. Pour the cream of ginger over them and garnish with sprigs of chervil.

Crowns of bass with red peppers

Fillet and clean a 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) sea bass. Cut the flesh into strips and plait (braid) 3 strips together. Repeat with the remaining strips. Season with salt, Shape the plaits into crowns and keep chilled.

Grill (broil) 2 red peppers until their skins are blistered and blackened. Cool slightly, then peel, halve and seed them. Cut out 4 strips and 5 small petal shapes. Puree the rest and reduce the puree over a gentle heat. Cook some broccoli in boiling salted water, drain, reserve a little for the crown centres and puree the remainder.

Brown 2 chopped shallots in butter, then add some white wine and reduce by half. Add 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) single (light) cream and heat through. Divide this mixture in two stir the pepper puree into one half, and the broccoli puree into the other. Check the seasoning and keep warm.

Fry the crowns of sea bass in butter. Spoon the sauces on to the plates. Arrange the sea bass crowns on top and garnish with the pepper strips and petals. Spoon the reserved broccoli into the centres. Serve the rest of the sauce separately.

Fillet of bass with lettuce

(from a recipe by Roger Verge) Clean and scale a 1.4 kg (3 lb) bass. Remove and skin the fillets. Divide each fillet into two pieces, season with salt and pepper, and dust with flour. Melt a knob of butter and a dash of olive oil in a frying pan. Fry the fillets for 1 minute on each side, then put to one side. Plunge the outer leaves of 2 or 3 lettuces into 2 litres (3 ½ pints, 9 cups) boiling salted water and transfer immediately to a colander. Rinse in cold water and drain. Split the leaves in two vertically and flatten slightly. Then dry them on towel and wrap the fillets up in them.

Butter a gratin dish, sprinkle with finely chopped shallots and arrange flattened lettuce hearts on top, followed by the fillets wrapped in lettuce leaves. Pour over 3 tablespoons dry white wine and the same amount of vermouth. Bake in a preheated oven at about 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for 12 minutes. Drain the fillets and the lettuce hearts and arrange on a warm serving dish.

Strain the cooking liquor into a pan and reduce to about 175 ml (6 fl oz, ¾ cup) over a fierce heat. In a bowl mix together 3 tablespoons cream and 1 egg yolk and add to the pan. Whisk the mixture. Remove from the heat and heat in 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) cubed butter. Season with salt and pepper. Use to coat the fillets and serve. A little diced, peeled and seeded ripe tomato may be added as a garnish, if required.

Fried bass

Clean and scale bass weighing not more than 400 g (14 oz) each. Make incisions along the back, dip in milk and coat in flour. Deep fry in fat or oil. Drain, pat dry and dust with fine salt. Arrange on a serving dish and garnish with lemon halves. Steaks of a larger bass can be prepared in the same way.

Grilled bass

Scale and clean a bass weighing not more than 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) Make a few small incisions in the back and brush with seasoned olive oil. Cook gently, preferably using a folding double grill (broiler) grid to enclose the bass so it can be turned during cooking without breaking. In the south of France, small bass are cooked on charcoal, on top of sprigs of dry fennel, which flavour the fish. Serve with anchovy or garlic butter or one of the special sauces for grilled fish, such as bearnaise or remoulade.

Hot poached bass

Clean and wash the bass without removing the scales and place in a fish kettle. Cover with cold salted water and heat gently until simmering. As soon as the liquid is about to boil, reduce the heat and poach the fish in a barely simmering water. Drain the bass, arrange on a dish covered with a napkin (or on a rack) and garnish with fresh parsley. In a separate dish serve melted butter, hollandaise sauce, or any other sauce suitable for poached fish. Serve with boiled or mashed potatoes, spinach, fennel or broccoli.

BASSELIN, OLIVER 15th century French poet from Vire, in Normandy. A fuller by trade, he found his inspiration in the bottle. His lively satirical poetry, known as vaudevire after his birthplace, is the origin of many table songs. Basselin's vandeuvres were published at the end of the 17th century. Vaudevire gave its name to the type of musical entertainment known as vaudeville.

BASTE The term for lightly moistening food cooking in the oven, on a rotisserie or under a grill (broiler) by spooning over melted fat or the cooking juices from the dish itself. This operation is repeated several times and stops the surface of the food from getting too dry. A dish cooked au gratin may be basted with melted butter to facilitate browning.

BASTELLA in Corsican cookery, a turnover stuffed with vegetables and meat. Bastelle are called inarbitate when they are made with Swiss chard or spinach, inzuchatte when made with marrow (squash) or pumpkin, and incivulate when they are made with onions. The ingredients are blanched and drained, then finely chopped and mixed with pork or veal. Bastelle should properly be made with bread dough, but puff pastry is now more commonly used.

BA-TA-CLAN A French cake made from fresh almonds, ground using a pestle and mortar, to which the following ingredients are added: eggs (one at a time), sugar, rum and flour. The cake is cooked in a flat or fluted mould and coated with vanilla flavoured fondant icing (frosting). Its name derives from the Parisian café concert famous at the end of the 19th century, but the recipe is attributed to Lacam a 19th century, but the recipe is attributed to Lacam, a 19th century pastry chef who wrote treatises on patisserie.

BATARDE A hot French sauce, also known as butter sauce, served with vegetables and boiled fish.

RECIPE

Sauce batarde

Prepare a sauce using 25 g (1oz, 2 tablespoons) melted butter 25 g (1 oz. ¼ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour and 250 ml (8 fl. oz, 1 cup) boiling salted water. Beat in 1 egg mixed with 1 tablespoon very cold water and 1 tablespoon lemon juice and then, over a very low heat, add 100 g (4 oz, ½ cup) butter, cut into small pieces. Season with salt and pepper and sieve or strain if necessary.

BATELIERE, A LA The French term describes a fish dish garnished with poached button mushrooms, small glazed onions, fried eggs and prawns (shrimp). The name also applies to a preparation of fillets of sole arranged as small boats (hence the name) on a salpicon of prawns and mussels in a white wine and herb sauce. Mackerel a la bateliere is simply grilled (broiled) and served with a separate green sauce.

BATON also known as batonnet. A French petit four in the form of small stick made of puff pastry or almond paste. They are served with desserts and buffets.

Vegetables may be cut en batonnets (in thin sticks) for cooking.

RECIPES

Almond batonnets

Pound 225 g (8 oz. 1 2/3 cups) blanched almonds with 225 g (8 oz. 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, or carobine in a blender. Bind to a thick paste with 2-3 egg whites and then add 7 tablespoons white rum. Roll out thinly on a floured marble slab or work surface. Cut into strips 8 cm (3 1/2 in) wide and cut these into sticks 2 cm (3/4 in) wide. Lightly beat 2 egg whites. Dip the sticks in the egg whites, then in sugar. Arrange on a buttered and floured baking sheet and bake in a preheated oven at about 170 °C (325 °F, gas 3) until the sugar crisps.

Batons with vanilla icing

In a processor combine 225 g (8 oz, 1 2/3 cups) ground almonds and 225 g (8 oz, 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar to a firm paste with 2-3 egg whites. Flavour with 2 teaspoons natural vanilla essence (extract). Roll out the paste to a thickness of 1 cm (1/2 in). Cover with vanilla-flavoured royal icing (frosting). Cut into strips 2 cm (3/4 in) wide by 10 cm (4 in) long. Place the sticks on a buttered and floured baking sheet and bake in a preheated oven at about 160 °C (325 °F, gas 3) for about 10 minutes or until the icing turns white.

Chocolate batonnets

Proceed as for almond batonnets, but use a paste made from 225 g (8 oz, 12/3 cups) blanched almonds, 225 g (8 oz, 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, 200 g (7 oz, 1 1/2 cups) cocoa powder (unsweetened cocoa), 2 tablespoons vanilla-flavoured sugar and 3 egg whites.

Ice batons

Roll puff pastry out to a thickness of about 3 mm (1/8 in). Cut into strips 8 cm (3 in) wide and coat with royal icing (frosting). Cut across these strips to make sticks 4 cm (1 3/4 in) wide. Place on a buttered baking sheet and bake in a preheated oven at about 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for about 5 minutes until the pastry puffs up and the icing turns white.

BATONNAGE A French term for lees stirring or stirring the wine in a barrel with a stick so as to disturb the fine lees deposited on the bottom. This allows better development of the wine by controlling its contact with oxygen and with the wood. The practice was developed in making the best white wines, particularly Chardonnays.

BATTER A term based on the texture of a mixture. A liquid, varying in thickness from a thin pouring consistency to an elastic mixture which is too soft to hold its shape but not thin enough to pour easily and evenly. A wide variety of ingredients may be used, from the classic, basic batter made with flour, eggs and milk to a mixture of ground rice and pulses used to make Indian pancakes known as dosa.

Types of batter Batters may be unleavened or include raising agents. Fine French crepes are made from a thin batter of flour, eggs and milk without raising agent, and the batter is allowed to stand before cooking so that air bubbles disperse, preventing the crepe from bubbling. (The standing time also allows the flour to absorb liquid, so that a little extra may be added to make a thin batter for fine textured pancakes.)

The same type of batter can be baked to make Yorkshire pudding or a variety of sweet puddings, slightly thicker version may be used to coat ingredients before deep frying.

Leavened batters are used for making waffles and for coating. A raising agent may be added to the batter or a thick batter may be prepared, then stiffly whisked egg whites may be folded in, both raising agent and egg whites are used for waffle batter. The egg whites soften the batter and make it puff up during cooking. This type of mixture is also used to make Polish style apple pancakes by stirring the fruit into the batter, then flattening small portions on a hot pan. Thick batter containing raising agent is also used to make small, thick and light British pancakes, known as drop scones or Scotch pancakes.

Some enriched breads are made from a mixture resembling batter rather than dough. The yeast mixture for Italian panettone is too soft to be kneaded but usually too stiff to be beaten with a spoon, so the palm of the hand is used to beat it with a slapping motion until it becomes smooth and elastic. Small Greek doughnuts, loukoumades, served in honey syrup, may be made from a thick, yeasted batter rather than being shaped from a dough (some recipes use a dough).

The ingredients for many cakes are mixed to a thick, pouring batter, rather than a mixture with a firmer, dropping consistency. Those made by the melted method, such as gingerbread and parkin, and American muffins, are made from batters. American combread is also made from a thick cornmeal batter.

Generally, it is important that the dry and liquid ingredients are thoroughly combined and beaten until smooth. (There are exceptions to this, notably the batter used for Japanese tempura, where whisked egg whites are very lightly folded through the flour mixture, leaving the ingredients partly mixed). Achieving the right balance of ingredients and texture for the particular batter is also important, a coating batter that is too thin will not coat and one that is too thick will be stodgy when cooked. The correct proportion of flour, eggs and liquid are important for making thin, fine pancakes if there is too little egg and flour, the pancakes will not set and too much flour will make the pancakes stodgy.

RECIPES

Basic batter

This is a simple, British style batter used for thin pancakes or baked puddings, such as Yorkshire pudding. Sift 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour into a bowl with a pinch of salt. Make a well in the middle and add 2 beaten eggs. Gradually beat in 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 1/4 cups) milk and 1 tablespoon oil or melted butter, working in the flour and milk a little at a time. Beat until smooth, leave to stand for 30 minutes, then stir in 2 tablespoons water.

Coating batter

This batter is suitable for coating food before deep frying. Sift 200 g (7 oz. 1 3/4 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour into a bowl. Add 2 teaspoons baking powder, 2 tablespoons groundnut (peanut) oil, a pinch of salt and 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) warm water. Mix the ingredients thoroughly and beat until smooth, then leave the batter to rest in a cool place for at least 1 hour. Just before using, fold in 2 stiffly whisked egg whites.

BAUDELAIRE, CHARLES French poet (born Paris, 1821, died Paris, 1867) Baudelaire who loved to play chess at the Café de la Regence and the brasserie in the Rue des Martyrs with his artist and poet friends, sang the profound joys of wine in verse and prose (Wine and Hashish, 1851) Although his usual restaurant was Dinochau, he dreamed of a more exotic cuisine rich in truffles and spices, pimiento, English powders, saffron, musk and incense (Fanfarino, 1847), which was supposed to combine the violence of prussic acid with the volatile lightness of ether.

BAUME SCALE An old scale of measurement for the density or specific gravity of sugary liquids, evaluated using saccharometer. It has been replaced in the measurement of cane and beet sugars by the Brix scale. However, the Baume scale is still used in the corn refining industry for measuring the density of sugar syrups derived from cornstarch.

BAUMKUCHEN A celebrated Austrian festival cake, hollow inside and usually conical because it is cooked on a spit. It has also been adopted for family celebrations in Luxembourg. It is made with a sponge batter, often flavoured with cardamom and other spices, grated lemon zest, vanilla and rum. This liquid batter is poured layer by layer on to a roller, which is rotating in front of open heating elements. The layers remain visible after cooking giving the cake the appearance of a cut tree trunk, from which it gets its name (literally, tree cake) Baumkuchen must remain soft and it is served set upright and decorated. It may be as much as 1 metre (3 ft 3 in) high.

BAVARIAN CREAM bavarois A cold dessert made from an egg custard stiffened with gelatine mixed with whipped cream and sometimes fruit puree or other flavours, then set in a mould.

It is not known whether there is a connection between this dessert and Bavaria, where many French chefs used their talents at the court of the Wittelsbach princes. Careme gives various recipes under the name of frontage bavarois (Bavarian cream with a similar dish, the moscouvite, which was perhaps invented by a French chef in the service of a great Russian family.

RECIPES

Bavarian cream

Soak 15-20 g (1/2 –3/4 oz, 2-3 envelopes) gelatine in 3 tablespoons cold water. Heat 600 ml (1 pint, 2 1/2 cups) milk with a vanilla pod (bean). Work together 8 egg yolks, 100 g (4 oz. 1/2 cup) caster (superfine) sugar and a pinch of salt. When the mixture is smooth, strain in the milk, stir well, then add the gelatine and mix. Stir continuously over a gentle heat until the mixture coats the back of a spoon. The mixture must not boil. Pour into a bowl and allow to cool, then refrigerate until the custard is cold and just beginning to thicken.

Chill 350 ml (12 fl oz. 1 1/2 cups) double (heavy) cream and 75 ml (3 fl oz, 1/2 cup) milk in the refrigerator. Then whip together. As soon as it begins to thicken, add 50 g (2 oz. 1/2 cup) caster sugar. Fold the cream into the cooled mixture. Brush the inside of a Bavarian cream (or soufflé or savarin) mould with oil, preferably almond oil. Fill to the brim with the Bavarian cream mixture. Cover with lightly oiled paper and refrigerate until firmly set. To loosen the cream, dip the bottom of the mould in hot water, place a serving dish on top of the mould and quickly turn them over together.

- Coffee Bavarian cream Add 2 tablespoons instant coffee to the milk instead of the vanilla pod.
- Chocolate Bavarian cream Add 100 g (4 oz, 4 squares) melted plain (bittersweet) chocolate to the milk.
- Lemon or orange Bavarian cream Add the juice of 2 lemons or oranges.
- Bavarian cream liqueur Add about 2 teaspoons liqueur or more depending on its particular strength of flavour.

Bavarian cream à la normande

Line the base of a suitable mould with a thick layer of the basic Bavarian cream flavoured with Calvados. Leave to set. Prepare an apple puree and stir in sufficient dissolved gelatine to set it. Allow 15 g (1/2 oz. 2 envelopes) gelatine for 300 ml (1/2 pint 1 1/4 cups) puree. Whip 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) double (heavy) cream with 2 tablespoons icing (confectioner's) sugar until thick. Mix the whipped cream with the apple puree, spoon into the mould and top with a layer of the basic Bavarian cream.

Bavarian cream au parfait amour

(from a recipe by Careme) finely shred the zest of half a lemon and place in a bowl. Add 475 ml (16 fl. oz. 2 cups) boiling milk, 6 cloves and 100 g (4 oz. 1/2 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, stir well, then leave to infuse for 1 hour. Strain the mixture and add 15-20 g (1/2 –3/4 oz, 2-3 envelopes) gelatine dissolved in 6 tablespoons hot water and sufficient cochineal or red food colouring to give a pink colour. Chill the bowl and as soon as the mixture begins to set, stir in 125 g (4 1/2 oz, 1/2 cup) soft cream cheese. Turn into a dish and refrigerate until firmly set.

Bavarois aux fruits

Soak 25 g (1 oz. 4 envelopes) gelatine in 5 tablespoons cold water. Warm 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) thick fruit puree (apricot, pineapple, blackcurrant, strawberry, raspberry) and refrigerate until on the point of setting. Whip 450 ml (3/4 pint, 2 cups) double (heavy) cream with 50 g (2 oz. 1/4 cup) caster (superfine) sugar until softly thick and gently fold into the half set fruit jelly. Turn the mixture into an oiled mould and refrigerate until firmly set, then turn out. It may be served with a fruit sauce (preferably matching the fruit used in the cream)

Striped chocolate and vanilla Bavarian cream

Cream of different colours and flavours placed in alternating layers in the mould. Striped Bavarian cream can also be made directly in crystal or glass bowls, preparation is quicker and the cream more delicate because the amount of gelatine used can be significantly reduced as the bavarois will not be turned out.

Soak 15020 g (1/2 –3/4 oz. 2-3) envelopes) gelatine in 3 tablespoons cold water. Heat 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) milk with a vanilla pod(bean) Put 225 g (8 oz, 1 cup) caster (suprfine sugar, a pinch of salt and 8 egg yolks in a saucepan and stir together. Add the vanilla flavoured milk (without the vanilla pod) and the dissolved gelatine and mix. Warm this cream over a gentle heat, stirring constantly. As soon as it coats the back of spoon, remove from the heat. Strain or sieve and then divide into two portions. Melt 50 g (2 oz. 2 squares) plain (bitter sweet) chocolate and add to half the Bavarian cream mixture.

Complete each half of the cream separately and add to each, as soon as they start to thicken, half the prepared whipped-cream mixture made from 350 ml (12 fl oz. 1 1/2 cups) chilled double (heavy) cream and 60 ml (2 fl oz. 1/4 cup) cold milk. Brush the inside of a mould with oil. Fill with alternate layers of the two creams, taking care not to pour in the next layer before the previous one has set. Chill until completely set, then turn out.

All kinds of flavourings and combinations may be used, such as vanilla and strawberry, vanilla and coffee, chocolate and coffee, pistachio and strawberry and vanilla with praline.

BAY A Mediterranean evergreen tree, Laurus nobilis, also known as bay laurel or true laurel, that is widely cultivated in temperate regions for ornament and for its glossy aromatic leaves, which have a slightly bitter smell. The English name derives from the French baaile, meaning and the tree has conspicuous black fruit, which yield an oil.

Bay leaves are among the most commonly used culinary herbs, a leaf is always incorporated in a bouquet garni and court bouillon. Bay leaves may be used fresh or dried when the flavour is stronger. The leaves are used to pack dried fruit, like figs, and to line a grill for barbecuing fish. They are indispensable to season stocks, ragouts, stews, pates and terrines.

In ancient times bay leaves were used to make the laurel wreaths with which poets and victorious soldiers were crowned and the tree gives its botanical name to the poet laureate.

The cherry laurel, Prunus laurocerusus, is cerisier in France, where it has long been associated with custards, but it should be shunned because the leaves contain prussic acid.

BAZINE A leavened semolina cooked in boiling water with oil. In Arab countries, this boiled springy dough constitutes the traditional morning meal during Ramadan, served before sunrise. Bazine is served with butter, honey and lemon juice. This basic preparation is also part of everyday cooking, served in fish soup or with raisins and small pieces of fried meat. It can also be cooked unleavened in chicken stock and served with scrambled eggs or shaped into balls to be cooked in stock.

BEANS, DRIED The dried matured seeds of legumes or fresh beans, these are known as pulses. They are an important source of protein for poorer communities and in vegetarian diets. Being the most important source of nutrition after cereals, there is a vast range of dried beans, including many regional varieties. Different names are applied to similar beans or the same name is sometimes used for related types.

The Old World had brown broad (fava) beans (with the closely related full medames), a bean sent back by Alexander the Great from Mesopotamia (probably the horse bean), the Indian lablab bean, and black eyed beans and pigeon peas in Africa. It is a nice irony of history that these latter two were carried back to America (where so many others originated) with black slaves and they are now identified with the cooking of the Caribbean and the American Deep South.

Columbus introduced kidney beans, butter (lima) beans and the scarlet runner bean call belongings to the Phaseolus family to Europe from south America in the first decade of the 16th century. They were quickly adopted, for they were easier to cook and had greater palatability. In their new localities, however, the podded beans were given the old names. The Spanish baba, or fava, is no longer the broad bean (Vicia faba).

Spain seized joyfully on the new products. It boasts some of the best varieties, and is a country of bean fanciers, with hundreds of regional varieties in all colours and sizes from arrancin (rice sized) up to monsters the size of two thumbnails like judiones kidney beans were so enthusiastically adopted in Florence in Italy under the patronage of Alexandro Medici (murdered 1537), the first duke, that the tuscans became known as mangie-fagioli, the bean eaters.

Piero Valeriano described haricot beans as these multicoloured red and white seeds, resembling precious stones that might have been lodged in the earth. Catherine de Medici probalby brought beans in her entourage to France, when she married the future Henri II. First cultivated on the banks of the Loire, les baricots spread rapidly to other French regions, and over the centuries different varieties were cultivated. Beans, frigoles, are particularly important in Latin America (where all kidney shaped beans originated) as valuable protein in a region that lacked the European sources of cattle, sheep goats, and pigs until the 16th century. They have remained on the menu for rich and poor. In Mexico, for example, small bowls of beans are served after the main course and before dessert. Frijoles refritos or refried beans (cooked beans, pan-fried to serve) is a well known Latin American dish.

Bean types The following are the main varieties of beans eaten dried. See also broad bean (fava bean), ful medames, mang beans, pigeon (gunga) peas, soya beans and beans sprouts.

- Black beans . The shiny smooth frigles negros, or turle beans, are black skinned kidney beans, white inside. They are identified with the cooking of Africa, the West Indies and Latin America (and Tolosa in Spain) particularly Venezuela, where they make caviar criollo, and Brazil, where the national dish, felfoada completa, is black bean stew, complete with sausages and ham hocks. Black bean soup is a common Latin America dish.
- Black eyed peas (Beans) Small creamy beans with pulses. There are two almost indistinguishable strains, one from China, also eaten in India and Africa, and the other from Latin America. Of the several varieties, one is the cow pea named for its use as a forage plant) Now much cultivated in California, they are an ingredient in traditional dishes of the southern states of America, cooked with ham hocks and collard green or, in Hoppin John with spiced rice. The puree is used for friger in Centrol America.
- Bornlorn beans. These attractive italian longish beans range from pale creamy pink to large with brown speckles (which disappear on cooking). In France they are called rose-cocos. Pleasnatly moist, with a creamy consistency and slightly sweet when cooked, they are Italy's most popular bean. Used in salds, they also give their pink colour to the tuscan oil-and bean soup frantoiana.
- Butter Beans Flat and white, these are a type of lima bean. The so-called true lima bean was introduced to East Africa in the 18th century, which now exports the Madagascar (or calico) a large flat bean about 2 cm (3/4 in), mainly to Britain. The Italian blanco de spagna is this type. America prefers a smaller sized dried bean (called the steva or Carolina bean), and also exports these beans Butter beans cook compartively quickly, and become mushy when overcooked. They may be cooked with onions and tomatoes, Mediterranean style, or made into a puree. They are also used in salads and for fabada outside Spain.
- Cannellini Beans Small white kidney beans originally from Argentina, these have been adopted by Italy (which also grows a smaller version called toscanelli) Cannellini are used for Florence's fagtolli all uccelletto, stewed with tomato, garlic, sage and olive oil, and both types are good sauteed or in salads like tonno e fagtolli (with canned tuna).

- Flageolets Gournei kidney beans, perhaps the finest of all pulses, they are harvested when very young and small (August and September in France), pale green or white. The flageolet is so named because the French decided it resembled a flute. Flageolets were produced by chance in 1872 by Gabriel Chevrier who lived near Arpajon in Brittany. (Flageolets are therefore also known as chevriers in France)

In France they are grown in the Arpjon region and central France, and are the classic accompaniment to leg of lamb and blade of pork.

- Greek Beans This is the common description in the Middle East of a type of dried broad bean that has no brown skin. They are large, flat, almost round and pale similar to a butter bean (the usual substitute), but without the kidney shape. In Greece fassolia gigantes are stewed with vegetables, including tomato, the local oregano, oil and perhaps honey, and served hot or cold with a little lemon juice. The beans puree splendidly, so old dishes like the Italian macco or maccu are of interest to modern cooks.
- Large White Kidney Beans. The Spanish fabes de la graja, vast, flat and buttery in texture, is a prince among kidney beans, but is little exported. Even in its own country it commands a price higher than lamb, it is the Spanish bean for fabada. The fudiones from the west of Spain are probably the biggest of all beans, challenged by the garrafones of Valencia. Large white French beans include the soisson and the longots of northern France and the Vendee, which keep for a long time. Cocos are grown in Brittany, the Vendee (where they are also called mogetes) and south eastern France, and often used for cassonnet and ragouts.
- Pinto Beans A smaller kidney bean than borlotti, pink and speckled, pintos are identified with the American south west, and are eaten in Latin America too.
- Red Kidney beans Not much eaten in France, but popular in northern Spain, these shiny kidney beans are at home in the US and Canada, north east Spain and Latin America. Traditionally cooked with bacon and onion, these are favoured in the West Indies and for spicy dishes like chilli con carne.
- Small white haricot (Navy) beans. The seeds of the haricot (French bean) these are used in France for cassoulet (a south western name is mounfetos). There are several similar ones in Spain that have DO (legally protected) names, for examples the alubias of Leon and the Judias of El Barco de Avila.

The navy bean is a strain specially bred in the US for the canning industry, the navy connection dating from 1875, when the beans were canned with molasses to feed the fleet. Mr. H.J. Heinz., of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, entered on the scene in 1895 with a canned brand, beans in tomato sauce. The first printed recipe for Boston baked beans appeared in Mrs. Putnam's Receipt Book in 1856.

The Great Northern bean is another American white bean, about twice the size of the navy bean.

Cooking dried beans Dried beans are usually soaked before cooking as this reduces the cooking time. Soaking also allows the skins to rehydrate and the beans to plump up preventing both from separating during boiling. Overnight soaking in plenty of cold water is best, though soaking in plenty of cold water is best, though soaking in boiling water will reduce the time. Beans should not be left in warm water or in a warm room and they should not be soaked for more than 24 hours, as they may ferment and produce poisonous substances. For this reason always use fresh water for cooking. Boil beans rapidly to destroy natural toxins, then reduce the heat to keep the water just boiling. Cook for 45 minutes to 1 ½ hours, or longer for soya beans to become tender. A bouquet garni, 1 onion studded with 2 cloves, 1 garlic clove and 1 diced carrot can be added during cooking. Do not add salt, as this will prevent the beans from becoming tender or will even harden part cooked beans. Season beans when they are thoroughly tender. The old way was to soda) in the cooking water to speed cooking, but this is not advised now, for nutritional reasons.

The repertoire of bean dishes includes stews, salads, beans creams and deserts.

RECIPES

Haricot bean salad

Cook the beans, allow them to cool and then drain. Add a chopped mild onion to the beans, mix with a well flavoured vinaigrette, and sprinkle with chopped herbs (parsley, chevil and chives).

Haricot beans with onions

Cook and drain the beans. Cook some sliced onions gently in butter allow 200 g (7 oz) onions for each 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) cooked beans. Add the beans, cover the pan, simmer for 6 minutes and serve sprinkled with chopped parsley.

Haricots a la crème

Cook the beans, drain them and warm them gently in a saucepan until nearly all the moisture has evaporated. Cover with fresh cream, warm through again, add some chopped savory, serve very hot.

An alternative method is to butter a gratin dish, pour in the cooked beans mixed with cream, sprinkle the dish with white breadcrumbs and melted butter, and brown in a very hot oven or under the grill (broiler)

Haricot beans in tomato sauce

Cook the beans with 500 g (18 oz) lean bacon in one piece for each 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) beans. When the beans are cooked drain them and mix with 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) tomato sauce. Drain the bacon, dice it and add it to the beans. Simmer for about 10 minutes and serve very hot. This dish can also be browned in the oven.

Red kidney beans with red wine and bacon

Cook the beans adding bacon (as above) a bouquet garni, onion studded with cloves, garlic and carrot. Use a mixture of half water and half red wine. Part drain them, leaving enough cooking liquor to lightly coat the beans, and put them into a sauce pan. Cut the bacon into dice, fry it in butter and add it to the beans, Finally, thicken with a knob of beurre manie.

BEANS, FRESH A vegetable of which there are many varieties. They can be divided into two main groups, those with edible pods (green beans) and those of which only the seeds are eaten. The former group includes the French bean (baricot veri) called string bean in the United States, and the runner bean. The latter group is described in beans, dried.

French (string) beans. The colour varies in different varieties from pale green or yellow to dark green, sometimes spotted with purple. Grown at first for their seeds, it was not until the end of the 18th century, in Italy, that the whole pods began to be eaten. In France they were still rare and expensive throughout the 19th century. These can be further divided into dwarf beans and snap beans. They may be podded, and the seeds sold fresh. Fresh podded beans (the seeds) do not absorb the flavour of a sauce in the same way as dried ones.

Dwarf French beans (baricots filets or baricots aiguilles) have long thin green pods which are picked while still young, before they become stringy and tough. There are many varieties for commercial cultivation or growing at home, varying from very fine beans to dark green or green and purple types.

Snap beans are either green or yellow (baricots beurre, called butirro in Italy), and large and plump without being stringy. When harvested young, they are used in the same way as dwarf French beans.

The yellow variety is generally juicier than the green.

Runner beans, flat beans and long beans. The scarlet runner bean, originating in Mexico, is not much liked in France, nor is it a popular commercial crop, since their long pods up to 30 cm (12 in) have to be hand-picked, though they have plenty of flavour. They are green, rough-surfaced and are eaten complete with their flecked seeds (normally pink). As they become tough (with a scaly inside), they should be picked at about half this size, when slightly unripe, and the strings scrupulously removed. Available in the US, their consumption is limited in Europe, but they are popular in Britain, where most households in the middle of the 20th century owned a small square kitchen gadget for thinly slicing these beans on the diagonal, the best way to cook them.

Flat beans (sometimes sold as stringless beans) are similar in size and appearance. They became popular towards the end of the 20th century, being exported by Spain and East Africa. They are paler and smoother than runner beans, and are snapped into lengths for cooking. Both these are simply called beans from Spain in France. The flat bean is the Spanish ferrula, a classic ingredient of the Valencian paella.

Long beans, originating in Africa, are the principal bean of Southeast Asia. They are eaten immature, at about 38 cm (15 in) but will grow longer, hence the names yard long or yard beans.

RECIPES

Cooking French beans

Top and tail (stem and head) the beans, remove strings (if necessary on either side), and wash them. Cut long beans into shorter lengths if required, or slice runner beans. Plunge the prepared beans into salted boiling water and boil rapidly, without covering them. Cooking times vary with size, whereas fine young beans are tender and still crisp in 3-5 minutes, large beans may need more than 10 minutes. They should retain some crispness and not be soft. Drain them immediately, if they are to be used cold, refresh them under running cold water after draining and then drain them again.

The cooked beans can be mixed with butter or cream, purred, cooked as a gratin or served cold in a salad. In Italy they are served with garlic and anchovies (a la genovese) or cream and Parmesan (a la milanese). In France, however, they are used chiefly as an ingredient of dishes typical of the French countryside (a la lyonnaise, a la berichonne, and with charcuterie).

Cooking podded fresh haricot beans

Cook in boiling salted water with a bouquet garni and vegetables to flavour (such as carrots, turnips, leeks and diced celery).

Alternatively, cook either 1 sliced onion and 1 sliced carrot or the white parts of leeks and some sliced celery sticks in butter until soft. Then add sufficient water to amply cover the beans when they are put in, together with a bouquet garni and a 300 g (11 oz) blanched and drained piece of lean green bacon. Cook for 30 minutes. Add the beans, and simmer until they and the bacon are cooked (the time required will depend on the freshness and tenderness of the beans).

French beans a la lyonnaise

Cook the beans in boiling salted water and drain them well. For every 800 g (1 ¾ lb) beans, prepare 225 g (8 oz) sliced onions and cook gently in butter in a saute pan until golden brown. Add the beans, season with salt and pepper, and saute until the beans are slightly browned. Add 1 tablespoon vinegar and mix well. Turn into a dish and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

French beans in tomato sauce

Boil the beans in salted water until they are three quarters cooked, and drain thoroughly. Cook them gently in butter for about 5 minutes, add a few tablespoons of concentrated tomato sauce and simmer. Turn into a dish and sprinkle with chopped parsley or basil.

French bean salad

Cook the beans just long enough for them to remain slightly crisp. Drain them and dry off any remaining water. Cut them in two and leave them to cool. Add a few chopped spring onions (scallions) and some well flavoured vinaigrette. Mix and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Alternatively, the beans can be tossed in olive oil, sprinkled with pine kernels, and arranged in a lattice with long strips of marinated red peppers.

French beans sauteed a la provencale

Cook the beans in the usual way and drain them thoroughly. Heat some olive oil in large saucepan and brown the beans lightly. At the last moment add some chopped garlic and parsley, use 1 garlic clove and a small bunch of parsley for every 800 g (1 ¾ lb) beans.

French beans with cream

Boil the beans in salted water until they are three quarters cooked. Drain, Cover with single (light) cream and simmer until the cream is reduced by half. Add salt and pepper and transfer to a serving dish. A sprinkling of chopped parsley can also be added.

This dish can be prepared o la normandel for every 450 g (1 lb) beans, and 1 egg yolk and 40 g (1 ½ oz, 3 tablespoons) butter after removing the pan from the heat.

Mixed green beans

Take equal quantities of French beans and flageolets and cook them separately. Drain well and mix together. Blend in some butter or cream and sprinkle with chopped fines herbes.

Puree of French beans

Half-cook the beans. Drain them thoroughly and then cook gently in butter for 7-8 minutes, allowing 50 g (12 oz, ¼ cup) butter for every 800 g (1 ¾ lb) beans. Puree the beans in an electric blender or rub them through a fine sieve. (A quarter of its volume of mashed potato can be added to the bean puree) To serve, warm through and add more butter.

Puree of fresh prodded haricons beans

Cook the fresh white beans using the basic method above. Drain them, then rub through a sieve to remove the skins. Pour this puree into a saucepan and warm gently, stirring with a wooden spoon until the mixture is smooth. If it seems to be too thick, add a few tablespoons of boiling cream or milk. Just before serving blend in 50-100 g (2-4 oz, ¼ - ½ cup) butter for each 1 kg (2 ¼ lb, 4 ½ cups) puree.

BEAN SPROUTS Most beans and lentils can be sprouted, to produce a fresh shoot 2-5 cm (1-2 in) long. The Chinese sprout beans (though Indians prefer lentils) and they are an important part of vegetarian diets. Alfafa yields the finest threads, but green mung and yellow soy are the common choice. Soy shoots should be blanched, as they can be slightly poisonous, but other shoots can be eaten raw though they are normally stir-fried. Other seeds can also be sprouted, for example fenugreek and triticale (wheat crossed with rye), which is quick to sprout because it has no husk, and will yield eight times the original weight.

BEAR A large quadruped, once common in Europe but now very rare, even in mountainous areas. In Canada and Russia the bear is still hunted as a game animal. The Gauls enjoyed it stewed, and in North America the fat was valued for cooking. At the beginning of the 19th century a few Parisian restaurateurs, encouraged by Alexandre Dumas, brought bear back into fashion. Chevet created the speciality of bear ham. The best parts of this animal are its paws. Urbain Dubois suggested a recipe for bear paws marinated and braised with bacon, then grilled (broiled) and served with a highly seasoned sauce. In China bears palm is listed among the eight treasures of traditional cuisine.

BEARN The cuisine of Bearn in France's southwest is rich and wholesome with southern touches, rather reminiscent of that of the Basque country. The unrivalled specialties of Gascony, the land of Henri IV, are the poule au pot (boiled chicken) and garbure, a thick, nourishing soup which is accompanied by pieces of preserved goose or pork) to make a unique dish. There is an endless variety of soups, such as the coustant or coustuelle, containing subtly spiced chard and carrots, and ordillea, a kind of onion soup. Game and fish play an important part in local gastronomy while lamb and beef are famous for their very special flavour. Leg of Lamb and daubes made with beef from the Ossau or Baresges regions, conserves, hams, saucissons and andouilles (chitterlings made into sausages) from Oloron, and pate de foie gras from Orthez are all much appreciated by gourmets.

Meals are rounded off with hearty deserts such as broye (a kind of porridge made from maize flour). Millas (the same as a cake) pastis (an orange blossom flavoured yeast cake) galettes aux pruneaux (prune pastry) and puff pastries made with goose fat. The dishes are washed down with the strong regional wines, among the best known being Jurangcon, Pacherenc du Vic houl and Madiran.

Wine The vineyards of the region situated in the eastern part of the Pyrenees Atlantiques department overflow into the departments of Hautes Pyrenees (six communes) and Gers (three communes) Since 1975, the three traditional appellations (Jurangcon and Pacherene du Vic-Bihl representing white wines and madiran representing red) have been joined by the Bearn OAC. This appellation which previously applied to VDOS wines, now covers very pleasant dry white wines and particularly reds and roses with a low alcoholic content, popular with both tourists and locals.

BEARNAISE A classic hot creamy French sauce made from egg yolks and reduced vinegar, whisked together over a low heat and mixed with butter. It is usually served with grilled (broiled) meat or fish. Sauces derived from it (artésienne, Choron, Foyot, paloise, tyrolienne and Valois) are bearnaise flavoured with additional ingredients. A bearnaise sauce which has curdled can be saved by gradually beating in a tablespoon of hot water (if the sauce is cold) or cold water (if the sauce is hot)

The association between the name of this sauce and the birthplace of Henri IV has probably arisen because it was first made by Collinet in the 1830s in a restaurant in Saint-Germain-en-Laye called the Pavillon Henri IV. But a similar recipe appears in La Cuisine des villes et des campagnes published in 1818.

Some recipes are called à la bearnaise even when they are not accompanied by this sauce. These are dishes directly inspired by the cuisine of Bearn, such as daube, poule au pot, and game confits with cep mushrooms.

RECIPE

Bearnaise sauce

Put 1 tablespoon chopped shallots, 2 tablespoons chopped chervil and tarragon, a sprig of thyme, a piece of baby leaf, 2 ½ tablespoons vinegar, and a little salt and pepper in a pan. Reduce by two thirds, then allow to cool slightly. Mix 2 egg yolks with 1 tablespoon water, add to the pan and whisk over a very low heat. As soon as the egg yolks have thickened, add 125 g (4 ½ oz, ½ cup) butter in small pieces, a little at a time, whisking continuously.

Bearnaise sauce is a liaison of egg yolks and butter, prepared on a reduction of herbs in a little vinegar. Do not overheat or overcook the sauce as it will curdle. Here the reduction is cooled sufficiently for the egg yolks to be whisked straight into it and clarified melted butter is added a little at a time. Alternatively, the egg yolks can be combined with a little cold water before adding to the reduction and the butter can be added in small knobs.

Adjust the seasoning, adding a dash of cayenne pepper if desired, and a little lemon juice. Add 1 tablespoon each of chopped chervil and tarragon and mix. The sauce can be kept in a warm bain marie until required, but it must not be reheated once it has cooled.

BEAT To work a substance or mixture energetically to modify its consistency, appearance or colour. The operation is performed in many ways according to the nature of the ingredients, the utensils used and the purpose. A variety of mixtures are beaten, usually with a wooden spoon to incorporate air. To give volume to a yeasted dough, it is beaten with the hands either in a bowl on a worktop or in a food processor. When eggs are to be used as a binding agent, they are lightly beaten with a fork.

BEATILLES An old French term for various small ingredients (such as cockscombs and kidneys, lamb's sweetbreads, diced fore gras and mushrooms) bound with cream sauce and used as a filling for vol-au-vent cases or savoury tarts.

BEATRIX The French name given to a garnish of spring vegetables for large cuts of meat, which includes fresh steamed morel mushrooms, small glazed carrots, sauteed artichoke hearts (quartered) and fried or boiled new potatoes.

It is also the name of a mixed salad of chicken breasts with potatoes and asparagus tips dressed with a light mayonnaise flavoured with mustard, a slice of truffle is the final touch.

BEAUCAIRE The French name given to various recipes, including a mixed salad, soup and chitterlings (intestines) associated with Provençal cuisine.

The Beaucaire fairs were celebrated by the poet Mistral, who wrote of merchants who are celery hearts in the open air. Celery still figures in the traditional Christmas supper salad which inspired a mixed salad, thin strips of celery and celeriac (celery root) with chicory, ham and sharp apples, with beetroot (red beet) and potatoes arranged around the edge. The ingredients of Beaucaire soup are cabbage, leek and celery (sweated in butter and mixed with white chicken stock flavoured with basil and marjoram). It is garnished with pearl barley and diced chicken liver and served with grated cheese. Eel Beaucaire is boned, stuffed with a fish mixture, placed on a bed of shallots, onions and mushrooms, and braised in a mixture of white wine and Cognac.

RECIPE

BOEUF A LA MODE DE Beaucaire

This is the traditional dish of the Beaucaire fair. It is delicious but takes a long time to prepare. Take 1.2 kg (2 1/2 lb) thin slices of beef cut from the thigh or shoulder blade allowing about 200 g (7 oz) per person. Bard the meat with fat which has been rolled in salt and pepper and moisten with brandy.

Then marinate for 24 hours in 4 tablespoons vinegar to which a chopped onion, a bouquet garni, 4 tablespoons brandy and 4-5 teaspoons olive oil have been added.

Cover the bottom of an earthenware cooking pot with 225 g (8 oz) bacon, cut in thick rashers (slices). Chop 4 onions and 2 garlic cloves and place on top of the bacon. Place the slices of beef on this bed, season with salt and pepper, and then pour the marinade over the meat. Cover and cook in a preheated oven at 120 °C (250 °F, gas 1/2) for 2 hours. Then slowly (so as not to overcool the contents) add 1 litre (1 3/4 pints, 4 1/2 cups) red wine, a bouquet garni, 1 tablespoon capers and an onion stuck with 3 cloves. Cover and cook gently for a further 2 hours.

Just before serving thicken the sauce with a generous 1 tablespoon flour and add 3 pounded anchovy fillets. When the dish is ready, pour 3 tablespoons olive oil over and serve.

BEAUFORT, A French AOP cheese from the Haute Savoie made from upasteurized cow's milk (at least 48% fat content). It is cooked and then pressed until it is firm and ivory coloured with a natural brushed crust. It is a round cheese without holes (but occasionally with a few threads thin horizontal splits), and it has concave base (these characteristics differentiate it from other Gruyeres). It can weigh up to 50 kg (110 lb) with a diameter of 40 cm (16 in) and a height of 20 cm (8 in) but some rounds are smaller. Made from the milk of cows from the mountain pastures of Maurienne, Beaufortin and Tarentaise, it has a fine fruity flavour.

The best cheese are labelled Beaufort d'Alpage. They are made high in the mountain chalets from the late summer milk. After maturing for 5-6 months, these cheese reach the shops in March or April. The dairy Beaufort produced in cooperative cheese dairies is not entitled to the appellation controlle. It is finer than Emmental and is used for gratins and fondues.

BEAUHARNAIS A French garnish usually served with small grilled (broiled) or fried cuts of meat, made of stuffed mushrooms and sauteed or steamed artichoke quarters. Beauharnais also describes a recipe for soft-boiled (soft-cooked) eggs on a bed of artichoke hearts. It is thought that these recipes were dedicated to Countess Fanny de Beauharnais, cousin by marriage of Empress Josephine, who had a reputation for being a gourmet. Sweet Beauharnais recipes (based on bananas and rum) reflect the Creole origins of Napoleon's first wife.

RECIPES

Savoury Preparations

Beauharnais sauce

Mix together 200 ml (7 fl oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) bearnaise sauce and 25 g (1 oz., 2 tablespoons) tarragon flavoured butter. This sauce is served with grilled (broiled) and fried meat and grilled fish.

Soft boiled or poached eggs a la Beauharnais

Sweet some artichoke hearts in butter and garnish with Beauharnais sauce. Place a softboiled (soft cooked) or poached egg on each artichoke heart and coat with a reduced demi-glace sauce to which butter has been added.

Sweet Preparation

Beauharnais bananas

Peel 6 bananas and arrange in a buttered ovenproof dish. Sprinkle with sugar and 4 tablespoons white rum. Bake in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for 5-8 minutes. Pour some double (heavy) cream over, sprinkle with crushed macaroons and a little melted butter, then glaze in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F gas 9) Serve in the baking dish.

Beauharnais barquettes

Bake some pastry barquette cases blind. Peel some bananas, mash the flesh and add lemon juice and a little white rum. Fill the barquettes with the mixture and bake in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F, gas 9) for 7-8 minutes, then sprinkle with a little stale, finely crumbled brioche and melted butter. Bake for a further 5 minutes in a very hot oven.

BEAUJOLAIS One of the best known red wines in the world, made from the Gamay grape (full name Gamay Noir a Jus Blanc) Although the region may be said to be a continuation of the Burgundy vineyard, Beaujolais is, in fact, more correctly a Lyonnais wine, because the vineyard are in that department, with the exception of one section which is actually in Burgundy. These days, however, Beaujolais is usually considered separately from Burgundy. The writer Leon Daudet said that three rivers flow through Lyon, the Rhone, the Saone and the Beaujolais. Until fairly recently the locals were the main consumers of this lip-smacking wine, often served in 450 ml ($\frac{3}{4}$ pint, 2 cup) pots in the bistros. However, during World War II many Parisian writers, including the author of Clochmerie, came to live in the Beaujolais, discovered the local tipple, and published it with gusto. Much additional publicity has been gained by the announcement of when the Nouveau, or first consignments of the young Beaujolais, are released.

It is carried literally all over the world and has inspired many other wine countries to publicize their own Nouveaux within weeks of it being vintaged.

There are ten growths (crus) of Beaujolais and, within them, a few estate wines, although the majority are sold under their regional names plus the name of the shipper. These growths are Brouilly, Cote de Brouilly, Chenas, Chiroubles, Fleurie, Julienas, Saint-Amour, Morgon, Moulin-a-Vent and Regnie. Each has its own AOC. In addition to straight Beaujolais, there are Beaujolais Villages wines from a number of communes (parishes) entitled to this AOC. Most Beaujolais is at its delectable best when fairly young, although the wines of both Morgon and Moulin-a-Vent can age agreeably for a few years. Traditionally, young Beaujolais is served cool at cellar temperature.

In addition to the region's red wine, some white and rose, Beaujolais are also made.

BEAUJOLAIS-VILLAGES Wine from 39 communes from the northern part of Beaujolais may be called Beaujolais Villages. This accounts for around a quarter of the total production. It has more body and more alcohol than Beaujolais.

BEAUNE This town, capital of Burgundy, is situated at the southern end of the Cote de Nuits, the Cote de Beaune encircles and extends to the south. Both red and white wines are produced, there are a number of AOCs, many of them world famous names, and also many specific vineyards of repute. It is generally true to say that, although the red wines of the Cotes de Beaune can be very good indeed, the region is chiefly famous for its white wines, of which the Meuraults, Puligny, the various Montrachet wines and the exceptional Corton Charlemagne can be magnificent. The wines of the southern sections below the Cote de Beaune are becoming extremely popular too.

Beaune itself is one of the most attractive of wine towns. In the centre, the Hotel-Dieu is part of the Hospices de Beaune, established in the 15th century by the Chancellor of Burgundy, Nicolas Rolin, and his wife Guigone de Salins, this charitable organization runs the Hospice de la Charite, which is an old people's home, and a modern hospital.

Since the middle of the 19th century, wines from the vineyards belonging to the Hospices de Beaune have been publicly auctioned every November, on the second Sunday of the month (in very poor years they are sold privately). For the occasion, many other tastings and ceremonies take place in or near Beaune, including the Trois Glorieuses' (the Saturday banquet at Clos de Vougeot, the post-sale dinner in the Baston de Beaune and, on the Monday, the Paulee luncheon at Meursault). The occasion provides the first indication of the character of the year's vintage.

BEAUVILLIERS A rich nourishing French cake made of crushed almonds and sugar mixed with butter, eggs and a lot of flour (wheat flour and rice flour). After cooking it is wrapped in foil to ensure that it keeps well. It is the oldest form of travelling cake. It was invented at the beginning of the 19th century by a M. Mounier, a pastry cook in Paris, who named it after the great cook, to whom he had been apprenticed.

BEAVER An aquatic rodent native to North America, but also found in Savoy in France, Scandinavia and Germany, hunted for its meat as well as its fur. Despite its distinctly gamey taste, the medieval church classed it with water fowl, and permitted its consumption during Lent. The meat was made into pate and preserves. Nowadays it is a protected species.

It should not be confused with the South American coypu, which was introduced into Europe in the 20th century for fur ranching. Several French producers have promoted its meat for quality pates.

BECHAMEIL, LOUIS DE French financier (born 1630, died 1703), Farmer general and steward of the house of the Duke of Orleans, Louis de Bechameil, Marquis of Nointel, became major domo to Louis XIV. Saint Simon reported that he was rich, a gourmet, an informed lover and a handsome man, but it is very unlikely that he created the sauce which bears his name, abbreviated to be claimed. This sauce is probably an improvement of an older recipe by one of the King's cooks, who dedicated his discovery to the King's major domo, which made the jealous old Duke of escars say, That fellow Bechameil has all the luck! I was serving breast of chicken a la crème more than 20 years before he was born, but I have never had the chance of giving my name to even the most modest sauce.

BECHAMEL A white sauce made by combining original bechamel sauce, which owes its name to the Marquis of Bechameil, was prepared by adding large quantities of fresh cream to a thick veloute.

One of the basic sauces, the classic recipe calls for milk flavoured by heating it with a bay leaf, a slice of onion and a blade of mace or some nutmeg. Celery, carrot, ham and/ or mushroom peelings may even be added. This is then left for about 30 minutes to infuse. The Italian balsamella (sometimes infused with garlic, bay leaf and/or onion) is now a white sauce with nutmeg. Bechamel commonly refers to a white sauce with simple seasoning.

Bechamel is widely used, particularly for egg, vegetable and gratin dishes, and for filled scallop shells. It can be used as a basis for other sauces, made by adding different ingredients.

RECIPE

Bechamel sauce

Gently heat 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) milk with 1 bay leaf, a thick slice of onion and 1 blade of mace. Remove from the heat just as the milk boils, cover the pan and set aside for at least 30 minutes. Strain the milk and discard the flavouring ingredients. Melt 40 g (1 ½ oz. 3 tablespoons) butter over a low heat in a heavy based saucepan. Add 40 g (1 ½ oz. 6 tablespoons) flour and stir briskly until the mixture is smoothly blended, without allowing it to change colour. Gradually stir in the milk and bring to the boil, beating well to prevent any lumps forming. Season with salt and pepper and (according to the use for which the sauce is destined) a little grated nutmeg. Simmer the sauce gently for 3-5 minutes, stirring from time to time.

BEECHNUT fame The small triangular brown nut of the beech tree. Beechnuts grow in twos or threes in a hairy brownish capsule and are gathered in October. They have a high oil content and a similar flavour to the hazelnut. They can be eaten raw but have a slightly bitter taste, it is best to grill (broil) or roast them. The oil extracted from them is considered to be second only to olive oil in quality. It keeps well and is excellent for frying and salad dressings.

BEEF The meat of all the large domestic cattle, including heifer, cow, ox, bullock and bull.

Our prehistoric ancestors hunted the wild ox for food and domestic cattle are descended from it. Cattle have been domesticated for more than 40 centuries. In the Middle Ages noble dishes were prepared using the better cuts of beef, from the upper and rear parts of the animal. In 1756 the Duc de Richelieu chose the menu for a famous meal that was given for his illustrious prisoners during the Hanoverian War. The 12 dishes of the first course and the 10 dishes of the second course were all of beef.

The quality and the yield (the weight of edible meat in relation to the weight of the live animal) vary according to the breed of cattle. Beef cattle are specially bred for meat production. The most popular breeds in France are the Charolais and Limousin. Scotland produces the Aberdeen Angus, England the Hereford, the Belgians have blanc-bleu and the Japanese their Wadakin. Sometimes whole regions are known for their beef, like the Val di Chiana in Italy and Texas in the USA. The proportion of muscle is high with relatively little fat. Young males may be castrated (steers) to accelerate the fattening process. But uncastrated males grow more rapidly and can therefore be slaughtered young, but their meat is sometimes criticized for its lack of flavour. Young bullocks are also a source of meat (under 24 months they are termed bottle calves in France). Heifers that are not required for breeding are also slaughtered to provide meat which is very tender and full of flavour.

The problem of BSE (bovine spongiform encephalitis), commonly known as mad cow disease precipitated a major review of cattle rearing and slaughtering in the late 20th century in Britain.

All continents, and almost all countries, enjoy beef, the notable exception being southern India. And some countries like Argentina, Australia and, to a certain extent, North America, eat a great deal of it. Britain once known and mocked by the French for its huge consumption of roast beef, had changed its habit by the close of the 20th century. The main exporting countries are South America, Australia and New Zealand, the principal importers being the United States and Japan.

- Choosing beef Good-quality beef is bright red and shiny in appearance and firm and springy to the touch with a sweet light scent. It has a network of white or slightly yellowish fat, when a lot of fat is present in the muscle, the meat is described as marbled. In order to be tender and palatable, beef must be matured after slaughtering, for a period varying from few days to a week.

Traditional Cuts The method by which the meat is butchered varies, with portions being removed and prepared differently according to country and even region. The diagrams and lists provide in this section illustrate classic beef cuts from Britain, France and America. There are many more cuts available in supermarkets, with the emphasis on boneless portions that require minimum preparation and provide maximum flexibility in choice of cooking method. Ultimately, the choice of cut depends on the cooking method and type of dish. Many consider the best beef cut to be sirloin, while the great classics are tournedos (filet mignons), chateaubriand, fillet (tenderloin) en croute, and rib. The hindquarter provides the so-called noble cuts, which can be cooked quickly, while the forequarter gives mostly slow cooking and boiling pieces.

Beef cuisine is as varied as the countries that enjoy it. But certain methods are common to many of them. Beef may be boiled (the Austrian Hungarian Tafelspitz) pot roasted (like the German Sauerbraten marinated in buttermilk, wine and vinegar) or baked inside pastry (like British beef Wellington) Strips may be quick fried (like Japanese teriyaki) and subsequently sauced (like beef Stroganov), or stuffed in medieval fashion, like beef olives. It can be casseroled slowly, like the Flemish carbonade, go into pies and puddings or be pickled (Irish spiced brisket) Beef is eaten raw (carpachio and steak tartare) and twice-cooked in dishes using left overs from a roast joint, such as rissoles. It is even made into an old fashioned invalid drink (beef tea).

Mince (Ground) Beef. This may be bought ready minced, prepared as required or prepared in larger batches and deep frozen. It is usually made from less tender cuts, such as stewing beef (hind shank or neck) or silverside (bottom round). The meat is trimmed of excess fat. If prepared from a superior beef cut, it will be so labelled. Mince is used to make hamburgers and bitokses and is made into spiced meatballs, such as fricadelle and kofta.

Offal (Variety Meats) Edible offal includes heart, liver, kidneys and brains, while the word ox identifies the lesser types in English. Only tongue (smoked or pickled), ox tail, bone marrow and tripe are highly regarded in gastronomic circles.

Beef Products. The simplest types of dried beef are jerky (from the Spanish charcut, dried), which the American colonists inherited from the Indians, and the South African biltong (often dried and smoked). Pastrami, originally a wind dried meat from America is spiced brisket of beef, a Jewish speciality, while smoked beef goes into cholent, Sophisticated air-dried meats include the Italian bresaola and rather similar Swiss Bundnerfleisch from the Jura mountains.

Corned beef is the American name for salt beef. (In Britain, corned beef is a type of canned meat). Suet is processed beef fat for reuse, it has its own role in steak and kidney pudding and a host of dumplings.

Roast beef Cuts of beef for roasting are generally taken from the hindquarter and include fillet, sirloin, rump, topside and rib, the prime roasts are fillet, sirloin and rolled rib.

In France the meat is usually barded and tied up by the butcher it will taste fresher cut and prepared on demand. In Britain the cooked roast is served pink and very tender inside, browned, outside rather browner.

Roasting Tiems Take the beef out of the refrigerator at least 1 hour before cooking. The meat will be more tender if it is cooked steadily in a moderately hot oven, rather than rapidly in a hot oven. Put the meat in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F, gas 8) for about 15 minutes, then reduce the temperature to 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) and cook for 15-20 minutes per 450g (1lb) for a medium roast (a little longer if the joint is thick). A very tender prime roast can be cooked rapidly in a hot oven, allowing 12-15 minutes per 450 g (1lb)

Before slicing the beef, cover it with foil and leave it to rest for 10 minutes in a warm place so that the juices are distributed throughout the meat and do not run too much when the joint is cut.

Making Gravy Put the roasting tin (pan) on top of the above over a low heat. If they are not already well browned, brown the juices lightly without burning them, pour off some of the fat, then deglaze the pan with a little light brown veal stock or water. Continue adding stock and stirring to remove all cooking residue from the roasting tin. Make double the volume of gravy finally required, then reduce it by half. Adjust the seasoning, strain and keep hot.

Accompaniments. There is a wide choice of accompaniment serve French style the following may be offered dauphine potatoes, artichoke hearts filled with mushrooms, braised lettuce, sauteed tomatoes, potato croquettes, stuffed mushrooms. Garnishes are du Barry, bouquetiere, forestiere and Richelieu. Alternatively, roast potatoes, roast parsnips, Yorkshire pudding, mustard or horseadish sauce, glazed carrots, buttered spinach and other lightly cooked vegetables may be served.

Bocuf a la mode

Cut about 250 g (9 oz) fat bacon into thick strips and marinate for 5-6 hours in 100 ml (4 fl. oz, 7 tablespoons) Cognac. Use the strips to lard a piece of rump weighing about 2 kg (4 ½ lb) Season with salt and pepper and marinate for 5-6 hours (turning the meat several times) in the Cognac used to marinate the bacon mixed with at least 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 ½ cups) good red wine, 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) olive oil, 250 g (9 oz. 2 ¼ cups) chopped onions, 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) sliced carrots, 2-3 garlic cloves, a bouquet garni and a few peppercorns.

Blanch a boned calf's foot and some bacon rind from which some of the fat has been removed. Drain the meat and dry it, and then drain the other ingredients of the marinade. Brown the meat on all sides in olive oil, then place in a large casserole. Add the drained ingredients of the marinade followed by the bacon rinds and the calf's foot. Moisten with the marinade and about 750 ml (1 ¼ pints, 3 ¼ cups) stock and season with salt.

Place the covered casserole in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) and cook for about 2 ½ hours, until tender. When the beef is cooked, slice it evenly and serve surrounded with the carrots and the diced meat of the calf's foot. Strain the braising stock over the meat. Small glazed onions may be added to garnish.

Boeuf bourguignon

Cut 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) braising steak (rump) into cubes and coat with flour. Cut 150 g (5 oz) belly pork into thin strips and fry in a flameproof casserole or heavy based saucepan. Add the steak, a chopped shallot and 2 sliced onions and continue to fry. If desired, add a small glass of brandy and set alight. Add 500 ml (17 fl. oz, 2 cups) red wine and a generous glass of stock. Season with salt and pepper and add a bouquet garni and a crushed clove of garlic. Cover and simmer gently for at least 2 hours. A dozen small onions lightly fried in butter may be added 20 minutes before cooking ends. Just before serving, bind the sauce with 1 tablespoon beurre manie.

Boiled beef

For 6 servings, place about 800 g (1 ¾ beef or veal bones in a large saucepan with 2.5 litres (4 ¼ pints, 11 cups) water, and bring to the boil. Skim the surface of the liquid and remove the foam deposited on the sides of the pan. Boil for about an hour, then remove bones. Add 1.25-2 kg (2 ¾ --4 ½ lb) beef, depending on the cut and the proportion of bone to meat, silverside (bottom round), cheek, shoulder, chuck, flank or oxtail may be used. Bring back to the boil and skim. Then add the following vegetables, 6 carrots, 3 medium turnips, 6 small leeks (tied together), 2 celery sticks (cut into short lengths and tied together), piece of parsnip, 2 onions (one stuck with 2 cloves), a good bouquet garni and, if desired, 1-2 garlic cloves. Season with salt and pepper, cover to bring back to the boil, and simmer for about 3 hours. Drain the meat, cut into even-sized pieces, and serve surrounded with the drained vegetables. Serve with coarse salt, pickled onions, gherkins and mustard.

If a marrow bone is available, wrap this in muslin (cheesecloth) and add it to the pan not more than 15 minutes before serving. The bone may be served with the dish or the marrow can be removed and spread on toasted croutons. To make the dish look more attractive, select vegetables of a similar size, cut the leeks and celery to the same length and form into neat bunches, and serve the onions slightly browned.

Braised beef à l'ancienne

Trim and tie a piece of rump and braise until almost cooked, but still slightly firm. Drain and untie the meat and place it either under a press or on plate under a weight until cool. Trim the sides of the cooled meat. Cut away the central portion, leaving a thickness of about 2 cm (¾ in) of meat on the sides and bottom. Brush with beaten egg and cover with a mixture of soft breadcrumbs and grated Parmesan cheese (3 parts breadcrumbs to 1 part cheese). Ensure that the breadcrumb mixture covers the meat completely. Place the hollow meat case on a plate, sprinkle with melted butter and brown in the oven.

Meanwhile, slice the remaining portion of meat very thinly. Place the slices in a sauté dish, add some thin slices of tongue and some sliced mushrooms, which have been gently fried in butter, and moisten with a few tablespoons of the reduced, strained braising stock (from which the fat has been removed). Add 2 ½ tablespoons Madeira and simmer without boiling. To serve, place the hollow piece of beef on a large serving dish and arrange the sautéed meat slices inside it. Serve any extra sauce in a sauceboat.

Braised beef à la bourgeoise

Marinate a rump cut of beef in white wine and then braise it with a calf's foot. Half way through the cooking, remove the meat to a casserole, adding some sliced carrots and small glazed onions. Complete the cooking in the casserole.

Braised beef à la créole

Cut 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) braising steak (top round or rump) into cubes and thread a large piece of larding bacon into each cube. Marinate in a mixture of spice (especially cayenne) and Cognac for 5-6 hours. Heat some lard and oil in a heavy frying pan, then add 3 large sliced onions and the drained pieces of beef. Sauté together for several minutes, then turn into a casserole. Add 2 tablespoons tomato puree (paste), 1 crushed garlic clove, a sprig of thyme, a small bunch of parsley and a pinch of saffron powder. Season with salt and pepper, cover the cook very gently in a low oven for 3 hours. During the cooking period, add a few tablespoons of either boiling water or, even better, stock. Adjust the seasoning.

Braised beef à la gardiane

Ask the butcher to lard and tie a piece of topside (beef round) weighing about 1.25 kg (2 ¾ lb). Peel and slice 800g (1 ¾ lb) onions. Heat some olive oil in a flameproof casserole and brown the meat in the oil. Add the sliced onions, 5-6 peeled garlic cloves, 2 cloves, a pinch of nutmeg and the same amount of basil, bay, rosemary, savory and thyme. Cover and cook very gently for at least 2 ½ hours. Serve the meat sliced and coated with the cooking liquor.

Braised beef a la mode

Prepare in the same way as braised beef a la bourgeoise, but marinate the meat in red wine instead of white wine.

Braised rib of beef

The cooking method is the same as for braised rump of beef. Ask the butcher to cut a large rib weighing 2-3 kg (4 ½ - 6 ½ lb).

Braised rump of beef

Cut 200 g (7 oz) fat pork or bacon into larding strips. Season with spices, soak in Cognac and use them to lard a piece of beef (cut from the rump) weighing 3 kg (6 ½ lb). Season the meat with salt, pepper and spices, and tie into a neat shape with string. Marinate for 5 hours in either red or white wine with thyme, bay, parsley and 2 crushed garlic cloves. Blanch, cool and tie 2 boned calf's feet. Peel and slice 2 large onions and 2 carrots and heat gently in butter. Crush into small pieces a mixture of 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb) beef bones and veal knuckle bones together with the bones from the calf's feet. Brown in the oven. Place the browned bones and the vegetables in a flameproof casserole or a braising pan. Add the beef, a bouquet garni and the marinate. Cover and simmer gently until the liquid has almost completely reduced. Add 3 tablespoons tomato puree (paste) and enough veal bouillon to cover the meat. Place the covered casserole in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) and cook for about 4 hours until tender. To serve, drain the meat, untie it and glaze in the oven, basting it with the strained cooking liquor. Arrange the meat on a large serving dish and surround with the chosen garnish. Keep warm. Remove the fat from the braising pan, reduce the cooking liquid and pour over the meat.

Oven roast rib of beef

Place the rib in a roasting tin (pan), brush with butter or dripping, and roast uncovered in a preheated oven at 240 °C (450 °F, gas 9) for 15-18 minutes per 450 g (1 lb) plus 15 minutes. To ensure that it is cooked through completely, treat as for spit-roast rib of beef.

Poached rump of beef

Lard the meat or not, as preferred. Tie the meat into a neat shape with string and cook in a large pan using the same method as for a pot-au-feu and the same vegetables. Bring to the boil, skim and season. Simmer gently for 4-5 hours, but do not cover the pan completely. To serve, drain and untie the meat and place it on a large serving dish with the garnish. Serve with the strained cooking liquor, grated horseradish and coarse salt. Cooked in this way, rump provides both a soup and a main course. To provide additional flavour to the soup, add small pieces of fleshy beef bones to the cooking liquid.

Pressed beef

Take 3 kg (6 ½ lb) lightly larded brisket. Prick with a large larding needle and soak the meat in brine for 8-10 days, depending on the season (brine penetrates the meat more quickly in summer). The brine used is the same as that in the recipe for pickled ox tongue. The meat must be completely submerged and it is advisable to use a weighted board to achieve this. Just before cooking, wash the meat in cold water. If more than one mould is used, then cut the meat into pieces to fit them. Cook in water until tender with some carrots, cut into pieces. Place the meat in square moulds, each covered with a small weighted board. When the meat is quite cold, turn it out of the moulds and coat with several layers of meat aspic, coloured reddish brown by adding caramel and red food colouring. This provides the meat with a strong protective coating that retards deterioration. To serve, cut into very thin slices and garnish with fresh parsley.

Salt (corned) beef

This method is mostly used for preparing brisket, but may also be used for flank and chuck. The meat is soaked in brine for 6-8 days in summer and 8-10 days in winter. It is then rinsed to desalt, and cooked in water for 30 minutes per 1 kg (2 ¼ lb). Salt beef is served hot with vegetables that are traditionally associated with it, such as braised red or green cabbage and sauerkraut. It is also used for pot roasting.

Spit-roast rib of beef

Trim the boned rib and tie firmly to hold in shape, covering the exposed meat with thin rashers (slices) of fat bacon. Pierce evenly on to a spit and brush with butter or oil. Cook rapidly at first and then at a moderate heat, allowing 15-18 minutes per 1 kg (2 ¼ lb). Remove from the spit, untie, trim, season with salt and serve with the desired garnish. To ensure the meat is cooked through, remove from the spit just before completely cooked, wrap in foil and leave in a hot oven that has been turned off or in a very low oven for 30 minutes.

BEEFSTEAK MUSHROOM langue-de-boeuf. The common name for Fistulina hepatica, a mushroom that grows on oak and horse chestnut trees in the form of a red fleshy mass with a sticky surface. The thick flesh, which exudes an acidic reddish juice, can be sliced and fried like liver or eaten raw with a green salad. It is cut into thin strips, soaked in salted water, then drained and dressed with chives and a vinaigrette.

BEEF TEA A highly nutritious concentrated meat juice used chiefly in the past as food for invalids. Lean beef is cut into small dice, placed in a hermetically sealed container without any water, and cooked in a bain marie.

BEER An alcoholic beverage obtained by the fermentation of extracts of malted cereals, principally barley, and flavoured with hops. Most countries allow a percentage of maize and rice, but in Germany this practice is forbidden and beers are made solely from barley, malt, hops, yeast, and water. British beer varies from 100% malt to 70% malt plus 30 % unmalted cereals, together with sugar, hops, yeast and water.

Beer is both the most widespread and the oldest alcoholic drink in the world. The first traces of liquid bread based on fermented cereals were found in Mesopotamia. The Mesopotamians and the Egyptian were the greatest beer drinkers of the ancient world and drank their beer warm. It was made from barley bread crumbled in water and fermented in date juice flavoured with cumin, myrtle, ginger and honey.

The Gauls, Celts and Saxons, produced beer which, like earlier fermented drinks, did not contain hops with ingredients such as sorbapples. Hops were introduced for making beer in the 13th century by Bavarian monks.

Manufacturer . The brewer's basic raw material is a cereal rich in starch, the latter does not ferment naturally in the presence of yeast (whereas the sugar contained in apples or grapes can be directly fermented to produce cider and wine). The cereal must therefore be processed in order to obtain a fermentable extract (known to brewers as wort) For the cereal barley, this is usually done by first malting the raw grain and then extracting the soluble sugars with hot water using the natural enzymes of the malt.

Malting. The grain is soaked, allowed to start germinating, then dried under control in a kiln.

Brewing. The malt is ground, then mixed with hot water. Malt enzymes release soluble sugars from the starch, the solution being run off from the insoluble husk. The resulting wort is heating to boiling point and hop flowers are added to give the beer its bitter flavour and hop bouquet. Yeast is added when the liquid is cold.

There are two major types of beer according to the type of yeast used. Traditionally, lager yeast is used at lower temperatures than ale yeast, therefore the fermentation period is longer.

Lager Fermentation. Typically seven days at a temperature of 7-12 °C (45-54 °F), giving a lightly flavoured product whose character is mainly determined by the hops and the malt used. Lager beers dominate the world beer market.

Ale Fermentation Typically three days at a temperature of 18-25 °C (64-77 °F), giving more fruity beers in which the flavour is more directly influenced by the fermentation process. In continental Europe these are special beers, Belgian Trappist beers and brown beer, whereas in Britain they are the very popular ales. In very dark beers, such as stouts, the use of roasted cereals contributes significantly to the flavour as well as to the colour.

After fermentation the beer is placed in a cool cellar, where it is allowed to mature. The maturation period can vary from a few days to several months, depending on the nature and strength of the beer. Finally, it is clarified before being bottled, canned or racked into barrels. Clarification is commonly done by a combination of settling and filtration. In Britain, however, settled beer is traditionally racked directly into casks, final clarification being achieved by addition of fining directly into the cask followed by a period of stillage.

Colour and content. The colour is not related to the length of fermentation, degree of processing or alcoholic strength, but to the degree to which the malt is heated during kilning. The heating produces caramel, which is extracted from the malt and eventually colours the beer brown. Highly kilned malt gives English stout, Belgian Chimay and Munich lagers their particular flavours. Pale beers (porter and ale, Czech Pilsner and German Dortmund) are distinguished by their bitter flavour.

Beer around the world Beer is the drink of the people. Industrially produced beer for mass consumption, with the emphasis on quenching thirst rather than flavour, is the mainstream in many countries, including France.

The countries that show most interest in beer making as an art are Germany, the Czech Republic and Belgium. But from the late 1970's there has been a renaissance of interest in beer, reflected in the real ale campaign in Britain.

Germany (with its Munich Beer Festival in October and its custom of drinking beer all the year round and at every opportunity) has as many breweries as the rest of Europe put together, while Bavaria has the world's largest hop industry. The beer is unpasteurized (swift consumption is guaranteed) which means it is bottled not canned—they are the experts in bottle conditioning the beer, which usually tastes rather bitter. Its production is very widespread but the most famous German beers come from Bremen, Cologne, Dortmund and Munich (Spaten, Kapuziner and Lowenbrau). Also worthy of mention are Berliner Weisse, a white beer from Berlin which is drunk with raspberry syrup or lemon, and smoked Bamberg beer.

Belgium is the country of origin of the legendary Gambrinus, who is said to have invented brewing and Belgian beers are noteworthy for their originality, Gueuze, which is strongly flavoured and similar to Mort Subite (considered to be one of the best), Krick (red beer with cherries) and Roodenbach (amber coloured, with a sharp flavour) and Chimay and Jumet brewed in abbeys. Cooking with beer is especially popular here.

Czech Pilsner is pale, hoppy beer with a flowery bouquet and dryness of palate that is initiated by hops or pilsner types of beer all over the world. It is labelled pilsner Urquell (original source of Pils) when exported. It is a land of breweries, making the full range (including the Czech Budweis).

Traditional pubs, selling task conditioned beer, are at the heart of British beer drinking, and pub ownership by the breweries influences sales. The last decades of the 20th century saw new smaller breweries appearing. Among English beers, brown and pale Whitbread are typical, the latter being suitable as an aperitif. Pale ale refreshing as well as being good for cooking. Scottish Gordon is prepared only at Christmas, whereas the dark and sweet Scotch ale is drunk all year round. Irish Guinness is a famous strong beer very dark, dry and bitter.

France makes some de lux beers, not generally drunk with meals, include Clampaneulle, Kanterbrau, Mutzig and Meuse, corresponding to the two main brewing regions of France, the north and Alsace. Special French beers are finer (such as Kronenbourg and Ancre Old Lager).

Danish and Dutch beers are light yet quiet bitter (for example, Carlsberg and Heineken).

Russia is a large beer consumer, while Australia both consumes a great deal of cold beer from tinnies and stubbies (cans and polystyrene cooling tubes) and exports it. The US makes the world's biggest selling brand in Budweiser (transplanting the name in 1856 to St. Louis, Missouri) American beer is also made from other grains than barley, corn is widespread as an adjunct. However the last quarter of the 20th century saw many microbreweries appear, while a city like Milwaukee has numerous breweries, beer festivals and a critical public. In the United States beers are very light, delicately flavoured with just a hint of bitterness. They are drunk very cold.

India and the East have also turned to beer drinking. The Tiger beer of Singapore is known abroad, Japan has Kirin, the biggest brewer outside the US., while San Miguel is another big brewer in the Philippines.

Consumption. There are three characteristic features of any beer, its bitterness (which should never reach acidity), produced by hops and tannin, its clarity, proving that it has been well produced and properly clarified, and finally its head, which must be well formed and stable.

Beer is served with meals and as a refreshment. It is also used in the preparation of drinks and various cooked dishes (soups, fish- particularly carp- stews and carbonnades), to which it adds smoothness and a slight bitterness. It can also accompany some cheeses successfully (such as Gouda and Maroilles) and is used instead of yeast in the preparation of pancakes and fritters.

Lager should be served at 7-9°C (45-48°F), dark beer is consumed at room temperature. Bottles should be stored upright, once open, beer goes flat very quickly.

Ballon glasses and tumblers are suitable for normal beers. Very frothy beers are best served in tulip or tall beer glasses. In Germany stone tankards are used as they keep the beer cool. Pewter tankards are favoured by connoisseurs of English beer.

Beer is poured by directing the flow to the bottom of the glass to form a layer of froth, then along the side of the glass to prevent too much froth being formed, and finally righting the glass to produce the head.

RECIPES

Beer soup

Pour 2 litres (3 ½ pints, 9 cups) chicken stock into a saucepan with 300 ml (1.2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) German beer and 250 g (9 oz) stale bread with the crust removed. Season with salt and pepper, cover and cook very gently for 30 minutes. Puree in a blender and then add a little grated nutmeg and 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) single (light) cream. Check the seasoning and serve scalding hot.

Carp cooked in beer

Prepare a carp weighing about 2 kg (4 ½ lb) and carefully remove the roe. Season with salt and pepper inside and out. Chop 150 g (5 oz) onions and fry them gently in butter in a covered pan until transparent. Dice 25 g (1 oz) celery. Butter an ovenproof dish. Place the onions, gingerbread and celery in the bottom and arrange the carp on top, adding a bouquet garni and sufficient, Munich-type German beer to almost cover the fish. Cook in a preheated oven at about 170 °C (325 °F, gas 3) for 30 minutes. In the meantime, poach the roe in a little stock, then drain and slice thinly. Remove the carp from the oven, arrange on a serving dish with the slices of roe and keep warm. Reduce the cooking stock by one third, strain and add butter. Serve in a sauce boat with the carp.

Chicken cooked in beer

Cut a 1.25 kg (2 ¾ lb) chicken into pieces and brown in butter on all sides in a flameproof casserole. Add 2 chopped shallots and cook until brown. Pour 3 tablespoons gin on to the chicken pieces and set alight. Then add 400 ml (14 fl oz. 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ cups) Alsatian beer, 3 tablespoons cr me fraiche, a bouquet garni, salt and a little cayenne. Cover and allow to simmer. Chop 225 g (8 oz) cleaned mushrooms and add to the casserole. Cook for about 45 minutes, then drain the chicken pieces, arrange on the serving dish and keep warm. Remove the bouquet garni from the casserole, add 3 tablespoons cr me fraiche and reduce by half. Mix an egg yolk with a little of the sauce, add to the casserole and stir well. Pour the sauce over the chicken pieces, sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve very hot with steamed new potatoes.

BEET, BEETROOT Beet includes any of several varieties of a plant with a fleshy root. Some are cultivated for the sugar industry and distilling (sugar beet), others for fodder (mangel wurzed). The beetroot (beet) with its fine dark red flesh, is used as a vegetable and as a food colouring. Beetroot was eaten in antiquity and was described in 1600 by Olivier de Serres, who was self-appointed publicist of newly imported products in France, as a very red, rather fat root with leaves like Swiss chard, all of which is good to eat. Nowadays, the leaves are rarely eaten, but they can nevertheless be prepared like spinach and are commonly used in soups in eastern Europe.

Beetroot can be eaten raw (grated) but is usually cooked and served cold (as an hors oeuvre or in salads). It is occasionally served hot in traditional dishes, particularly with game or in soups, and is more widely used in contemporary recipes, both hot and cold, including mixed vegetables dishes and risottos. Beetroot is especially characteristic of Flemish and Slav cuisine.

The long rooted varieties (rouge voir des vertus and rouge crapaudine, which are both of good quality) have more flavour and are sweeter than the round varieties (red globe and dark red Egyptian), but the latter are more widely cultivated. They are harvested in Europe from the end of June to the first frosts. The roots are stored in silos or cellars and are mostly marketed in autumn and winter. Often sold cooked, they can also be bought raw for cooking at home (baked in the oven or boiled in salted water.).

BEIGLI

This takes at least 2 hours. Very small beetroots are also preserved in vinegar (especially in Germany, where they are served with boiled meat) and are used for making pickles.

RECIPES

Beetroot a la lyonnaise

Parboil some beetroot (beet) in salted water, peel and slice. Cook until tender in butter with thinly sliced onions. Add a little thickened brown stock or bouillon to which 10 g ($\frac{1}{3}$ oz., 1 teaspoon) or softened butter has been added. Heat through and serve.

Beetroot salad a alsacienne

Peel some baked beetroot (beet) and slice or dice. Make a vinaigrette dressing with mustard and add some finely chopped shallots and herbs. Pour over the beetroot and marinate for 1 hour. Just before serving, garnish with slices of saveloy.

Braised beetroot with cream

Parboil some beetroot (beet) in salted water, peel and slice. Cook in a little butter in a covered pan until tender. Remove the beetroot and keep hot. Boil some cream, add to the cooking liquor and reduce to half its volume, seasoning with salt, and pepper. Remove from the heat and stir in 25 g (1 oz. 1 tablespoon) butter. Pour this sauce over the beetroot slices.

Cold beetroot soup

Wash thoroughly 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) small raw beetroots (beets), cook gently in salted water, then add the juice of 1 lemon and allow to cool. Cook 3-4 egg whites in a small flat-bottomed dish in a bain marie. Wash and chop a few spring onions (scallions), including the stems. Peel the cold beetroot and slice into thin strips. Add with the diced egg whites, 2 diced Russian gherkins and the chopped onions to the liquid in which the beetroot was cooked, together with a generous pinch of sugar and 150-200 ml (5-7 fl oz, 2/3 –3/4 cup) crème fraîche. Stir well and place in the refrigerator. Just before serving sprinkle chopped parsley over the soup.

Scandinavian beetroot salad

Peel some baked beetroot (beet) and cut into cubes. Peel and slice some onions and separate the rings. Hard boil (hard cook) some eggs and cut into quarters. Cut some sweet smoked or unsmoked herring (a speciality of Scandinavia) into pieces. Sprinkle the beetroot with highly seasoned vinaigrette and place in a salad bowl. Garnish with the herrings, hard-boiled eggs and onions, and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

BEIGLI An item of Hungarian pattscarie made from a high brioche dough rolled around a filling of almonds, walnuts or poppy seeds. It is made particularly for the festivals of Christmas and Eastern.

BELLE-HELENE In about 1865 several chefs from the restaurants of the Grands Boulevards of Paris started to use the title of this famous operetta by Offenbach to name several different recipes.

Grilled tournedos broiled filet magnons) Belle Helene are garnished with crisp potato straws, springs of watercress, and artichoke hearts filled with bearnaise sauce. Sauteed chicken supremes Belle Helene are arranged on croquettes of asparagus tips crowned with a slice of truffle. Large cuts of meat Belle-Helene are surrounded with chopped tomatoes, fresh green peas with butter, glazed carrots and potato croquettes.

Belle-Helene is also the name of a cold dessert consisting of fruit (usually pears) poached in syrup, cooled, drained, served on vanilla ice cream, and coated with hot chocolate sauce (the latter may be served separately in sauceboat if desired).

BELLET An AOC wine from Nice, which comes from the hillsides above the Var valley. The small vineyard produces delicate red wines, light roses and definite whites with a fresh bouquet. The reds and roses are made from Polle and Braquet grapes and the whites are made principally from the Rolle, Roussanne, Clairette and Chardonnay, but other varieties can be included in the wines.

BELLEVUE, EN The French term applied to cold preparations of shellfish, fish or poultry glazed with aspic jelly. For lobster, the flesh is cut into medallions, which are garnished, glazed and arranged in the shell. For small birds (the woodcock, quail and thrush), the animal is boned, stuffed, poached in game, stock, cooled, coated in a brown chaud-froid sauce, garnished and glazed with aspic. The name would appear to come from the Chateau de Belleville, owned by Madame de Pompadour, who used to prepare attractive dishes to stimulate the appetite of Louis XV.

RECIPES

Glazed salmon en bellevue

Prepare and poach the salmon whole in a concentrated fish stock. Allow to cool completely in the cooking liquor, then drain. Remove the skin from both sides and dry the fish gently with paper towels. Clarify the stock to make an aspic jelly and glaze the salmon with several coats, allowing each coat to set in the refrigerator before applying the next. Coat the bottom of the serving dish with a thin layer of aspic and lay the glazed salmon on top. Garnish with diced or cut shapes aspic and keep in a cool place until ready to serve.

BEL PAESE One of Italy's best known cheeses, enjoyed world wide and manufactured in Lombardy since 1906. Made from cow's milk (45% fat content), it is creamy and mild, an uncooked pressed cheese, creamy yellow in colour, with a washed crust, it is usually wrapped in foil in small rounds, 20 cm (8 in) in diameter. Meaning beautiful country it was named by its creator, Egidio Galbani, after a children's book, whose author's portrait (along with a map of Italy, appears on the wrapping in Europe).

Benedictine An amber coloured herby French liqueur used primarily as a digestive. Don Bernardo Vincelli, an Italian Benedictine monk from the old Abbey of Fecamp, is credited with first producing it. The recipe was discovered in 1863 by a local merchant, Alexandre Le Grand, in some family archives. He perfected the formula and began selling the liqueur, which was immediately successful. As a homage to the monks, he called it Benedictine and printed D.O.M. (Deo Optimo Maximo, To God, most good, most great) the motto of the Benedictines, on the bottle.

Benedictine is based on 27 different plants and spices, which are incorporated in what is still a secret formula at the distillery at Fecamp in Normandy. B and B (Benedictine and Brandy) is a compounded version of the liqueur.

BENEDICTINE, A LA The French term applied to several dishes using either a puree of salt cod and potato, or salt cod pounded with garlic, oil and cream. Cod is traditionally eaten during Lent, hence the allusion to the Benedictine monks. Many of these dishes can be enriched with truffles.

RECIPES

Bouchees a la benedictine

Add diced truffle to a puree of salt cod with oil and cream. Use to fill small cooked puff pastry bouchee cases. Garnish each bouchee with a slice of truffle. Heat through in a hot oven.

Salt cod a la benedictine

Soak 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) salt cod in cold water to completely remove the salt. Poach the fish very gently in water without allowing it to boil. Boil 450 g (1 lb) potatoes in water. Drain the cod, remove the skin and bones, and dry in the oven for a few minutes. Drain the potatoes. Pound the cod with the potatoes in a mortar, then gradually work in 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup) olive oil and 300 ml (½ pint, 1 ¼ cups) milk. (A blender or food processor may be used, but for no longer than strictly necessary, otherwise the starch in the potatoes will agglutinate). Spread the mixture in a buttered gratin dish and smooth the surface. Sprinkle with melted butter and brown in the oven.

Soft boiled or poached eggs a la

Benedictine

Add white or black truffles to salt cod a la benedictine. Prepare soft-boiled (soft-cooked) or poached eggs. Shape the puree in a dome, arrange a circle of eggs around the dome and cover with a cream sauce.

BERCHOUX, JOSEPH French solicitor (born Saint Symphorien-de Lay, 1768, died Marcigny, 1839). His name survives as the author of a long poem in four cantos entitled Gastronomie ou l'Homme des champs a table, published in 1801. This lively composition was very popular in the Directory period, following the Reign of Terror, during which the French rediscovered the joy of good food in the first canto, Histoire de la cuisine des Anciens Berchoux, describes, in brisk alexandrine verse, such subjects as the death of Vatel and Spartan gruel. In the following cantos, Le Premier Service Le Second Service and Le Dessert, he sings the praises of good simple cooking. His philosophy is summed up in the following lines. A poem was never worth as much as a dinner and Nothing must disturb an honest man while he dines. It was he who introduced the word gastronomic to the French language.

RECIPE

Salmon trout Berchoux

Stuff a 2 kg (4 ½ lb) salmon trout with a creamy pike forcemeat with chopped truffles. Place the trout in a buttered ovenproof dish on a bed consisting of a chopped carrot, a medium sized chopped onion (lightly fried in butter) a good handful of mushroom trimmings and a bouquet garni. Add fish stock with white wine until it comes halfway up the trout. Season with salt and pepper, cover, place in a preheated oven at 180 °C (359 °F, gas 4) and cook for about 40 minutes, basting frequently until the fish is just cooked. Remove the central portion of skin and the dark parts of the flesh. Strain the cooking liquor, pour a few tablespoons of this liquor over the trout and glaze slightly in the oven.

Prepare the garnish 8 small pastry barquettes filled with soft carp roe and coated with normande sauce, 8 small croquettes made of diced lobster, mushrooms, and truffles bound with a thin veloute sauce, and 8 very small artichoke hearts, partly cooked in white stock, sweated in butter, filled with a salpicon of truffles bound with cream, sprinkled with Parmesan, and browned in the oven. Add 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) veloute fish sauce to the remaining cooking liquor and reduce over a high heat, gradually adding 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) double (heavy) cream to the sauce. Add butter and ¼ cup) softened butter, finally, add the chopped parsley, salt and pepper. This sauce is a suitable accompaniment to poached fish.

Brill a la Bercy

Prepare a brill weighing about 800 g (1 ¾ lb), making an incision along the middle of the dark side of the fish and gently loosening the fillets. Season with salt and pepper inside and out. Butter a flameproof dish, sprinkle with chopped shallots and parsley and lay the brill on top. Add 7 tablespoons dry white wine and the same quantity of fish stock. Dot with 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) butter. Start cooking on top of the stove, then transfer to a preheated oven at the stove, then transfer to a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) and cook for 15 minutes, basting frequently. Then place the dish under the grill (broiler) to glaze the fish. Finally sprinkle with a dash of lemon juice and chopped parsley. The fish stock may be replaced by dry white wine diluted with the juice of half a lemon and water.

Calves liver a la Bercy

Toss some slices of calves liver in seasoned flour and grill (broil). Serve with Bercy butter.

Calves kidneys a la Bercy

Cut cleaned calves kidneys crossways into slices 1 cm (1/2 in) thick and brush with melted butter. Season with salt and pepper and dip in white bread crumbs. Grill (broil) quickly and serve with Bercy butter. The fish may be marinated in a little olive oil with salt, pepper and chopped parsley before cooking.

Sole Bercy

Butter an ovenproof dish and sprinkle with chopped shallots and parsley. Place the prepared sole in the dish, add 2 tablespoons dry white wine and a dash of lemon juice and dot with 15 g (1/2 oz, 1 tablespoon) butter. Cook in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425 °F, gas 7) for 15 minutes basting the fish several times in order to glaze it.

BERGAMOT A small yellow sour citrus fruit similar to the orange, mostly cultivated in Calabria

(Italy). The rind contains an essential oil used in perfumery (the basis for eau-de-cologne) confectionery and Earl Grey tea. The zest is used in patisserie.

Bergamot is also the French name of a small, square, honey-coloured barley sugar, flavoured with natural bergamot essence, which has been a speciality of the town of Nancy since 1850. There is also a variety of pear called bergamot, it is almost round with a yellowish skin and very sweet, fragrant, juicy flesh.

A family of herbs native to North America and related to mint is also known as bergamot. One of them was used by the American Indians to make Oswego tea, and any of them can flavour iced drinks. The flavour is similar to that of the citrus fruit.

BERGERAC Wine from the Dordogne area of south-western France. This wine growing region, situated in the district of Bergerac, has been famous since the Middle Ages for the quality of its white wines. Now its red wines are equally important while the rose wines are appreciated locally.

Bergerac blanc, which may be a crisp white wine or a full bodied slightly sweet one, is made from the Sauvignon, Semillon and Muscadelle grapes. The red wines are made from the Bordeaux grapes Cabernet Sauvignon, Cabernet Franc, Malbec and Merlot. The reds from the left-bank vineyards of the Dordogne are more full-bodied than those on the right, where the wines are more supple. All are subject to controls, for the AOC Bergerac and Cote de Bergerac.

BERLINGOT A pyramid-shaped French boiled sweet, usually flavoured with peppermint, with alternating clear and opaque stripes (called a humbug in Britain). Some authorities say that it was created in the Middle Ages, but its present formula was perfected under Louis XVI by a certain Madame Couet, who handed it down to her descendants. In 1851, at Carpentras, Gustave Esseyric revived the recipe using peppermint cultivated in Vaucluse. This peppermint gives a particular flavour to the berlingots which are produced in this town, using sugar syrups left over from the preparation of crystallized (candied) fruit. Nantes (since 1780) Saint-Quentin and Caen are also famous for their berlingots. Although most are flavoured with peppermint, fruit flavoured mixtures are also used.

Berlingots are manufactured by wrapping a sausage shape of boiled, flavoured and coloured sugar in bands of transparent sugar alternating with bands of beaten sugar. The sausage is then stretched and shaped in a berlingotiere (a rotating machine with four blades) or a ring press.

Some say the name is derived from the Italian berlingozzo (a very sweet cake), others that it comes from the Provencal berlingan (knucklebone). By extension, the word is also used (in France) for a pyramid shaped cardboard container for milk.

BERNIS, PIERRE DE French diplomat (born Saint-Marcel d' Ardeche, 1715, died Rome, 1794) A protégé of Madame de Pompadour, he was elected to the Academic protego of Madame de Pompadour, he was elected to the Academic Française at the age of 29 for his elegant verse, he then became a cardinal and ambassador, first to Venice, then to Rome at the Holy see. In all these posts, he proved himself to be a remarkable ambassador of French cuisine and his table was known as the best inn in France. Chefs have given his name to serious egg dishes using asparagus.

RECIPE

Cold eggs in white chaud-froid sauce and garnish with truffles. Line a dish with chicken mousse. Arrange the eggs on the mousse, separated by bunches of green asparagus tips. Coat with a light covering of half set aspic.

BERNY A French method of preparing croquette potatoes, which are coated in chopped almonds, then fried. Berny garnish consists of small tarts filled with lentil puree and served with game.

BERRICHONNE, A LA The adjective for regional dishes from Berry. Large joints of meat garnished a la herrichoune are served with braised green cabbage (stuffed or plain), poached chestnuts, small glazed onions and slices of lean bacon, the meat juice is slightly thickened. Chicken fricassee a la berrichonne is served with new carrots, potatoes a la berrichonne are cooked with onions and fat bacon.

RECIPES

Chicken fricassee a la beerichonne

Scrape some new carrots and fry in butter with a small onion, then drain. Using the same butter, brown a chicken cut up into portions. Add 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) boiling water or clear chicken stock, then the carrots, a bouquet garni, salt and pepper. Cover and cook gently for 30 minutes. Drain the chicken and keep warm. Mix together 2 egg yolks, a pinch of salt, 2 tablespoons cream and 1 tablespoon vinegar and add to the cooking liquor, heat but do not allow to boil. Roll the chicken pieces in the sauce and serve very hot.

Potatoes a la berrichonne

Chop 2 onions. Cut 100 g (4 oz) streaky bacon into small strips. Brown the onions and bacon in a flameproof casserole, then add 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) very small potatoes and brown slightly. Pour in just enough stock to cover, add a bouquet garni, salt and pepper, then cover and cook gently for 20-25 minutes (test the potatoes with a fork to check they are cooked.) Serve sprinkled with hopped parsley.

BERRY The gastronomy of this old French province (now called Limousin) in the Loire valley is influenced by pig, poultry and sheep farming. This is well illustrated in its typical meat dishes: seven hour braised leg of lamb, saupiquet, sagourne, Easter pate made from pork and hard boiled (hard-cooked) eggs, sanguette, black roast turkey, and chicken en barbouille (a red wine sauce thickened with blood). Cuisine a la berrichonne is typified by the tasty, sometimes rustic, simplicity of its slow-cooked dishes. Soups and stews (with fritons known as gringnaudes) play an important role, together with the accompanying vegetables, tartoufes (potatoes) and pumpkin (also used in a cake). Chestnuts and field mushrooms have inspired recipes for carp (steamed) lamprey and salmon (braised).

One of the characteristics of this wine growing region, which produces AOC wines (such as Reuilly, Chateumeillant, Sancerre, Quincy and Menetou Salon) and rose wines, is the use of wine in cooking, eggs in red wine, and meat and fish stews cooked with wine. Cheeses are made mostly from goat's milk (Valencay, Pouligny, Chavignol, Levroux, Sellessu-Cher) Fruit and nut trees are grown cherry (for kirsch), pear, walnut and hazelnut and fruit is used in sweet desserts (see sanclay) and fritters. Lichouneries (confectionery shops) sell forestines from Bourges (with hazelnuts), marzipan, barley sugar and croquets.

BERRY, Any small fleshy stoneless (pitless) fruit containing one or more seeds. Berries occur singly, in bunches (such as grape and redcurrant) or in clusters (elderberry) Wild berries may be eaten raw or cooked.

BERYX Fish of the Berycidate family, reddish orange in colour and with delicious flesh. The long beryx is about 35 cm (14 in) in length., while the longer common beryx has a thicker body and grows up to 40 cm (16 in) long. They are fished 600 metres (1,970 ft) deep in the North Atlantic from Ireland to Norway, and are sold under the name of pink bream, usually as fillets.

BETISE A mint flavoured boiled sweet (candy) manufactured in France since 1850. Although the Afchain company Cambrai has long claimed to be sole inventor of betises, their exact origin is not known. Legend has it that a clumsy apprentice poured the ingredients (sugar, glucose and mint) carelessly, but perhaps it was a flash of genius on the part of a confectioner who had the idea of blowing air into the sugar. The microscopic air bubbles incorporated into the hot boiled sugar make the sweet light and opaque. Bêtises remain a speciality of Cambrai but are imitated by the sottises made in Valenciennes.

BEURRE BLANC A classic French sauce made with reduce vinegar and shallots to which butter is added, called white butter sauce in English. It is the standard accompaniment to pike and shad. The Nams region and Anjou both claim to be its birth place. It is said that a chef from Nantes called Clemence longot to include the eggs when attempting to make a bearnaise sauce for a pike for the Marquis de Goulaine. It was nevertheless a success and Clemence subsequently opened a restaurant at La Chebeutte near Nantes. This is where Mere Michel learned the secret of beurre blanc, before opening her famous restaurant in the Rue Rennequin in Paris. Curiousky praised the beurre blanc of La Poissonniere, a fish restaurant near Angers.

RECIPE

Beurre blanc

Put 5-6 chopped shallots in a saucepan with 250 ml (8 fl. oz 1 cup) wine vinegar, 325 ml (11 fl. oz 1 ½ cups) fish stocks and ground pepper, reduce by two thirds, Cut 225 g (8 oz. 1 cup) very cold butter (preferably slightly stalted) into small pieces. Remove the pan from the heat and add all but one piece of the butter all at once, beating briskly with a whisk until smooth. Finally, add the last piece of butter and mix it in gently, stirring and turning the pan so that the sauce is not frothy. Season with salt and pepper. Pour the sauce into a warmed sauceboat and place in a lukewarm bain marie until required for serving.

The emulsion can be stabilized by adding 1 tablespoon double (heavy) cream-this is Nantes butter (berre nantais)

BEURRE MANIE A mixture of butter and flour used as a thickening for soups, sauces, stews and other liquors towards the end of the cooking time. Equal quantities of butter and flour are used to make the paste. Soften the butter, then work in the flour with a fork or by creaming the mixture until the paste is smooth. Add small knobs of the simmering liquid, whisking or stirring vigorously, and allow each knob to melt before adding another. Bring to the boil, still whisking or stirring, and simmer for at least 3 minutes to cook the flour. Large quantities of beurre manie can be made in a food processor and frozen in small lumps, ready for whisking straight from the freezer into boiling liquid.

BHAJI A spicy Indian vegetable fritter consisting of one or more vegetables, such as onion, potato, aubergine (eggplant) and/or cauliflower, in a chickpea flour batter.

BIARROTE, A LA A French garnish for small cuts of meat, which are arranged on a vase of potato galettes (prepared as for duchess potatoes) and surrounded by a ring of grilled (broiled) cep mushrooms. This name refers to the resort of visits by the emperor Napoleon III and the empress Eugenie. It is also applied to a recipe for sauteed chicken in white wine, which may also be garnished with ceps.

RECIPE

Sauteed chicken a la biarrote

Cut a 1.4 kg (3 lb) chicken into pieces and saute until brown on all sides and cooked through. Deglaze with 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) dry or medium white wine. Reduce the liquid, then add 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) tomato sauce and a small crushed garlic clove. Using a separate pan, saute 100 g (4 oz. 2 cups) ceps, 100 g (4 oz. ¾ cup) diced potatoes and 1 diced aubergine (eggplant) in olive oil. Fry a thinly sliced onion, separating the rings. Arrange the chicken in a heated serving dish, coat with the sauce and arrange the garnish in bouquets around it.

BIB a coastal fish (family Gadidae) similar to cod (but less good), commonly found in the English Channel and the Bay of Biscay. Shaped like an elongated triangle, with a copper coloured back and silvery sides and belly. It measures 20-30 cm (8-12 in) and weighs about 200 g (7 oz). It has a short barbel on the lower jaw, long thin pelvic fins, and two abdominal fins connected by a membrane. The flesh, although lean, is rather tasteless and full of bones and deteriorates rapidly. Bib must therefore be prepared and eaten as soon as it is caught. It is cooked like cod (but is mostly used for fish meal).

BICARBONATE OF SODA (BAKING SODA) An alkaline powder used in medicine as an antacid. In former times bicarbonate of soda was used to soften water for cooking vegetables, such as dried beans, and to preserve the colour of green vegetables. This has been rejected, as it results in the destruction of vitamins.

Bicarbonate of soda is one of the main ingredients of raising (leavening) agents, it improves the action of baking powder in many commercial preparations such as cake mixes and processed flour. It is used as a raising agent in some non-yeast breads, such as soda bread, and certain cakes. Combined with cream of tartar, it is the traditional raising agent for British Scones.

BIERWURST A large cured, German pork and beef sausage, flavoured with garlic, and sliced as an accompaniment to beer, hence its name. It is always eaten cold and has a peppery taste. Bierschinkenmoustr includes small chunks of ham.

BIGNON, LOUIS French restaurateur (born Herisson 1816, died Macan 1906) He began his career in Paris as a waiter at the Café d'Orsay, then moved to the Café and Foy, which he acquired and passed on to his brother in 1847. He then took over the management of the Café Riche, redecorated the restaurant, and made it one of the best in Paris. His activities also extended into viticulture and agriculture. He was a founder member of the Société des Agriculteurs de France and during the World Fairs from 1862 to 1880) he won the highest prizes for various agricultural products, wines and foods. He became a knight of the order of the Légion d'honneur in 1868 and an officer in 1878, and was the first restaurant owner to wear the rosette of the Légion d'honneur.

BIGOS The Polish national dish, also called hunter stew, made of sauerkraut and meat simmered for a long time. Traditionally it was stored in wooden casks or stoneware pots, taken travelling (and hunting) and reheated many times, which improved the flavour. Large Polish boiling sausage is also cut up and added to the stew, which often includes wild mushrooms. Traditionally bigos preceded the soup course. It may be prepared with just one type of meat or with any mixture of duck, boiled beef, ham, mutton, pickled pork or even venison, and there are many variations.

RECIPE

Bigos

Rinse 4 kgs (9 lb) sauerkraut and drain it well, Peel core and dice 4 dessert apples, sprinkling the pieces with lemon juice, and add to the sauerkraut with 2 large chopped onions. Melt 4 tablespoons lard in a flameproof casserole and cover with a fairly thick layer of sauerkraut, then add a layer of diced meat. Continue filling the pot with alternate layers of meat and sauerkraut, finishing with sauerkraut and adding a little lard every now and then. Pour in enough stock to cover the sauerkraut. Cover the pot and cook in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for 2-3 hours. Make a white roux and add some of the cooking liquor. Pour this sauce over the bigos and cook for a further 30 minutes.

BILBERRY myrtille A low, healthland shrub of the genus Vaccinium native to northern regions of Europe, America and Asia. Related to the blueberry, it is also known as whortleberry. Its small purplishblue berries have a slightly acid flavour, but they can be eaten uncooked, with sugar and cream. However, bilberries are usually used for making tarts, ices and sorbets, as well as compotes, jams, jellies, syrups and liqueurs. They freeze well.

RECIPES

Bilberry flan

Make some shortcrust pastry (basic pie dough) with 200 g (7 oz. 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, 100 g (4 oz. $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) butter cut into pieces, a pinch of salt, 1 tablespoon caster (superfine) sugar and 3 tablespoons cold water (see short pastry). Form into a ball and leave it to stand for 2 hours.

Wash and dry 300 g (11 oz. 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ cups) fresh bilberries (or use frozen fruit). Prepare a syrup with 100 g (4 oz. $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) sugar and 250 ml (8ft oz. 1 cup) water. Simmer for 5 minutes, then add the bilberry as and leave to soak for 5 minutes. Return to a gentle heat and cook for 8 minutes until all the syrup is absorbed.

Roll out the pastry and line a buttered 23 cm (9 in) flan tin (pie pan). Line with greaseproof (wax) paper, sprinkle with baking beans and bake blind in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for 12 minutes. Remove the paper and beans, and continue cooking for a further 6-7 minutes until the flan base is golden. Leave until lukewarm before unmoulding.

Fill the cold pastry case with the bilberries, smoothing the top. Warm together 2 tablespoons apricot puree and 1 teaspoon water, sieve and coat the bilberries with the glaze. Leave until cold.

Prepare a Chantilly cream by whipping 7 tablespoons double (heavy) cream with 1 tablespoon chilled milk, 1 teaspoon vanilla sugar and 1 tablespoon icing (confectioner's) sugar. Using a piping (pastry) bag fitted with a fluted nozzle, pipe the cream on top of the tart and decorate with a few sugared violets, if wished.

Bilberry jam

Stalk and wash the berries briefly, then dry and weigh them. Put them into a preserving pan with 100 ml (4 fl oz, $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) water per 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) berries. Bring to the boil, skim and simmer for about 10 minutes. Then add a weight of sugar equal to the weight of the fruit. Bring back to the boil, skim again, then leave to cook for about 15 minutes, stirring, regularly. Pot and seal in the usual way.

BILLY BY A French mussed soup, also called bilibi, said to have been created by Barthe, the chef of Maxim', for a regular customer called Billy, who adored muscles. Billy by is made of mussels cooked in white wine with onions, parsley, celery and fish stock. The soup is served hot or ice-cold with double (heavy) cream, the muscles and grated Parmesan cheese being served separately. Other sources claim that billy by was invented in Normandy, after the Normandy landings, when a farewell dinner was given to an American officer called Bill. So it was called Billy, bye bye, which degenerated to billy by.

BIRDS Many varieties of wild and domesticated birds are used in cookery. The consumption of small wild birds has declined as protection orders become more stringent everywhere. However, a wide variety of birds for the pot is still plentiful in Spain. In France all birds smaller than the thrush are protected, except for larks, ortolans and sparrows in some regions. In times past, however, bird catcher supplied the gourmand with many small birds tits, warblers, curlews, jays, sandpipers, robins, wagtails and sparrow (whose delicate meat was reserved for the sick and convalescent) was much sought after for soup or, in England, for pies. The wild birds most esteemed were whole roast heron, scoter duck and plover roasted with hot pepper, roast partridge and turtle doves served with cinnamon or ginger sauce and turtle dove pate.

As a general rule, the only birds to escape the slaughter were nightingales and wrens. The rook

The rearing and consumption of domestic poultry, on the other hand, continues to expand. Quail rearing has to some extent filled the gap left by the banning of other wild birds.

BIRDSEYE, CLARENCE American businessman and inventor, father of the frozen food industry (born New York, 1886, died New York, 1956) During a journey to Labrador in 1920 he observed that fish caught by the Eskimos and exposed to the air froze rapidly and thus remained edible for several months. On his return to the United States, Birdseye succeeded in perfecting a mechanical process for ultra-rapid freezing. In 1924 he formed a company to produce and distribute these frozen products, but the economic crisis forced him to sell his process and name to a food company. The name of this pioneer of cold storage, split into Bird's Eye, became an international trade name for deep frozen food.

BIRD-S FOOT TREFOIL A common leguminous plant of North America and Europe, known in France as lotier, melilot, trefle de cheval or mirlirot, according to the species. When dried, the leaves flowers and stems impart a very pleasant smell and can be used to flavour marinades. In some areas it is used to flavour rabbit, which is stuffed with the leaves and flowers after it has been cleaned. In Switzerland melilot is used to make herbal tea. Some cheeses (notably the German cow's milk cheese Schazieger and curd cheeses) are flavoured with the yellow flowers of bird's foot trefoil.

BIRDS NESTS Nest built by the salangane, a type of Chinese swallow, in the Philippines and New Guinea and used in traditional Chinese cookery to make bird's nest soup. Just before the breeding season, the birds feed on gelatinous seaweed, which makes their salivary glands secrete a thick whitish glutinous saliva with which they construct their nests. After being soaked in water the nests become transparent and gelatinous, giving the soup its characteristic odour and sticky texture. The nests may also be used in stews and as an ingredient in certain garnishes. The first European travelers to discover them, at the beginning of the 17th century, believed that they consisted of a mixture of lime and sea foam, or else the sap of trees. It was the French naturalist Buffon who established their true composition, after heating an eye witness account of the nests from the explorer Poivre.

BIREWECK An Alsatian cake, also called pain de fruits (fruit loaf) It is made from leavened dough flavoured with kirsch and mixed with fresh, dried and crystallized (candied) fruit. Usually shaped into small balls, it can also be made in one large piece and sold in slices.

RECIPE

Bireweek

Cook 500 g (18 oz) pears, 250 g (9 oz) apples, 250 g (9 oz) peaches, 250 g (9 oz) dried figs and 250 g (9 oz) prunes in a little water, but do not allow them to become pulpy. Mix 1 kg (2 ¼ lb, 9 cups) sifted plain (all-purpose) flour and 25 g (1 oz, 4 packets) easy blend dried yeast with enough hand hot cooking water from the fruit to form a soft dough. Leave to rise until doubled in size. Meanwhile, finely dice 100 g (4 oz, 2/4 cup) candied citron and 50 g (2 oz, 1/3 cup) angelica. When the dough has risen, mix in the diced candied fruit, 250g (4 ½ oz, ¾ cup) hazelnuts, 125 g (4 ½ oz, ¾ cup) almonds, 125 g (4 ½ oz, 1 cup) walnuts, 50 g (2 oz) blanched strips of orange zest, 125 g (4 ½ oz, ¾ cup) stone (pitted dates, and the drained cooked fruit. Add 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup) kirsch and mix well. Divide the dough into 200 g (7 oz) portions (about 28) Shape into rolls and smooth the surface with water. Place on a greased baking sheet, cover loosely and leave to rise until doubled in size. Bake in a preheated oven at 160 °C (325 °F, gas 3) for about 1 ¾ hours.

BIRIANI A north Indian rice dish of Persian origin. Lamb or mutton were the original meats, but chicken or fish may be used. Channa dal may be added and in the West prawns (shrimps) are popular. Basmati rice, spiced with saffron, turmeric and black cardamom, and often enriched with raisins and almonds, is layered with the spiced cooked meat mixture. The brian is cooked in a tightly covered pot to which ghee or milk may be added. When served for special occasions, birianis may be finished with a garnish of edible silver leaf.

BISCOME A type of gingerbread traditionally eaten in Lucerne, Switzerland, on the feast of Saint Nicholas, celebrated on 6 December. At the culmination of the festival a large procession sets off across the city led, by two heralds who are followed by Saint Nicholas, laden with an enormous basket of and a number of bogeymen charged with punishing children who have not been well behaved during the year.

BISCOTTE PARISIENNE A light French biscuit cooked once in the oven unlike the true biscotte or rusk, which is cooked twice) It is made from almonds egg yolks whisked egg whites and cornflour cornstarch, flavoured with kirsch and piped on to a buttered baking sheet.

BISCUIT (COOKIE) A small dry, flat cake, traditionally with good keeping qualities, eaten as a snack or accompaniment to a drink, and sweet or savoury.

Sweet biscuits are eaten as an accompaniment to coffee, tea or milk and mid morning wine in Italy and partner desserts or ice cream. They are used to make desserts charlottes, in particular and macaroon crumbs are often added to custards or creams. There is also a long European tradition of crumbling biscuits into soups and sauces as a thickener.

Savoury biscuits, or crackers, make snacks with alcoholic drinks or are served with cheese.

In Britain biscuits are historically plainer and less expensive than on the European continent, where they have associations with entertaining, Christmas and present giving. Biscuits consumption is high in Britain, the US, Ireland and Belgium. In France biscuits are simply regarded as one aspect of petits fours, with their own wide repertoire. Although biscuits have become a convenient supermarket item, regional specialties continue to be produced in many countries, while they remain a popular item with the home baker.

History Their English and French name comes from the Latin bis meaning twice and coctis meaning cooked, for biscuits, should in theory be cooked twice, which gives them a long storage life. The French Reins biscuit was originally a flat cake that was put back in the oven after being removed from its tin (pan). This made it drier and harder but improved its keeping qualities.

This very hard, barely risen biscuit was for centuries the staple food of soldiers and sailors. Roman legions were familiar with it and Pliny claimed that 'Parthian bread' would keep for centuries. In his account of the Crusades, the Lord of Joinville talks of bread called bequis' because it is cooked twice' Soldiers biscuits or army biscuits were known under Louis XIV as stone bread (pain de pierre) In 1894 French army biscuits were replaced by war bread made of starch, sugar, water, nitrogenous matter, ash and cellulose, but the name army biscuit stuck. It did not disappear until soldiers on campaign were supplied with proper bread.

Animalized biscuits were also made. These were flat cakes containing meat juices and thought to be very nourishing. Vitamin biscuits appeared during World II and these were distributed in schools in France. The cereal bar (with or without dried fruit) is the modern successor.

Biscuits were also a staple item in explorers provisions. In his record of his adventures in the New World, Chateaubriand wrote: Reduced to a solitary existence, I dined on ship's biscuits, a little sugar and lemon, Travellers biscuits, in the 19th century, were hard pastries or cakes wrapped in foil, which kept well.

Biscuit manufacture The industrial manufacturer of biscuits (cookies and crackers) began in Britain. The Carr establishment, founded in Carlisle in 1815, was the first factory that specialized in the production of biscuits, and was soon followed by Mac Earline in Edinburgh and Huntley and Palmers in Reading. These manufacturers exported their specialties all over the world, often sponsored by famous names. For example, the Albert was a small savoury biscuit bearing the name of the Prince Consort. It was not until 1840 that Jean Honore Olibet, a banker's son from Bordeaux, founded the first French biscuit factory. Soon other industrialists followed suit. In 1882, the Lefere Utile factory invented the petit beurre (butter biscuit)

Biscuit making is an active branch of the food industry. The ingredients used include varying proportions of flour, vegetable fats (shortening) or butter, sugar (usually sucrose, but sometimes glucose or maltose) starch milk, eggs and baking powder. Permitted additive such as antioxidants, colouring agents, emulsifiers and flavourings, must be listed on the packaging. Flavourings include coffee, vanilla, chocolate, coconut, aniseed, cinnamon and ginger. Liqueurs, jam, dried or crystallized (candied) fruit and nuts may also be incorporated. Production is automatic at all stages, which include kneading, shaping, baking cooling, sorting and packing.

Sweet or savoury, biscuits are classified in France, by the consistency of the dough.

Hard or semi-hard Dough Used for petits griddle cakes and various crackers and aperitif biscuits that may be seasoned with salt and other flavourings (cumin, cheese or paprika). These biscuits, which are the most widely consumed, contain about 70% flour and are made without eggs.

Soft dough Used to make either crisps or soft biscuits, such as cigarettes, tuiles, palets, langues de chat, palmiers, sponge fingers, nonettes, madeleines, macaroons, rochers, some petits fours, congolais and croquignoles. These biscuits are made with a high proportion of egg white.

Batter Used to make water biscuit (dry, iced or filled) These biscuits have a high liquid content (water or milk) and small amounts of fat and flour.

The cookie jar. The American term evokes the comfort of the sweet, ready snack, which is a feature particularly of German and American kitchens. The word cookie comes from the Dutch koek (cooked), and the repertoire is enormous.

Sugar and butter are predominant tastes, and also make a very short biscuit. Scottish shortbread, the French Nantes and Normandy sable and the plain maria.

Spiced biscuits are a feature of Germany and Central Europe. The German Leblechen and Pfeffermusse are part of the buttle Teller good biscuits display a feature of Christmas Eve, with 15 or more varieties and shapes, including chocolate kisses (small balls decorated with a nut) wasps nests almond and chocolate macaroons, vanilla crescents and cinnamon stars. This group may also include the white, south German anised Springele, which is shaped with a carved wooden mould or an embossed rolling pin.

Nuts are a favourite in southern Europe, flaked almonds often decorate the tale, the French also make almond sticks (like croquets and the Alsatian schenkeles) The popular macaroon is known as an amaretto in Italy, though this name is applied in other countries to a tissue wrapped delicacy, ratafias (flavoured with bitter almonds) are the miniature version. The Italian cantuccini, sliced and then baked once more, hark back to earlier biscuit history. Other nuts also go in a host of biscuits, for example pine nuts in the Catalan pinones.

Among chocolate biscuits, two sandwiches stand out, the British bourbon, a neat rectangle with a cream filling and the round, all-American Oreo (used to make Mississippi mud pie). Other notables are the luscious Italian florentine, a combine of flaked almonds, candle peel and cherry, backed by forkcracked chocolate, the jaffa cake where chocolate covers a sponge drop topped with orange jelly, and the American chocolate chip cookie, which continues to conquer Europe.

Some countries have their own associations, like that of Britain with golden (light corn) syrup (imported from the US from 1885) combined with oats for flapjacks, and the lacy rolled brandy snaps, from which brandy quickly disappeared. Coconut is used in Australia for anzacs (named after the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps, which fought at Gallipoli in 1915) America has also contributed molasses, apple sauce and peanut butter cookies, and the concept of an icebox or refrigerator cookie (where dough waits to be sliced and baked in an instant.)

- Savoury biscuits Dry descendants of the original ship's biscuits (thin and dry, with slight brown bubbles over the surface) and cream crackers, favoured since the late 19th century, are eaten with cheese and, sometimes, other spreads. Both Olivers at the most recherche of these, while other popular choices are the digestive (a mildly sweet wheatmeal biscuit), wheat wafers, Scandinavian rye crispbreads, rice cakes and Scottish oat cakes.

Flavoured crackers have been taken up in the US, salty (or with chilli) to stimulate the appetite, like the salted German pretzel (traditionally eaten along side beer), and a range that includes cheese straws, tortilla chips and small shapes flavoured with cheese, onion or bacon bits.

RECIPE

Galettes bretonnes

In a bowl, mix 1 egg yolk and 3 eggs with 600 g (1 lb 5 oz, 2 2/3 cups) sugar and 1 teaspoon ground cinnamon. Mix in 750 g (1 lb 10 oz, 3 1/4 cups) softened slightly salted Breton butter until the mixture is smooth. Add a little brown rum, vanilla essence (extract) and essential oil of bergamot. Sift 1 kg (2 1/4 lb, 9 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, add a generous pinch of baking powder and work into the butter mixture. Turn out the resulting dough on to a cloth dusted with flour. Fold the cloth over and knead the dough from sticking. Leave the dough wrapped in the cloth overnight in a cool place but not in the refrigerator. (Too cold an environment hardens the butter).

The following day, divide the dough into 5 lumps, each about 500 g (18 oz.) flatten them into shallow pie dishes, glaze with beaten egg and a little milk and decorate by scoring with a fork. Bake in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) for about 20 minutes, until deep golden brown. Take care not to allow the galettes to burn.

Rolled brandy snaps

Melt 100 g (4 oz 1/2 cup) butter with 100 g (4 oz., 1/2 cup) sugar. Stir in 100 g (4 oz. 1/4 cup) golden (light corn) syrup. 100 g (4 oz, 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour and 1 teaspoon ground ginger. Mix well. Ladle the mixture in small heaps, very well spaced, on to a baking sheet. Place in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F gas 4) and bake for 7-8 minutes. Take the biscuits (cookies) out of the oven and wrap each one round a wooden spoon handle, pressing them together where they join so that they do not unroll.

BISHOP An ancient punch made with wine, citrus fruits and spices, served either hot or iced. In his Dictionnaire de cuisine, Alexandre Dumas says that this drink was called bishop (German Bischof) when made with red Bordeaux (because of its purpose colour) cardinal when made with red Rhine wine, and pope when made with Tokay (white) Originality in the Rhineland, it came to France through Alsace, where hot spiced wines are popular. The classic English bishop is made by heating claret with orange and lemon peel, cinnamon and cloves. It is still a popular winter drink. There are many other traditional British recipes for punches of this sort, named after church officials prebendary headle and churchwarden.

RECIPE

Ice bishop

Pour a bottle of champagne and 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) strained lime blossom tea into a large bowl. Add an orange and half a lemon, thinly slice. Add sufficient sugar syrup (density 1.2850) to obtain a mixture with a density of 1.425. Leave in a cool place to macerate for 1 hour. Strain, then freeze to a slushy consistency. Just before serving, add 4 small liqueur glasses brandy. Serve in punch glasses.

Rhine wine bishop

Dissolve 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) sugar in 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) water over a low heat with the zest of an orange and a lemon, 2 cloves and a cinnamon stick. Simmer for 5 minutes. Add a bottle of Rhine wine and heat until a fine white froth begins to appear on the surface. Strain and serve in a jug (pitcher) or in a large punch bowl. This drink is sometimes flavoured with a little Madeira, sherry or Marsala.

BISON A wild ox or buffalo formerly widely distributed over the plains of North America and also in Europe, and still in reserve in Poland. It was the symbol of prosperity and plenty for the American Indians, who used its meat, fat, hide and horns. It was systematically hunted from the end of the 19th century onwards and now reconstituted herds live either on reserves or on ranches, where they are bred for the meat trade. Bison flesh is juicy with a pronounced flavour and is eaten mostly in the American West and Canada. (A cross between the bison and the cow has produced beefalo, whose meat is popular in some areas) Bison is most commonly eaten either smoked (especially the tongue) or marinated. The hump is considered to be a delicacy. A typical Canadian dish is bison in brine, desalted, boiled for several hours, and then served with cabbage, carrots, potatoes, cream and seasoning. Bison meat may also be minced (ground) for making meat balls or smoked, powdered, mixed with fat and used either to make soups or to spread on bread.

These methods of preparation are mostly inspired by ancient Indian recipes such as the Cheyenne recipe described by C. Levi Strauss in The Origin of Table Manners. They placed thin slices of hard meat carefully on a bed of charcoal, first on one side, then the other. They beat them to break them into small pieces which they mixed with melted bison fat and marrow. Then they pressed it into leather bags, taking care that no air was left inside. When the bags were sewn up, the women flattened them by jumping on them to blend the ingredients. Then they put them to dry in the sun.

The Polish bison is of interest chiefly because its chosen fodder, bison grass is a major flavouring of vodka, notably the Polish zubrowka.

BISQUE A seasoned shellfish puree flavoured with white wine, Cognac and double cream, used as the basis of a soup. The flesh of the main ingredient (crayfish, lobster or crab) is diced as for a salpicon and used as a garnish. The shells are also used to make the initial puree.

The word bisque has been in use for centuries and suggests a connection with the Spanish province of Vizcaya, which lends its name to the Bay of Bishop. Bisque was originally used to describe a highly spiced dish of boiled meat or game. Subsequently bisques were made using pigeons or quails and garnished with crayfish or cheese croutons. It was not until the 17th century that crayfish became the principal ingredient of this dish, which soon after was also prepared with other types of shellfish. The word is now used imprecisely for several pink pureed soups.

RECIPES

Crayfish bisque

Prepare 5-6 tablespoons mirepoix cooked in 40 g (1 ½ oz. 3 tablespoons) butter until soft. Allow 1.25 litres (2 ¼ pints, 5 ½ cups) consommé or fish stock. Cook 75 g (3 oz. 1/3 cup) short-grain rice in 500 ml (17 fl. oz 2 cups) of the consommé until soft. Dress and wash 18 good sized crayfish. Add the crayfish to the mirepoix together with salt, freshly ground pepper and a bouquet garni, and sauté the crayfish until the shells turn red. Heat 3 tablespoons Cognac in a small ladle, pour on to the crayfish and set alight, stirring well.

Add 7 tablespoons dry white wine and reduce by two thirds. Add 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) consommé and cook gently for 10 minutes.

Shell the crayfish when cold. Finely dice the tail meat and reserve for the garnish. Pound the shells, then process with the cooked rice and the cooking liquor. Press as much as possible through a fine sieve. Place the resulting puree in a saucepan with the remaining consomme and boil for 5-6 minutes. Just before serving, cool the bisque slightly, then add dash of cayenne pepper and 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) crème fraiche, followed by 65 g (2 1/2 oz. 5 tablespoons) butter cut up into very small pieces. Add the diced tail meat and serve piping hot.

Lobster bisque

Prepare in the same way as crayfish bisque, but replace the crayfish with an equal weight of small lobsters cut into pieces and sauteed in the mirepoix. If desired, it can be prepared using only the meat from the thorax, legs and claws (the meat should be finely diced) The tails can then be used for medallions.

BISTRO A bar or small restaurant, also known as a bistrot. The origin of this familiar word is obscure. It first appeared in the French language in 1884, and perhaps comes from the Russian word bistro (quick), which the Cossacks used to get quick service at a bar during the Russian occupation of Paris in 1815. There also appears to be a relationship with the word bistrovan which in the dialects of western France describes a cow herd and by extension, a jolly fellow begin apt description of an innkeeper. The most likely origin is doubtless an abbreviation of the word bistronille. Modern French bistros are of modest appearance and frequently offer local dishes, cold meats and cheese with their wine.

BISTROUILLE Also known as bistoutille, the term used in northern France for a mixture of coffee and brandy. It is derived from his (twice) and toutiller (to mix) and may be used to describe cheap brandy.

BITOKE A French dish made with minced (ground) lean beef moulded into a flat, oval or round shape. It was introduced into French cuisine by Russian emigres in the 1920s. In Russian cookery, minced meat is often used for meatballs (bitki) and croquettes.

RECIPE

Bitoke

To make a single bitoke, finely mince (grind) 125 g (4 1/2 oz. 1/2 cup) lean beef and add 25g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter, salt, pepper and a little grated nutmeg. Shape the mixture into a flattened ball, coat in flour and saute in clarified butter. Add 1 tablespoon cream and 1 teaspoon lemon juice to the cooking liquor to make a sauce. Coat the bitoke with the sauce and garnish with fried onion. Serve with sauce potatoes. Alternatively, the minced beef may also be coated with egg and breadcrumbs before cooking.

BITTER Having a sharp or acid flavour. Certain bitter plants are used in cooking they include chicory (endive), bay, ginger, rhubarb, orange and bitter almond. Others, whose bitterness is brought out by infusion or distillation, are used essentially in drinks, wormwood, camomile, centaury, gentian, hops and cinchona.

BITTERS An aromatic alcoholic or non alcoholic drink with a bitter flavour. The very aromatic types are usually drunk alone or with soda, the others, such as peach or orange bitters, are used for flavouring mixed drinks. Many bitters comes from Italy (for example, Campari and Fernet-Branca) They are usually wine based, and common flavourings are gentian and orange rind. Bitters may be served as aperitifs, digestives or pick-me-ups and in various cocktails. French bitters include Amer Picon, Selestat, Toni-Kola, Arquebuse and Suze.

It is used to make jam, compote, jelly, tarts, pies, iced desserts, syryp, liquer and ratafia. It is also used in confectionery (for fruit jellies).

RECIPES

Blackberry jam

Wash and weigh the blackberries, put them in a deep bowl with 175 ml (6 fl oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) water per 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) fruit, and leave to soak for at least 12 hours. Pour the fruit and water into a preserving pan, add lemon juice, using 1 lemon per 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) fruit, bring to the boil and cook gently for 10 minutes. Then add 900 g (2 lb, 4 cups) sugar per 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) fruit, bring back to the boil, skim and cook for 15 minutes, stirring from time to time. Pot and seal in the usual way.

Blackberry syrup

Wash and weigh the blackberries, put them in a deep bowl with 175 ml (6 fl oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) water per 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) fruit, and leave to soak for at least 12 hours. Then crush the fruit in a food processor and pour the fruit and juice into a jelly bag or muslin (cheesecloth) bag. Squeeze over a bowl and measure the juice. Pour it into a preserving pan and add 400 g (14 oz, 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ cups) sugar per 600 ml (1 pint 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) juice. Stir until dissolved (without heating,) then pour it into bottles to within 2 cm ($\frac{3}{4}$ in) from the top. Seal and store in a cool place.

Blackberry tartlets

Put into a food processor 200 g (7 oz, 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ cups) plain (all purpose) flour, 5 tablespoons sugar and 1 egg, and work to a coarse dough. Add 100 g (4 oz, $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) softened butter cut into small pieces and work quickly until smooth. Form into a ball and leave it to stand for 2 hours.

Roll out the dough and use to line 6 buttered tartlet tins (moulds) Prick the bottom with a fork, sprinkle with caster (superfine) sugar and fill with 800 g (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ lb) washed blackberries, packing them closely together. Sprinkle with sugar again. Bake the tartlets in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for about 30 minutes. Remove from the oven, leave until lukewarm, then unmould them on to a wire rack. Serve warm or cold accompanied by crème fraîche, or decorated with piped Chantilly cream. A tart is prepared in the same manner.

BLACKBIRD A bird of the thrush family ranging from northern to southern Europe. The female has a brown plumage and the male is black; both have yellow beaks. Its flesh has a fine texture and its taste varies depending on the diet of the bird, which itself depends on the region in which it lives and the season of the year. The flavour is usually slightly bitter but is at its most fragrant in the autumn. Blackbirds are cooked in the same way as thrushes, although they are less delicate. Corsican blackbirds are used to make a delicious pate.

BLACKCURRANT A shrub native to northern Europe but now widely cultivated for its black juicy berries, which are sour and aromatic. The medicinal properties of both the fruit and leaves were known by the 14th century. The French cast comes either from casse, the husk of the blackcurrant, or from cassia (senna) known for its purgative qualities. In France its cultivation really began in the Cote d'Or following the perfection of blackcurrant liqueur. The first bushes were established in the park of the chateau at Montmuzard near Dijon in 1750.

Blackcurrants are grown especially in Burgundy but also in Orleanals and Haute, Savote, as well as in at the end of June or the beginning of July. The variety Noir de Bourgogne, with dense clusters of small berries, is exceptionally tasty and aromatic, varieties with larger less dense fruit tend to be more watery.

The fruit is used to make jellies, jams, syrups and liqueur. Frozen or concentrated into a puree, the berries can also be used in the preparation of sorbets, Bavarian cream, charlottes, souffles and tarts. Dried blackcurrants are sometimes sold commercially, they can be used instead of raisins in cake making.

RECIPES

Blackcurrant jelly (1)

Wash, dry and stalk some blackcurrants. Weigh them, place in a saucepan and add 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) water per 1 kg (2 1/4 lb) fruit. Heat until the berries burst (if a perfectly clear jelly is required then place the fruit in a cloth and wring to extract the juice. (If a thicker jelly is preferred, rub the contents of the saucepan through a sieve or mouli.) Measure the liquid obtained, then, for every 1 litre (1 3/4 pints, 4 1/3 cups) fruit juice, put 850 g (1 lb 14 oz., 3 3/4 cups) preserving sugar into a saucepan together with the juice of a lemon and 175 ml (6 fl oz, 3/4 cup) water. Heat to a temperature of 109 °C (228 °F), then add the blackcurrant juice. Stir thoroughly over a high heat until the jelly coats the back of the spoon. Skim and pour the boiling jelly into sterilized jars. Allow to cool completely. Cover, label and store in a cool place.

Blackcurrant jelly (2)

Prepare a blackcurrant jelly as described in the previous recipe but using 1 kg (2 1/4 lb, 4 1/2 cups) sugar per 1 kg (2 1/4 lb) of fruit. Cook the sugar in the same way, then take the saucepan off the heat, add the juice and stir thoroughly. Then pour the jelly into sterilized jars, leave to cool and proceed as in the previous recipe.

Blackcurrant sorbet

Place 250 g (9 oz. 1 1/4 cups) sugar and 400 ml (14 fl oz, 1 3/4 cups) water in a saucepan. Heat to dissolve the sugar. (The density should be 1.14, if it is less than this, add a little more sugar.) Warm the syrup, then add 350 ml (12 fl. oz. 1 1/2 cups) blackcurrant juice and the juice of half a lemon. Mix well and pour the mixture into an ice cream machine or freeze, beating at intervals. Real sorbet is made by adding a quarter of the volume of Italian meringue to the ingredients.

Blackcurrant syrup

Crush the blackcurrants, put into a muslin (cheesecloth) bag and leave to drain, do not press. The pulp is very rich in pectin, which turns the syrup into jelly. Measure the juice and allow 800 g (1 3/4 lb 3 1/2 cups) sugar per 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) juice. Put the sugar and juice into a saucepan and heat, stirring well until the sugar has completely dissolved. When the temperature reaches 103 °C (217 °F), skim and pour into sterilized bottles. Label and store in a cool dry place.

Frozen blackcurrant charlotte

Line the base and sides of a charlotte mould with sponge fingers dipped in blackcurrant syrup and cut to fit the mould. Fill the mould with alternate layers of blackcurrant ice cream and sponge fingers soaked in the syrup. Finish with a layer of fingers. Weight the top, then place in the freezer. Turn out the frozen charlotte just before serving. It can be served with custard or decorated with Chantilly cream and blackcurrants cooked in a sugar syrup.

BLACK FORST GATEAU A chocolate cake, Schuwatzwalder Kirschtorte, made in Bavaria during the summer. The fame of this rich gâteau has risen since the early years of the 20th century. It consists of dark chocolate sponge layered with sweetened whipped cream and sour black Schmidt cherries. The cherries are lightly cooked and macerated in kirsch, and this liquor is used to moisten the cake before it is layered.

RECIPES

Black Forest gâteau

Whisk 250 g (9 oz. 1 generous cup) caster (superfine) sugar with 6 eggs until pale, very thick and creamy. Then gently fold in 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour sifted with 50 g (2 oz., 1/2 cup) cocoa, and 150 g (5 oz. 2/3 cup) melted butter. Butter and flour 3 round 23 cm (9 in) cake tins (pins) and pour in the cake mixture. Bake in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for about 25 minutes. Turn the cakes out of the tins and allow to cool.

Make a syrup with 200 g (7 oz, ¾ cup) caster sugar and 350 ml (12 fl oz 1 ½ cups) water. Flavour with kirsch. Grate 200-250 g (7-9 oz, 7-9 squares) bitter (semisweet) chocolate into thick shavings and put in the refrigerator. Soak the cooled layers of cake in the syrup.

Make some Chantilly cream by whipping together 750 ml (1 ¼ pints, 3 ¼ cups) chilled double (heavy) cream, 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¼ cup) very cold milk, 75 g (3 oz, 2/3 cup) icing (confectioner's) sugar and 2 teaspoons vanilla sugar. Cover each layer of cake with a quarter of the cream and a dozen brandy flavoured cherries. Cover the sides of the cake with the remaining cream. Decorate the whole cake with chocolate shavings. Serve chilled.

BLACK PUDDING (BLOOD SAUSAGE) boudin noir A savoury sausage made across Europe and Russia consisting largely of seasoned pig's blood and fat contained in a length of intestine, which forms the skin. It may be sold whole, cut from a length or in presealed pieces. Ox, calves' or sheep's blood can also be used, but this results in a coarser pudding. In France the fat consists partly of chons, which are granular fragments (cracklings) obtained from melting down pig's fat. One of the oldest known cooked meats, black pudding is said to have been invented by Aphtonite, a cook of ancient Greece. Some are eaten fresh, others are semi-preserved by drying or smoking.

With few exceptions, blood sausages are cooked to serve (and often poached, then fried). In France they are traditionally fried or grilled (broiled) and served with apples or mashed potato, in Germany with hot potato salad. In Spain they commonly flavour pulses, but in Britain and Ireland bacon and potatoes are favourite accompaniments.

French boudins noirs. There are as many types of boudin noir as there are pork butchers. Although the boudin de Paris traditionally contains equal quantities of blood, fat and cooked onions, the proportions can vary widely, butchers may use a range of different seasonings and add fruit or vegetables, aromatic herbs, milk, cream, semolina and crustless bread. In Lyon, they add raw onions, sometimes marinated in brandy and herbs, in Nancy, they add milk. The Auvergne boudin contains milk together with a pig's head cooked with its crackling. Strasbourg smoked boudin contains cooked pork rind and bread soaked in milk. Poitou boudin is prepared without fat but with cooked spinach, cream, semolina and eggs. Various regional boudins contain fruit, including apples (Normandy) prunes (Brittany) raisins (Flanders) or chestnuts (Auvergne) Alsace has two local specialities that are similar to black pudding, Zungenwurst, or tongue sausage, which in addition to the basic ingredients includes pieces of ox or pig's tongue, wrapped in bacon, and arranged geometrically in an ox intestine, and Schwarzwurst, or smoked black sausage, which is made from a paste of pig's blood, pork rind, ears, boned head and trotters, fat trimmings and onions, with diced pork fat and enclosed in ox intestine.

Blood sausage worldwide Italy makes fresh sanguinaccio in Lecce made with pig's brains and blood and there are many German varieties of Blutwurst (some including calf's or pig's lung and bacon) Belgium has the Brussels bloedpens and a boudin noir (cousin to a French one) that contains eggs, butter and cream.

In Spain there are butifarras on the east coast and the Balearics and morcillas in the north and south. In the north these may be flavoured with aniseed, cloves and other spices, and are plumped with either onions or rice. Both the Burgos and Aragon morcillas contain rice with pine nuts. The Asturian morcilla is smoked and wrinkled, swelling up in the pot. Most southern morcillas are in loops, again onions and rice are the common fillers. Morcilla dulce (a sweet one) highly spiced with creamy fat (like fruit cake), is eaten as a tapa. It is a taste shared in Sicily, where raisins, almond pieces and candied pumpkin may be included and in Scandinavia where they may contain raisins.

British black puddings are different in using cereals (oatmeal or barley) to absorb the blood, and traditionally are horsehoe shaped. They remain popular in Scotland and the English Midlands and north (and interest London chefs) The best are the short, fat ones made in Bury in Lancashire, flavoured with marjoram, thyme, mint, penny royal and celery seed. Irish drusheen is made with pig's blood in cork (sometimes with liver) and sheeps blood in Kerry. The finest sausage include cream and breadcrumbs, with pepper and mace, tansy is a traditional herb.

RECIPES

Boudin noir

Add 1 tablespoon wine vinegar 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{3}$ cups) pig's blood to prevent it coagulating. Chop 400 g (14 oz) onions and gently cook them in 100 g (4 oz, $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) lard without browning. Dice 800 g 1 kg (1 $\frac{1}{4}$ 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) fresh pork fat and soften in a pan very gently without frying, until it becomes translucent. Add the onions and a bouquet garni and cook for about 20 minutes. Remove from the heat and, stirring constantly, add the blood, 2-3 teaspoons salt, 175 ml (6 fl oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) white wine, $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon freshly ground pepper and $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon allspice. Sieve to remove remaining lumps of fat at this stage, if required, then add 200 ml (7 fl oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) crème fraîche.

Turn some clean pig's intestines inside out, wash and dry them, rub with lemon juice, and turn right side out. Knot the end of one of the pieces of intestine and using a funnel, fill the intestine with the mixture, pushing it with the hand towards the knotted end. When the sausage is about 10 cm (4 in) long, twist the intestine several times to seal it. Repeat for the other sausages.

Plunge in boiling water and poach for about 20 minutes without boiling. As the puddings rise to the surface, prick them with a pin to release the air, which would otherwise burst them. Drain them and leave to cool under a cloth.

Boudin noir a la normande

Chop about 800 g (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ lb) dessert (eating) apples for 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) sausage, sprinkle with lemon juice (if desired) and fry in butter in a large pan. Poach the black pudding, slice into portions and fry in butter in a separate pan. Add the slices to the apple and fry together for a few seconds. Serve piping hot.

Boudin noir bearnais

Gently cook 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) minced (ground) pig's throat, or fatty pork, for 30 minutes in the bottom of a large stock pot or heavy based saucepan. Peel 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) onions and 250 g (9 oz) garlic and add to the meat, together with 5 tablespoons chopped thyme and a bunch of chopped parsley. Simmer for 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ hours. In a large saucepan, boil half a pig's head seasoned with coarse salt, with 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) leeks, 500 g (18 oz) onions stuck with cloves, 4 red sweet (bell) peppers and 500 g (18 oz) carrots. When the head is cooked, bone it, chop the meat and vegetables, discarding the cloves from the onions, and add to the stock pot. Adjust the seasoning and add some allspice. Add 5 litres (8 $\frac{1}{2}$ pints, 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ quarts) blood. Stir well. Put in containers, cover and sterilize in a pan of boiling water for 2 hours. Serve sliced cold or grilled (broiled).

BLADDER A membranous bag in animals in which urine is stored, after slaughter it has various uses in cooking and charcuterie. Pig's bladder is used to enclose poultry (chicken or duck) for poaching in stock. It must be soaked in water with coarse salt and vinegar to remove impurities, then carefully rinsed and dried before inserting the bird. The poultry is then presented at table en vessie or en chemise. If the dish is to be served cold, it is left to cool in the intact bladder. This cooking method, in which the bird is effectively sealed, concentrates the flavours of the forcemeat and the aromatic cooking liquid inside the bladder.

In former times dried pig's bladders were used as containers for tallow and melted lard. Sometimes they were filled with air and used as shop signs for charcutiers (suppliers of cooked meat).

RECIPES

Chicken en vessie marius Vettard

Singe and carefully clean a roasting chicken weighing 1.701.8 kg (3 ¼ - 4 lb) Leave it to soak in iced water for 4 hours to ensure that the flesh remains white. Meanwhile soak a pig's bladder.

Prepare a forcemeat with the chicken liver, 150 g (5 oz) fresh truffles, and 250 g (9 oz) foie gras, using an egg to bind it. Season the forcemeat with salt and pepper and add about 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) champagne. Stuff the chicken with the forcemeat and truss it.

Insert the chicken into the well-rinsed and dried bladder in such a way that the opening of the bladder is along the back of the chicken. Add 2 generous pinches of coarse salt, a pinch of peeper and a glass each of Madeira and good quality champagne. Sew up with fine string pulled tightly and prick it about 10 times all around to stop it from bursting. Then poach in a good consomme for 1 ½ hours. Serve the chicken in the bladder with shaped potatoes, carrots, turnips and the white part of some leeks (or with rice pilaf) Open the bladder at the last moment, slitting it along the seam. A light Burgundy is a good accompaniment to this dish.

BLANC, A French term used to describe a stage of cooking when food is cooked or partially cooked but not coloured, for example by gently frying onions without allowing them to colour.

Cuire a blanc is also the French term for baking a pastry flan case blind.

BLANC, Au The French description of food (especially poultry and veal) n either a blanc de cuisson or a white stock.

RECIPE

Chicken au blanc

Poach a boiling chicken in white stock for 1 ¼ - 1 ¾ hours, depending on its size and tenderness. The legs and wings should come away in the hand without using a knife. Reduce a bowlful of the cooking liquor and add an equal volume of alternate sauce. Coat the chicken with the sauce and serve piping hot with rice and carrots cooked in stock.

BLANC DE BLANCS White wine made solely from white grapes. Until recently, this term was used mainly in reference to champagne made from the Chardonnay grape. Today the term is often applied to other wines made only from white grapes and is used in many countries both for all and sparkling wines.

BLANC DE CUISSON The French term for a liquor used for cooking white offal and certain vegetables. It is used both to aid whitening and to prevent discoloration of the food. A simple blanc is made by blending a little flour with water, then adding more water, with lemon juice or vinegar to acidulate it. Butter is another possible addition to float on the surface and insulate the vegetables (or other ingredients) from the air.

RECIPE

Blanc for offal and meat

This stock is used for cooking certain types of offal, such as sheep's tongue and trotters, calf's head and cockcombs and kidneys.

Blend together 25 g (1 oz, ¼ cup) flour and 4 tablespoons water. Add a further 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) water, mix and strain. Season with 1 teaspoon salt. Add the juice of half a lemon, 2-3 tablespoons chopped raw calf's or ox kidney fat, 1 quartered carrot, a bouquet garni and 1 onion stuck with a clove. Place the ingredients to be cooked in the stock when it is boiling.

BLANC DE NOIRS White wine made from black grapes, the juice being run off before the skin pigments can taint it. The term is used in Champagne for wines made exclusively from Pinot Noir and Pinot Meunier grapes. Wines such as white Zinfandel, which are pale pink in colour, may also be described as Blanc de Noirs.

BLANCHING This term is used for several different operations.

Par-Boiling. Lightly cooking raw ingredients for varying amounts of time in boiling water with or without salt or vinegar. The ingredients are then refreshed in cold water and drained or simply drained and then cooked normally. Blanching may be carried out for several reasons to make firmer, to purify, to remove excess salt, to remove bitterness, or to reduce the volume of certain vegetables. In some cases, the ingredients are placed in cold water and brought to the boil, potatoes diced bacon previously soaked white offal poultry, meat and bones and rice. In other cases, the ingredients are plunged directly into boiling water, for example, cabbage and lettuce. Blanching is equivalent to compelte cooking with such vegetables as spinach, very young French (green) beans and fresh peas.

Part Frying. Preliminary frying of certain potato, preparations such as chips, so that they partially cook without changing colour. They become crisp and golden when fried for a second time at a higher temperature, just before serving.

Soaking Briefly Covering fruit, vegetables or nuts with boiling water for a few seconds to facilitate removal of the skin. Tomatoes, peaches, almonds and pistachios are treated in this way, the skin can then be removed easily without damaging the inside.

Beating Egg Yolks . This usage is not common, it refers to the vigorous beating of a mixture of egg yolks and caster (superfine) sugar until the volume increases and it becomes light and fluffy. This method is used particularly for making custard and some sponge cake mixture.

BLANCMANGE In classic cuisine a much prized jellied almond cream. One of the oldest desserts, it was said by Grimond de La Reyniere to have originated in Languedoc. In the Middle Ages blancmange was both a white meat jelly made of pounded capon or veal and a dessert made from honey and almonds. Although the modern word is used to embrace milk jellies, often based on cornflour (cornstarch), traditional blancmange is made with sweet almonds and a few bitter almonds that are pounded, pressed, sweetened and mixed with a flavouring and gelling agent. The latter was originally grated stag's horn, subsequently replaced by beef or mutton juice, isinglass and finally gelatine. This dessert was often regarded as difficult to make because it had to be white and perfectly smooth,

RECIPES

Traditional almonds blancmange

Blanch 450 g (1 lb. 3 cups) sweet almonds and about 20 bitter almonds. Leave them to soak in a bowl of cold water, which renders them singularly white. Drain in a sieve and rub in a napkin to remove the skins. Pound in a mortar, moistening them, little by little, with 1 ½ tablespoons water at a time, to prevent them turning into oil. When they are pounded into a fine paste, put into a bowl and dilute with 1.15 litres (2 pints, 5 cups) filtered water, added a little at a time. Spread a clean napkin over a dish pour the almond mixture into it and, with two people twisting the napkins, press out all the almond milk. Add to the milk 350g (12 oz 1 ½ cups sugar and rub through a fine sieve. Strain the liquid through a napkin once again and add 25 g (1 oz plus 4 grains) clarified isinglass a little warmer than tepid- or use 25 g (1 oz., plus 4 grains) clarified isinglass a little warmer than tepid or use 25 g (1 oz, 4 envelopes) gelatine dissolved in warm water. Blend with the blancmange. Pour into a mould and place in a container with crushed ice.

Variations To make rum blancmange, add ½ glass rum to the mixture described above. To make a Maraschino blancmange, add ½ glass maraschino.

To serve this dessert in small pots, prepare two thirds of the quantity given in the recipe, you will, however, need less gelling agent, as when the blancmange is served in small pots it should be more delicate than when it is to be turned out.

Blancmanges can be flavoured with lemon, vanilla, coffee, chocolate, pistachio nuts, hazelnuts and strawberries. Whipped cream can also be incorporated.

Modern almond blancmange

Blanch and skin 450 g (1 lb, 3 cups) sweet almonds and 20 bitter almonds (or use all sweet almonds). In a blender puree the almonds with 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{3}$ cups) hot water, when the liquid is milky and the almonds are very fine, strain the mixture through muslin (cheesecloth). Sprinkle 25 g (1 oz. 4 envelopes) gelatine over 5 tablespoons almond milk and leave to swell. Heat the remaining almond milk with 100 g (4 oz $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) sugar, stirring frequently. When the sugar has dissolved and the liquid is almost boiling, stir into the gelatine, and continue stirring until the gelatine has melted. Pour the almond blancmange into a 1.15 litre (2 pint, 5 cup) mould, leave until cold, then refrigerate until firmly set.

BLANQUETTE The French term for ragout of white meat (veal, lamb or poultry) cooked in white stock or water with aromatic flavourings. Theoretically, the sauce is obtained by making a roux and adding cream and egg yolks. However, the roux is more often than not omitted. Blanquette had a very important place in historical cuisine and became a classic of bourgeois cookery. Blanquettes are also made with fish (monkfish) and vegetables (chard and celery)

RECIPES

Preparation of Blanquette

Cut the meat or fish into about 5 cm (2 in) cubes. Seal by frying the cubes in butter without browning. Cover with white stock or bouillon, season, quickly bring to the boil and skim. Add 2 onions (one stuck with a clove) 2 medium sized carrots cut into quarters and a bouquet garni. Simmer gently (15 minutes for monkfish, 45 minutes for poultry, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ hours for veal). Drain the pieces of meat or fish and place in a sauce pan with small onions and mushrooms that have been cooked au blanc, in a thin white sauce. Heat gently and, just before serving, bind the sauce with cream and egg yolks and flavour with a little lemon juice. Place in a deep serving dish, sprinkle with parsley and garnish with heart shaped croutons fried in butter.

Blanquette is usually served with rice à la creole but may also be served with celeriac (celery root), halved celery hearts, carrots, braised parsnips or leeks, cucumber (cut into chunks and blanched for 3 minutes in boiling salted water), braised lettuce or lettuce hearts.

Blanquette of lamb à la Francienne

This is prepared with shoulder, breast and best end (rib chops) of lamb. The stock for 1.8 kg (4 lb) lamb is made with 2 carrots cut into quarters, 2 medium onions (one stuck with a clove) and a vegetable bouquet garni consisting of 2 celery sticks and 2 small leeks (white part only). The garnish is made with 200 g (7 oz) baby onions, 200 g (7 oz) mushrooms (preferably wild) and 8 croutons fried in butter. To bind the sauce use 50 g (2 oz, $\frac{1}{4}$ pint, $\frac{2}{3}$ cup) double (heavy) cream, the juice of half a lemon, and a pinch of grated nutmeg.

Blanquette of lamb with beans and lamb's feet

Cut the meat from a shoulder of lamb into large cubes. Cover with iced water and keep for 12 hours in the refrigerator, changing the water once or twice. Soak 350 g (12 oz. 2 cups) dried white haricot (navy) beans for about 12 hours in cold water with an onion stuck with a clove 4-5 whole carrots, a leek and a bouquet garni.

Rub 3 lamb's feet with lemon juice, blanch for 10 minutes in boiling water, refresh with cold water and trim. Make a paste of 1 tablespoon flour, lemon juice and water in a pan. Add the feet, together with 2 carrots, an onion, a bouquet garni and some peppercorns, and simmer for about 2 hours. When the feet are cooked, drain, skin and dice the flesh.

Cook the beans with the flavoring ingredients for about 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ hours, skimming frequently at first, and add salt after 15 minutes.

Drain the pieces of lamb shoulder. Start cooking them in cold water and add a lamb stock (bouillon) cube, 2 carrots, an onion a bouquet garni, pepper corns and a little salt. Simmer for about 1 ½ hours. When cooked, drain the pieces of lamb and arrange them in a large dish. Reduce the cooking liquor to litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 ½ cups) In a separate pan, mix together 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) double (heavy) cream, 3 tablespoons Dijon mustard and 4 egg yolks. Pour the sieved reduced cooking liquor on to the mixture and heat gently, stirring constantly. Season with salt and pepper. As soon as the mixture approaches boiling, strain it over the pieces of lamb. Drain the beans and mix them and the diced feet with the blanquette.

Blanquette of monkfish

Cut 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb) monkfish into 5 cm (2 in) cubes and seal in 40 g (1 ½ oz, 3 tablespoons) butter without browning. Complete the cooking as in the basic blanquette recipe using 150 g (5 oz., 1 cup) diced carrots, 2 medium onions (one stuck with 2 cloves), 2 leeks 225 g (8oz) baby onions and 225 g (8 oz) very small button mushrooms (optional). To bind the sauce, use 2-3 egg yolks, 150 ml (¼ pint, 2/3 cup) double (heavy) cream and the juice of 1 lemon.

Blanquette of veal

This may be prepared with shoulder, breast or flank, either on or off the bone. For 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb) meat use the same ingredients as for blanquette of lamb a ancienne. Seal the pieces of veal in butter without allowing them to brown and cook in bouillon.

BLANQUETTE DE LIMOUX A sparkling white AOC wine produced in the department of Aude near the town of Limoux (near Careassonne) It is made mainly from the Mauzac grape, which used to be called Blanquette because the undersides of the leaves are covered in white down. Increasing amounts of Chardonnay and some Chenin Blanc are also used. The wine is made sparkling by the traditional method. Blanquette Methode Ancestrale is a sweeter version, made without disgorgement of the sediment. The region also produces still white wines under the Limoux appellation.

BLAYE A fortified town on the right bank of the Gironde, opposite the Medoc. Wine has been produced in this area for longer than in the Medoc, although now its importance is reduced. The most important wines are red, made from Merlot and Cabernet Sauvignon grapes under the Premieres Cotes de Blaye appellation. Some whites are also made from Ugni Blanc and Sauvignon Blanc grapes, sold under the names Cotes de Blaye, Blaye or Blayais.

BLENDER An electric device used to liquidize, crush or mix foods. It is used in the preparation of sauces, soups, fruit and vegetable purees, fine forcemeats, mousses and mousselines.

There are two kinds of blender, the hand held type and the goblet type. The former consists of a motor unit with a handle and a column fitted with a blade which turns at about 10,000 r.p.m. It can be operated either in the receptacle used for cooking or preparing the food or in a tall narrow container, useful for making mayonnaise. Sometimes it is equipped with a slower blade, which can be used to mash potatoes and puree chestnuts (otherwise the excessive rotary speed of the mixer would release the starch, making the puree sticky and viscous).

In the goblet type the motor unit serves as a base and the blade turns in the goblet. The goblet has a limited capacity, so only relatively small quantities can be processed at a time. It is particularly useful for pureeing soups and sauces, and is used when a finer texture is needed than that obtained in a food processor. For thicker mixtures, when a blender would need to be stopped and the mixture scraped down on to the blades, a food processor does a better job.

BLENDING Assemblage The practice of combining several wines of different grape varieties or vintages. In the vineyards of northern Europe where the hours of sunshine are often inadequate, a fruity varietal, usually from a single grape variety, is often used to enhance another wine with its bouquet.

Further south, varieties are sometimes mixed to achieve a better balance between the degree of alcohol, acidity and tannins in the case of red wines, so, for instance, in the Bordeaux one combines Cabernet Sauvignon for its structure, Merlot for its roundness, and Cabernet Franc for its fruit. Wines of different years are also mixed to obtain the best possible results.

RECIPE

Blinis a la francalse

Blend 20 g (3/4 oz, 1 1/2 cakes) fresh (compressed) yeast or 1 teaspoon dried yeast with 50 g (2 oz, 1/2 cup) sifted strong plain (bread) flour with 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) warmed milk and leave to rise for 20 minutes in a warm place. Then mix in 250 g (9 oz, 2 1/4 cups) sifted strong plain flour, 4 egg yolks, 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 1/4 cups) warm milk and a generous pinch of salt. Mix the ingredients well. Leave the batter to rest for a minimum of 1 hour. At the last moment, add 4 stiffly whisked egg whites and 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) whipped cream. Make small thick pancakes by frying quantities of the batter in butter in a small frying pan, turning them over after a few minutes.

BLONDIR A French culinary term meaning to lightly brown food by frying gently in fat. Onions and shallots may be cooked like this and the term is also applied to flour, which is lightly browned in melted butter to make a white roux.

BLOOD The vital fluid of vertebrates. Pig's blood, an ingredient of black pudding (blood sausage), is that most frequently used in cookery. Fresh blood is either a symbol of vigour, or, for Jews, something to be shunned as unhygienic. It is a tapa in Spain, solidified and cut into squares, and it is considered a fortifying food, especially in cold countries, hence the ancient Swedish scartsoppa (black soup), made with goose blood, also the Polish czermina (or techernina), eaten with rice noodles or fried croutons, to which fresh poultry, game or pig's blood is added before it is thickened with a puree of chicken livers. There are also various French regional dishes using blood.

To use, blood must be stirred with vinegar, salt or alcohol without delay, to prevent deterioration and clotting. Thickening with blood is widely used in traditional European cookery, for civets and, in France dishes described as en barbouille. When poultry or game blood is not available, fresh pig's blood can be used instead.

Duck au sang is very popular in the cookery of Rouen. A gamey taste is induced by smothering the duck (without blood loss) rather than shooting it. The a la presse method of presenting it also means the bloody juices from the partially roast, crushed duck enrich the final sauce.

The French expression cuit a la goutte de sang (cooked to the drop of blood) is applied to young game or poultry which is just cooked, similarly, the term saignant (rare, literally, bleeding) corresponds to a specific degree of cooking for grilled (broiled) or roast meat.

BLUEBERRY Fruit of three species of shrub of the Vaccinium genus, related to huckleberry, and one of the only seven native northern American foods to be cultivated on a large scale. The lowbush blueberry, called bluets or perles bleues in Quebec, is smaller, sweeter and very flavourful (and still sold as wild blueberry). The fruit of the highbush, cultivated in the northern United States since the 1920s is considerably larger than the huckleberry especially the aromatic Dixie. Blueberries should not be stored in the refrigerator. They make excellent tarts, pies, upside down desserts, sauce for ice cream and blueberry muffins.

BLUE CHEESE Most distinguished and with the longest traditions, are the French ewe's milk Roquefort English Blue Stillon and Italian Congazola. But several European countries, and America, make blue cheese from cow's, ewe's and goat's milk (whole or skimmed) using a penicillin fungus, either the Roquefort or gorgonzola strain, to induce veining. Flavours range from forceful to delicate, textures from hard and crumbly to creamy, while rinds vary from hard to the white Camembert style rind.

Many soft blue veined cow's milk cheeses are produced in France, mostly in the Auvergne, Savoy and Jura. If the cheese is made from other milk, the label must specify Bleu de Chevre (blue goat's milk cheese) or Bleu de Grevin (blue ewe's milk cheese).

In France, the name Bleu also applies to white cheese in which only the crust turns blue and is covered with a natural pale blue down, such as Olivet Bleu and Vendome Blue. The most important of the blue-veined cheeses are produced in Auvergne, Bresse, the Causses, Corsica (from ewe's milk) upper Jura, Lagneuille, Landes, Quercy, Sainte Foy, Sassenage and Thiezy. Making blue veined cheese The precise methods by which blue cheeses are made vary according to type and regional techniques. The curds are cut into cubes, drained and moulded. During coagulation or, more frequently, during moulding spores of the fungus Penicillium glaucum are added. For some cheeses the fungus may be added earlier in the process, for example to the milk at the beginning of production. This fungus gives the blue veining. The moulded curds are then salted and finely perforated to encourage the growth of the spores, and finally matured for varying periods in damp cellars. The best seasons for the cheese are summer and autumn.

A good blue cheese is ivory or cream coloured, firm and springy and rather fatty, with evenly distributed light or dark green blue veins. The naturally formed crust may be rough or smooth. Blue cheeses are sometimes wrapped in foil.

French blue cheeses

Bleu d'Auvergne AOP (Cantal, Puy-de-Dôme, Haute-Loire) A cylindrical cheese, varying in size with a firm fatty paste (45% fat content), a strong smell and a slightly piquant flavour.

Bleu de Bresse A small cylindrical cheese with a soft smooth paste (50% fat content) a fine smooth blue crust and a medium to strong flavour.

Blue Des causses. AOC This cylindrical cheese, formerly made with cow's milk mixed with ewe's milk, has a firm fatty paste (45% fat content) a strong smell and a distinct bouquet.

Blue de Corse. The name reserved for Corsican ewe's milk cheeses that are not taken to Roquefort for maturing and are not therefore, as superb as the famous cheese matured in the cellars of Aveyron. Cylindrical in shape, it has a fine paste (45% fat content) a good piquant flavour and a strong smell.

Bleu de Haut Jura AOC (Ain and Jura) Bleus de Gex and Septmoncel) made from unpasteurized cow's milk. A flat wheel shape with a slightly convex base, the cheese is springy to the touch with heavy veining (45% fat content) slightly bitter and having a full flavour.

Blue cheese worldwide Because the penicillin fungus needs a cool temperature to multiply, blue cheese is a northern phenomenon or a mountain product.

Italy, well-known for Gorgonzola, makes a lighter version in Dolce latte, which is smooth, milk and delicate (the name means sweet milk) Castelmagno is a similar blue veined cow's milk cheese, named after a village near Dronero while the rare Montecenisio is produced on the Italian/French border. In the mountains of the Asturias, Spain produces Cabrales and the associated Picos and Gamonedo.

Britain is unusual in that the best known blue cheeses, blue Stilton blue Cheshire, Shropshire blue and blue Wensleydale are hard. Blue Cheshire and blue Wensleydale are blue veined versions of white cheese. Blue Cheshire at one time was a randomly occurring blue version of Britain's oldest cheese, made in Shropshire and Cheshire. Subsequent production became more orderly, with Penicillium roqueforti added to the cow's milk before ripening. Only the red Cheshire cheese is blue, to produce a rich cheese.

The Danes have created successful cheeses on French and German models. Danablu (simply Danish blue abroad) is an early 20th century substitute for Roquefort made from cow's milk, with a 50-60% fat content, it is 3 kg (6 ½ lb) in size and very sharp and salty. Bla Castello is a modern, small cow's milk cheese, 70% fat content, with sharply defined dark blue veins and a downy white surface mould. It is mild and similar to Bavarian blue. Mycella is another Danish cheese, with a slightly creamy texture and greenish blue veins in bands, in a creamy yellow paste. A Norway has a unique, old cheese in Gamelost, while Finland's cow's milk Aura and the Swedish cow's milk Adelost are both modelled on Roquefort.

The German Edelpilzkise is literally glorious mould cheese. With very dark blue, vertical veins in a pale ivory paste, 45% fat content and 2-5 kg (4-11 lb) in size, it may be round or loaf shaped. The modern Bavarian blue, with a pale cream paste with blue sphodges has a 70% fat content because additional cream is added to the cow's milk. The rind is white, with flor of the Camembert type, and the cheese weighs 1 kg (2 ¼ lb). Other blues worth mentioning are the Czech Niva, and the Israeli Galli, a strongish ewe's-milk cheese, gren-veined, in the Roquefort style.

Australia makes a Gorgonzola style cheese, while America has the renowned Maytag Blue Cheese from Iowa.

Serving blue cheese. Blue cheese are served at the end of the meal, preferably alone or as the last course, so that their often distinct flavour can be savoured with full-bodied aromatic red wines or with more fruity red wines. In France they may also be served with sweet dessert wines, such as Sauternes. They are often used for canapes and may also be used in the preparation of mixed salads, regional soups and fondues. They are used to enliven such meat dishes as hamburgers and beef olives or as a sauce for game, and are often used in souffles and quiches, Avoid refrigeration.

BOARD Traditionally a wooden slab usually 4-6 cm (1 ½ - 2 ½ in) thick (usually beech) rectangular, round or oval in shape. Various types of plastic boards are now used. Being dishwasher safe and non absorbent, plastic boards are often more hygienic than wooden ones. Toughened glass and laminated boards are available for lighter use. The kitchen board is used for slicing, chopping or cutting up meat, fish, vegetables and bread. Boards designed specially for carving meat or poultry have a wide groove around the perimeter for catching the juice. Bread boards are sometimes made of horizontal laths fitted to a frame with a tray beneath to prevent crumbs from scattering. Pastry boards, used for kneading and rolling out pastry dough, must be smooth and big enough to hold the rolled out dough.

Boards are also used for pressing fitting into the tops of tins (pans) or terrines and occasionally for cooking. An oiled board, put into a cold oven with a fish upon it, the heat then raised, is used for planked fish.

BOCKWURST A generic German name for all sausages that are very finely ground. These include frankfurters, the larger weiners and knackwurst, similar dumpy links of pork with beef, flavoured with garlic and cummin. They are poached or fried.

BOHEMIENNE, A LA Various dishes have been named after Balfe's successful comic opera, La Bohemienne (1869). These include a soft boiled (soft cooked) egg dish, a salpicon and a sauce served with cold dishes, which uses a cold bechamel base to bind an emulsion of egg yolks and oil flavoured with tarragon vinegar.

The ingredients of sauceteed chicken a la bobemienne garlic, fenned, red or green (bell) reppers and tomato are similar to those of a Provencal dish called houmanie, which is a kind of rataouille. The dish is served with plain rice. Rice with crushed tomato and fried onion rings are also ingredients.

RECIPES

Salpicon a la bothemienne

Dice some foie gras and truffles. Reduce some Madeira sauce, add a little essence of truffle and use the sauce to bind the salpicon of foie gras and truffles. Diced onions cooked in butter and seasoned with paprika may also be added. This salpicon may be used as a filling for a vol-au-vents, small flans, poached eggs and tartlets.

Sauteed chicken a la bohémienne

Season a medium sized chicken with paprika and saute in a flameproof casserole or large heavy saucepan until brown. Cover and continue cooking very slowly either on top of the stove or in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4). Cut 4 red or green (bell peppers into thick strips. Peel 2 tomatoes and slice thickly. Finely dice an onion and then blanch it. Prepare 1 tablespoon chopped fennel. Add all these ingredients, together with a pinch of crushed garlic, to the pan when the chicken is half cooked (after about 20 minutes). At the end of the cooking time, when the chicken is tender, deglaze the casserole with 100 ml (4 fl. oz, 7 tablespoons) white wine. Add 60 ml (2 fl. oz, ¼ cup) thickened veal stock or well reduced bouillon. Finally, add a dash of lemon juice. Pour the sauce over the chicken and serve with saffron rice.

BOIL To bring a liquid (such as water or stock) to boiling point and maintain it at that temperature, thereby cooking ingredients that are placed in it. Boiling occurs at a fixed temperature, which for water is 100 °C (212 °F). If a recipe contains an instruction to boil rapidly, this means that the ingredients should be agitated to prevent them from sticking to each other or to the bottom of the pan. In most cases, it is sufficient for the liquid to simmer. Liquids are also boiled to reduce them.

Oil and other fats used for frying have boiling points of up to 200 °C (400 °F). The boiling point of sugar syrup varies according to the concentration, which increases as the water evaporates.

BOLETUS The Latin name of a wild mushroom family easily recognized by the spore bearing tubes on the undersurface of its cap. They are prized in most European countries, as far as Russia, but also grow in North America and most other parts of the world. There are various edible species one of the best known being the cep, Boletus edulis.

BOLIVIA The country where the potato originated. Bolivia boasts some three hundred varieties. Chintos, potatoes which have been frozen then, dried, are a favourite potato product they are very light and are soaked before being cooked. Besides a fondness for chilies, spicy soups and fried food, Bolivia has another interesting specialty the conejo, estrado, a rabbit which is stretched as much as possible, making its flesh extremely tender and delicate.

BOLLITO MISTO A celebrated Italian stew originating in Piedmont. The name of the dish literally means boiled mixed and its composition can vary according to region, availability of ingredients and family traditions. As a general rule, it contains rump of beef, knuckle of veal and chicken (stuffed or plain) often with a pork sausage or a zampone (stuffed pig's foot). Some recipes also include pig's trotters, ox tongue or rolled head of veal. The meat is cooked in stock with onions, carrots and celery. The accompanying vegetables, such as carrots, turnips and celeriac are then cooked in little of the strained stock. It is customary to serve bollito misto with gherkins, capers, small pickled onions, green salad and Cremona mustard a sweet and sour fruit mustard similar to chutney.

RECIPE

Bollito misto

Put 500 g (18 oz) flank of beef, 500 g (18 oz) oxtail and 500 g (18 oz) blade bone of beef (or silverside) in a braising pan and fill with water. Bring to the boil, skimming often. Add 2 onions, 3 celery sticks, 3 peeled garlic cloves, 5 sprigs flat leaved parsley, 1 sprig rosemary, 10 peppercorns and a little sea salt. Cover and cook for 1 ½ hours. Remove the pieces of meat gradually as and when they become tender. Meanwhile cook 1 split calf's head and 1 split calf's foot in water flavoured with 1 onion and 1 celery stick. In another braising pan, cook 1 calf's tongue, skin it very carefully and set aside. Prick a cotechino (Italian sausage) and cook it in a little stock. Arrange the meats on a serving dish and serve very hot, accompanied by the traditional sauces spring onions (scallions) Verona mustard (a type of mustard (made from several kinds of fruit, cooked in a very hot mustard syrup).

BOLOGNAISE A LA The French term for several dishes inspired by Italian cookery, especially that of Bologna, that are served with a thick sauce based on beef and vegetables, particularly tomato, popularity associated with pasta. In Italy this becomes alta bolognese and the sauce is known as ragù. It is richer than the French style sauce, as it contains chopped ham, various vegetables, beef, lean pork, chicken livers and white wine.

RECIPES

Bolognese sauce

Chop 4 celery sticks and 5 large onions. Add 4 sage leaves and 2 sprigs rosemary to a traditional bouquet garni. Coarsely chop 500 g (18 oz) braising steak (chuck or blade beef or flank) Peel and crush about 10 large tomatoes and 4-5 garlic cloves. Heat 5 tablespoons olive oil in a heavy based saucepan. Brown the meat and then the onion, celery and garlic in the olive oil. Add the tomatoes and cook for about 10 minutes. Lastly, add the bouquet garni 350 ml (12 fl oz 1 ½ cups) beef stock, 250 ml (8 fl oz, 1 cup) red wine, salt and pepper. Cover and cook very gently for at least 2 hours, adding a little water from time to time. Adjust the seasoning.

Bolognese sauce may be prepared in large quantities. The length of the cooking time means that it can be kept for several days in the refrigerator, and several months in the freezer. It is served with spaghetti and macaroni, and in gratin dishes and lasagne.

Timbale of pasta with bolognese sauce

Cook and drain some short pasta (such as macaroni). Add some mushrooms lightly fried in butter with chopped garlic, shallots and parsley, some diced ham (turned in hot butter to avoid drying out) and (optional) a little grated white truffle. Pack these ingredients firmly into a timbale mould, then turn out. Coat the timbale with a light bolognese sauce and reheat it in the oven. Serve with grated Parmesan cheese, or sprinkle with grated Parmesan and a little melted butter and brown in the oven before serving.

BOMBE GLACEE A frozen dessert made from a bombe mixture, often enriched with various ingredients, and frozen in a mould. The dessert was named after the spherical mould in which it used to be made. Nowadays, cylindrical moulds with rounded tops are used.

Traditionally, bombe, moulds are filled with two different mixtures. The bottom and sides of the mould are lined with a layer of plain ice cream, a fruit ice or a sorbet, the inside is filled with the chosen bombe mixture. The mould is then hermetically sealed, clamped and frozen. To serve, the bombe is turned out on a folded napkin placed on the serving dish. The bombe may be decorated in a number of ways depending on its ingredients crystallized (candied) fruit or violets, marrons glacés, pistachios, fruit macerated in liqueur or whipped cream.

RECIPES

Lining the mould with ice cream

Chill the mould in the refrigerator for about 20 minutes. At the same time soften the ice cream or water ice chosen to line the mould. Spread it roughly on the bottom and sides of the mould with a plastic or stainless steel spatula. Place the mould in the freezer for about 15 minutes to harden and then smooth the ice with the spatula. Replace the mould in the freezer for a further hour before filling with the bombe mixture, unless the mixture is a parfait, in which case pour it down the sides of the lined mould until filled and place in the freezer for 5-6 hours.

Bombe mixture

In traditional cuisine, the mixture is made with 32 egg yolks per 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{3}$ cups) syrup (density, 1.285, see sugar) Pour the syrup and egg yolks into a saucepan and place the pan in a bain marie over a moderate heat. Whisk vigorously until the mixture is thick and creamy, then press it through a very fine sieve. Whisk again, away from the heat, until completely cold by this stage it should be light, fluffy and white. Finally add an equal volume of whipped cream and the chosen flavouring.

Bombes are often made with a far lighter mixture. For example, a 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pint, 4 $\frac{1}{3}$ cup) bombe Hawaii can be made using 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) pineapple sorbet to line the mould and 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) kirsch parfait made with 2 egg yolks, about 60 ml (2 fl oz $\frac{2}{4}$ cup) syrup (density 1.2407) and about 250 ml (8 fl oz, 1 cup) whipped cream mixed with 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoons kirsch.

Bombe Aida

Line the mould with tangerine ice cream and fill with vanilla bombe mixture flavoured with kirsch.

Bombe Alhambra

Line the mould with vanilla ice cream and fill with strawberry bombe mixture (a combination of strawberry bombe mixture (a combination of strawberry puree, Italian meringue and whipped cream) turn out the bombe and surround with large strawberries macerated in kirsch.

Bombe archidus

Line the mould with strawberry ice cream and fill with praline bombe mixture.

Bombee chateaubriand

Line the mould with apricot ice cream and fill with vanilla bombe mixture mixed with crystallized (candied) apricot macerated in kirsch.

Bombee diplomate

Line the mould with vanilla ice cream and fill with maraschino bombe mixture mixed with diced crystallized (candied) fruit macerated in maraschino.

Bombee Doria

Line the mould with pistachio ice cream and fill with vanilla bombe mixture mixed with pieces of marrons glacés macerated in rum.

Bombee duchesse

Line the mould with pineapple ice cream and fill with pear bombe mixture.

Bombee Grimaldi

Line the mould with vanilla ice cream and fill with kummel flavoured bombe mixture. Decorate with crystallized (candied) violets and halved pistachio nuts.

Bombe Monselet

Line the mould with tangerine ice cream and fill with port flavoured bombe mixture mixed with chopped crystallized (candied) orange peel that has been macerated in brandy.

BONDON DE NEUFCHATEL A Normandy cheese made from cow's milk (45% fat content), soft with a red tinged crust. Originating from the most important market town in the Bray region, it is cylindrical in shape, 4-6 cm (1 ½ -2 ½ in) in diameter and 6-8cm (2 ½ -3 in) high, with a fruity yet salty flavour.

BONE The solid element in the carcass of a vertebrate animal. Bones are made of cartilage impregnated with calcium salts. When cooked in a boiling liquid they yield gelatine, essential for the smoothness and palatability of certain cooking stocks, veal bones are particularly valuable for this purpose. Crushed bones, which may be browned in the oven, are usually cooked with aromatic vegetables and herbs to make stock for sauces.

Some bones, particularly those from beef and veal, contain marrow. The pot-au-feu may include thick slices of shin (shank) bone (fore or hind leg) complete with marrow. Osso bucco, a traditional Italian dish, is prepared with slices of unboned veal knuckle.

Meat cooked on the bone is generally preferred to that off the bone, the surface remains sealed in a natural way, while the bone is a good conductor of heat. Rib of beef on the bone is a prime cut, it can be grilled (broiled) as it is or butchered to make the famous T-bone steak of American barbecues. York ham cooked on the bone should also be mentioned it is delicious. Lamb chops and cutlets (rib lamb chops), and rack of lamb (from which the latter are cut) all may need some little preparation. For example trimming the fat towards the end of the bone (and between them, too, in the case of rack) and shortening the bone itself. To serve, the bone tip can be garnished with a paper collar or frill.

BONE MARROW A soft fatty substance in the cavities of long bones. In cooking, beef marrow is usually used and it is an important feature in the Italian osso bucco, a new of veal shin cooked on the bone. Slices of gently poached beef marrow are served with grilled (broiled) or roast beef. Marrow is also used as a filling for artichoke hearts, cardoons, omelettes, bouchees and croutes and it may be included in salpicons, garnishes and soups, while the marrow from one bone will flavour a risotto. It is often used to prepare sauces for grilled meat or fish. A marrow bone is a favourite in the French stockpot and often cooked with boiled rolled beef. The bone is then served with the meat and the marrow may be extracted with a teaspoon. Bone marrow may also be bought in jelly form. Amourette is the French name for spinal marrow.

RECIPES

Bone marrow canapés

Wrap some fresh or frozen bone marrow in a small piece of muslin (cheesecloth), plunge it into boiling salted beef stock and poach gently without boiling (about 6 minutes for fresh marrow and 7-8 minutes to frozen marrow). Lightly toast some small slices of bread. Unwrap the marrow, drain it carefully and cut half of it into small dice and the other half into rounds. Garnish each canapé with diced marrow and place a round of marrow on top. Season with salt and pepper, sprinkle with finely chopped parsley and serve immediately, as marrow loses its creamy texture very quickly.

Bone marrow sauce

Put 3 finely chopped shallots in a saucepan. Add 350 ml (12 fl oz. 1 ½ cups) white wine, season with salt and pepper and reduce by half. Stir in 2 table spoons thickened veal stock or well reduced meat sauce. Poach 75 g (3 oz) bone marrow and cut into small dice. Remove the sauce from the heat and whisk in 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) butter cut into tiny pieces, then add 1 tablespoon lemon juice and the diced bone marrow. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

BONING The removal of bones from meat, poultry, fish or game. Boning raw meat or poultry is carried out with a special boning knife and requires skill to avoid damaging the meat.

The same term is used for the removal of the backbone of a fish that is subsequently stuffed and reshaped before cooking.

RECIPES

Brill bonne femme

Prepare and clean a brill, Butter a dish and sprinkle with chopped shallot and parsley. Add 250 g (9 oz. 3 cups) chopped button mushrooms. Place the brill in the dish and add 7 tablespoons dry white wine and the same quantity of fish stock. Dot with very small knobs of butter. Cook in a preheated oven at 200 °C (425 °F, gas 7) for 15-20 minutes, basting the grill two or three times. Towards the end of cooking, cover with foil to prevent the fish from drying out. The same method may be used for sole and whiting.

Chicken bonne femme

Trim a chicken weighing 1.8-2 kg. (4-4 ½ lb), season with salt and pepper, then truss. Brown the chicken slowly on all sides in butter in a flameproof casserole or heavy based saucepan. Blanch 100 g (4 oz. 2/3 cup) finely diced unsmoked streaky (slab) bacon. Add the diced bacon and 20 small onions to the casserole. Cover and cook gently for 15 minutes. Add 500 g (18 oz) potato balls or small new potatoes and continue cooking slowly, basting the chicken from time to time, until tender. Garnish with the cooked vegetables and serve.

Green beans bonne femme

Partially cook 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) green beans in salted water. Blanch 250 g (9 oz. 1 ½ cups) diced unsmoked streaky (slab) bacon. Brown the blanched bacon in a frying pan, then add the drained beans and 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) rich meatstock. Adjust the seasoning cover and cook until the beans are tender. Dot with butter and sprinkle with chopped parsley before serving.

Vegetable soup bonne femme

Cook 100 g (4 oz.) finely sliced leeks (white part only) in butter. Add 1.5 litres (2 ¾ pints, 6 ½ cups) white consommé or chicken broth and 150 g (9 oz) sliced potatoes. Season with salt and simmer until the potatoes are soft. Just before serving add 50 g (2oz. ½ cup) butter and some chervil. Serve with thin slices of French bread that have been dried in the oven.

BONNEFONS, NICOLAS DE A 17th century French writer who was a valet in the court of Louis XIV. He published a work in 1654 (which was reprinted several times until 1741) called Les Delices de la campagne. This book marks a turning point in the history of French culinary art which, at that time, was still influenced by the precepts of the Middle Ages, with its emphasis on decoration and excessive use of spices which detracted from the nature of the food.

The work was divided into three parts. Drinks, bread and wine (this section was dedicated to the ladies of Paris). Vegetables, fruit, eggs, and milk (dedicated to the Capuchin monks famous for their skill as gardeners) and Meat, poultry and fish (with a foreword for head waiters and, as a supplemented cleanliness in the preparation of dishes, diversity of menus and, above all, simplicity. Let a cabbage soup be entirely cabbage, and may what I say about soup be a law applied to everything that is eaten. He quoted recipes of the era, such as a special health soup with four meats) and poupepin He also advocated the use of some well matched flavours, such as mackerel and green fennel.

BONNEFOY A Parisian restaurant of the 1850's that is still associated with a type of bordelaise sauce, served with certain fish and fillets of fish prepared a la mendoise. The sauce contains shallots reduced in white wine but not strained.

BONNES MARES a grand cru vineyard of just 13 hectares in the Burgundy village of Chambolle Musigny. It overlaps slightly into the neighboring village of Morey St. Denis. It produces exceptional quality wines which age well and after a few years attain a remarkable smoothness and fine bouquet.

RECIPE

Bontemps sauce

Cook 1 tablespoon chopped onion in butter in a saucepan. Add salt, a pinch of paprika and 200 ml (7 fl. oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) cider. Reduce by two-thirds. Add 200 ml (7 fl. oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) meat based veloute and bring to the boil. Remove from the heat and add 40 g (1 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz, 3 tablespoons) butter and 1 generous tablespoon white mustard. Sieve before serving.

BOOPS bogue. A spindle-shaped fish (family Sparidae) abundant in the Mediterranean and the Bay of Biscay. It is 20-30 cm (8-12 in) long with spines along its back. It is mostly used in fish soups.

BORDELAISE, A LA The name given to a wide range of dishes (eggs, fish, shellfish, kidneys and steak) which use such ingredients as bone marrow, shallots and significantly wine (white for fish and white meat and red for red meat). This is the adjective of Bordeaux, a principal wine region.

RECIPE

Bordelaise sauce

(From a recipe by Careme) Place in a saucepan 2 garlic cloves, a pinch of tarragon, the seeded flesh of a lemon, a small bay leaf, 2 cloves, a glass of Sauternes and 2 teaspoons Provencal olive oil. Simmer gently. Skim off all the fat from the mixture and mix in enough espagnole sauce to provide sauce for an entrée and 3-4 tablespoons light veal stock. Reduce the mixture by boiling down and add half a glass of Sauternes while still simmering. Strain the sauce when it is the right consistency. Just before serving add a little butter and the juice of half a lemon.

Bordelaise sauce for grilled meat (1)

Boil down by two thirds 200 ml (7 fl. oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) red wine with 1 tablespoon chopped shallot, a sprig of thyme, a piece of bay leaf and a pinch of salt. Pour in 200 ml (7 fl. oz, $\frac{1}{4}$ cup) demi-glace, sauce. Boil down by one third, then remove from the heat, add 25g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter and strain. Add 25g (1 oz) beef marrow cut in dice, poached and drained, and 1 teaspoon chopped parsley.

Grilled (broiled) meats served with bordelaise sauce are usually garnished with slices of poached, drained beef marrow.

Bordelaise sauce for grilled meat (2)

Prepare some concentrated red wine as in the preceding recipe, but boil it down only by half. Thicken with 40 g (1 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz, 3 tablespoons) beurre manie. Boil for a few moments. Add meat glaze or meat extract equal in bulk to a walnut. Finish as in the preceding recipe.

Calfs liver a la bordelaise

Quickly fry slices of Bayonne ham in butter. Season slices of calf's liver with salt and pepper, coat with flour and fry in butter. Arrange on the serving dish, ALTERNATING WITH SLICES OF THE HAM. Coat with bordelaise sauce.

Fillets of sole a la bordelaise

Prepare some button mushrooms and baby (pearl) onions and cook in butter. Butter a small fish kettle or flameproof casserole and sprinkle the bottom with finely chopped onions and carrots. Season the fillets of sole with salt and pepper and arrange in the fish kettle. Add a bouquet garni and 175-350 ml (6-12 fl oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ - 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) white Bordeaux wine, according to the size of the container. Poach the fillets for 6-7 minutes, then drain, retaining the liquor. Arrange the fillets on the serving dish surrounded by the mushrooms and baby onions, cover and keep warm. Add 2 tablespoons demi-glace or fish stock to the cooking liquor and reduce by half. Add a knob of butter, sieve and pour over the fillets.

Sauteed calf's kidney a la bordelaise

Poach 2 tablespoons diced beef marrow in salt water, drain and keep warm. Trim the calf's kidney, slice thinly, season with salt and pepper, and fry briskly in very hot butter, turning the pieces over as they cook. Drain, retaining the juice, and keep the kidney warm. Deglaze the frying pan with 100ml (4 fl oz, $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) white wine, add 1 tablespoon finely chopped shallots and boil off the liquid. Then add 250 ml (8 fl oz, 1 cup) veal stock and the juice from the kidney, and reduce by half. Thicken with a little arrowroot and adjust the seasoning. Replace the kidney in the sauce, add the beef marrow and stir. Arrange in a mound and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Tournedos (filet mignons) a la bordelaise

Poach some slices of bone marrow in salt water, drain and keep warm. Grill the steaks, over very hot charcoal (if possible use dry vine prunings) Place a slice of bone marrow on each steak and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Serve with bordelaise sauce.

BORDER A mixture that is shaped, moulded or cut to form a border or ring around the edge of a dish, either for decorative effect or to hold other ingredients in the centre. Special round, plain or ridged moulds or savarin moulds are usually used to shape the border. The ingredients of the ring depend on whether the dish is hot or cold, sweet or savoury.

For hot Dishes Rice, semolina, quenelle mixture, duches potatoes.

For Cold Dishes Hard boiled (hard cooked) eggs, aspic jelly (cut into tringles, crescents or cubes) sliced tomatoes, oranges or lemons.

For dessert Moulded creams, creamed rice, semolina.

RECIPES

Savoury Rings

Egg ring a la princesse

Prepare in the same way as egg ring Brillat-

Savarin, but flavour the eggs with diced truffle and asparagus tips. The latter may be replaced by crayfish tails, shelled prawns (shrimp) shellfish or mushrooms.

Egg-ring Brillat-Savarin

Prepare a veal forcemeat ring as in the recipe for veal forcemeat ring with calves marrow or brains, turn the hot ring out on to an ovenproof dish. Meanwhile, prepare some crumbled eggs and add either some Parmesan cheese or diced truffle (or truffle peelings). Pour the scrambled eggs into the centre of the ring, sprinkle the eggs and the ring with grated Parmesan and melted butter and brown rapidly in a preheated oven.

Fish forcemeat ring with medallions of lobster a lamericaïne

Prepare a whiting forcemeat. Butter a ring or savarian mould and press the forcemeat into it. Poach gently in a preheated oven at 180°C (350 °F, gas 4) in a bain marie for 25 minutes or until fish is cooked, then cover and leave for 30 minutes in the oven with the door open (this helps the mould to relax and to set well). Turn the hot fish ring out on to a warm plate and fill the centre with medallion of lobster a lamericaïne.

Fish forcemeat ring with shellfish ragout

Prepare the fish forcemeat ring mould as in the previous recipe. Cook shellfish (for example, mussels à la marinère, oysters, clams or scallops poached in white wine) and remove the shells. Cook some langoustines (jumbo shrimp) in court bouillon and shell the tails. Fry some mushrooms in butter. Bind all these ingredients with a well seasoned white sauce made from fish stock or with a shrimp sauce. Turn the ring out of the mould and fill the centre with the shellfish ragout. Garnish the ring with slices of truffle or add truffle peelings to the sauce.

Rice ring with various garnishes

Butter a ring or savarian mould and fill with pilaf rice, risotto or rice cooked in consomme and bound with egg. Cover the mould and cook in a preheated oven at 160 °C (325 °F, gas 3) for about 10 minutes, then turn the ring out on to a serving dish. The filling can be a ragout of shellfish, poultry or offal, medallions of lobster à l'américaine, crayfish à la bordelaise or curried fillets of fish.

Ring of calves brains à la piémontaise

Prepare slices of calves brain à la poulette and add some chopped mushrooms which have been cooked in butter. Butter a ring or savarian mould, fill with risotto, and press in lightly. Heat through in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F gas 4) Turn the ring out on to a warmed plate and arrange the mixture of brains and mushrooms in the centre. Garnish with slices of white truffle, if desired.

Ring of sole à la normande

Prepare a forcemeat of creamed fish. Generously butter a ring or savarian mould and fill with the forcemeat. Bake in a bain marie in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for about 25 minutes. Let it stand for 30 minutes in the oven with the door open. Turn the ring out on to a serving dish. Fill the centre of the ring with a shellfish ragout mixed with normande sauce, then add some fried smelts. Poach some folded fillets of sole in white wine and arrange on top of the ring. Also poach some oysters and place one on each fillet. Garnish with sliced truffle. Warm the dish through and garnish round the edges with shrimps cooked in court bouillon.

Veal forcemeat ring with calves marrow or brains.

Prepare a veal forcemeat. Generously butter a ring or savarian mould and press the forcemeat into it. Poach gently in a bain marie in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F gas 4) for about 25 minutes, then cover and leave for about 30 minutes in the oven with the door open to set properly. Meanwhile, prepare some calves marrow or calves brains à la poulette and, separately, some lightly fried mushrooms cooked au blanc. Turn the veal ring out on to a heated serving dish. Pour the marrow or brains à la poulette into the centre of the ring and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Garnish the ring with the mushrooms and cover with more poulette sauce.

Sweet Rings

Rice ring à la créole

Butter a ring or savarin mould. Fill with thick rice pudding, press down, heat through in the oven then, turn out on to a serving dish. Poach 16 half slices of pineapple in vanilla flavoured syrup and fill the centre of the ring with them. Decorate with cherries and angelica. Serve either slightly warmed, or very cold, with apricot sauce flavoured with rum.

Rice ring à la montmorency

Prepare a rice ring as in the previous recipe. Separately prepare some confectioner's custard (pastry cream) flavoured with kirsch (see custard) and also some stone (pitted) cherries poached in syrup. Fill the centre of the ring with alternate layers of confectioner's custard and cherries. Sprinkle with crushed macaroons and melted butter and place in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F, gas 9) for a few minutes. Serve with cherry sauce flavoured with kirch.

Semolina ring with fruit

Butter a ring or savarin mould and fill with a stiff, cooked dessert semolian mixed with a salpicon of crystallized (candied) fruit. Place in a preheated oven at 160 °C (325 °F, gas 3) for a few minutes, until set. Turn the ring out on to a serving dish. Fill the centre with whole, halved or cubed fruit, poached in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Heat again for a few minutes in the oven. Just before serving, sprinkle the ring with a very hot fruit sauce flavoured with rum or kirsch.

BOREK A cheese fritter in Turkey, where it is a national appetizer, and a rich fried or baked Middle Eastern pastry, generally savoury but sometimes sweet, also widely eaten in the Balkans.

Its preparation was well described in the magazine Le Pot-au-Feu (1 January 1900). The true Turkish method consists of wrapping cigar shaped pieces of katschkawalf cheese in thin sheets of pasta dough and frying them in oil. This description remains valid, and boreks are made with a very thick bechamel sauce mixed with katschkawalf, a ewe's milk cheese common throughout the East (this may be replaced by diced or grated Gruyere or Emmental). When cold, the mixture is shaped into thin rolls, which are then wrapped in pasta dough (or puff pastry) rolled out to a thickness of 2 mm (1/8 in) and cut with a pastry (cookie) cutter into oval shapes about 10 x 5cm (4 x 2 in). The fritters are sealed with beaten egg and deep fried for 8-10 minutes, when cooked, they rise to the surface. The dough can also be shaped into rectangles or circles and made into turnovers, which may be coated with breadcrumbs before frying.

BORSCH Also known as borsht. A beetroot (beet) soup, eaten hot or cold, popular in the Ukraine, Russia and Poland, and also an Ashkenazi Jewish dish. The essential character and colour come from the root, but the soup may include chicken or beef with other vegetables including mushrooms, which supply the stock in meatless versions. In the Ukraine the broth is served with proskki. The chilled version is Lashinable abroad.

RECIPE

Ukrainian borsch

Fry 2 chopped onions and 200 g (7 oz) raw sliced beetroot (beet) in lard, cover and continue to cook gently. Bring 1 kg (2lb) stewing (chucks) steak to the boil in 2.5 litres (4 ¼ pints, 11 cups) water, then skim. Add 500 g (18 oz) shredded white cabbage, 3 carrots, a bunch of parsley, small trimmed celery sticks, and the beetroot and onion. Season with salt. Cook 4 ripe tomatoes in a little water, sieve and add them to the soup. Cook for 2 hours, then add a few potatoes, cut into quarters. Prepare a roux with lard and flour, mix with a little stock and pour it into the borsch with 2 tablespoons chopped fennel. Boil for a further 15 minutes and serve.

This Ukrainian borsch is served with a bowl of fresh cream, garlic cloves (which should be eaten between spoonfuls of soup) buckwheat kasha with bacon, and piroshki, little dumplings filled with meat, rice and cabbage.

BOTARGO Also known as boutargue or poutargue in French. The pressed, then salted and dried female roe of the grey mullet, called batrakb in the Middle East. The entire egg sack of the fish is treated whole. In Greece the roe is lightly smoked and may be sold from barrels in markets, known as argotaraho, it is a winter and Lent speciality, preserved from summer, caught fish roes are also sold singly, looking like longish, rather flat, red sausages. Sardinian roes are covered in beswax for protection. The method of preserving the roes seems to have been invented by the Phoenicians, but it may be Jewish in origin.

Known as white caviar, botargo is the forerunner in Europe of caviar and it is mentioned more than once in Samuel Pepys Diaries. It is very salty and must be unsalted. In France and Greece it is eaten sliced very thinly, with a drizzle of lemon juice and or oil, sometimes on toast. In Greece it is more commonly grated and made into tamasalata. In Italy botarga makes an excellent pasta sauce and swordfish roe is also used. In Sicily and Sardinia the bluefin tuna gives a deep golden brown, slightly metallic tasting roe, weighing 2.5 kg (4 ½ -11lb) and looking like square sectioned sausage. Seabass roe is also used.

In France grey mullet were specially bred in Lake Berre for their roes and poutargue became a specialty of Martigues, in Provence.

North Africa is a main source supply. In California roe from the striped or black mullet is served on crackers. It is also salted and dried for export to Japan, where it is known as karasumi.
BOTERMELK A Belgium dessert, known in northern France as lait battu. It consists of milk boiled very gently for 1 ½ hours with pearl barley (or rice, semolina, tapioca or very fine vermicelli) and brown sugar. The mixture which is sometimes bound with potato starch, is then mixed with molasses or honey, raisins or other dried fruits soaked in warm water are then added.

BOTTEREAUX Geometrically shaped French fritters (square, round or triangular) made from raised (leavened) dough that has been flavoured with brandy or liqueur. They are traditionally made during mid-Lent in the Charentes and Anjou, regions and can be eaten hot or cold.

RECIPE

Botterreaux

Stir together 20 g (¾ oz. 1 ½ cakes) fresh (compressed) yeast and 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) slightly warm milk. Put in a food processor 400 g (14 oz. 3 ½ cups) strong plain (bread) flour, a pinch of salt, 3 tablespoons caster (superfine) sugar and 2 tablespoons rum. Add the yeast mixture and process thoroughly to form a dough. Roll out to a thickness of 5 mm (¼ in). Distribute 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½) butter cut into small pieces evenly over the surface. Fold the dough in two and roll out evenly, then work the dough again to incorporate the butter roll into a ball, flatten and roll into a ball again. Leave to rise for 3 hours. Roll out the dough very thinly, about 3 mm (¼ in) and cut out the shapes with a pastry (cookie) cutter. Fry them in very hot oil, then drain on paper towels before dusting with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

BOTTLE A narrow-necked vessel for holding boring liquids. It is a way of packaging and of marketing the contents.

A successful design also advertises the contents. For many years in France claret was known for its high-shouldered bottle, while Burgundy bottles had sloping shoulders: these now have become universal bottle types, adopted by purveyors only for their suitability. The champagne bottle (both its wide profile and the gold foil top) is another French example, born of the technical requirements for thicker glass and a securer cork to hold a sparkling wine. Bottles with successful marketing images are the round Portuguese Mateus Rose bottle, the Paul Masson carafe, the Gallo pot bellied flask and the Coca-Cola bottle grippable round its waist (launched in 1916) at one time the world's most universally recognized symbol.

In the Middle Ages wine was served at table either in tin vessels or pots long term storage in glass bottles did not become widespread until the 18th century. An etching dated 1750 and showing wine bottles with driven home corks makes it possible to date their appearance. The first French glassworks to specialize in making wine bottles was set up in Bordeaux in 1723 by an Irishman.

Serving wine. Current practice is to serve wine from its original bottle, placed directly on the table or on a coaster. The practice of laying the bottle on its side in a basket is only for very old wines, which may have a sediment. They should be drawn from the wine bin in a recumbent position hours before decanting. If they are not to be decanted, they should stand upright for some hours.

BOTTLING AND CANNING FOOD A method of preserving food by hermetically sealing it in jars, bottles or cans and then heating it to temperatures above 100°C (212 °F), preferably 110-115 °C (230-239 °F), which destroys all the micro-organisms and enzymes liable to cause spoilage. The original process was invented by Nicolas Appert and is still referred to as appertisation in France. This form of sterilization is now an industrial process.

Thorough sterilization necessitates heating the foodstuff for long enough to destroy the microorganisms but not so as to impair its eating qualities, for example, milk is heated to very high temperatures 135 °C(275 °F) for a very short time 4 minutes UNT (ultra heat treated) milk is heated to 140 °C(284 °F) for 1-3 seconds, normally by steam injection, and then cooled and further processed in sterile containers to eliminate the cooked taste.

Before home freezing was popular, domestic sterilization techniques were used for bottling fruits and vegetables. Canning was also used by the home cook. Although these methods are sometimes used, for food safety reasons they are no longer practical everyday methods for home preservation. Special pans, jars, cans and sealing equipment are necessary and reliable recipes essential for good, safe results.

BOTTOM CUTS Cuts of meat from the lower part of the animal (when it is in a standing position). The term is not derogatory but applies to second and third category meats (for braising and boiling) which are not considered as fine as fillet (sirloin) and other top cuts, include shin, brisket, flank, skirt and leg of beef, knuckle and breast of lamb and pork. Slow cooking dishes (braised, stewed, navarin) are smoother and tastier when prepared with the bottom cuts, as these include a certain amount of fat and cartilage. The bottom cuts are the most economical and also represent 50% of the edible meat of a beef carcass.

BOTVINYA A cold sweet and sour Russian soup made from beetroot (beet) leaves, spinach and sorrel. It is garnished with either cucumber or small pieces of fish.

RECIPE

Botvinya

Wash a tear up 400 g (14 oz) spinach, 250 g (9 oz) beetroot (beet) leaves and 200 g (7 oz) sorrel. Cook gently in melted butter until soft, then puree in a blender. Transfer the puree to a soup tureen and stir in 250 ml (8 fl. oz, 1 cup) dry white wine, 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 ½ cups) stock, 1 ½ teaspoons salt, 2 teaspoons sugar 100 g (4 oz) diced cucumber, a chopped shallot and 1 tablespoon each of chopped chervil and tarragon, and chill. Before serving add about 10 ice cubes, mix again and serve very cold.

BOUCAN Originally, boucan was meat smoke dried by the Caribbean Indians. Now it is a classic form of Caribbean barbecue, consisting of a stuffed sheep cooked in a trench heated with charcoal, then covered with hot sand and embers.

BOUCHE DU ROI The French name for the combined royal kitchen staff at the French court before the Revolution (1789) The oldest order defining their duties dates from 1281, when there were ten people responsible for the bread pantry and for cupbearing, 32 for cooking and four for fruit. A hundred years later, the number had more than tripled and under Louis XIV there were over 500. Managed by the highest officials, it became a very hierarchical structure with numerous lower officials. The goblet office included the pantry and the cupbearers and was closely allied to the cuisine office. There followed the three offices of common pantry, common cup bearing and common cuisine. There were also the fruiterer's office and the quartermaster's office (which provided wood porters and tradesmen like carpenters) The eighth office was that of the transdesmen's kitchen.

The King's kitchen was the most important office, with a team of four chefs, four roasters, four soup makers, four pastrycooks, three kitchen boys, ten equerries, keepers of the table service (who looked after the gold and silver table services) and washers. There were also chair carriers and table carriers. As the king moved around, he was accompanied by warners, who gave the cooks timely notice of when the king wished to eat. When the king went hunting, a wine runner followed, carrying a light snack with him on his horse. A more substantial meal would be brought by carriage.

BOUCHEE, SAVOURY A small round puff pastry case with any savoury filling is a bouchee salee in France. Bouchees are served hot. A salpicon of one or more ingredients, with or without sauce, is added just before serving. The first small bouchees were probably invented by Marie Leszczyńska, Queen of Louis XV. It is safe to assume that the queen at least made them fashionable as she did other dishes and delicacies- historians agree on the subject of her appetite.

RECIPES

Making traditional bouchees with lids

Dust the working surface with flour and roll out some puff pastry to a thickness of about 5mm (1/4 in). Using a round, crinkle-edged pastry (cookie) cutter, 7.5-10 cm (3-4in) in diameter, cut out circles of pastry and place them on a damp baking sheet, turning them over as you do so. Use a 7.5 –10 cm (3-4 in) ring cutter to stamp out rings of pastry. Brush the edge of the pastry bases with beaten egg and place the rings on top. Chill the cases for about 30 minutes. Bake in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425 °F, gas 7) for 12-15 minutes. Using the point of a knife, cut out a circle of pastry from inside each bouchee, lift it out and set aside to use as a lid. If necessary remove any soft pastry inside the case. The bouchees are now ready to be filled.

Bouchees a la julienne

Cook a julienne of vegetables (carrots, parsnips, leeks, celery or fennel) in butter. Bind with cream and spoon into the cases.

Bouchees a l'americaine

Prepare the bouchee cases as above and fill with a salpicon of lobster, crayfish or monkfish a l'americaine.

Bouchees a la perigourdine

Make some very small cases, about 4 cm (1 ½ in) in diameter. Prepare a salpicon of truffle and foie gras and bind with Madeira sauce. Spoon into the cases.

Bouchees a la reine

Prepare and bake some bouchee cases. Prepare a salpicon a la reine for the filling as follows. Dice some chicken breasts poached in stock, also dice some truffle and poach in white wine. Cut some trimmed button mushrooms into four, sprinkle with lemon juice and cook very gently in butter so they retain their original colour. Prepare a white sauce with the stock from the chicken, add some cream, and, if desired, some egg yolk. For 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) stock, use 40 g (1 ½ oz, 3 tablespoons) butter, 40 g (1 ½ cup) plain (all purpose) flour, 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) double (heavy) cream, and 1 egg yolk. Using this sauce, bind the chicken, truffles and mushrooms together.

Heat the bouchee cases in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for 5 minutes. Fill them with the hot mixture and replace the lids. If the truffles are omitted from the filling, equal quantities of chicken breast and mushrooms should be used. A salpicon of calves sweetbreads, quenelles and brains braised in white sauce may be added to the filling.

Bouchees with bone marrow

Prepare some very small cases, 4 cm (1 ½ in) in diameter. Poach some beef marrow in court-bouillon, drain and cut into small cubes. Season with plenty of pepper, bind with Madeira sauce, then spoon into the cases.

Bouchees with crayfish in Nantua sauce

Fill the cases with a ragout of crayfish tails in Nantua sauce.

Bouchees with mushrooms

Make smaller cases using a 6 cm (2 ½ in) diameter pastry (cookie) cutter. Fill with morel (or button) mushrooms in cream or in a cream sauce.

BOUCHEE, SWEET A petit four made from sponge cake shapes with some type of filling is a bouchee sheerve in France. The small cakes are hollowed out, filled with confectioner's custard (pastry cream) or jam, then sandwiched together and coated in coloured fondant icing (frosting). For example, a filling of confectioner's custard flavoured with coffee or chocolate could be used with fondant icing of the same flavour. Alternatively, a raspberry jam filling could be used with pink fondant icing. Other combinations include green confectioner's custard flavoured with kirsch plus green fondant icing decorated with pistachios, and vanilla flavoured confectioner's custard paired with white fondant icing.

RECIPE

Apricot bouchees

Place 250 g (9 oz, 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar and 8 eggs in a bowl and whisk together over a pan of hot water. When the mixture is thick and fluffy, fold in alternately 200 g (7 oz, 1 ¾ cups) sifted plain (all-purpose) flour and 200 g (7 oz, ¾ cup) melted butter to which a small glass of rum has been added. Three quarters fill some small round moulds with the mixture and bake in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F gas 4) for about 20 minutes. Turn out on to a rack and allow to cool. Cut in two, spread the bottom half with apricot jam flavoured with rum and sandwich the two halves together. Reduce some apricot jam, flavour with rum and brush it on the top and sides of the bouchees. Decorate with blanched with blanched toasted almonds and a glace (candied) cherry.

BOUCHERE, A LA The French name (meaning the butcher's wife way) given to various dishes that feature a garnish of bone marrow. Examples are: chopped cabbage consomme, served with slices of poached bone marrow, soft boiled (soft cooked) or poached egg a la bouchere, and omelette filled with diced poached bone marrow, surrounded with a ring of demi-glace and garnished on top with slices of bone marrow.

BOUCHON A type of small bistro in Lyon where two of the gastronomic traditions of the city are maintained the lavish machon and the pot a 45 el bottle for tasting Beaujolais. The word literally means a bung and comes from the Old French bousche a bottle stopper made of hay, straw or leaves. The insignia of taverns used to be a bunch of greenery or a bundle of straw.

BOUDIN ANTILLAIS A Caribbean sausage, also called bondin cocbon, that is grilled (broiled) fried in lard or simply heated in very hot (not boiling) water. It is often eaten as an appetizer to accompany punch. The filling is fairly liquid and can be sucked out from one end of the skin.

RECIPE

Boudin antilais

For 6-8 sausages, add 2 tablespoons vinegar to 1.5 litres (92 ¼ ints, 6 ½ cups) fresh pig's blood, this prevents the blood from coagulating. Moisten 250 g (9 oz. 2 ½ cups) stale white breadcrumbs (without crusts) with 120 ml (4 ½ fl oz, ½ cup) milk. Turn some clean pig's intestines inside out, wash and dry them, rub with lemon juice, and turn right side out. Finely chop 250 g (9 oz) onions and brown gently for 7-6 minutes in 100 g (4 oz, ½ cup) lard (shortening) As a food processor puree the breadcrumbs and blood, adding the drained onions. Then add 5 large garlic cloves, finely chopped, a small chilli pepper about 20 chopped chives or the same quantity of spring onions (scallions), salt to season and 1 tablespoon flour. Work together well and adjust the seasoning. The mixture must be highly flavoured.

Knob the end of one of the pieces of intestine and using a funnel, fill the intestine with the mixture, pushing it with the hand towards the knotted end. When the sausage is about 10 cm (4 in) long, twist the intestine several times to seal it. Repeat for the other sausages.

Place them together in boiling water seasoned with chives, bay leaves, peppers and sandalwood and allow to barely simmer for about 15 minutes, or until no more fat comes out when they are pricked. Drain the sausages and allow to cool completely.

BOUDIN BLANC A white meat sausage made throughout Europe, and in Britain, wherever black pudding (blood sausage) is made, and associated with the Christmas period in France.

The filling is a fine white meat paste (poultry, veal pork, or rabbit), to which has been added pork or veal fat. Sometimes cream, milk eggs, flour (or crustless breadcrumbs) and spices are used, even fish. The filling is stuffed into intestine casings and poached, fried gently, baked in the oven or cooked in buttered paper.

In France the traditional Christmas boudin blanc dates from the Middle Ages, after leaving Midnight Mass, the faithful would eat a milky gruel to warm themselves up. The pork butchers had the idea of binding it with eggs and adding minced (ground) meat. There are many types of boudin blanc, some of which contain truffles. The boudin a la Richelieu is based on chicken forcemeat and a salpicon a la reine and is cooked in small individual moulds.

Spain is another country where white puddings are important, particularly the butifarra blanca in Catalonia and the Balearics, containing very finely chopped lean pork. The Catalan bishe blanc is spherical, stuffed into tripe intestines and tied string.

White puddings are traditional in Ireland, shaped like a horsehoe and made of toasted oatmeal with flaked lard, seasoned with cloves, salt and black pepper. Eaten fresh they are sliced and fired for breakfast. The West Country of Britain also makes oatmeal and pork sausages.

RECIPES

Boudin a la Richelieu

Butter some small ovenproof moulds, smooth edged and oval in shape. Line the bottom and side of each with a finely ground chicken forcemeat. Now add a mixture similar to that used to fill bouchees a la reine but cut up more finely. Finally, cover with more forcemeat and smooth the surface using a knife blade dipped in cold water. Place the moulds in a bain marie and cook in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F gas 4) for about 25 minutes. Turn the puddings out of the moulds and allow to cool. Arrange them in a circle on a serving plate with fried parsley in the centre. Serve with Perigueux sauce or supreme sauce to which has been added diced truffle or truffle peelings.

Boudin blanc

Skin and bone a chicken and finely mince (grind) the flesh together with 250 g (9 oz) York ham. To 250 g (5 oz. 2 ¼ cups) fresh breadcrumbs add just enough milk to moisten them. Cook over a gentle heat, stirring, to thicken, then leave to cool.

Prepare a duxelles using 400 g (14 oz. 4 cups) button mushrooms, the juice of half a lemon and 4 finely chopped shallots. Thoroughly mix the bread mixture, the minced chicken and ham and the duxelles with 2 egg yolks, 100 g (4 oz, 1 cup) ground almonds, 200 ml (7 fl oz. ¾ cup) double (heavy) cream, a glass of Madeira or sherry, a large pinch of paprika, salt, pepper, a dash of cayenne, 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, a generous pinch of powdered thyme and (if desired) a few truffle peelings. Whisk 2 egg whites until stiff and add to the mixture. Prepare and fill the intestines as for boudin ontillois. Poach in the same way, then cool.

Boudin Blanc with prunes

Soak some prunes in a little lukewarm water or weak tea, then remove the stones (pits). Prick some boudins blancs with a fork, arrange in an oven proof dish and surround with the prunes. Sprinkle with melted butter and cook in a preheated oven at 240 °C(475 °F, gas 9) until golden brown.

Grilled boudin blanc

Prick some boudins blancs with a fork, roll each one in oiled greaseproof (wax) paper, and grill (broil) gently. Remove the paper and serve hot with mashed potatoes, apple sauce or celery puree.

BOUGNETTE A charcuterie speciality of southwestern France. The bouquette de Castres is a flat sausage made from chopped belly of pork combined with a mixture of bread and eggs, fried or baked in fat and eaten cold. Bouquette from Albi is larger.

BOUGON A goat's milk cheese soft with a red unged crust. Made exclusively by the cooperative of La Mothe-Bougon in Poitou, Bourgon is a boxed round cheese. 14 cm (4 ½ in) in diameter and 2.5 cm thick, weighing 250 g (9 oz.) Its pronounced flavour is at its finest from May to September, the period when goat's milk is of the best quality.

BOUGRAS A vegetable soup from Perigord, prepared with the water used for cooking black pudding (blood sausages) It was traditionally prepared at carnival time, when the pig was killed.

BOUILLABAISSE A dish comprising fish boiled with herbs, which is traditionally associated with the Provence region, especially Marseille, although it has long been enjoyed further a field. The word is a contraction of two verbs, bottuler and abaisser and in fact bouillabaisse is more a method of rapid cooking than an actual recipe, there are as many authentic bouillabaissees as there are ways of combining fish.

Bouillabaisse was originally cooked on the beach by fishermen, who used, a large cauldron over a wood fire to cook the fish that was least suitable for market such as , The dish is flavoured with olive oil spices, including pepper and saffron, and dried orange zest.

Provençal cuisine offers several variations on the bouillabaisse soup. At Martigues, where it is usual to serve the soup with potatoes, there is also a black bouillabaisse containing cattle fish and their ink. Sardine and cod bouillabaissees are also characteristic of the region, as are bourride and revesset. White wine is sometimes added to the liquid.

Other French coastal regions have their own local methods of preparing fish soups. Bouillonnade from roussillon, cotraide from Brittany, chandre from Charentes (which gave use to the American chowder) marnite from Dieppe, Flemish waterzool and horo, of the Basque region.

RECIPES

Bouillabaisse

For 8-10 servings, use about 3 kg (6 ½) fish and shellfish. Place the following ingredients in a large deep flameproof casserole: 300 g (11 oz. 2 ¾ cups) chopped onions or 100 g (4 oz., 1 cup) leeks and 200g (7 oz. 1 ¾ cups) onions, 2 large sliced carrots, and 3 large skinned and finelychopped tomatoes, 3-4 tablespoons crushed garlic, 1 sprig fennel, a small bunch of parsley 1 sprig thyme, a bay leaf and a piece of dried orange rind. Add the prepared shellfish, then the firm fleshed fish cut into uniform pieces with heads, bones and skin removed, as necessary. Moisten with 200 ml (7 ft oz, ¾ cup) olive oil and season with salt and freshly ground pepper. Add a generous pinch of powdered saffron and leave to marinate, covered and in a cool place, for a few hours.

Add sufficient water (or fish stock prepared with the heads and trimmings of the fish) to cover the fish. Cover and boil rapidly for 7-8 minutes. Then add the prepared soft fleshed fish and continue to boil rapidly for a further 7 minutes. Remove the fish and shellfish and place in a large round dish. Line a soup tureen with dry bread and strain the soup on to it. Sprinkle the soup and the fish with coarsely chopped parsley and serve both at the same time.

Caribbean bouillabaisse

Heat some olive oil in a large saucepan and gently cook 1 large chopped onion, some quartered tomatoes. 1 large crushed garlic clove, and 1 small cruched chilli pepper, add some thyme, grated nutmeg, salt and pepper. Finally add some prepared West Indian fish (such as devil fish and bonito) a small lobster (or a large lobster tail) and 3 crabs.Cover, bring to the boil, and cook for about 20 minutes for fresh, for frozen fish, continue cooking for 15 minutes after they have thawed. Five minutes before cooking is complete, add a little curry powder and 2 generous pinches powdered saffron.

Marseille bouillabaisse

Scale, clean and remove the head of 2 kg (4 ½ lb) of several kinds of whole fish (conger eel, sea bream, red gurnard, monkfish, whiting, scorpion fish, John Daryl). Cut into pieces. Fry 1 onion, 1 garlic clove, 2 leeks and 3 celery sticks, all peeled and finely chopped, in 7 tablespoons of oil until golden. Add the fish heads and trimmings.Cover with water, bring to the boil and simmer for 20 minutes Strain the mixture through a sieve and press to obtain as much of the cooking juices as possible. Crush 3 peeled tomatoes. Peel and chop 1 onion, 2 garlic cloves and 1 fennel bulb and fry in oil in a saucepan until golden. Add the stock, tomatoes and bouquet garni. Add the scorpion fish, red gurnard, monkfish, conger eel, sea bream, 10 little crabs (drilles brossees) and a few strands of saffron.Cook over a high heat. Then add the John Dory and whiting. Cook for another 5-6 minutes. Moisten a slice of bread with the stock and squeeze it. Pound it with 3 garlic cloves and 1 chopped red chilli. Add 1 egg yolk, then 250 ml (8 ft. oz, 1 cup) olive oil while whisking this rouille like a mayonnaise.Cut a baguette into slices and toast lightly or brown in the oven. Arrange the fish and trimmings on a large dish, pour the bouillon into a soup tureen, and serve with the rouille and croutons.

Salt cod bouillabaisse

Completely desalt 800 g (1 ¾ lb) fillets of salt cod, changing the water several times, then cut them into square pieces. In some oil, gently fry 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) chopped onions and 50 g (2 oz., ½ cup) chopped leeks, without allowing them to change colour. When these vegetables are soft, add 2 peeled, seeded, and finely chopped tomatoes and 1 crushed garlic clove. Cook rapidly for 5 minutes, then add 6 tablespoons white wine, 500 ml (17 ft. oz, 2 cups) water or fish stock and a generous pinch of saffron. Bring to the boil and place the drained cod in the cooking liquor, cover and continue to boil rapidly for about 25 minutes. Just before serving add 1 tablespoon chopped parsley. Serve the bouillabaisse in a deep dish with slices of dried bread. Alternatively, the stock may be served separately from the fish, garnished with slices of French bread.

Sardine bouillabaisse

Fried chopped onion and 2 chopped leeks (white part only) olive oil. Add 1 large peeled, seeded and chopped tomato, 2 large crushed garlic cloves, a bay leaf, a fennel stick, and a small piece of dried orange peel. Add 750 ml (1 ¼ pints, 3 ¼ cups) water. Season with salt, pepper and a generous pinch of powdered saffron. Add 6 potatoes, sliced fairly thickly. Cover and simmer for 25 minutes. Meanwhile, clean some fresh sardines and remove the scales under the cold tap, wash them and wipe dry. When the potatoes are almost cooked, lay the sardines on top and cook for 7-8 minutes. Pour the liquid on to slices of stale French bread arranged in a soup tureen, place the sardines and potatoes in another dish. Sprinkle both soup and fish with chopped parsley.

BOUILLETURE Also known as bouilliture. An eel stew thickened with beurre manie and garnished with mushrooms, baby onions, and prunes, it is served with toast and sometimes quartered hard boiled (hard cooked) eggs. In Anjou, bouilleture is prepared with red wine, white wine is used in Pottou.

RECIPÉ

Angevin bouilleture

For 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) eel, allow 750 ml (1 ¼ pints, 3 ¼ cups) red wine, 10 medium-sized shallots, 40g (1 ½ oz, 3 tablespoons) butter, 1 glass brandy, 250 g (9 oz) sauteed button or wild mushrooms, 150 g (5 oz) glazed small onions, 250 g (9 oz) prunes, 2 tablespoons flour, a bouquet garni, salt and pepper.

Skin the eel and cut into thick slices. Peel and chop the shallots and soften in butter in a flame proof casserole. Add the slices of eel, brown them, then flame with the brandy. Season with salt and pepper, add the red wine, the bouquet garni and the prunes. Cook for 20 minutes, then remove and drain. Prepare some beurre manie, add it to the casserole and boil for 2 minutes, stirring constantly. Pour the sauce containing the prunes over the eel and garnish with the sauteed mushrooms and the glazed onions.

BOUILLEUR DE CRU In France a landowner, vine grower, fruit producer or owner of any other product that can be distilled who is allowed to carry out the distillation for himself or herself. The expression is much used in the Cognac region, where the large establishments may buy in brandy already distilled by a bouilleur de cru if they do not carry out the distillation process themselves. There are also some individual bouilleurs ambulants, who as the term implies, travel around with some kind of portable still and either operate this for anyone who hires them or rent it out.

In the past such people were kept busy, but large scale distilling is now done at centrally placed establishment, while improved methods of transport enable the product for distillation to be brought to the distillery without loss of time.

The more modest procedures of distillation can be and sometimes are carried out in a very small space, so that an individual type of spirit may be produced. The systems of taxation and controls, however, have complicated what was at one time quite a common way of life, and though the person entitled to be a bouilleur de cru may still proudly continue to practice, the occupation has now altered and is not followed by as many people as in former times.

BOUILLON (RESTAURANT) A type of cheap restaurant that was opened in France at the end of the 19th century, serving meals at one set price. Originally its main dish was boiled beef served with its stock but this ample and economical menu was later complemented by other dishes. In Paris, several chains of such restaurants were opened, including the Boulant and Chartier bouillons. One of these is still running, complete with its 1900 décor, sawdust on the floor. Thonet furniture and a menu written with purple ink.

BOUILLON (STOCK) The plain unclarified broth obtained from boiling meat or vegetables. It is used instead of water or white stock for cooking certain dishes and for making soups and sauces. Bouillon is the soul and quintessence of sauces, said F. Marin in 1739. The food industry has now developed solid or liquid extracts that can be mixed with water to obtain an instant meat or chicken stock.

RECIPES

Giblet bouillon

Put the giblets from 2 chickens in a pan with 2 litres (3 ½ pints, 9 cups) cold water and bring to the boil. Chop 4 carrots, 2 turnips, 3 leeks (white part only), 2 celery sticks and a small piece of parsnip. Skim the liquid, then add the vegetables together with an onion stuck with cloves, a bouquet garni, salt and pepper. Simmer gently until completely cooked (about 1 ½ hours) Just before serving, bone the giblets and return the meat to the bouillon, adding the juice of half a lemon and some chopped parsley. Adjust the seasoning.

If desired, this can be prepared in the Greek way by cooking 2 handfuls of rice in the stock and thickening with a beaten egg yolk, or preferably a whole beaten egg.

Herb broth

Use 40 g (1 ½ oz) fresh sorrel leaves, 20 g (¾ oz) lettuce leaves, 10 g (¼ oz) fresh chervil leaves, ½ teaspoon sea salt, 5 g (1/4 oz.1 teaspoon) butter and 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) water. Wash the vegetables and cook them in the water. Then add the salt and butter,Strain.

Beetroot (beet) or spinach leaves may be added to the stock if desired and, just before serving, parsley and lemon juice can be included.

Quick stocks

Home cooks no longer have stockpots bubbling away permanently on a corner of the stove. However, stock is still the basis of many recipes, so here are a few simple and quick recipes. Depending on the purpose of these stocks, a little thyme or parsley and salt and pepper may be added. Stock can be kept for 2-3 days in the refrigerator or frozen for longer storage good quality stock is also available from supermarkets, usually sold chilled, rather than in cub or powder form.

Quick beef stock Coarsely chop 100-150 g (4-5 oz) beef, a small carrot, a white leek, a small celery stick, a medium onion and a clove. Place all the ingredients in 1.5 litres (2 ¾ pints, 6 ½ cups) water and simmer gently for 20 minutes. Strain.

* (Quick veal stock Use the same method as for quick beef stock but use lean veal (haunch or shoulder) instead of beef.

- Quick chicken stock. Use the same method as for quick beef stock but with 400-500 g (14-18 oz.) chicken wings instead of the beef.

Vegetable bouillon

Use vegetables that are generally included in a stockpot carrots, onions, leeks, celery, garlic cloves, tomatoes and turnips are typical. Potatoes and parsnips tend to make the stock cloudy, strongly flavoured vegetables give the stock a distinctive flavour for example, broccoli, cauliflowers, swede (rutabaga) or fennel. Chop them, cook gently in butter, then pour boiling water over them to cover. A bouquet garni, salt and pepper (optional) are added and the broth is simmered until the vegetables are cooked. Alternatively, simply add all the ingredients to boiling water and simmer until cooked, either conventionally or using a pressure cooker, either conventionally or using a pressure cooker. In both cases, the broth must be strained before it can be served.

BOUKHA Also known as boukbra. A Tunisian spirit made from figs and drunk as a digestive throughout North Africa. The figs most commonly used are Hordas figs from Turkey.

BOULANGER The owner of a Parisian café in the Rue des Poulies who, in 1765, became the first restaurateur of the capital. Since he did not belong to the guild of caterers who sold sauces, cooked dishes and stews, Boulanger was entitled to offer his clients only drinks and restorative broths. One day in 1765 case against the caterers because Parliament had decreed that sheep's feet were not a stew. His success assured, Boulanger now added poultry au grossel to his menu. Diderot said that at the Boulanger establishment one was well but expensively fed Grimod de La Reyniere spoke of the first restaurateur of Paris, called Champ d' Oiseau, established in the Rue des Poulies in 1770, this may have been a nickname for Boulanger or an early competitor. A certain Roze de Chantoiseau set up in the same street, but his business foundered a few years later.

Boulanger is known only by this name some authorities claim that he was a baker whose real name has been lost.

BOULANGERE, A LA Oven baked dishes, usually lamb but sometimes fish, such as cod (originally cooked in the baker's oven, hence the term) garnished with potatoes and chopped onions, and sometimes topped with butter. At one time using the public oven was a common practice in Europe and America before domestic ovens became universal.

RECIPES

Cod a la boulangere

Season a piece of cod with salt and pepper and put it in an ovenproof dish. Thinly slice some potatoes and onions and arrange these around the fish, seasoning and adding a pinch of thyme and a pinch of crumbled bay leaf. Sprinkle with melted butter. Cook in a preheated oven at 190 °C (375 °F, gas 5) for 40 minutes. Cover the dish as soon as the fish turns golden to prevent it from drying out. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve, piping hot.

Herring a la boulangere

Clean 6 good herrings, preferably some with soft roes, and season with salt. Butter an ovenproof dish and place the herrings in it. Slice 400-500 g (14 –18 oz) potatoes and 150 g (5 oz.) onions and arrange around the herrings. Add salt, pepper, a pinch of thyme and a crumbled bay leaf. Sprinkle with about 40 g (1 ½ oz. 3 tablespoons) melted butter and cook in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for 30 minutes, basting from time to time. Cover the dish with foil if the potatoes begin to dry out in the final stages of cooking.

Loin of lamb (or pork) a la boulangere

Prepare and roast the meat as for a leg of lamb, allowing 22-25 minutes per 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) Add sliced potatoes and onions 30 minutes before cooking is complete.

Roast leg of lamb a la boulangere

Season a 2.5 kg (5 1/1 lb) leg of lamb with salt, pepper and garlic, and rub with butter. Roast in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425 °F, gas 7) for 40 minutes. Slice 675-800g (1 ½ -1 ¾ lb) potatoes and 300 g (11 oz.) onions. Arrange them round the joint, baste with the meat juices and about 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) melted butter, and season with salt and pepper. Reduce the oven temperature to 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) and cook for a further 40-50 minutes, basting four or five times. Finally, cover the dish with foil and leave it in the open oven for a good 15 minutes for the meat to relax.

Shoulder of lamb a la boulangere

Bone a shoulder of lamb and season the inside with salt and pepper. Roll and tie the meat, then season the outside with salt and pepper. Complete the preparation and roast as for leg of lamb, allowing 25-30 minutes per 1 kg (2 ¼ lb). Add the garnish of potatoes and onions 30 minutes before cooking is complete.

BOULE DE BALE A small, short, stocky sausage, made in Basle consisting of a fine mixture of pork meat and pork fat forced into a straight synthetic skin. After being lightly hot smoked, the sausage is heated to 70-75 °C (158-167 °F) and then quickly cooked. It is eaten cold with bread and mustard, in a salad grilled or in pastry.

BOULE-DE NIEGE A small French cake, shaped like a ball, which is completely covered with whipped cream. It is made of layers of Genoese sponge spread with butter cream. The name means snowball.

The same name is also used for a petit four the size of a large marble. It consists of either two small meringues sandwiched together with a cream or miniature cakes made of a rum baba dough filled with kirsch cream and decorated with white fondant icing.

Boule-de-neige is also the French name for a moulded round ice-cream dessert.

BOULETTE Minced (ground), chopped or pureed meat or fish shaped into a ball (hence the French name) before cooking. Boulettes are usually coated with breadcrumbs and then deep-fried, but they may also be sautéed or poached. They are often made to use up leftover meat or fish and may be served with tomato sauce or brown sauce.

BOULETTE D'AVESNES A French cow's milk cheese (50% fat content) made by mixing Maroilles cheese with parsley, tarragon and spices. Its reddish crust is washed in beer. A speciality of Thieraches, Boulette d' Avesnes is shaped by hand into a cone, 8 cm (3 ½ in) in diameter and about 10 cm (4 in) high. It has a very strong piquant flavour.

BOULETTE DE CAMBRAI A French cow's milk cheese with a soft smooth paste (45% fat content) flavoured with parsley, tarragon, chives and salt. It is shaped into a small ball 6-8 cm (2 ½ -3 ½ in) in diameter. It is not matured and has a milder flavour than the Boulette d' Avesnes. Calfu cheeses, also from the Cambrai region, have a stronger flavour and are made from either spoiled or old cheese mixed with herbs. They are not entitled to the Boulette' appellation. A similar type of aromatic, often strong smelting cheese is made in Belgium, especially in Charleroi and Romedenne. It is used to make cheese and leek flans.

BOUQUET The aroma produced by the evaporation of the volatile products evident in wine. It is one of the main elements – together with colour, fruitness and vinosity – that may enable the origin of a wine and, for the experienced, also its area and vintage to be identified.

Aronas are frequently described in terms of fruits, honey, nuts, spices or wood, depending on the age and style of each wine. Aeration, which consists of uncorking a bottle in advance, perhaps decanting it into a carafe, and gently turning the wine in the glass while warming the glass in the cupped hand, allows the bouquet to develop.

BOUQUET GARNI A selection of aromatic plants used to flavour a sauce or stock. They are usually tied together in a small bundle to prevent them from dispersing in the liquid and are removed before serving. A bouquet garni generally consists of 2-3 sprigs parsley, 1 sprig thyme, and 1-2 dried bay leaves, but its composition may vary according to local resources. Sage and rosemary go into the Italian mazzello and celery, leek and savory can be added or a strip of orange zest. In Provence rosemary is always included. In old French cookery, bouquets garnis contained cloves as well as herbs, and the whole bundle was wrapped in a thin slice of bacon.

Abouquet garni may also be enclosed in a small muslin (cheesecloth) bag.

BOUQUETIERE, A LA A French garnish composed of vegetables that are arranged in bouquets of different colours around large meat roasts, fried chicken or tournedos steaks. The term is also used for a macedoine of vegetables bound with bechamel sauce.

RECIPES

Barquettes ala bouquetiere

Bind a macedoine of vegetables with bechamel sauce and use the mixture to fill barquette pastry cases. Place a small bouquet of asparagus tips on top of each barquette, sprinkle with melted butter and heat through.

Bouchees ala bouquetiere

Bind a macedoine of vegetables with bechamel sauce. Gently heat some small bouchee cases in the oven and fill with the hot mixture. Garnish with chopped parsley and replace the lids on the bouchees.

Roast rib of beef a la bouquetiere

Prepare a bouquetiere garnish by cooking some small carrots, pod-shaped pieces of turnip, small green beans, artichoke hearts and small cauliflower florets in salted water. Drain the vegetables and warm them in clarified butter. Cook some peas and use them to stuff the artichoke hearts. Fry some small new potatoes in butter. Season a thick (two bone) slice of rib of beef with salt and pepper, brush with melted butter. Roast in a preheated oven at 240 °C(475 °F, gas 9) for about 16-18 minutes per 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) or until cooked as required. Drain the fat and place the meat on a serving dish surrounded by the vegetables arranged in bouquets. Deglaze the dish in which the meat was cooked with a mixture of Madeira and stock. Reduce and pour the meat juices over the rib of beef.

BOURDALOUE A French dessert created by a pastrycook of the Belle Epoque whose establishment was in the Rue Bourdaloue in Paris. It consists of halved William pears that are poached and then immersed in vanilla-flavoured frangipane cream. They are then covered with crushed macaroons, and glazed in the oven. A tart bearing the same name is filled with this dessert.

Bourdaloue is also the name of a similar dessert made with semolina or pudding rice and other poached fruits. Bombe bourdaloue is flavoured with anisette.

RECIPES

APRICOTS BOURDALOUE

Poach 16 apricot halves in a light vanilla-flavoured syrup. Drain and wipe with paper towels. Two thirds fill a flameproof dish with cooked dessert semolina. Arrange the apricot halves on top. Cover with a thin layer of semolina and top with 2 crushed macaroons and 1 tablespoon sugar. Place in a very hot oven for a short time to glaze the top. Serve with apricot sauce. Pudding (short grain) rice may be used instead of semolina and peaches or bananas instead of apricots.

Bombe bourdaloue

Line a mould with vanilla ice cream. Fill with an anisette-flavoured bombe mixture and freeze the ice cream until set. Turn out and decorate with candied violets.

BOURDELOT A baked apple or a pear enclosed in pastry from Normandy. The core is removed and the centre of the fruit is filled with caster sugar moistened with 1 teaspoon Calvados and topped with a knob of butter. The fruit is then placed on a square of shortcrust pastry or puff pastry that is large enough to wrap around it. The corners of the pastry square are folded and pressed together and glazed with egg yolk. Bourdelots are baked in the oven and may be eaten hot or cold.

BOURG A small town surrounded by vineyards of the Cotes de Bourg, situated on the right bank of the river Dordogne, close to its confluence with the Garonne. Most wine is good quality drinking red, made from Merlot grapes although a small amount of white is made from ugni Blanc and Colombard.

BOURGEOISE, A LA The French term used for dishes typical of family meals, without a set recipe, particularly those made with braised meat chuck, silverside knuckle of veal, leg of mutton and calf's liver. Such dishes normally include a garnish of carrots, small onions and pieces of bacon, which are usually arranged in bouquets around the meat.

RECIPES

Calf's liver a la bourgeoise

Mix together in a shallow dish 4-5 tablespoons brandy and 2 tablespoons oil, then add some chopped parsley, salt, pepper and a small amount of cayenne pepper. Marinate some pieces of bacon fat in this mixture for at least 30 minutes and then use to lard a piece of calf's liver. Tie the liver and braise it in a mixture of red wine and stock. Sauté some mushrooms in butter and glaze some small onions. When the liver is cooked, remove it to a serving dish with the mushrooms and onions, and keep warm. Skim the fat from the cooking liquid, strain and reduce to make a thick smooth sauce. Pour it over the liver and serve

Chicken a la bourgeoise

Season a chicken with salt and pepper and cook in butter in a covered dish in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F gas 4) for 30 minutes. Then add 100g (4 oz., 2/3 cup) diced fat bacon that has been lightly fried and 20 small carrots fried in butter. Cook for about another 35 minutes, basting the chicken with its own juice from time to time. Place the chicken and the garnish in a dish and keep warm. Deglaze the cooking pot with 7 tablespoons each of white wine and stock. Then strain the sauce and reduce it by about one third, adding about 20 glazed small onions, cooked in butter. Pour the sauce over the chicken and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

BOURGUEIL Red or rose wines from the Indre-et Loire region of Touraine, made from the Cabernet Franc grape (known in the locality as Breton) and up to 25% Cabernet Sauvignon. Rabelais celebrated them and put his legendary Abbey de Theleme in the region. The soils are partly sand, partly clay, producing light and fragrant wines, those from the flat sections make good drinking when young, while those from the slopes tend to be more full-bodied and benefit from moderate to long-term maturation. Crisp and delicate, Bourgueil wines somewhat resemble those of their neighbour, Chinon, although Bourgueil tends to smell of raspberries, Chinon of violets. St. Nicholas de Bourgueil, in the west of the region, produces light, fragrant, elegant wines.

BOURGUIGNONNE, A LA The French name for several dishes cooked with red wine (poached eggs, meat, fish and sautéed chicken) the most famous of which is boeuf bourguignon. They are usually garnished with small onions, button mushrooms and pieces of fat bacon. The term also applies to preparations inspired by the regional cuisine of Burgundy.

RECIPES

Bourgulgnonne sauce for fish

Prepare a fish stock using 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) red wine, the bones and trimmings of the fish to be used in the finished dish, a medium sized chopped onion, a small bouquet garni, a handful of mushroom peelings, salt and pepper. Strain, reduce to half its volume and thicken with some beurre manie according to taste.

Bourguignonne sauce for meat and poultry Cut 75g (3 oz) bacon into small strips, blanch, drain and cook in butter until golden brown. Finely chop some onions and mushrooms, mix together and cook 4-5 tablespoons of the mixture in butter, together with 2 generous tablespoons mirepoix. Stir in the diced bacon and transfer the mixture to the pan in which the chicken or meat has been cooked. Stir well and cook until golden brown. Add 2 tablespoons flour and stir well. Then add 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) red wine, 200 ml (7 fl oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) stock, a bouquet garni, salt and pepper. Reduce by two-thirds. When ready to use, sieve the sauce and thicken with 50 g (2 oz, $\frac{1}{4}$ cup) beurre manie.

Chicken a la bourguignonne

For a chicken weighing about 2 kg (4 $\frac{1}{2}$ lb) use 100 g (4 oz) bacon, cut into larding strips and then blanched. Peel 20 small onions, and clean and slice 20 mushrooms. Put the cleaned and trussed chicken in a hot flameproof casserole and gently colour the outside in 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter. Remove the chicken and fry the bacon, onions and mushrooms in the same casserole. Remove and add 2 tablespoons mirepoix, stirring well. Deglaze the casserole with 400 ml (14 fl oz, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ cups) red wine and an equal quantity of chicken stock, boil down by half and add a bouquet garni. Return the chicken to the casserole, bring to the boil, then cover and cook gently for 20 minutes. Add the prepared garnish of bacon, mushrooms and onions, together with salt and pepper. Bring to the boil, cover and simmer gently for a further 45 minutes, or until cooked.

Drain the chicken and its garnish and remove the bouquet garni. Add 1 tablespoon beurre manie to the juices in the casserole, stirring well for 2 minutes, adjust the seasoning and pour the sauce over the chicken.

BOURGUIGNOTTE, ALA In L Art de la cuisine franchise au XIV stock Curene gives a recipe for a sauce for freshwater fish that he calls a la bourguignotte.

Prepare a medium size eel, cut it into pieces and place the pieces in a saucepan together with 2 chopped onions, 225 g (8 oz, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) chopped mushrooms, 2 garlic cloves, a pinch of ground pepper, 2 shallots, a bouquet garni, a pinch of allspice, 4 rinsed anchovies and $\frac{1}{2}$ bottle Volnay wine. Simmer, allowing the sauce to reduce a little, then press a through a sieve. Return the sauce to the pan and add 275 ml (9 fl oz 1 cup) reduced espagnole sauce and 225 g (8 oz, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) fried mushrooms, together with their cooking liquor. Boil the mixture rapidly to reduce and add 1 glass of Volnay. When the sauce is sufficiently reduced, place it in a bain marie to keep it warm. Just before serving, add some crayfish butter, about 30 crayfish tails and the same number of white button mushroom.

BOURRICHE A long wicker French basket used for transporting shellfish, especially oysters. The baskets were once used to transport game and fish. The word is absorbed to describe the contents of the basket.

BOURRIDE A Provençal fish soup. After cooking, the liquid is strained and bound with aroli (garlic mayonnaise) The authentic bourride from Sete is made with monkfish, but elsewhere whiting, sea perch, grey mullet and red mullet are sometimes mixed together.

RECIPE

Bourride

Cut 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) monkfish into pieces and boil rapidly for 20 minutes in a mixture of 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{3}$ cups) water and an equal amount of white wine, together with the sliced white part of 1 leek, 2 chopped onions, 2 chopped carrots, 2 chopped garlic cloves, a little dried orange peel, salt, and pepper. When the fish is cooked, place each piece on a slice of stale bread and sprinkle with a little saffron. Strain the stock, reduce by half, remove from the heat and blend in some very thick aioli. Pour the sauce over the fish.

BOURRIOL A fairly thick French pancake made from a leavened batter of potato puree, wheat flour and buckwheat flour mixed with milk. It is a speciality of Auvergne.

BOUTEFAS A large sausage from the Vaud region of Switzerland, much appreciated in the French speaking part of Switzerland, made from pork meat and fat coarsely chopped and stuffed into a skin. Boutefas is gently poached for a long time and eaten as an accompaniment to sauerkrant and winter vegetables.

BOUTON DE CULOTTE A French goat's milk cheese that is classified as a soft paste cheese (40-45% fat content) but is eaten when it is very dry and brittle. Shaped like a truncated cone, with a greyish brown crust, it has a strong piquant flavour. The cheese is made in the Macon area and is also called Chevroton de Macon. Maconnert or Rougeret. It is often served at Beaujolais wine tastings.

BOUZOURAE A refreshing Arab drink made from dried melon seeds. These are grilled, ground, soaked in water and squeezed through fine cloth bags. The liquid is then sweetened and served very cold. It may also be used to make sorbets and water ices.

BOUZY A common of Montagne de Reims, France, which has given its name to the appellation of a light, delicate red wine with a bouquet of fruit.

BOWL A hemispherical container with little or no handle. A wide selection is used for kitchen utensils or tableware, for preparing, cooking or serving food. There is a strong European tradition for breakfast bowls. Traditionally these hold more than coffee cups and are used in France for holding coffee and for drinking breakfast breads. A small bowl with handles, called a bolce, is traditional for drinking cider in Normandy and Britany. The British breakfast bowl is deep enough to hold breakfast cereal and milk. Similar bowls are popular for desserts.

Small crystal, porcelain or metal bowls are used as individual finger bowls. A punch bowl is a very large container made of glass crystal or silver plate with a large ladle and possibly matching cups) used for serving punch, sangria or hot wine.

Bowls used as kitchen utensils may be wide and shallow or deep and serving in size from those small enough to hold a tiny amount of chopped flavouring ingredients to others large enough to mix generous quantities of ingredients for cakes or doughs. Some are designed to ease common kitchen tasks. These include a pastry bowl with a flat side, so that the bowl may be tipped comfortably over for handworking the contents, or a bowl with a lip for pouring. The classic British pudding basin is tapering in shape with a narrow base, widening and having a fairly deep external rim around the top. The rim allows string to be tied under it to keep a cloth or foil covering securely in place.

BRABANCONNE, ALA A French garnish made with typical produce from Brabant, Brussels sprouts, chicory and hops. These are served with large roast joints of lamb or mutton and also with tournedos (filet mignon) and sauteed noisettes. The vegetables are arranged in barquettes, coated with Mornay sauce and glazed. They are served either with small round croquette potatoes that have been lightly browned in butter or with creamed potatoes.

BRAGANZA a French garnish named after the fourth and last Portuguese dynasty, made of croquette potatoes and small braised tomatoes filled with bearnaise sauce. It is used as a garnish for tournedos or noisettes of lamb.

Braganza is also a dessert made with Genoese sponge cake. The cake is cut into two rounds and soaked in a syrup flavoured with orange liqueur. The rounds are sandwiched together with a layer of custard cream, to which has been added orange liqueur, chopped candied orange peel and butter. The cake is then completely covered with the same cream and decorated with candied orange peel.

BRAIN. This is a type of meat grouped with offal the internal organs of the animal, (4 oz) and sheep's brain, weighing about 100 g (5 oz) Both are barely tinged with pink Calf's brain, weighing 250-300 g (9-11 oz) has a similar flavour but is deeper in colour. Ox brain, weighing 500-675 g (18-24 oz) is finer and veined with red Pigs brain is rarely used Calf or ox brains, although less choice, are also less expensive, they are used as a filling for pies and timbales and also in meat loaves and gratins.

RECIPES

Preparation of brains

Wash the brains in cold running water, then remove the membranes and blood vessels that surround them. Soak them in cold water for 1 hour and wash them again. The brains may then be blanched in salted water, cooked gently in a court bouillon, or cut into thin slices and cooked directly in butter or oil.

Brains with noisette butter

Cook the prepared brains in a court-bouillon about 10 minutes for lamb's or sheep's brain and about 15 minutes for calf's brain. Cut calf's brain into even slices, leave smaller brains whole or divide them into two.

Melt some butter in a shallow frying pan until it turns golden, then add some lemon juice or vinegar and some capers. Reheat the sliced or whole brains in this butter and serve with the butter, sprinkled with chopped parsley.

Calf's brain in tomato baskets

Cook a prepared calf's brain in well flavoured court-bouillon. Drain and press under a light weight until cool, then cut into thin slices. Marinate in olive oil containing a pinch of chopped garlic, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Choose 3 large well shaped tomatoes, remove their stalks, wash and wipe them. Make several vertical cuts stretching two thirds of the way up the sides and slip a slice of brain into each slit. Serve with anchovyade.

Calves brains in red wine

Prepare 24 glazed small onions and 24 mushroom caps and saute them in butter. Prepare 750 ml (1 1/4 pints, 3 1/4 cups) court-bouillon with red wine and cook 2 prepared calves brains in the court bouillon. Remove, drain and cut into thin slices. Arrange these escalopes with the onions and mushrooms on a serving dish. Cover with foil and keep hot in the oven. Meanwhile, reduce the cooking liquid by half, then thicken it with 1 tablespoon beurre maine. Coat the brain and its garnishes with this sauce. Garnish with small triangular croutons fried in butter or oil.

Crumbed and fried calf's brain

Prepare and cook calf's brain in court bouillon for about 10 minutes. Drain and rinse in cold water, wipe the brain and press it lightly until cold. Cut into thin slices and marinate these for 30 minutes in 1 tablespoon cooking oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Coat the slices with egg and breadcrumbs, fry them and arrange on a serving dish with some fried parsley. Serve with a well seasoned tomato sauce.

Sauteed brain a la provencale

Cook either a prepared lamb's brain (whole) or a calf's brain (cut into even slices) in court-bouillon. Remove, drain, dust with flour and saute in olive oil. Sprinkle with chopped basil, garnish with black olives and serve with a sauce of tomatoes a la provencale.

BRAISING A moist cooking method using a little liquid that barely simmers at a low temperature on the top of the stove or in the oven.

When cooking was carried out directly on the hearth, braising meant cooking slowly in hot embers. The cooking container had a lid with a rim on which embers could be placed, so that heat came from both above and below.

In modern cookery, braising is used for semi tough cuts of meat, large poultry and also for some vegetables such as cabbage, chicory artichokes and lettuce.

As well as being long and slow, and therefore useful for rendering tough or firm foods tender, braising is a delicate method of cooking certain firm fleshed fish such as monkfish, carp and salmon.

* Braising techniques Braising joints or birds are often barded and marinated before cooking.. then they are browned in a little hot fat and arranged on a bed of lightly cooked vegetables, such as onions, carrots and celery. Liquid is added to cover the vegetables and come a short way up the joint or bird. The district pan is tightly covered to retain the moisture from the evaporating liquid. With long, slow cooking, the meat becomes tender and a full flavoured sauce is obtained.

When the food to be braised contains a lot of water particularly vegetables, it cooks mainly in its own juice and the minimum extra liquid is added.

The cooking liquid is chosen according to the type of food that is to be braised, it may be a strained marinade, white wine red wine or meat or fish stock. Sometimes a few chopped tomatoes alone provide sufficient moisture for braising. However, the liquid added at the beginning may not be sufficient to maintain the level of humidity required for long cooking some joints of meat require a cooking time of 5.6 hours. In this case liquid must be added during cooking it must be at the same temperature and should be added gradually and in small quantities to maintain a concentrated flavour.

When the cooking is finished the juice is strained, excess fat is removed and the liquor reduced if necessary. The sauce may be intensified by adding wine or spirits and boiling, or enriched with cream. Beurre manie may be added to thicken sauces in the final stage.

BRANCAS A French garnish for small joints of red meat, white meat and poultry, consisting of Anna potatoes and chiffonade of lettuce with cream. It was probably dedicated to Louis, a member of the Brancas family. A friend of Voltaire, Louis Brancas also gave his name to a brill dish and to a consomme.

RECIPES

Brill a la Brancas

Clean a brill weighing about 800 g (1 ¾ lb) and cut it into even sized pieces. Finely shred 2 large onions, the white part of 2 leeks and half a head of celery. Braise the vegetables for 10 minutes with 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter and a pinch of salt. Then add 125 g (4 ½ oz, 1 ½ cups) mushrooms, also finely shredded, and braise for a further 6-7 minutes.

Butter an ovenproof dish and season lightly with salt and pepper. Spread half the shredded vegetables in the dish. Arrange the pieces of brill in the dish so that they form the shape of the original fish, season with salt and pepper, and cove with the remaining vegetables. Add a little lemon juice, 200ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup) white wine and a bouquet garni. Dot with butter. Bring to the boil on top of the stove., then cook in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for about 15 minutes, basting once or twice, until the fish is tender.

Serve the cooked fish surrounded with tomato fondue, made by gently simmering 4 peeled and chopped tomatoes in butter for 30 minutes with 1 tablespoon chopped onion. Season the tomato fondue with salt, pepper and a little chopped parsley before spooning it around the fish.

This method of cooking, derived from brill a la Dugere, can be used for other flatfish and also for whiting and slices of hake.

Consomme Blancas

For 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{3}$ cups) consomme of beef or poultry, prepare a garnish using 2 tablespoons each of finely shredded lettuce and sorreil, finely shredded vegetables softened in butter and vermicelli poached in the consomme. Sprinkle with sprigs of chervil just before serving.

BRANDADE A puree of salt cod, olive oil and milk, which is a speciality of Languedoc and Provence. It does not include garlic, but in Marseille and Toulon crushed garlic is added to the dish, and even the croutons used as a garnish are rubbed with garlic. A similar preparation is made in many Mediterranean countries where dried cod is enjoyed, usually with oil and garlic. One of the best known is the Venetian barcala mantecato. However, most recipes include even in France, a potato puree, although this is not the true brandade. Some French chefs have enriched the preparation further by adding truffles or even crayfish ragout a La Nantua.

The word is derived from the Provencal verb brandar, meaning to stir. Adolphe Thiers was known to be passionately fond of brandade and his historian friend Mignet sent him pots of it from Nimes, which he ate alone in his library. Alphonse Daudet founded the Diners de la Brandade in a cafe in the Place de Odeon in Paris the meal cost 6 francs and included a brandade and two speeches.

RECIPES

Brandde sauce a la provencale

This sauce is not made with salt cod, but it is served with poached salt cod. Put 2 tablespoons thin allemande sauce 3 egg yolks, a pinch of grated nutmeg, a pinch of fine pepper, a pinch of crushed garlic, the juice of a large lemon and a pinch of salt into a saucepan. Stir continuously over a low heat until the sauce is smooth and velvety. Remove the pan from the heat and add (a tablespoon at a time) about 250 ml (8 fl oz, 1 cup) good Aix olive oil. Just before serving add the juice of a lemon and 1 tablespoon chopped blanched chervil.

Nimes brandade

Desalt 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) salt cod, changing the water several times. Cut the fish into pieces and poach it very gently in water for 8 minutes. Drain, then remove the bones and skin. Heat 200 ml (7 fl oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) olive oil in a thick flat based saucepan until it begins to smoke. Add the cod, then crush and work the mixture with a wooden spoon, while heating gently. When it forms a fine paste, remove the pan from the heat. Continue to work the brandade and, while stirring continuously, gradually add 400-500 ml (14-17 fl oz, 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ -2 cups) olive oil, alternating with 250 ml (8 fl oz, 1 cup) boiled milk or double (heavy) cream. Season with salt and white pepper. The result should be a smooth white paste with the consistency of potato puree. Pile the brandade into a dish and garnish with triangles of crustless bread fried in oil. It can also be put in the oven to brown, just before serving.

BRANDY A spirit distilled from wine, the best known being Cognac and Armagnac. The word is also used to denote a spirit distilled from certain fruits, such as kirsch, framboise or Mirabelle, and it is used more loosely to signify a liqueur made from fruits and berries, such as cherry brandy or apricot brandy. It is also a general term applied to distillates from the debris of wine, such as marc and the Italian grappa, and also to spirit distilled from cider, such as applejack, the American version of Calvados.

BRASSERIE Originally a brewery, a brasserie is a café or restaurant where beer, cider and other drinks are served. The distinction of all brasseries is that they serve a limited menu at any time of day and often until fairly late at night. A brasserie alsacienne is common in many French cities.

In countries where a lot of beer is consumed, there was at first little to distinguish the brasseries from inns. They had the same wooden benches and wooden tables, like the traditional brasseries found in Bavaria in Munich, one of the oldest is still in operation. In Paris, however, the refugees who came from Alsace-Lorraine, after the war of 1870, started a new fashion for brasseries. They became elegant places, and were as ornately decorated as the great cafes of the capital.

From 1870 to 1940, the brasseries of Paris were frequented by writers, artists, journalists and politicians, customers, could argue, drink, play chess, write and eat all at the same table. Among the establishments that have now disappeared are the Brasserie Pousset, once the rendezvous of journalists and artists, the Brasserie Steinbach, which was situated in the Latin Quarter and the brasserie in the Rue des Martyrs, frequented by Nadar, Baudelaire, Courbet and Manet. Those that have retained the turn of the century décor and atmosphere are Bofinger at the Bastille and Flo in the Passage des Petites Ecuries. Renewed interest in beer towards the end of the 20th century encouraged several brasseries to specialize in French and foreign beers. Some Belgian bars or academies of beer offer up to 300 different brands, mostly served with cold meats, cheese or even mussels.

BRATWURST A fine German uncured sausage with a coarse filling of pork and pork fat, sometimes with veal. There are many regional variations in size and seasoning, usually named for the town or origin. Bratwurst can be grilled or boiled and are often served with sauerkraut.

BRAWN Also known as head cheese, this is a charcuterie product of meat from a pig's head set in aspic from the reduced cooking liquor. Brawn is well flavoured with seasoning ingredients and/or herbs, and set in a mould, which may be as simple as a small bowl or basin. The brawn is cut into slices and eaten as a first course or with bread and salad for a light meal. In French brawn is also known as pate de tele and fromage de cochon.

BRAZIL NUT A large nut with a very hard, brown three sided shell from one of the tallest forest trees, exported by Brazil and Paraguay. The white kernel can be eaten as a dessert nut or used in cooking.

BREAD A basic food made from a flour and water dough, normally with yeast, which is baked in the oven. When yeast is used as the raising agent, it gives bread its characteristic texture. No other food is so redolent of myth, tradition and rite as bread. Central to meals until almost the end of the second millennium (more so than meat) it is indeed the staff of life. The breaking of the bread is central to the Christian sacrament and our daily bread is a euphemism for food. The custom of signing loaves with a cross before baking or making the sign of the cross before cutting bread, continues in parts of Europe where religion strongly influences everyday customs, such as southern Italy.

The communal bread oven was a focal point for many communities as domestic ovens were not universal until the 19th century or, in southern Europe, until the 20th century. The supply of bread or lack of it has long been of concern to governments, ever since its link with civil unrest during Roman times, when the people were promised bread and circuses.

History.

Breadmaking dates back to at least 9000 BC. The first breads were cooked on heated bakestones, and many of this type still survive. The invention of leavened bread is attributed to the Egyptians, who made bread from millet and barley. They may have discovered fermentation by chance, when a piece of dough had become sour. At the time of the Exodus, the Hebrew did not take with them any leaven, hence the tradition of unleavened bread to commemorate the crossing of the Red Sea.

The Greeks cooked loaves made of rye or oats, or sometimes wheat on a grid or in a kind of oven. The Romans often flavoured their bread with the seeds of poppy, fennel or cumin, or with parsley and they cooked it in household ovens made of brick and earth. The use of bread spread throughout the Roman empire. Rotary hand querns, for producing a fine milled flour, appeared in Spain and spread during the 1st AD. The Gauls kneaded barley beer into flour to make dough and obtained a well risen bread of good quality.

It was in the Middle Ages that the bakery trade began to develop, from this time, bread became very varied and many different kinds were produced. These included hall bread, for distinguished guests, hulled bread intended for servants, whole meal bread, with a well cooked crust, kept for making breadcrumbs, and trencher bread, used as plates for meat (subsequently) given to the poor or to dogs). Soft or queen's bread was enriched with milk and egg yolk. German wheat bread had a very light coloured crumb, chapter bread was flat and very hard, fine, white Gonesse and Melun loaves were supplied for a long time to the best bakeries of Paris, and variegated bread was made of alternate layers of brown and white bread.

In the 17th century a new method of fermentation was developed, using milk, salt and beer barn, to manufacture finer loaves made in long moulds. Generally, Segovia, bread a bread a la marechale and horned bread. For a long time, the quality of bread depended on the flour used and therefore on its colour white bread for the rich, black bread for the poor. The principal government concern was to prevent adulteration of flour, and therefore bread.

In 1840 the Viennese oven was introduced to France by a man called Zang, secretary of the Austrian embassy in Paris. Introducing moisture into the oven using high pressure steam jets caused the bread to expand rapidly, giving the maximum surface area and a thin golden crust when baked. The bakery used Viennese methods, kneading wheat flour with milk and it started a tradition of fine patisserie, known in France as viennoiserie. More conspicuously, it produced the long loaves, pandering to the Parisian taste for the maximum crisp crust, that have become the classic French loaves.

Oven temperatures and times affect both the crumb and the thickness and quality of the bread crust. Humid conditions, with very slow baking also help very heavily flours, such as used in the German Kastenbrot breads, to rise. Manipulating all these factors, as well as the careful choice of ingredients, is part of the baker's art, developed over generations and throughout the world. It gives a huge spectrum of choice.

Yeast breads Strong plain (bread) flour is the basis for most yeast doughs. It differs from ordinary flour in that it has a high gluten content. Gluten is a protein found in some grain, particularly wheat. The gluten content varies considerably according to the type of wheat and its area of cultivation for example, wheat from northern countries, like Canada, contain more gluten than wheat from southern countries. Wheat with a high gluten content is referred to as hard wheat. Rye and barley do not contain as much gluten, and flours made from these grains are often mixed with a proportion of wheat flour for making bread dough.

Gluten is important because it gives the dough elasticity. When combined with water or similar liquid and kneaded, the gluten becomes tough and stretchy. The dough becomes elastic and springy, in which state it traps the gas produced by fermenting yeast and rises, developing the characteristic light texture full of tiny holes. Yeast dough made with low gluten or soft flour of the type used for general cooking is not sufficiently elastic to trap gas from fermenting yeast well and thus expand or rise, it is also likely to collapse during baking.

Traditionally, dough is kneaded by pushing and folding for about 10 minutes to develop the gluten. Then it is left to rise, knocked back, shaped and left to rise a second time. The second rising is known as proving. Warmth is important for the yeast to ferment and the dough to rise quickly however at a low temperature, such as in the refrigerator, bread will still rise over many hours. Breads made with wholemeal flour, added bran or non wheat flours tend not to rise as much as white bread and the process is slower. Added ingredients, such as butter, eggs, sugar and milk, reduce the elasticity of the dough and retard rising.

Sourdough Breads Historically French pain de campagne and many of the older types of bread are made with natural leaven or sourdough rather than yeast. In a warm place, flour and water will ferment over a period of produce a starter dough which can be used as a raising agent for a larger batch of dough. In a regular baking sequence, a little dough is kept back from each batch to start the next Sourdough bread are not as light as yeasted breads, they have a closer texture and may have a characteristically tangy flavours.

French sourdough breads, called pain au levain, are characterized by their thick crust, spongy crumbs and sour sweet flavour. One famous modern sourdough is that prepared in San Francisco, where local bacilli or yeasts come from the Bay area to give the bread a characteristic taste.

Making bread commercially. Bread making comprises three main operations, largely mechanical, kneading, fermentation and baking.

Kneading . This combines the water, yeast or leaven, and flour, with a little salt to improve the final taste, into a homogeneous mixture. In the past, kneading was done entirely by hand. Modern bakeries use mechanical kneading, and ingredients are added to the dough to shorten the process of kneading and rising. However, the results obtained by traditional methods are often preferred and premium breads are made to such standards.

Fermentation. This occurs at a flavourable temperature when a raising agent is mixed into the flour and water dough. In endogenous fermentation a little of the leaven is reserved from one day's dough and added to the next batch. In exogenous fermentation, the raising agent is industrial yeast.

The prime purpose of fermentation is to make the bread lighter, it also gives the bread its characteristic texture, appearance and smell. Traditional slow fermentation with leaven gives bread a slight acidity. The yeasts ferment with sugars in the damp hot dough to produce alcohol and carbon dioxide, which forms gaseous bubbles that raise the dough.

The first stage of fermentation takes place in the kneading trough. The dough is subsequently weighted and shaped into loaves and again left to rise until it has doubled its volume, called proving. The surface may then be scarified and the bread is ready to be baked.

Baking. On a large commercial scale baking is as technically advanced as the mixing, kneading and fermenting. Vast ovens with rotating baking racks process a high volume of loaves at controlled temperature, levels. Traditional cooking using a wood fire is still preferred by some. This may be in a domed brick oven where the fire is allowed to die down and the bread is cooked by the heat retained in the walls.

The loaves are put in the oven as quickly as possible with the aid of a wooden shovel with a very long handle. When cooked and a good colour, they are taken out of the oven and placed in the cooling off room, ventilated but without draughts, to cool to room temperature. The bread loses its humidity before being put on the shop shelves or packaged.

Daily Bread. In many countries, bread is present on the table at every meal and remains there to be consumed with all the courses, to accompany almost all dishes, including a dessert of fruit and cheese. Concern about bread quality during two World Wars raised the quality of bread in industrialized countries. The traditional of bread in industrialized countries. The traditional baker's targets of whiteness and lightness which were automatically equated with wholesomeness, have been balanced by concern for retaining the food value of the grain. The message about the benefits of wholemeal bread was preached in America by the Rev. Sylvester Graham, a 19th century Massachusetts clergyman.

Most bread should be served fresh but not hot from the bakery oven Rye bread, however should be slightly stale, and large farmhouse loaves are best left until the day after they have been baked. Slice loaves just before serving. The slices should not be too thin in order to retain all the flavour of the bread, and in many countries there is a tradition of braiding bread. Baguettes and other long loaves should be cut in small diagonal sections.

Types of Bread. Made from wheat, rice, maize or rye. Western style bread is usually baked in the oven but in Africa and Asia, some breads are fried baked in earthenware vessels or steamed.

Yeasted flat pocket breads, such as kboliz Arabi are well known outside the Middle East as white or wholemeal pitta, Lavash is the most widely eaten and also the most ancient Middle Eastern bread. Thin, brittle and some what craps, in 60 cm (2 ft) rounds, it is classically cooked in a saf with wood chippings and carmel dung. The Punjabi naan is a white flour, yeasted flat bread enriched with a little ghee its tear-shaped comes from being slapped on the side of a tandoor oven and baked partly hanging vertically.

White Bread is traditional in Europe. The classic white loaf is the round, firm crumbed French pain de campagne. The 2 kg (4 ½ lb) pain poilane thick crusted, made with organic flour and sourdough, handshaped and wood baked, marks a conscious return to this tradition in the last decades of the 20th century Similar European breads incude the bogaza of Castilian Spain.

The French stick, or Parisian baquette, dates only from the 19th century, and it is a very individual yeast bread, because it uses soft wheat flour instead of the usual strong flour made from hard wheat. It became so fashionable in the French provinces in the 20th century that many traditional French breads began to be forgotten.

Traditional British breads are frequently distinguished by their shape the tin loaf the bloomer the coburg and the cottage loaf . The Greak daktyla is another interesting shape, made of overlapping sections that pull into portions, and with a thick crust sprinkled generously with sesame seeds.

The sandwich loaf, is a wider, square tin shaped, bread. This has been used as the model on which inferior quality pres-sliced white loaf has an even, thin crust and good quality crumb which gives good thin slices. Called pain de mie in France, it is baked in a closed tin.

Rolls and small Bread. The Swiss, with the reputation of being europe's best bakers, have contributed several rolls to the restaurant table, known by their shapes among them the St. Gall quatrefoil, cornell and the rounded kaiser roll. The kaiser has five sections like a star, the points of which are flipped over to the centre and pressed down with the thumb. Bread sticks are another example of a small bread, particularly Italian grissini, Greek sesame coated bread sticks and the salted German Salzstange, which has the same function as a pretzel, to stimulate thirst.

Slashed oval rolls include the French and Belgian pistolet, and the more elaborate Amrican Parker House roll. Made from an oval creased along the centre, brushed with melted butter and with as edges pressed, this pod shape features plenty of extra crust.

Sweet Breads and teabreads. There are many types, including the Welsh bara brith, a speckled, spiced fruit loaf, the Scots Seikirk bannock, and Irish barn brack. Malt bread is sweetened with malt. All these are eaten sliced and buttered. The Belgian cramique, Alsacian bireuweek, and Swiss bimbroil all contain fruit- the latter has dried pears and prunes.

Holiday Breads or enriched breads. These exist in most countries. Notable ones include the Kugelhopf of Alsace Germany and Austria, the plaited Jewish challah, and the Italian panestone. Christmas breads include Genoa's pandolce, a shallow dome stuffed with crystallized pumpkin, citron and muscat grapes, and the Verona pandoro which is an iced golden star. The Greek Eastern bread is tsoureki, made from a butter enriched dough, flaboured with caraway or lemon and with a dyed egg nestling in its centre.

RECIPES

White bread

Blend 15 g (½ oz, 1 cake) fresh compressed) yeast with a little warm water taken from 400 ml (14 ft oz. 1 ¾ cups) Add more of the water to thin the paste to a milky consistency, then cover and leave in a warm place until frothy. Alternatively, dissolve 1 teaspoon sugar in the warm water, then sprinkle on 2 teaspoons standard (regular) dried yeast. Leave in a warm place for 10 minutes until dissolved and frothy.

Mix 675 g (1 ½ lb 6 cups) strong white (bread) flour and 2 teaspoons salt and rub in 15 g (1/2 oz, 1 tablespoon) butter. Add the yeast liquid to the dry ingredients and mix to form a firm dough, adding a little extra flour if it is too sticky. Turn the dough on to a lightly floured surface and knead until smooth and elastic. Shape the dough into a ball, place inside a large oiled plastic bag, and leave to rise in a warm place until doubled in size. Remove from the plastic bag, then knock back. Shape into loaves or rolls. Cover with a cloth and leave to rise until doubled in size.

Bake in a preheated oven at 200 °C(400 °F, gas 6) for about 40 minutes for a large loaf, 30-35 minutes for small loaves, or 15-20 minutes for rolls.

Using dried yeast Always follow the packet instructions, as products vary. As a guide, standard (regular) dried yeast should be sprinkled over lukewarm water to which a little sugar has been added. Cover and leave, without stirring, until the yeast granules have absorbed the water, dissolved and become frothy. Then stir well.

Easy blend dried (active dry) yeast should be added to the flour and other dry ingredients before any liquid is added. The liquid should be slightly hotter than normal hand hot, rather than lukewarm and the dough should then be mixed and kneaded as usual.

Fast action easy blend dried (quick rising dry) yeast should be mixed with the dry ingredients and the water and dough prepared as for easy blend dried yeast. After kneading, the dough should be shaped and proved this yeast requires one rising, not two.

Wholemeal bread

Blend 25 g (1 oz, 2 cakes) fresh (compressed) yeast with a little warm water taken from 400 ml (14 fl oz 1 ¾ cups) Add more of the water to thin the paste to a milky consistency, then cover and leave in a warm place until frothy. Alternatively, dissolve 1 teaspoon sugar in the warm water and sprinkle on 3 teaspoons standard (regular) dried yeast. Leave in warm place for 10 minutes or until dissolved and frothy.

Mix together 675 g (1 ½ lb, 6 cups) strong plain (bread) wholemeal flour and 2 teaspoons salt. Rub in 15 g (½ oz, 1 tablespoon) butter. Add the yeast liquid and mix to form a firm dough, adding a little extra flour if it is too sticky. Knead thoroughly until smooth and elastic. Shape the dough into a ball and place inside a large oiled plastic bag and leave to rise until doubled in size. Knock back (punch down) and shape into loaves or rolls. Cover with a cloth and leave to rise once more.

Bake in a preheated oven at 200 °C(400 °F, gas 6) for about 40 minutes for a large loaf, 30-35 minutes for small loaves, or 15-20 minutes for rolls.

Bacon bread

Grill (broil) 300 g (11 oz) smoked bacon, then chop it. Prepare a basic bread dough using 500 g (18 oz. 4 ½ cups) strong (bread) wholemeal flour with 300 ml (½ pint 1 ¾ cups) water and 15 g (1/2 oz, 1 cake) fresh (compressed) yeast, kneading until smooth and elastic. Work in the bacon and leave the dough to rise until doubled in volume. Shape the dough into an oblong and place it in a 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) earthenware dish. Cover and leave to rise until doubled in volume. Bake in a preheated oven at 200-220 °C (400-425 °F, gas 6-7) for about 25 minutes. Turn out and leave to cool on a wire rack.

Milk rolls

Place 500 g (18 oz. 4 ½ cups) sifted strong plain (bread) flour on the worktop (work surface) and make a well in the centre. Add a generous pinch of salt 20 g (¼ oz. 1 ½ tablespoons) caster (superfine) sugar and 125 g (1/4 oz, 1 ½ tablespoons) caster (superfine) sugar and 125 g (4 ½ oz, ½ cup) softened butter. Mix the ingredients, then moisten with 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) tepid milk.

Work together, then add 200 g (7 oz) white bread dough. Combine them, then form into a ball, cover it with a cloth and leave to rise, sheltered from draughts, for 1 2hours. Then divide the dough into about 20 balls of about 50 g (2 oz) Make a cross shaped cut on the top, glaze them with egg and bake in a preheated oven at 200-200 °C (400-425 °F gas 6-7) for about 25 minutes. This type of Vienna bread is served at breakfast or tea.

Pains aux raisins

Soak 100 g (4 oz $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) currants in warm water to cover for at least 1 hour. Mix 15 g (1/2 oz, 1 cake) fresh (compressed) yeast with 3 tablespoons milk and 3 teaspoons flour and leave to rise in a warm place for about 30 minutes.

Put 300 g (11 oz 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ cups) strong plain (bread) flour in an earthenware bowl, add the yeast mixture, then add 2 tablespoons caster (superfine) sugar, 3 eggs and 1 teaspoon salt. Knead for 5 minutes, slapping the dough flat on the worktop (work surface) to make it elastic. Sprinkle with 3 tablespoons milk and mix well. Soften 150 g (5 oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) butter and blend it with the dough. Drain the currants and work them into the dough. Knead for a few minutes, then cover and leave to stand for 1 hour in a warm place, or until doubled in volume.

Shape the dough into long thin rolls, coil each roll into a spiral and place on a baking sheet. Cover loosely and leave to rise until doubled in volume. Glaze with beaten egg and sprinkle with sugar. Bake in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for about 20 minutes, or until well browned and cooked through. Serve lukewarm or cold.

BREADCRUMBS Fresh breadcrumbs are made from fresh bread and are soft and large crumbed. Dried breadcrumbs are finer, made from bread that has been dried in the oven or is slightly stale, or by drying fresh breadcrumbs and crushing them. Browned breadcrumbs are dried crumbs that are lightly toasted. Breadcrumbs are used in cooking for coating food or as a topping for dishes. They are also used for binding mixtures or thickening soups or sauces.

Coating with breadcrumbs. Breadcrumbs are used to coat delicate foods before frying, typically fish or seafood, chicken breast fillets, croquettes or fritters. Dry white crumbs do not absorb as much fat as fresh crumbs, they produce fine crisp coating and turn golden on cooking. The food is first dusted with flour, then dipped in beaten egg and finally coated with breadcrumbs. This gives a secure coating, ideal for soft mixtures which may melt during frying, ideal for soft mixtures which may melt during frying. Less delicate items can be moistened with melted butter or milk before a fine layer of crumbs is pressed on this is useful when baking or grilling the food. Dishes coated with fresh breadcrumbs must be cooked slowly so that the crumbs do not brown before the foods are properly cooked.

BREADFRUIT A tree 15-20 m (50-65 ft) high that grows in the Sunda Islands, Polynesia and India, and was introduced to the West Indies by Captain Bligh of the Bounty. Its egg-shaped fruits have a thick greenish warty skin, weigh from 300 g-3 kg (11 oz 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ lb) and form a staple part of the diet in the tropics. The white flesh has a texture like bread and its flavour is similar to that of the globe artichoke. When peeled and the seeds removed, the breadfruit is cooked in water or simmered in a stew. The large seeds are also edible and have an artichoke flavour.

BREAD SAUCE an English sauce made with breadcrumbs and seasoned milk. It traditionally accompanies roast game and poultry.

RECIPE

Bread sauce

Place 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ cups) milk, a bay leaf and a small onion stuck with 2-3 cloves in a saucepan and bring to the boil. Set aside to infuse for 15 minutes. Remove the onion and bay leaf, add 5-6 tablespoons fresh white breadcrumbs, then stir over a low heat until boiling. Gradually beat in 25 g (1 oz 2 tablespoons) butter, away from heat, and season to taste with salt and pepper before serving hot. The sauce may be thinned down with a little cream if desired.

BREAKFAST The first meal of the day, which literally breaks the fast of the night. Two quite different breakfast traditions can be traced the first hot drink of the day, and the first meal of the day, which is much more substantial. In France this is the petit déjeuner, milky coffee with bread in some form, now commonly called the continental breakfast, and often bought in a café, on the way to work. In hot climates this is often the only time milk is consumed by adults. Other simple foods that are popular for breakfast include fresh fruit and yogurt.

The British breakfast has fried eggs and bacon at its foundation, perhaps with fried bread, grilled tomatoes and/ or mushrooms. Kippers and various eggs dishes are also traditional. Other favorites are grilled kidneys and the rice, smoked fish and egg dish known as kedgeree. A traditional full breakfast includes a first course of cereals much or fruit such as a half grapefruit or prunes, and an end with toast with marmalade, the whole accompanied by coffee or tea. There are regional variations, such as fried cakes of laver bread with bacon in Wales and black pudding with bacon and egg in Lancashire and Ireland.

Lighter alternatives include poached eggs with haddock, eggs on toast boiled eggs, or savouries such as grilled mushrooms on toast. In fact, on an everyday basis, most people have a far lighter breakfast such as cereal with milk, fruit or toast. A cooked British breakfast is very much a weekend or holiday meal.

America has its own breakfast tradition, with freshly squeezed orange juice, eggs, bacon, ham or excellent peppery pork breakfast sausages as well as toast and jam. Waffles pancakes and muffins also feature for breakfast. Brunch is a substantial alternative to breakfast, served later in the morning and combining lunch with the first meal of the day.

Before the arrival of coffee in Europe, the first drink of the day was soup, and this continued well into the 19th century. Vichyssoise was created when Louis Diat remembered the breakfast leek soup of his childhood. The Basque zurrapatuna in Spain is in this tradition, as is the sweetened gramalka of Poland, made with beer. The British seem to have preferred beer with bread on the side. A pleasant Italian variation albeit a more modern one is coffee with bread and lemon sorbet.

The workman's second breakfast at about 10.30 a.m., is well recognized in all Mediterranean countries for those who dine at 2 or 3 p.m.. In Germany this is the Zareites Frubstick at which Frubstuckslase is eaten.

In the late 18th century the English bread and beer breakfast was joined by cold meat and cheese to become a full blown meal, with ham, ox (beef) tongue and omelettes served in Victorian times. Prime Minister Gladstone gave political breakfasts where considerable quantities of food were eaten.

Cereal breakfasts Porridge made from oats is a traditional Scottish breakfast dish, but quick breakfast cereals are comparatively modern. In a clinic in Battle Creek, Michigan. Dr. John Kellogg came up with cornflakes, made from maize. Dr. Max Bircher Benner invented muesli at his clinic in Zurich, combining fruits, nuts and soaked oats. He recommended the beneficial effects of raw food.

Granola is a variation on muesli in which oats, and sometimes wheat and rye, is combined with various nuts, seeds, dried fruits, honey or brown sugar and oil and baked. The mixture is then allowed to cool, and is eaten as a cold cereal.

BREAM A freshwater fish of the family Cyprinidae found across Europe in pools and slow rivers and in the Baltic. It is 30-60 cm (12-24 in) long, has a greenish brown back and its sides and belly are grey with shiny gold spots. Bream was often used in medieval recipes. Although its flesh is soft, somewhat tasteless and full of bones, it is used for matelodes. In France and braised dishes, in the same way as carp. Only the large river bream are used, before being cooked they are soaked in fresh water to eliminate the taste of silt, for they rest and feed at the bottom of rivers.

RECIPE

Grape harvest bream

Clean a 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) bream and season the inside with salt and pepper. Butter an ovenproof dish and sprinkle the bottom with chopped shallots, add 2 thyme sprigs and a bay leaf cut into four and lay the bream on top. Koisten with white wine (about 250 ml 8 fl oz. 1 cup) Cook in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F, gas) for about 20 minutes, basting the fish 3 or 4 times. Meanwhile, peel some large grapes, removing the seeds and chop some parsley. When the bream is cooked, drain and keep warm. Strain the cooking liquor into a saucepan, add 7 tablespoons double (heavy) cream and reduce by a quarter. Adjust the seasoning. Add 1 teaspoon beurre manie and 1 teaspoon lemon juice (optional) Heat the grapes in the sauce then pour the sauce over the bream. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

BREAST a cut of meat consisting of the muscle of the chest. In beef this cut is known as brisket and is boiled, pot-roasted, salted or used for minced (ground) meat.

Breast of mutton or lamb is slow roasted whole, boned and stuffed. It can also be marinated or cooked in stock and then cut into pieces for frying. Grilling, (broiling) or baking in a barbecue sauce, or for stews or soups.

Breast of veal – a fairly lean cut may be sauteed or braised (boned and stuffed)

Fresh breast of pork is used in ragouts or can be grilled or baked. When soaked in brine, it is known as salt or pickled pork. When cured salted and sometimes smoked (too) belly pork becomes streaky bacon used for rashers and lardons.

Breast of chicken comprises the two pieces of white meat attached to the breastbone. When served with muffles, chaud froid or with a sauce, it is known as the supreme. Breast of chicken may be diced or chopped and used in the preparation of mixed salads or as a garnish for consomme.

RECIPE

Braised breast of veal à l'alsacienne

Open a breast of veal and remove the bones without piercing the flesh. Make a forcemeat by mixing 500 g (18 oz. 2 ¼ cups) fine sausage meat, 250 g (9 oz. 2 ¼ cups) dry breadcrumbs (soaked in milk and well drained), a bunch of chopped parsley, 1 crushed garlic clove. 125 g (4 ½ or 1 ½ cups) sliced mushrooms fried gently in butter, salt, pepper and a little grated nutmeg, or mixed spice. Stir the mixture well until it is smooth. Stuff the veal with this forcemeat and sew up. Cook as for braised stuffed breast of veal, but only for 1 hour.

Prepare some sauerkraut à l'alsacienne. Add the stuffed party cooked breast of veal 30 minutes before the sauerkraut has finished cooking. Remove the string from the veal and serve piping hot with the meat cut in slices.

Braised stuffed breast of veal

Open a breast of veal and remove the bones without piercing the flesh. Season inside and out with salt and pepper. Prepare the forcemeat as follows, soak 400 g (14 oz. 3 ½ cups) dry breadcrumbs in milk and squeeze, then mix with 2 chopped garlic cloves, a chopped bunch of parsley. 250 g (9 oz) mushroom duxelles, 2 egg yolks, 100 g (4 oz 2/3 cup) chopped onions and 2 chopped shallots fried pepper. Stuff the breast and sew up the opening.

Line the bottom and halfway up the sides of a lightly buttered casserole with pork rind from which most of the fat has been removed. Finely dice a carrot, the white part of 1 leek, 3 celery sticks and 1 onion seat them together in 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter in a covered pan for about 10 minutes and then spread them over the rind in the casserole. Brown the stuffed breast on both sides in 25g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter and place it in the casserole. And half a boned calf's foot and 2 tablespoons tomato puree (paste) diluted with 200 ml (7 fl. oz, ¾ cup) dry white wine and an equal quantity of stock.

Cover the casserole and bring to the boil. Then cook in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for 1 ¾ hours. Drain the meat. Skim the fat from the cooking stock, strain it, then reduce by one third. Pour it over the meat. Braised spinach in butter or braised artichoke hearts may be served as a garnish.

Stuffed breasts of lamb

Open 2 breasts of lamb or mutton and remove all the rib bones without piercing the meat. Rub the flesh with garlic, and season both the inside and outside with salt and pepper. Prepare a forcemeat by mixing 300 g (11 oz, 2 ¼ cups) dry breadcrumbs (soaked in milk and well strained) with 2 beaten eggs, 150 g (5 oz, 2/3 cup) finely diced ham, 150 g (5 oz, 2/3 cup) finely diced ham, 150 g (5 oz, 1 2/3 cups) diced mushrooms, some chopped parsley and garlic, and salt and pepper. Spread the stuffing on one piece of meat and cover with the second one, with the skin sides outwards. Sew up all round the edge.

Line a lightly buttered casserole with pork rind from which the fat has been removed, then add 2 sliced onions and 2 sliced carrots. Place the meat in the casserole, add a bouquet garni, cover and cook gently on the top of the stove for about 20 minutes. Add 200 ml (7 fl. oz, ¾ cup) dry white wine and boil down to reduce. Then add 100 ml (4 fl. oz, 7 tablespoons) tomato sauce seasoned with garlic and diluted with 200 ml (7 fl. oz, ¾ cup) stock. Cover and cook in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425 °F, gas 7) for about 45 minutes.

When the meat is cooked, remove the string, slice and arrange on the serving dish. Keep warm, skim the fat from the cooking liquid, reduce if necessary to blend and thicken it, and pour over the meat. Serve piping hot.

BREDES The name given in some of the old French colonies of the West Indies to a dish made from the leaves of various plants cooked with bacon and spices and served with rice à la créole. The most commonly used leaves are those of white or green cabbage, watercress and lettuce, although spinach, manioc leaves and pumpkin shoots are used as well. A variation of this dish, bred, is a mixture of pounded cassava leaves boiled with fish and coconut.

RECIPE

Watercress bredes

Put some oil or lard in a cast iron casserole and fry 150 g (5 oz, 2/3 cup) diced bacon and a chopped onion in the fat until brown. Crush 2 garlic cloves with some salt and a peeled, seeded, crushed tomato. Add them to the casserole. When the mixture is quite hot, add 275 ml (9 fl. oz, 1 cup) water. Slightly reduce the liquid and add a bunch of washed watercress. Cook for about 30 minutes, washed watercress. Cook for about 30 minutes. Serve with a separate dish of rice à la créole.

Use the same recipe to make lettuce bredes, but soak the leaves in cold water beforehand. Blanch spinach leaves before making bredes.

BREHAN A French garnish for large cuts of meat, consisting of artichoke hearts filled with broad (fava) bean puree, cauliflower florets, hollandaise sauce and potatoes with parsley.

BRESAOLA Salted and then air dried meat, eaten raw, and unusual in that it is one of the rare preserved meats made from beef rather than pork. It is a speciality of Valtellina in Lombardy and is ready to eat after about three months when it is a very dark red as an bors d'oeuvre. Sliced very thinly it is dressed at the last moment with a few drops of olive oil, lemon juice and black pepper.

BRESOLLES An old French meat dish, consisting of alternating layers of meat and forcemeat. The forcemeat is made with lean ham, onions, chives, mushrooms and a little garlic, seasoned with salt, pepper and nutmeg, and moistened with a dash of olive oil. A layer of forcemeat on the bottom of a buttered earthenware casserole is covered with thin slices of veal, beef or mutton, then the layers are alternated to fill the casserole. The casserole is covered and baked, then turned out and served with Madeira sauce and braised chestnuts.

Controversy surrounds the origin of the recipe, which is traditionally attributed to the head cook of the Marquis de Bresolles in 1742. Menon gave a variation under the name of brezolles (strips of veal with shallots) and Austin de Croze describes bresolles as a dish from Ages (round slices of veal with vendelaise sauce). The word could be derived from the verb braiser (to braise) or from the Italian brachoda.

BRESSANE, A LA A French term applied to several dishes in which Bresse poultry is an important ingredient including chicken stuffed with forest grass and mushrooms (sometimes with slices of truffle slipped under the skin) and then braised or fried, a flan or cake prepared with light coloured Bresse chicken livers, and puff pastries and mixed salads.

RECIPE

Bresse chicken salad

Season some whole lettuce leaves with vinaigrette and use to line the bottom and sides of a salad bowl. Hard boil (hard cook) some eggs, shell them and cut into quarters. Cook and drain some asparagus tips. Finely chop the white meat of a chicken cooked in stock and season with vinaigrette. Cut some red and green sweet (bell) peppers into very thin strips. Place all these ingredients on the lettuce leaves. Arrange a mayonnaise and colour with a little sieved and well reduced tomato sauce. Pipe a garnish of tomato mayonnaise on the salad and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Serve the remaining mayonnaise in a sauceboat (in the traditional recipe the top of the salad is garnished with slices of truffle).

BRESTOSIS A cake with a firm consistency and which keeps well, once a speciality of the town of Brest in Brittany. It is made from Genoese sponge, to which are added blanched ground almonds, lemon essence (extract) and orange liqueur. The mixture may be poured into small brioche moulds and baked gently until golden brown. The cold cakes, wrapped in foil, will keep for several days. The mixture can also be cooked in a round cake mould. The cake is then split into two halves, filled with apricot jam, covered with apricot glaze and decorated all over with sliced toasted or raw almonds.

BRETON A table decoration, created in Paris around 1850 by the pastrycook 'Dubuse, made of almond biscuits (cookies) of various sizes, glazed with fondant icing (frosting) of different colours, decorated and arranged in a pyramid. It was mostly used to decorate large sideboards and side tables.

Breton is also the name of a large round fairly thick cake, rich in slightly salted butter and egg yolks. The surface is glazed with egg yolk and crisscrossed. The same mixture can also be used to make individual round or boat shaped cakes.

BRETONNE, A LA The term given to dishes associated with the produce of Brittany in north west France. Primarily these are dishes with haricot (white) beans (famous there) served with mutton or shoulder or leg of lamb. Breton sauce, used to coat simply cooked eggs or fish, is a combination of leek, celery and mushrooms with cream.

RECIPES

Breton sauce

Cut the white part of 1 leek ¼ celery heart and 1 onion into thin strips. Soften gently in a covered pan with 1 tablespoon butter and a pinch of salt for about 15 minutes. Add 2 tablespoons thinly sliced mushrooms and 175 ml (6 fl oz, ¾ cup) dry white wine. Reduce until dry. Add 150 ml (½ pint 2/3 cup) thin veloute sauce and boil vigorously for 1 minute. Adjust the seasoning and stir in 1 tablespoon double (heavy) cream and 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) butter. Serve at once. If the sauce is to be served with braised fish, cook the sliced vegetables with the fish, adding 175 ml (6 fl oz ¼ cup) fish stock or white wine and finishing with cream and butter.

Eggs with Breton sauce

Fry the eggs or bake them in butter in small individual dishes and surround with a ring of Breton sauce. Alternatively, line small buttered dishes with pureed haricot (white) beans, break an egg into each dish, bake in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) 6-8 minutes and surround with a ring of Breton sauce.

Sauce à la bretonne

(from Carême's recipe) Cut 6 large onions into rings and brown in clarified butter. Drain and add 2 ladles each of consommé and thickened espagnole sauce. Add a little sugar, a little white pepper, then a little butter and a little chicken stock. Finally, press this sauce through a fine sieve.

BRICK A cow's milk cheese (45% fat content) which originated in Wisconsin in the United States. John Jossi wanted to make a cheese like Limburg but with firmer texture, so he pressed the cheese between two bricks to obtain the required result. Hence the name Brick. It has a natural reddish rind and a firm but supple texture with numerous small holes. The flavour is fairly pungent, but not nearly as strong as Limburg. Sold in blocks 25 x 125 x 7 cm (10 x 5 x 3 cm) it is used mainly for sandwiches, canapés and cheeseburgers.

BRICQUEBEC A French cow's milk cheese (45% fat content) moulded uncooked and with a washed crust. Made by the monks of the Abbey of Bricquebec in the region of Cotentin, it is a flat disc 22 cm (8 ½ in) in diameter and 4 cm (1 ½ in) thick. Bricquebec has a sweetish taste with a fine bouquet and is excellent all the year round.

BRIE A cow's milk cheese (45% fat content), originating in the Hede France, which has a soft texture and a crust that is springy to the touch, covered in white down and united with red. It is made in the shape of a disc of variable diameter, often placed on a straw mat since it is drained on an inclined surface, the finished cheese is sometimes of uneven thickness. The thinnest part is the most matured. The body of the cheese is light yellow, flaxen or golden in colour, with a delicate flavour and a bouquet of varying strength depending on whether the Brie is farmhouse or dairy. Brie is served towards the end of a meal but it is also suitable for use in solvent mosquitoes and canapés.

Condé the Great served it to celebrate the victory of Rocroi, and bouchées à la reine, inspired by Marie Leszczyńska, were originally made with Brie. In 1793 it was said that Brie, loved by rich and poor, preached equality before it was suspected to be possible. Talleyrand, an informed diplomat and gastronome, had it proclaimed king of cheese during a dinner organized during the Congress of Vienna. Of the 52 different cheeses offered to the guests, it was a Brie from the farm of Estourville at Villeroy which was voted the best.

Brie was also once used to make a pie pastry and brioches, according to Alexandre Dumas, who thus explained the etymology of the brioche, which was based on Brie). Eugène Sue quotes Brie in The Seven Deadly Sins.

BRIK A large triangle of very flaky pastry containing a soft boiled egg surrounded by succulent minced meat, one can imagine nothing better. This is how Andre Gide describe this Tunisian speciality in his Journal in 1943. It is a very fine pastry shaped in a semi-circle around a filling of spiced vegetables or mutton with onions and mint. A small hole is made in the filling and an egg is broken into the hole. The pastry is then folded to enclose everything and the brik fried in oil. It is usually served with slices of lemon.

The success of this appetizer lies entirely in the fineness of the pastry, which is called malsouga in Tunisia. A dough of elastic consistency is obtained by boiling semolina in water, it is then prepared and cooked using a very delicate technique. The palm of the hand is dipped in cold water, then in the semolina, which is spread out on a griddle with circular movements, almost immediately it stiffens and the fine sheet of malsouqa is lifted with a knife and laid on a dry cloth. It takes considerable dexterity and patience to make briks by hand, but commercially manufactured sheets of brik pastry can be obtained.

RECIPE

Brik with egg

Spread out a sheet of brik pastry on a worktop (work surface), or use 2 layers of buttered filo. Break an egg on to it, then season with salt and pepper and add a pinch each of chopped parsley and coriander (cilantro) Fold the pastry in two diagonally, then fold over both edges and finally the tip so that the egg is well sealed. Fry immediately till golden, basting with spoonfuls of oil so that the pastry puffs up. Drain the brik on paper towels and serve piping hot.

BRILL A marine flatfish of the family Both idea similar to the turbot, with the same fine white nutritious flesh. Brill is less expensive than turbot, in spite of the considerable waste involved in its preparation. However, it is becoming scarcer in the sandy bed of the eastern Atlantic from which it is fished. It is 30-75 cm (12-30 in) long and weighs 1-2 kg (2 ¼ -4 ½ lb), sometimes 3 kg (6 ½ lb). The top of the body is smooth, grey or beige in colour, with small pearly markings. The underside is creamy white.

Brill can be prepared in many ways, particularly with red or white wine, champagne or cider. It can also be grilled (broiled) whole or baked. It can be served cold with various sauces. When poached, it can be garnished with prawns (shrimp) mussels, oysters or crysfish. The famous chef Duglere gave his name to a recipe for brill, which he created at the Cale Anglais in Paris.

RECIPES

Preparation of brill

Clean the fish by making a transverse incision underneath the head, on the dark side. Remove the scales. Trim all round the fish, slightly shortening the tail, and wash. If the brill is to be cooked whole, braised or poached, make a longitudinal incision along the centre of the dark side. Slightly loosen the fillets and break the backbone in two or three places. If prepared in this way, the brill does not lose its shape during cooking.

To fillet the fish, lay the cleaned, scaled and washed brill on the table, dark side down. Make an incision along the centre from top to tail, then slide the knife blade underneath the flesh and, keeping it flat against the bone, gently ease away the fillets and lift them, detaching them at the head (by cutting round the head) and the tail. Turn the fish over and repeat for the other side. Lay the fillets on the table, skin side down. Holding the fillet by the tail end, slide the blade of a filleting knife between the skin and the flesh with one quick movement.

Braised brill

Season the brill and put it in a shallow pan on a bed of sliced carrots and onions which have been lightly fried in butter. Add concentrated fish stock, thyme, parsley and a bay leaf. Bring to simmering point, cover and cook in a preheated oven at 160 °C (325 °F, gas 3) for 25 minutes for a 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb) fish, basting frequently.

Drain the brill and remove the backbone. This is most easily done by placing the fish, dark side up, on a well-buttered long plate or dish. Remove the fillets with a very sharp knife, take out the bone and replace the fillets, Reheat briefly.

Choose your garnish and matching sauce from the list below before cooking the fish. Make the sauce using the well reduced and strained cooking liquor. Braised brill moistened with red wine fish stock reduced to the consistency of a fumet can be served with the following garnishes, bourguignonne, Chambertin or mayonnaise. Brill braised in white wine can be served with one of the garnishes used for fish cooked in white wine, especially those recommended for sole.

Brill cherubin

Prepare and cook as for braised brill. Arrange the fish on a long dish and surround with small mounds of very thick tomato sauce, alternated (if desired), with dried truffles. Fry thin strips of red (bell) pepper in butter. Strain the cooking stock, reduce until syrupy, then add it to a hollandaise sauce with the strips of pepper. Coat the brill with the sauce and glaze rapidly in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F gas 8).

Brill stuffed with salmon

Clean a brill weighing about 2 kg (4 ½ lb) and slit it lengthways down the middle on the dark side. Remove the central bone through this opening, taking care not to tear the white skin. Season the brill and stuff it with a cream forcemeat made of salmon and truffles. Lay the fish in a buttered flameproof dish, season, moisten with 400 ml (14 fl oz 1 ¾ cups) white wine fish fumet, cover and bring gently to simmering point. Poach gently in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F gas 4) for about 30 minutes. When the brill is cooked, drain then blot with paper towels and transfer carefully to a serving dish. Keep warm, Boil down the juices, add to normande sauce and pour over the fish. The following garnishes are suitable: amiral, cancalaise, cardinal, champenoise, diplomate, Nantua, polignac or Victoria.

Fillets of brill with mushroom duxelles

Prepare about 400 g (14 oz. 3 ½ cups) mushroom duxelles, bind with tomato sauce and spread in the bottom of a serving dish. Keep warm, Season the fillets with salt and pepper, coat with flour and fry in a mixture of butter and oil. Arrange the cooked fish on the mushroom duxelles and coat with the hot butter left in the pan after frying the fish. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and garnish with slices of lemon.

Poached brill

Place the cleaned brill in a fish kettle or large saucepan. Cover with cold fish stock and poach gently for about 10 minutes after reaching simmering point, until just tender. Drain and remove the dark skin. Prepared in this way, it can be served with various sauces: prawn (shrimp), Mornay or Nantua or garnished with spinach à la portugaise, à la provençale, à la russe or with lobster escalopes (scallops) à la américaine. It can also be served au gratin in the same way as sole.

BRILLAT-SAVARIN A cow's milk cheese from Normandy named after the French author who said that a meal without cheese is like a beautiful woman with only one eye.

The cheese was invented early in the 20th century by Andronet, the famous Partisian master cheese maker. It has a soft triple cream paste (97.5% fat content) a white downy crust and a mild flavour, and it smells of cream. Brillat Savarin is disc-shaped 13.5 cm (5 ½ in) in diameter and 3.5 cm (1 ½ in) thick. It is a more refined version of another cheese from Bray, called Excelsior.

BRILLAT-SAVARIN, JEAN ANTHELME French magistrate and gastronome The eldest of eight children Jean Anthelme Brillat spent all his youth in Bugey, where he became interested in cooking, his mother, whose Christian name was Autore, was an accomplished cordon bleu cook.

After studying law at Dijon followed by elementary chemistry and medicine. Brillat Savarin joined the bar at Belley. In 1789 the young solicitor, elected deputy to the National Assembly came to the notice of the Forum, in particular because of a speech against the abolition of the death penalty. Returning to his own region, he was elected president of the civil court at Ain, then mayor and commander of the National Guard. The fall of the Girondins forced him into exile because the Revolutionary tribunal accused him of moderatism and issued a summons against him. He said that the day before his departure for Switzerland he had a memorable dinner at an inn in the Jura, where he enjoyed a fricassee of chicken liberally garnished with truffles, served with a sweet and generous white wine.

RECIPES

Boned partridge Brillat Savarin

Open out the partridge and remove as much bone as possible. Flatten the partridge and season with salt and pepper. Seal by frying rapidly in butter. Cover both sides with a forcemeat of foie gras and truffle. Wrap the partridge in a piece of pig's caul, coat with breadcrumbs, and grill (broil) gently. Place on a bed of lentil puree. It can be served with a well reduced Madeira sauce, containing game stock.

Croutes Brillat-Savarin

Bake some small savoury pastry cases (pie shells) blind. Fill with a salpicon of calves or lambs, sweet breads and sauteed mushrooms and, as in the original, some cockscombs and kidneys, all bound with a reduced demi-glace or Madiera sauce.

Flan Brillat-Savarin

Make a flan case (pie shell) of fine savoury pastry and bake blind. While still warm, fill with very creamy scrambled eggs with truffles. Heat some sliced truffles in clarified butter, season with salt and pepper, and arrange on the eggs. Sprinkle with grated parmesan cheese and melted butter. Brown well.

Ocufs en cocotte Brillat Savarin

Butter some ramekin dishes and fill with small cooked pasta shapes sauteed in butter. Break an egg into each ramekin dish and bake in a bain marie. Heat some asparagus tips in butter and use to garnish the eggs. Add a ring of well reduced Madeira sauce.

Timbale Brillat Savarin

Bake some brioche dough in a charlotte mould. Scoop out the middle, leaving a thickness of 1 cm (½ in) lining the bottom and sides. Prepare a confectioner's custard (pastry cream) containing crushed macaroons, then cook some pear quarters in vanilla-flavoured syrup. Heat some apricot puree mixed with kirsch and brush it around the inside of the brioche case. Warm this through gently in the oven. Fill the timbale with alternate layers of confectioner's custard and pears, finishing with a layer of pears. Decorate with crystallized (candied) fruit and warm it in the oven once more. This timbale may be served with apricot sauce.

BRIMONT A name given in classic French cookery to certain decorative dishes, probably originally dedicated by a chef to his master.

RECIPES

Brimont salad

Cook and peel some potatoes and prepare cooked artichoke hearts. Dice both vegetables coarsely and mix with mayonnaise flavoured with sherry. Arrange in a dome in the centre of a serving dish and surround with clusters of stoned (pitted) black olives, crayfish tails and quartered hard-boiled (hard cooked) eggs, all seasoned with olive oil and sherry vinegar. Garnish the salad with a few slices of truffle. The crayfish tails may be replaced by large peeled prawns (shrimp).

Soft-boiled (or poached) eggs brimont

Add some Madeira or cream to a chicken veloute and reduce. Fill a cooked, shallow puff pastry pie crust (shell) with creamed mushrooms. Arrange the eggs in a ring on top. Fill the centre with small chicken croquettes. Coat with reduced veloute sauce and garnish each egg with a slice of truffle.

BRINDAMOUR A sheep's milk cheese from Corsica (45% fat content) which is soft and has a crust sprinkled with thyme and savory. Brindamour is a large square with rounded corners, weighing 600-800 g (1 ¼ - 1 ¾ lb) Also known as fleur du maquis it has a sweet, scented flavour.

BRINE A salt solution used to preserve meat, fish or vegetables. Brine sometimes also contains saltpetre, sugar and flavourings. Small items can be pickled in brine on a domestic scale, but large items come within the sphere of industrial salting.

The pink colour of ham is due to the saltpetre in the brine. In charenterie brine is often injected into the meat before immersion. Cooked hams were traditionally treated either with old brine, brought to the required concentration by the addition of salt and nitrate or with fresh brine mixed with the remains of the old brine, which provided some nitrate reducing bacteria and some ready made nitrite. Fresh brines containing selected bacteria strains are usually used for modern curing. Unfortunately, this change has led to faster salting, which, with the addition of polyphosphates, does not improve the flavour of ham.

BRINZEN also known as Bryndza A Hungarian ewe's milk cheese in the shape of a cylinder weighing 5, 20 or 30 kg (11, 22, or 66 lb) Left to ferment in brine and milk during the winter, it is eaten in spring and has a strong piquant flavour. Brinzen is similar to the Romanian brandza and the Russian bryza.

BRIOCHE A soft loaf or roll made from a yeast dough enriched with butter and eggs.

The word brioche first appeared in 1404, and for a long time its etymology was the subject of controversy. Some maintained that it originated in Brie, and Alexander Dumas claimed that the dough was originally kneaded with cheese from Brie. It is now considered that brioche is derived from the verb brier, an old Norman form of the verb broyer meaning to pound. This explanation is all the more likely since the brioche from Gourmay and Gisors in Normandy have always been highly regarded.

The dough is mixture of flour, yeast water or milk, a little sugar, eggs and butter. The substitution of baker's yeast for brewer's yeast made it lighter, Brioche dough can be moulded in many ways. The traditional brioche a tete, or Parisian brioche, is made with a smaller ball on top, like a head. Brioche is also moulded into hexagonal shapes with marked out sections these are Nanterre brioche. The brioche mouselure is tall and cylindrical and is the most delicate. A traditional variation consists of adding raisins to the brioche dough.

The brioche, often in the shape of a ring, is one of the most widespread regional pastries, eaten by all sections of society. When the revolutionary crowd marched on Versailles, protesting that they had no bread. Queen Marie Antionette in ignorance replied, let them eat brioche. Varieties worthy of mention are the brioche coulante (fallue) from normandy; brioche with pralines from Saint-Genix; the Twelfth-Night cake (tourtilon) from Bordeaux; gatais dela mariee from Vendee, which can measure up to 1.3 m (over 4 ft) in diameter; brioche stuffed with hazelnuts, raisins and dried pears from the Vosges; and brioche with cream cheese or Gruyere from Gannat. Not to be forgotten are fouaces, pompes, couques and cramiques, koeckbotteram from corsica; and pastis from bearn-all of which are rustic brioches with various flavourings Brioche is served as a dessert or with tea., but it also has many culinary uses. Ordinary brioche dough is suitable for kouloubiac and fillet of beef en croute;brioche mousetine accompanis fole gras, sausage andc ervelas from Lyons. Small individual brioche are used as cases for various sweet or savoury sauced mixtures served as hot main dishes or as desserts.

RECIPES

Classic brioche dough

Soften 225 g (8 oz. 1 cup) butter at room temperature.Crumble 7 g (¼ oz, ½ cake) fresh (compressed) yeast and stir in 1 tablespoon warm water. In a separate container stir 1 tablespoon sugar and a pinch of salt into 2 tablespoons cold milk.Sift 250 g (9 oz. 2 ¼ cups) strong plain (bread) flour, make a well in the centre, and add the yeast mixture and 1 lightly beaten egg. After working in a little flour, add the sugar and salt mixture, and another lightly beaten egg. Continue to work the dough until it becomes smooth and elastic. It should stretch easily. Mix a third of the dough with the softened butter, then add the second and finally the remaining third of the dough to the mixture.

Put the dough in a 2 litre (3 ½ pint, 9 cup) container, cover with a cloth, and leave to rise in a warm place until it has doubled in volume. Then separate the dough into 3 pieces, knead lightly and leave to rise again. Leave to rest for a few hours in a cool place, the dough is now ready to be shaped and baked.

Standard brioche dough. This is prepared in exactly the same way, but the quantity of butter is reduced to 175 g (6 oz. ¾ cup).

Pate levee pour tartes.This yeasted brioche dough is used for tarts and flans. Prepare as for brioche dough, but use 250 g (9 oz. 2 ¼ cups) plain (all – purposoe) flour 7 g (¼ oz. ½ cake) fresh (compressed) yeast, ½ teaspoon salt, 2 teaspoons caster (superfine) sugar, 2 eggs, 100 g (4 oz ½ cup) butter and 6 tablespoons milk.

Bropcje bprde;aose

Lightly flour the worktop (work surface). Place 300 g (11 oz.) brioche dough (classic or standard) on the floured surface and flatten with the hand to make a thick disc. Finely chop 65 g (2 ½ oz, ½ cup) crystallized (candied) fruit and distribute it evenly over the surface of the dough. Bring the edges of the dough to the centre to form a ball. Place the ball of dough on a buttered baking sheet and leave it to rest for 10 minutes. Push both thumbs into the centre of the ball and pull the dough gently into the shape of a ring. When the hole is about 10 cm (4 in) in diameter, leave to rest for about 1 ½ hours.

Brush the ring with beaten egg. Crush 12 sugar lump with a rolling pin. Using scissors dipped in water cut 5 mm (¼ in) deep stopping notches into the surface of the ring.Bake in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F gas 6) for at elast 30 minutes, then take the brioche out of the oven and decorate with whole crystallized (candied) fruits and crushed sugar.

Brioche mousseline

Cut 2 pieces of foil twice the height of a cylindrical 1 litre (1 ¾ pint, 4 1/3 cup) mould. Line the mould with the double thickness of foil shaped into a cylinder. Butter the bottom of the mould and the full height of the foil. Place a 300 g (11 oz) ball of fine brioche dough in the mould and leave to rise at room temperature until it comes to 1 cm (½ in) below the top of the mould.

Brush the surface of the brioche with a beaten egg and make 2-4 cross shaped incisions in the top of the dough using a pair of wetted scissors. Bake in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for about 30 minutes. Turn out of the mould while still warm.

Fruit brioche

Toss prepared and diced seasonal fruit (such as peaches and pears, plums and apricots, or plums and pears) in the juice of 1 lemon. Sprinkle with a little sugar and pour a little fruit liqueur or suitable spirit over and mix well. Cover and set aside to macerate. Prepare frangipane cream and leave to cool.

Line a large or the required number of individual round moulds or tins (pans) with brioche dough. Spread with frangipane cream, leaving a border around the edge. Drain the fruit (reserve the soaking liquor to flavour a fruit coulis to accompany the brioche) and arrange it in a layer on top of the frangipane cream. Cover with brioche dough, pressing the edges together to seal in the filling, then leave to rise in a warm place for about 1 hour, until doubled in size.

Brush the brioche or brioches with beaten egg and bake until golden. A large brioche or brioches with beaten egg and bake until golden. A large brioche will take about 30 minutes in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6), individual brioches will take about 15 minutes in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425 °F, gas 7) Dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar and serve hot, decorated with pieces of fresh fruit. Fruit coulis goes well with the brioche prepare it using the same type of fruit as in the filling and flavour the coulis with the reserved soaking liquor.

Parisian Brioche (brioche a tete)

Lightly flour the hands and the worktop (work surface) then divide 275g (10 oz) brioche dough into 2 balls, 225 g (8 oz) for the body of the brioche and the remaining 50 g (2 oz) for the head. Roll the large ball by hand until it is perfectly round. Butter a 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cup) brioche mould and place the larger ball inside it. Roll the small ball of dough into a pear shape. Make a hole in the top of the large ball and insert the pointed end of the small ball, press down with the fingertips. Allow to double in volume at room temperature, for about 1 ½ hours.

Make some small incisions in the large ball, from the edges towards the head, using wet scissors. Brush the brioche with beaten egg and bake in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for 30 minutes. Turn out of the mould while still warm.

Individual Parisian brioches. These are made in the same way as the large brioches, using small brioche moulds. Bake in a preheated oven at 225 °C (425 °F, gas 7) but allow only 15 minutes for cooking.

Rolled brioche with raisins

Soak 75 g (3 oz, ½ cup) raisins in 4 tablespoons rum. Butter a 20 cm (8 in) Genoese mould (a sponge cake mould with sides sloping outwards towards the top) and line it with 150 g (5 oz) flattened brioche dough. Cover with thin layer of confectioner's custard (pastry cream). Lightly flour the worktop (work surface). Place 165 g (5 ½ oz) dough on the floured surface and roll out to a rectangle 20 x 12 cm (8 x 5 in) Cover this rectangle with confectioner's custard, then spread with the drained raisins. Roll the rectangle into a sausage 20 cm (8 in) long and cut into 6 equal portions. Roll the rectangle into a sausage 20 cm (8 in) long and cut into 6 equal portions. Lay these portions flat in the lined mould and leave to rise for 2 hours in a warm place.

Brush over the entire surface of the brioche with beaten egg. Bake for about 30 minutes in a preheated oven at 200 °C (425 °F, gas 7) Dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar and serve hot, decorated with pieces of fresh fruit. Fruit coulis goes well with the brioche prepare it using the same type of fruit as in the filling and flavour the coulis with the reserved soaking liquor.

Parisian brioche (brioche a tete)

Light flour the hands and the worktop (work surface), then divide 275 g (10 oz) brioche dough and the remaining 50 g (2 oz) for the head. Roll the large ball by hand until it is perfectly round. Butter a 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cup) brioche mould and place the larger ball inside it. Roll the small ball of dough into a pear shape. Make a hole in the top of the large ball and insert the pointed end of the small ball, press down with the fingertips. Allow to double in volume at room temperature, for about 1 ½ hours.

Make some small incisions in the large ball, from the edges towards the head, using wet scissors. Brush the brioche with beaten egg and bake in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for 30 minutes. Turn out of the mould while still warm.

Individual Parisian brioche. These are made in the same way as the large brioche, using small brioche moulds. Bake in a preheated oven at 225 °C (425 °F, gas 7), but allow only 15 minutes for cooking.

Rolled brioche with raisins

Soak 75g (3 oz, ½ cup) raisins in 4 tablespoons rum. Butter a 20 cm (8 in) Genoese mould (a sponge cake mould with sides sloping outwards towards the top) and line it with 150 g (5 oz) flattened brioche dough. Cover with a thin layer of confectioner's custard (pastry cream). Lightly flour the worktop (work surface). Place 165 g (5 ½ oz) dough on the floured surface and roll out to a rectangle 20 x 12 cm (8 x 5 in). Cover this rectangle with confectioner's custard, then spread with the drained raisins. Roll the rectangle into a sausage 20 cm (8 in) long and cut into 6 equal portions. Lay these portions flat in the lined mould and leave to rise for 2 hours in a warm place.

Brush over the entire surface of the brioche with beaten egg. Bake for about 30 minutes in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6). If the brioche colours too quickly, protect it with a sheet of foil. Take the cooked brioche out of the oven, sprinkle with vanilla or rum syrup, then turn out of the mould while still warm. When the brioche is cold, brush with syrup made from 65 g (2 ½ oz, ½ cup) icing (confectioner's) sugar mixed with 2 tablespoons hot water.

Filled Savoury Brioche

Brioche with anchovies

Using standard brioche dough without sugar, prepare some very small (cocktail size) Parisian brioche in tiny fluted moulds. When cooked, allow to cool completely, wrap in foil and place in the refrigerator for 1 hour. Then remove the heads of the brioche and carefully scoop out the insides of the brioche bases, using the bread taken out to make very fine breadcrumbs. Add these to the same volume of softened anchovy butter. Fill the brioche with this mixture and put the heads back on. Put in a cool place until required for serving. The mixture of breadcrumbs and anchovy butter can be lightened by adding a little whipped cream.

Brioche with cheese

Prepare the brioche as for brioche with anchovies (but make them a little bigger). Fill with a thick Mornay sauce mixed with diced York or Bayonne ham. Reheat in the oven.

Brioche with foie gras

Prepare the brioche as for brioche with anchovies. Fill with a mousse of foie gras mixed with softened butter. Put in a cool place until ready to serve.

Brioche with mushrooms

Prepare the brioche as for brioche with anchovies (but make them a little bigger). Fill with mushroom duxelles mixed with a little bechamel sauce. Heat in the oven.

Filled Sweet Brioche

Brioche with raspberries

Make a large brioche mousseline and allow to cool completely. Slice off the top and scoop out the inside, leaving a thickness of about 1 cm (½ in) at the bottom and sides. Add some kirsch to melted butter and sprinkle this mixture over the inside of the brioche, fill with a mixture of raspberries and whipped cream.

Alternatively, the brioche may be filled with confectioner's custard (pastry cream) lightened with whipped cream and mixed with stoned (pitted) cherries, poached in syrup and drained.

Caribbean brioche

Hollow out a large brioche mousseline in the same way as for brioche with raspberries. Cut the brioche removed from the inside into cubes and brown these in butter. Reduce the syrup from a can of pineapple by three quarters and flavour with rum. Cut the pineapple dice in butter, place the fruit in the reduced syrup. Add the cubes of brioche, mix together, and fill the brioche with the mixture. Replace the top and heat in the oven.

BRISSE, BARON LEON French journalist (born Gemenos, 1813, died Fontenay aux-Roses, 1876). Having begun his career in the Water and Forestry department, which he was obliged to leave after a scandal, he turned to journalism and specialized in gastronomic articles. It was his idea to print a different menu every day in the newspaper La Liberte. These recipes were put together in 1868 in a collection called Les trois cents soixante-six menus du Baron Brisse. He also published Recettes a l'usage des menages bourgeois et des petits menages (1868), La Petite Cuisine du Baron Brisse (1870) and La Cuisine en Caramelle (1873). He was often reproached for not being able to cook and his recipes are sometimes whimsical and even extraordinary, such as scoter duck with chocolate, a burlesque way of preparing a kind of duck with tough oily flesh. But he also gives a recipe for terrine of foie gras and garbure. The paper gastronophile as he was nicknamed by his colleagues, this enormous and truculent individual died at an inn in Fontenay aux-Roses, where he had taken up lodgings. For several years his friends, including Monselet and Gouffe, observed the anniversary of his death by meeting at the inn, where the landlord, Gigout, symbolically laid Baron Brisse's place.

His name has been given to garnish for large joints of meat, consisting of onions with chicken forcemeat and stuffed olive tartlets.

BRISTOL. A garnish served with large roasts of meat (beef or lamb), noisettes of lamb and tourmedos. Consisting of small risotto croquettes, flageolet beans cooked in butter and chateau potatoes, it probably takes its name from the Parisian hotel of the same name.

BROAD BEAN (FAVA BEAN) An annual leguminous plant cultivated for its flat seeds, used as food for man and animals since the Bronze Age, possibly of Near East origin. It was known in ancient Egypt but the Greeks had religious reservations about eating it brought bad luck. Named from the Latin Vicia faba, it was the European staple for centuries. It is the original bean in the Twelfth-Night cake, which made it a good luck bean. They are cultivated across the world, including China.

Broad beans are easily distinguished from kidney beans because they lie across the pod, so the contact point is on the end. There are several varieties, the pale green one being common, the Windsor bean, with four beans to the pod, is the largest. Tiny fresh beans are eaten raw at the meal's end in Italy, accomplished by Pecorino cheese. Cook fresh, podded beans in simmering salted water savory is the classic herb flavouring. Larger beans are best skinned, to reveal their bright green interiors. In America favas are combined with sweetcorn, to make succotash, but the classic European preparation is a puree (good with pork) because traditionally it was pressed through a sieve to remove the skins. Fava, the Greek salad with yogurt and lemon juice, is one example.

Dried beans are more nutritious than fresh ones because they are allowed to grow to full size before being harvested. Broad beans contain a chemical substance to which some people, particularly in the Mediterranean and Iran, are allergic. The allergy, known as favism, is inherited and it leads to destruction of red blood cells, resulting in severe anaemia.

Dried broad beans were the original bean used in the famous dried bean dishes cassoulet and fabada. The dried bean, dark and of brouse, meaning brush is eaten within 48 hours, otherwise it is salted and left to dry, when hard it is wrapped in dry asphodod leaves and stored in a cool place. When it is used to flavour a dish, it must be desalted for some time in cold water.

BROCCOLI A vegetable of the brassica family cultivated for its fleshy heads of flower buds. There are several varieties, including small headed purple sprouting and large headed calabrese.

Originating in Italy this vegetable was popular in Roman times. It was introduced to France by Catherine de Medici. Calabrese has substantial dark green flower heads. It is cooked like cauliflower. In Italy it remains one of the most popular new season vegetables, being cooked with olive oil, white wine and garlic. It was introduced to the US in the early 20th century by Italian immigrants, and is now cultivated in California.

Sprouting broccoli became popular in northern Europe in the 18th century. This has a number of loose terminal heads, about 15 cm (6 in) long, but also smaller heads in the axils of the leaves lower down the plant. It overwinters, to provide an early spring vegetable. Known in America since the 18th century, the heads are steamed or poached, while the stalks are sometimes eaten like asparagus.

Romanesco is the autumn broccoli with the large yellowish green heads divided into conspicuous little peaked groups.

RECIPES

Broccoli, potato and bacon pot with soup

Soak a piece of unsmoked streaky bacon about 500 g (18 oz) in cold water, then place in a large saucepan with 2 litres (3 ½ pints, 9 cups) cold water, simmer for about 1 ½ hours. Add 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) prepared broccoli, 2 crushed garlic cloves, with a little salt. Add 575 g (1 ¼ lb) quartered potatoes and boil for 15 minutes.

Drain the broccoli, chop coarsely and heat with 40 g (1 ½ oz, 3 tablespoons) butter. Cut the bacon into slices and brown in 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter. Drain the potatoes and slice. Layer the broccoli, then the potatoes and finally the slices of bacon in a heated dish. Sprinkle with the butter used for cooking.

Add 25 g (1 oz 2 tablespoons) butter to the water in which the bacon and vegetables were cooked. Pour this stock into a soup tureen over thin slices of wholemeal bread dried in the oven. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve the soup before the hotpot.

Broccoli a la crème

Prepare 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) broccoli, then blanch it in 2 litres (3 ½ pints, 9 cups) boiling salted water for about 30 seconds. Drain the broccoli and chop about 30 seconds. Drain the broccoli and chop very coarsely. Lightly brown 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) butter in a frying pan and add 150-200 ml (5-7 fl oz, 2/3 – ¾ cup) double (heavy) cream. When the cream is coloured, add the broccoli. Season with pepper and again with salt if necessary. Simmer for about 10 minutes. Serve the broccoli very hot with roast or sautéed meat or with certain types of fish, such as bass, cod or hake.

BROCHETTE A large slightly flattened skewer, usually made of stainless steel, on which pieces of meat, fish and vegetables are threaded for cooking under a grill (broiler) or over charcoal. If the ingredients are to be fried, the skewer is made of wood. There are single brochettes, with a ring or handle, and double brochettes. Electric rotating grills may be equipped with vertical brochettes and some rotisseries are fitted with brochette drums.

RECIPES

Brochettes of fish and seafood eel brochettes

Skin and clean a large eel, cut off the head and the tail. Wash, wipe dry and then cut the body into 8 portions. Marinate for 30 minutes in the same mixture as for seafood brochettes. Cut some streaky bacon into thick strips and marinate with the eel. Then, without draining them, thread the pieces of eel on to skewers with the bacon. Grill (broil) under a high heat for about 15 minutes, basting with a little flavoured oil. Serve these brochettes with green mayonnaise, tartare sauce, remoulade sauce or hot shallot sauce.

Monkfish brochette

Cut the flesh of a monkfish (taken from the tail, which is less expensive than the middle of the fish) into 2.5 cm (1 in) cubes and marinate with halved slices of aubergine (eggplant) for 30 minutes in the same mixture as for seafood brochettes. Thread the skewers, alternating monkfish and aubergine, and grill (broil) under a medium heat for 16-18 minutes.

Mussel brochettes

Place some large cleaned mussels in their shells in a pan with some finely chopped shallots, chopped parsley, a good pinch of thyme, ground pepper and a little dry white wine. Cook over a high heat until the mussels have opened, then take them out of their shells. Stir a little cold water into some white mustard powder and spread on a plate. Roll the mussels in the mustard, then in bread crumbs and thread on to the skewers. Leave for 1 hour. Just before cooking, sprinkle with a little melted butter, grill under a medium heat for about 10 minutes.

Seafood brochettes

Prepare a marinade using olive oil, plenty of lemon juice, finely chopped herbs and garlic, fresh crumbled thyme, salt and pepper. Marinate an assortment of seafood for 30 minutes, oysters poached for 1 minute in their liquor, mussels opened by heating in the oven, raw scallops, lobsters tails, large peeled prawns (shrimp) and scampi. Thread on to skewers without draining, alternating with very small mushrooms and fresh blanched cubed bacon. Grill (broil) under a high heat.

Brochettes of Meat

Brochettes of marinated fillet of beef

Prepare a marinade using 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) olive oil, salt, pepper and chopped herbs. Cut up 500 g (18 oz) fillet of beef into 2.5 cm (1 in) cubes and cut 150-200 g (5-7 oz) smoked belly pork or bacon into strips, marinate these for 30 minutes. Remove the seeds from a green (bell) pepper and cut the flesh into 2.5 cm (1 in) squares. Cut off the stalks from 8 large button mushrooms, sprinkle with lemon juice and saute briskly in oil with the pieces of pepper. Drain as soon as the pepper is slightly softened. Thread the ingredients on to skewers, adding 2 whole baby onions to each skewer, one at each end of the other ingredients. Grill (broil) under a very high heat for 7-8 minutes.

Lamb brochettes

Cut some well-trimmed fillet or leg of lamb into pieces 5 mm (1/4 in) thick. Thread the pieces of meat on to skewers, alternating with blanched bacon strips and sliced wild mushrooms (optional) tossed in butter. Season with salt and pepper. Brush the brochettes with melted butter, roll in white breadcrumbs, sprinkle again with butter, then grill (broil) under a high heat.

Pork brochettes with prunes

Remove the stones (pits) from the prunes. Wrap each prune in a short piece of smoked streaky bacon. Cut some pork loin into cubes. Marinate these ingredients for 30 minutes in a mixture of groundnut (peanut) oil, salt and pepper with a little grated nutmeg and cayenne pepper. Drain the pork and the bacon wrapped prunes, thread on to skewers and grill (broil) under a medium heat for about 10 minutes.

Brochettes of Offal (Variety Meats)

Calf's liver brochettes

Prepare the liver and some (bell) peppers as for lamb's liver brochettes, but add some large quartered onions to the marinade. Soften some chopped shallots in a little butter, add a little chopped garlic, then some wine vinegar. Assemble the brochettes and grill (broil) under a very high heat. Bring the flavoured vinegar to the boil and pour over the piping hot brochettes.

Kidney brochettes

Skin some lambs' kidneys, then cut in half and remove the white core. The kidneys may then be brushed with oil, seasoned with salt and pepper and threaded on to skewers to be grilled (broiled) under a very high heat. Alternatively, the kidneys may be seasoned with salt and pepper, brushed with melted butter, rolled in white breadcrumbs, and threaded on to the skewers, alternating with blanched strips of bacon. The whole is sprinkled with melted butter and grilled under a high heat. Serve the kidneys with maitre d hotel butter.

Sliced calves or lambs sweetbreads, small pieces of beef or lamb, and chicken livers can also be prepared in this way.

Lamb's liver brochettes

Cut the lamb's liver into 2.5 cm (1 in) cubes. Seed some red and green (bell) peppers and cut the flesh into 2.5 cm (1 in) squares. After marinating thread these ingredients on to skewers, placing a cube of liver between a square of red pepper and square of green pepper.

BRODETTO an Italian soup containing a large assortment of fish and shellfish. It is possibly the Mediterranean's oldest fish soup, and certainly older than bouillabaisse, with which it shares a large number of ingredients. There are many regional variations. The Venetian version contains no tomato, the one made in the Marches contains saffron, while in the Abruzzi the latter is replaced by chilli.

BROU DE NOIX A liqueur made from green walnut husks. The soft shells are hollowed out, ground, flavoured with cinnamon and nutmeg, and macerated in alcohol. Sugar syrup is added and the mixture is then filtered. This traditional liqueur is from the Jura region and is considered a digestive. Similar walnut liqueurs are made elsewhere in Europe.

BROUET In modern France brouet is a pejorative term applied to any coarse and weak soup or stew. Originally it referred to the national dish of the Spartans, in particular under the tyranny of Lycurgus. Black brouet was a sort of liquid stew made of fat, meat, blood and vinegar. It was served at communal civic meals which all citizens aged between seven and 60 years were required to attend. It is said that Demetrius the Ancient brought a Spartan cook to Syracuse and ordered him to prepare a brouet according to the rules. When he indignantly rejected it, his cook pointed out to him that the essential seasoning was missing: this was hunger, fatigue and thirst.

The word brouet was commonly used in French cooking in the Middle Ages for a soup, a stew or a sauce. The Menagier de Paris gives a recipe for brouet from Germany, a very popular soup at the time. From it was derived brouet d'accouchee, a broth made from eggs, milk and sugar which used to be given to women the day after their wedding.

BROUFADO A Provençal speciality made with marinated beef cooked in a casserole with herbs, gherkins or capers, and fillets of anchovy. Mistral describes this dish as a fried meat with pepper sauce, but it is more of a stew or casserole, and is probably an old seaman's recipe.

RECIPE

Broufado

Cut 900 g (2 lb) stewing beef into 5 cm (2 in) cubes. Marinate in a cool place for 24 hours in a mixture of 5 tablespoons red wine vinegar, 3 tablespoons olive oil, a large bouquet garni, a large sliced onion and some pepper. Desalt 6 anchovies. Drain the meat and heat in a flameproof casserole with 2 tablespoons olive oil. Add a large chopped onion, then the marinade and 175 ml (6 fl oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) red or white wine. Bring to the boil, then cover and cook in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for 2 hours. Add a few small pickled onions and 3-4 sliced gherkins (sweet dill pickles). Cook for a further 15 minutes. Wash the desalted anchovies, remove the fillets and cut them into small pieces, mix with 2 teaspoons beurre manie and add to the casserole. Stir the broufado well for 2 minutes and serve piping hot with jacket potatoes.

BROUILLY A distinguished Beaujolais cru. The vineyards around the Montagne de Brouilly produce a very fruity wine, which must be drunk young. Cote-de-Brouilly, from the slopes of the mountain, owes its quite remarkable qualities to the soil and aspect. A little more full bodied than Brouilly, it is one of the best Beaujolais wines and its bouquet is refined by a few years maturation.

BROULAI A Caribbean fish stew cooked with sweet cassava roots or potatoes. The vegetables are browned in oil in a stewing pan, then removed and replaced by pieces of firm fleshed fish, tomato puree (paste) onion and chilli pepper. Water is added and the mixture brought to the boil, then the vegetables are put back in the pan with a bay leaf. When the fish and vegetables are cooked, they are taken out of the pan and rice is cooked in the stocks. The rice and stew are served together.

BROWN To cook meat or poultry in hot fat or oil until it takes on a golden brown colour. The term is also applied to chopped or sliced onion which is first sweated, then cooked until dark.

BROWNIE A very sweet moist sponge cake bar or square much loved in America, made with dark chocolate and named for its colour. Originally a cookie the present form with a high sugar and butter content, which gives it a crisp outside and a fudgy inside, has been known at least since the Boston Cooking School Cook Book, by Fannie Merritt Farmer, was first published in 1896. Baked in a cake and then cut, there are many forms. Chopped walnut are a popular addition.

BROYE Also known as broye In Bearn, broye is a broth of maize flour (cornmeal) Simin Palay gives a recipe in la Cuisine du pays which differs by using white or browned flour.

RECIPES

Broye bearnaise

When white (not roasted) maize flour (cornmeal) is used, broye is prepared like an ordinary gruel. Vegetable stock or plain salted water is boiled and flour is added little by little until the consistency is fairly firm. When the gruel is cooked, and it must be stirred constantly during cooking, it is served with a greased ladle so that the gruel does not stick to the utensil. If the flour is first roasted to brown it, a well is made in the centre of the flour in an earthenware container, the stock or water is added and mixed well, and the mixture is then cooked. The cold broye can be sliced and fried in very hot fat until well coloured.

Broye poitevin

Place 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar and a pinch of salt in an earthenware dish, make a well and drop 1 whole egg and 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) butter, cut into pieces, into the centre. Knead by hand to mix thoroughly. Add 500 g (18 oz. 4 cups) plain (all purpose) flour, a spoonful at a time, then 1 tablespoon rum or brandy and knead until the dough no longer sticks to the fingers (it should be fairly soft) Butter a pie dish 25 cm (10 in) in diameter and spread the dough in the dish, smoothing it with the palm of the hand. Brush the surface with 1 egg yolk mixed with 2 tablespoon black coffee.

Draw a crisscross pattern or geometric designs with a fork. Bake in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for 30 minutes. Allow to cool before turning out of the mould dish as the cake is very crumbly.

BRULE The French term means burn Crème brulee, in which the sugar topping is caramelized with a red hot iron, under the grill (broiler) or with a blow-torch, is one of the most famous desserts. In common French kitchen use, however, brulee usually identifies a disaster.

In France dough is said to be brulee when flour and fat have been mixed too slowly and the mixture has become oily.

When egg yolks are left with caster (superfine) sugar without beating, small bright yellow particles appear and are difficult to mix into creams and doughs the yolks are said to be brules.

BRULOT Alcohol that is flamed before being drunk or before being added to food. Brulot is a familiar term in France for a sugar lump soaked in alcohol, held in a spoon over a cup of coffee, and flamed before being dropped into the coffee.

Café brulot is a typical drink of Louisiana. It is made by heating rum with sugar, cinnamon, an orange stuck with cloves, and lemon zest. When the sugar has dissolved, scalding coffee is poured on to the mixture and the resulting liquid is filtered and served in hot cups.

BRUNCH A meal originating in America, being a combination of breakfast and lunch. This type of meal is commonly eaten on Sundays, when people gather round the table in a relaxed atmosphere between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. The menu combines traditional British breakfast items with those of a cold meal, cereals bacon and fried or scrambled eggs, salads of fruit and green vegetables, pancakes with jam or maple syrup, fruit juice, tea and coffee. Pie and cold meats may also be served. There is often a fruit loaf corn bread or French toast (slices of bread dipped in beaten egg, then fried and sprinkled with sugar).

BRUNOISE This French term is applied both to a method of cutting vegetables into minute dice and to the resulting diced vegetables (either a single type or a mixture). Often braised in butter, brunoise is used as a garnish for soups, sauces and stuffings and also serves as a flavouring.

Recipes

Brunoise stuffed pancakes

Stew a brunoise of vegetables in butter. Bind with a little light bechamel sauce. Make some pancakes and fill with the mixture, roll up, cut into thick slices, coat in breadcrumbs and fry.

Consomme a la brunoise

For 4 servings finely dice 200 g (7 oz) carrots, 100 g (4 oz) new parsnips, 100 g (4 oz) leeks (white part only) 25 g (1 oz) onions and 75 g (3 oz) well trimmed celery sticks. Braise gently in 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter then add 750 ml (1 ¼ pints, 3 ¼ cups) consomme and cook for 15 minutes. Just before serving, adjust seasoning and add 150 g (5 oz) each cooked green peas and green beans (cut into short lengths).

BRUSCHETTA A slice of bread, grilled (broiled) on both sides and eaten warm with olive oil and, frequently a savoury garnish. Of Italian origin, bruschetta was a way of checking the quality of the new seasons olive oil. Best made with clabatta or an open textured, light bread, and excellent plain, rubbed with garlic, it has become both a barbecue item for example, topped with bake peppers and a carnape base to accompany drinks.

BRUSSELS SPROUT A vegetable that is widely cultivated for as green buds, which resemble tiny cabbages 2-4 cm (3/4- 1 1/2 in) in diameter, and grow in the leaf axils along a stem up to 1 m (3 ft) high. Although now cultivated mainly in northern Europe, the Belgians consider that Brussels sprouts were imported into their country from Italy by the Roman legions. Brussels sprouts are an over winter vegetable. They also freeze very well.

Brussels sprouts should be very green and compact, without yellow leaves, the best are usually found after the first frosts. They are prepared by removing the stump and one or two leaves around it, then washed in water to which vinegar has been added. Cooked in boiling water they are generally served with meat but are also used for grains and purees. They can also be braised and mixed with thin strips of bacon and chestnuts. They may be served raw, very finely sliced in a salad.

Sprouts are essential for bruxelloise and brabanconne garnishes.

RECIPES

Brussels sprouts au gratin

Prepare some buttered Brussels sprouts. Butter a gratin dish, tip the sprouts into it, sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter, and brown for about 10 minutes in a very hot oven.

Brussels sprouts mornay

Heap some buttered Brussels sprouts in a buttered gratin dish, coat generously with Mornay sauce, sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter, and brown for about 10 minutes in a very hot oven.

Brussels sprout puree

Puree some well cooked buttered Brussels sprouts in a food processor. Then pour into a saucepan and heat, stirring to lose some moisture. Add a quarter of its volume of potato puree and double (heavy) cream, using about 100 ml (4 fl oz 7 tablespoons) cream for 1 litre (1 3/4 pints, 4 1/2 cups) puree. Season with salt and pepper and serve very hot, preferably with roasted or braised white meat.

Brussels sprouts with butter or cream

Plunge the sprouts into boiling salted water and cook them quickly, uncovered. When they are still slightly firm, remove and drain. Melt some butter in a shallow frying pan, using about 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) for 800 g (1 3/4 lb) sprouts, and brown the sprouts. Adjust the seasoning, cover and simmer until the sprouts are completely cooked.

If desired, the sprouts may be coated with double (heavy cream, using 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) for 800 g (1 3/4 lb) vegetables, before they are covered to finish cooking.

Sauteed brussels Sprouts

Cook some sprouts in boiling water until tender, then drain thoroughly. Melt some butter in a frying pan and toss the sprouts lightly in it. Transfer them to a vegetable dish and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

They may also be served with noisette butter (moistened first with lemon juice) a indienne a la milanaise or a la polanaise, lie cauliflower.

BRUXELLOISE, A LA A French garnish of stewed Brussels sprouts, braised chicory and chateau potatoes, served with small joints of meat, either sauteed or roasted .Egg dishes a la bruxelloise are garnished with Brussels sprouts or chicory.

RECIPE

Eggs a la bruxelloise

Bake some small pastry cases (pie shells) blind. Gently cook some thinly sliced chicory (endive) in butter, bind with a little bechamel sauce and put into the pastry cases. Place a soft boiled (soft cooked) or poached egg in each case and coat with piping hot cream sauce.

B'STILLA Also known as bisteeya and bestilla. The celebratory pigeon pie of Morocco, and Fez in particular, eaten as a first course using the fingers of one hand. It is also distinguished by its layers of extremely thin warka pastry the fact that it is made with butter, and its size, which may be 50 cm (20 in) across. The name is related to the Spanish pastilla (little pie) and the pastel murciana is similar, though it is certainly of Moorish origin. Briouts are small pastry envelopes stuffed with similar fillings.

The pastry layers are arranged in a buttered round mould, interleaved with layers of filling. Besides pigeon (unboned), the pie may include chicken, hard boiled eggs and almonds with sugar. The filling is highly spiced with cinnamon, saffron, ginger, fresh coriander (cilantro) and parsley, and garlic, mint or harissa may be added. Other versions may include mutton or beef and spinach. The pastry layers are folded over and the top glazed. Traditionally, it is cooked on glowing charcoal and turned out on to a dish of the same size to cook the second side. Alternatively, it is gently fried until golden brown on both sides, while versions with filo as a substitute may be baked, well moistured with butter, without turning. The b'stilla is served dusted with sugar and cinnamon.

Dessert versions are also made, filled with rice and almond milk, custard or vermicelli cooked in milk with sugar and cinnamon.

BUCHTELN A plum desert, much appreciated in Austria. Buchten consists of squares of yeast dough, folded over plum jam, white cheese or chopped nuts, left to rise in the warm, then baked and served hot with prune jam or custard.

BUCKET A roughly cylindrical container with a handle, originally used for carrying water. The champagne bucket, which is made of stainless steel or silver plated metal, is used for keeping a bottle of champagne, dry white wine, rose., Asti or sparkling wine cool in iced water. The ice bucket, which is smaller, is used to store or serve ice cubes for drinks. Modern ones are insulated, with double walls and a lid, to prevent the ice cubes from melting.

BUCKWHEAT A cereal plant originating in the Orient and cultivated in Europe since the end of the 14th century. The name is derived from the Middle Dutch boecuette, from boeke (beech) and welte (wheat) probably because the seeds resemble beechnuts. The name Saracen corn in France and Italy probably comes from the dark colour of the grain. In France it is also called ble noir, beaucuit or bucail.

Buckwheat flour is grey with black flecks. It is unsuitable for making bread, but is used in Russia for blinis and in France for traditional buckwheat pancakes porridge and fars. When husked, crushed and cooked, buckwheat forms the basis of the Russian dish kasha. In Japan, buckwheat flour is used for making soba noodles, which are eaten in soup, or served cold on ice with dipping sauces. Nowadays some pasta is made with buckwheat too.

Until the end of the 19th century buckwheat was one of the staple foods of Brittany and Normandy, and also of north eastern Europe and Russia, but its cultivation has diminished considerably. In southern Normandy buckwheat porridge was formerly a very common meal, the flour was soaked either in curdled skimmed milk or in plain water and then stirred in a pan over the heat. Then the pan was placed on a trivet and a hollow was made in the centre of the porridge and filled with melted butter. Everyone took a spoonful of the porridge, and then dipped it into the butter before eating it. When the meal was over, the leftover porridge was either put aside in a large dish, to be eaten with sweetened warm milk, or taken to the fields to be eaten later as a light meal. Thin slices of porridge, known as soles de gueret, were fricasseed and browned in sizzling butter.

BUFFALO Members of the ox family, including a ferocious wild one in Africa and a domesticated one in India, important for both food and its labour. The buffalo was first imported to Italy, Hungary and the Balkans by the Romans.

The meat of the young water buffalo, especially the female, is tender and tastes very similar to beef. Buffalo milk contains 40% fat. In India, it is used to make surati, a cheese matured in earthenware vases which are also used to transport it. In Italy, provolone was originally made from buffalo milk. However, it is best known as the milk from which top quality mozzarella is made, it must be eaten a few days after manufacture. Buriello is an Italian cheese with a light paste and a ball of buffalo butter in the middle. The milk is also used in Egypt to make dumyati a cheese eaten fresh or brinepacked, aged and dark.

BUFFET A buffet in a restaurant is a large table, often set near the entrance, on which dishes of meats, poultry, fish cold desserts and pastries are arranged in a decorative manner. It is, in fact, a show of choice edibles.

At a reception the food is dispensed from a buffet or the guests come to the table to be served with sandwiches, cold meats, pastries and various drinks. It is an idea copied, for its ease of serving, for larger domestic parties.

In France buffet restaurants were established in the principal railway stations. The speed of transport has considerably reduced their importance, especially when buffet cars provide food and refreshments on trains. However, there are still some celebrated buffets, such as those at Lille, Epernay, Avignon, Valenciennes and Colmar. In Paris the buffet at the Gare de Lyon is classed as an historic monument for its architecture and paintings, the quality of its cuisine attracts a larger clientele than just travellers.

BUGLOSS A herbaceous plant common in Europe. Its name, derived from the Greek buglossa (meaning ox tongue) comes from its fleshy, bristly, slightly rough leaves. Similar to borage, it has the same uses and its flowers are also used to prepare a refreshing drink.

BUGNE A large fritter from France's Lyonnais region, traditionally eaten on feast days, especially Shrove Tuesday. In the Middle Ages fritter makers sold bugnies in the open air, from Arles to Dijon. They have become a speciality of Lyon, as common during the rogues as waffles are in other regions. Bugue dough was originally made from flour, water, yeast and orange flowers. When the consumption of dairy products until Ash Wednesday became permitted by the Church, the dough was enriched with milk, butter and eggs, and bugnes became true pastries. They are cut with a pastry wheel into ribbons which are then knotted. Bugnes are better hot than cold. The beugnon is a smaller version from central France.

RECIPE

Bugnes

Put in a food processor 250 g (9 oz. 2 ¼ cups) plain (all purpose) flour, 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) softened butter, 2 tablespoons caster (superfine) sugar, a large pinch of salt, 2 large beaten eggs and 1 ½ tablespoons rum, brandy or orange-flower water. Process thoroughly, then shape into a ball and allow to rest for 5-6 hours in a cool place. Roll the dough out to a thickness of 5 mm (¼ in). Cut the dough into strips about 10 cm (4 in) long and 4 cm (1 ½ in) wide. Make a slit in the middle 5 cm (2 in) long. Thread one end of the dough through the slit, this makes a kind of knot. Fry the bugnes in hot oil, turning once. Drain, place on paper towels, and sprinkle with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

BUISSON Traditionally a method in France of arranging food, especially crayfish and asparagus, pressed together in a pyramid. The term is also used for fried smelts and goujomettes of sole arranged in a dome with a garnish of fried parsley.

RECIPES

Buisson of asparagus in pastry

Cook some very thick white asparagus tips in salted water, keeping them slightly firm. Drain and wipe dry. One by one, coat them in a little mayonnaise stiffened with gelatine. Bake a thin pastry case blind and half-fill with a salad of green asparagus tips and very fine slices of truffle. Arrange the white asparagus tips on top in a pyramid.

Buisson of crayfish

Boil the crayfish in plenty of water, then drain them. Roll a napkin into a cone shape, tucking in a bottom to make it flat and thus keep it stable, and place it on a round serving plate. Truss the crayfish by tucking the ends of the 2 claws over the top of the tail. Arrange the crayfish along the napkin, tails in the air, wedging them against each other. The top of the dish can be garnished with asprig of parsley.

BULGUR Also known as boulghour, bulghur or burghul. The Turkish and Persian names for a treated whole wheat grain product, including the wheat germ. It is made by cooking the wheat, then drying and cracking it. It is then cooked in twice its volume of boiling water for about 10 minutes, until the liquid is absorbed. It is often used in vegetarian cooking to make soups and gruels with pulses and flavourings, to stuff vegetables or served as a salad garnished with raw vegetables in vinaigrette.

BULLHEAD Although it is also called sea scorpion or sea devil, it is a freshwater or coastal fish, common in Britain and found in Russia and the Balkans. It is distinguished by its large head and fan shaped fins, the fins and the gill cover are spiny. It can be eaten fried or in soup.

BULL'S BLOOD The best known Hungarian red table wine, from vineyards around the town of Eger. It is made from the Kadarka, merlot and Pinot Noir grapes.

BUN A small, round yeast roll, usually sweet. The name comes from the French bugne, which defines them beautifully. In Britain, buns are made from an enriched dough and may have dried fruit added. They may be glazed or iced.

There are many traditional regional or seasonal specialities. Bath buns are made from a rich egg dough with small lumps of sugar on top. Chelsea buns are dough spirals filled with fruit and baked in a tin giving them a square shape. Cornish splits are large plain buns filled with clotted cream and jam. Hot cross buns are made from a spiced fruited dough and have a cross of lighter dough or icing on top or are cut in the shape of a cross on top. Eaten on Good Friday, the tradition was to keep one bun for a full year, and throw it away when the new batch was made.

Many countries bake similar goods and the distinction between a roll and a bun can be difficult to define. Buns are generally eaten alone as a snack or for breakfast, or with tea or coffee. In America the term is more loosely applied to bread rolls such as the large flat rolls in which hamburgers and hot dogs are sandwiches. In Chinese cooking, the bun can be savoury the steamed, white and fluffy buns filled with a full flavoured savory pork, mixture are good examples or sweet.

RECIPE

Buns

Crumble 25 g (1 oz. 2 cakes) fresh (compressed) yeast into a bowl, then gradually stir in 150 ml (8 fl oz, 1 cup) lukewarm milk. Cover and leave at room temperature until frothy. Mix 675 g (1 ½ lb, 6 cups) strong plain (bread) flour with a 1 teaspoon salt and the grated zest of 1 lemon. Rub in 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) butter then stir in 125 g (4 ½ oz, ¾ cup) raisins. Make a well in the dry ingredients. Add 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) lukewarm milk, 1 beaten egg and the yeast mixture. Gradually mix the dry ingredient into the liquid to make a dough. Knead for about 10 minutes, until smooth and elastic.

Place the dough in a bowl, cover with a cloth and leave in a warm place until doubled in volume (about 5 hours). Then divide the dough into balls about the size of a tangerine. Place them on a greased large baking sheet, brush them with butter, cover with cented foil and allow to rise for a further 5 hours or until 2 ½ times their original size.

Bake the buns in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for 20 minutes. Meanwhile, heat 250ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) milk with 1 tablespoon sugar and bring to the boil. A few minutes before they are cooked brush the buns with the syrup and return them to the oven. Cool on a wire rack.

BUTCHER'S BLOCK A solid block of wood with a flat top used as a base for chopping meat with a cleaver. It is cut across the grain of wood to give it more strength when used. Butcher's blocks were formerly set on three wooden feet.

BUTCHER'S SHOP A shop for selling meat, especially lamb and beef. Horse and donkey flesh tends to be sold by specialist butchers in France, as is the meat from the bull ring in Spain and halal meat. Pork, although sold in butcher's shops, is mostly retailed through delicatessen or specialist pork butchers in both France and Italy.

In ancient Rome the butcher's profession was regulated, carried privileges and was specialized according to the various types of meat. The Roman legions were accompanied by butchers, who were responsible for buying beasts to feed both their own troops and the occupied countries. History in France Inspired by the Roman master butchers a tradition of hereditary butchers was well established throughout the ancient province of Gaul, now France, by the Middle Ages. In 1996 the first butcher's shop in Paris began trading. Under King Philippe II there were about 18 shops and butchers obtained a permit from the king granting them the right to own their stalls in perpetuity. Thus was formed the rich and powerful butchers guild, which dominated for a long time by a few families, wielded considerable political power.

Until abattoirs were set up under Napoleon I, the Grande Boucherie quarter, around the Chatelet, remained a dreadful place, Blood flows in the streets and congeals under the feet, wrote Mercier in mentions the Rue de la Triperie.

BUTIFARRA A black pudding of eastern Spain made of pig's blood and pieces of fat, sometimes with meat. There are many types the Catalan sausage is botifarra. Bise meaning bishop is another large, black sausage. Many contain rice typically in the Valencia area though the region also has a highly spiced meat version. Boufarras are sliced and fried, then added to casseroles. Boutifarra is the North African version containing blood, fat and meat about 8-10 cm (3 ½ - in) in diameter, and is eaten cold.

White butifarras often made with lean pork and stuffed into tripe skins, are popular in Catalonia and the Balearic islands.

BUTTER A fatty substance obtained from churned cream, containing at least 80% fat, 2% milk solids and not more than 16% water. Butter hardens at low temperatures, becomes soft in warm environment and melts when heated. The colour varies from creamy white to golden yellow.

The history of butter. Butter was known in ancient times and was introduced to the Greeks by the Scythians. Herodotus, quoted by Montesquieu, spoke of the Scythians who poked out the eyes of their slaves so that nothing would distract them from churning their milk. The Greeks and Romans, however, used it mainly as a remedy and relied almost entirely on oil for cooking purposes.

Butter was produced by the Gauls, but it was the Normans, using knowledge acquired from the Danes, who firmly established its reputation. By the Middle Ages, the small scale local production of butter had become widespread. Large pats of butter, sometimes wrapped in leaves of sorrel or herbs, were sold in French markets and stored in earthenware pots covered in salt water. Colouring was prohibited, as was selling butter on a fish stall. Butter was not supposed to be eaten during Lent.

In Europe butter is made from cow's milk but in Africa and Asia the milk of the buffalo, carmel, goat, ewe, mare and donkey is used to manufacture butters with very strong flavours. In Britain a few small independent producers make nanny butter.

Alternative to butter. There are many alternatives to butter, both for cooking and as spreads. Margarine is the long standing substitute for use in baking and there are many brands for table use. Low fat spreads and reduced fat butters are spreadable products with a high moisture content, aimed at people who want to reduce either their calorie intake or consumption of animal fats. Some of these products are not suitable for cooking.

Butter making. The milk is skimmed and the cream is used for making butter. The cream is pasteurized and transferred to an ageing or maturation tank. The cream is then churned so that globules of fat form and the buttermilk is separated. The cream is cooled and ripened at a low temperature to produce sweet cream butter the traditional British butter. Alternatively, the cream is ripened at a higher temperature with the addition of a culture of lactic bacteria. This produces a butter with more flavour, known as lactic butter, the type traditionally preferred in France, Denmark, the Netherlands and Germany. The butter is then washed and blended or worked to give the right water content and characteristic texture. During this stage the butter may be salted and permitted ingredients may be added. Finally the butter is weighted and packaged.

Types of butter. There are two main types of butter produce by the different ripening or ageing processes described above. Sweet cream butter is the traditional British type and lactic butter is the classic French butter. Sweet cream butter is usually salted or lightly salted. Lactic butter may be lightly salted or unsalted.

Butter keeps well in the refrigerator, with the salted type having a longer shelf life than unsalted butter. Butter also freezes well, but in the case the unsalted type has a longer storage life. Butter should always be stored in a covered container or sealed packet, as it readily absorbs around given off by other foods and these taint its flavour. Butter left in warm, light conditions becomes rancid, especially the unsalted type so it should be covered and replaced in the refrigerator after use.

Cooking with butter. Butter has numerous uses in cooking and unsalted butter is often preferred as it is less likely to burn when frying and it enriches food without adding too much salt, which is particularly important for baking, when salted butter can spoil the flavour of sweet pastries, cakes and biscuits cookies.

As a cooking medium butter can be used to sweat sauce or fry foods and to moisten them before and during grilling roasting or baking. Clarified butter is butter from which the water content has been evaporated and the milk solids separated, leaving a clear yellow fat which can be heated to a high temperature without burning. This is ideal for frying of other cooking. When ordinary butter is used it should be heated gently and slowly to avoid burning.

A little oil is often added to butter for cooking, contributing a good flavour and reducing the risk of burning. This is also a good compromise for those who enjoy the flavour but want to avoid consuming large quantities of animal fats.

For making pastries, biscuits, cakes and enriching doughs, butter gives superior flavour to margarine. When heated with sugar, it becomes light and creamy. Combined with flour and water, butter flavours and shortens doughs, producing a crumbly texture. When butter is incorporated by being rolled between layers of flour and water dough, it produces a fine, crisp layer that separates as trapped air expands during baking, giving a light result. This technique is used for making puff pastry and croissants.

Butter is also a key ingredient in a variety of sauces and it can be added to soups and casseroles to enrich the cooking liquor. Plain or flavoured butter can be served with food to moisten and enhance plain ingredients, for example, it is the classic dressing for vegetables, grilled fish, meats or poultry. In the same way as other fats, butter complements starchy foods, making them more palatable.

Butter also has a variety of uses in desserts and sweet dishes, for example to make British butter cream when beaten with icing sugar or French crème au beurre and other custards enriched with softened butter. Butter is also a valuable flavouring for confectionery, such as toffee.

Flavoured Butter. Various herbs and other ingredients can be added to salted or unsalted butter to produce different colours and flavours. They are sometimes referred to as compound butter or beurres composés. They may be served cold with freshly grilled meat, fish or boiled vegetables. Flavoured butters are added to sauces or other dishes. They are also spread on canapés or between slices of bread to be heated and served hot.

Butters that are prepared hot can be flavoured with crushed crustacean shells. Most flavoured butters are prepared cold. Raw additions (such as garlic, shallot, tarragon or horseradish) are rubbed through a sieve, crushed, chopped, finely grated or pureed. Other ingredients are cooked in liquid until well reduced.

To accompany grilled meat or fish, a flavoured butter of a creamy consistency is served separately. Alternatively, it may be shaped into a small cylinder, wrapped in greaseproof paper or foil, and hardened in the refrigerator. It is then unwrapped and cut into slices 1 cm (½ in) thick, to top the meat or fish.

RECIPES

Flavoured Butters

Preparation of flavoured butter

Whatever the ingredients, the butter must first be creamed, using a spoon or (for large quantities) an electric mixer. The following recipes give ingredients to flavour 225 g (8 oz, 1 cup) butter.

Almond butter

Blanch 100 g (4 oz, 1 cup) sweet almonds and reduce to a paste in a blender with 1 tablespoon cold water. Add to the softened butter and press through a sieve. Very fresh ground almonds can also be used. This butter is used in the preparation of petits fours and cakes. Make walnut butter the same way.

Anchovy butter

Soak 100 g (4 oz) canned or bottled salted anchovies to remove the salt. Puree the filets in a blender, season and, if liked, add a dash of lemon juice. Work into the softened butter. This butter is used for vol auvents, canapés and hors d'oeuvres and to accompany grilled meat and fish or cold white meat.

Caviar butter

Blend 100 g (4 oz) pressed caviar, work into the softened butter and then press through a sieve. This butter is used to garnish canapes, or various cold hors d'oeuvres and to flavor some fish sauces.

Crab or prawn butter

Blend 225 g (8 oz) shelled prawns (shrimp) or crabmeat (cooked in court bouillon and with all cartilage removed)

Work into the softened butter. This butter is used to garnish canapes, cold fish or hors d'oeuvres, and to complete fish and shellfish sauces.

Crayfish butter

Pound in a mortar 250 g (9 oz) chopped and cooked crayfish shells and trimmings. Add to the softened butter in a bain marie. Melt the butter mixture slowly but thoroughly. Place some muslin (cheesecloth) over a bowl containing iced water. Pour the melted butter on to the cloth and wring so that the butter goes into the bowl. Place in the freezer or refrigerator to set the butter quickly. As soon as the butter has set, remove from the bowl and blot it dry. Crayfish butter is used for preparing canapes, soups, stuffing, shellfish dishes and sauces.

Garlic butter with raw garlic

Crush 2-4 garlic cloves and add to the softened butter. Mix well, a little finely chopped parsley and grated lemon zest can be added to complement the raw garlic.

Green butter

Wring 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) raw crushed spinach in muslin, (cheesecloth) until all the juice is extracted. Pour this juice into a dish and cook in a bain marie until separated, then filter through another cloth. Scrape off the green deposit left on this cloth and work it into the softened butter. This butter is used to garnish hors d'oeuvres and cold dishes.

Hazelnut butter

Lightly grill (broil) some hazelnuts, then make and use like almond butter.

Horseradish butter

Grate 100 g (4 oz) horseradish. Work it into the softened butter in a blender, then sieve, it is used in the same way as garlic butter.

Hotelier butter

In a blender, puree an equal quantity of chopped parsley, lemon juice and mushroom duxelles. Work into the softened butter in a blender, with a dash of lemon juice, salt and pepper. This butter is used to garnish cold hors d'oeuvres.

Lobster butter

This is prepared in the same way as prawn butter using the meat and eggs of the lobster cooked in court bouillon, It is used for the same purposes.

Malted hotel butter

Work 2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley, 1-2 dashes lemon juice and a pinch of salt into the softened butter. This butter is served with grilled fish, fish fried in an egg and breadcrumb coating, and various steamed or boiled vegetables.

Montpellier butter

Blanch 10 g (1/2 oz., 1/2 cup) each parsley leaves, chervil leaves, cross leaves, spinach and 1 shallot in salted water. Rinse in cold water and drain thoroughly. Blend with a gherkin a small garlic clove and a hard boiled egg. Work in the softened butter and season with salt and pepper. Montpellier butter is served with large cold fish. It is sometimes softened by adding a very fresh raw egg yolk and 4 tablespoon olive oil.

Mustard butter

Add 2 tablespoons tarragon mustard to the softened butter and season with salt and pepper. A hard boiled (hard cooked) egg yolk, some chopped herbs and a dash of lemon juice may also be added. Use like anchovy butter.

Pepper butter

Remove the seeds from a large green or red (bell) pepper, dice and cook very gently in butter until it is soft enough to be pureed. Work the pureed pepper into the softened butter, season with salt and pepper, add a pinch of cayenne, pepper and press through a sieve. Pepper butter is used to finish some sauces or garnish hors d'oeuvres.

Red butter

Prepare with the crushed shells of various shellfish, in the same way as crayfish butter. The uses are the same.

Roquefort butter

Puree 150 g (5 oz) Roquefort cheese with 1 tablespoon Cognac or white brandy and 2 teaspoons white mustard. Work into the softened salted and permitted colouring ingredients may be added. Finally the butter is weighed and packaged.

RECIPES

Flavoured Butter

Preparation of flavoured butter

Whatever the ingredients, the butter must first be creamed, using a spoon or an electric mixer. The following recipes give ingredients to flavour 225 g (8 oz. 1 cup) butter.

Almond butter

Blanch 100 g (4 oz 1 cup) sweet almonds and reduce to a paste in a blender with 1 tablespoon cold water. Add to the softened butter and press through a sieve. Very fresh ground almonds can also be used. This butter is used in the preparation of petits fours and cakes. Make walnut butter the same way.

Anchovy butter

Soak 100 g (4 oz) canned or bottled salted anchovies to remove the salt. Puree the fillets in a blender, season and, if liked, add a dash of lemon juice. Work into the softened butter. This butter is used for vol au-vents, canapes and hors d'oeuvres and to accompany grilled (broiled) meat and fish or cold white meat.

Sardines butter is prepared the same way, using the filleted and skinned canned fish.

Caviar butter

Blend 100 g (4 oz) pressed caviar, work into the softened butter and then press through a sieve. This butter is used to garnish canapes or various cold hors d'oeuvres and to flavour some fish sauces.

Crab or prawn butter

Blend 225 g (8 oz) shelled prawns (shrimp) or crabmeat (cooked in court-bouillon and with all cartilage removed). Work into the softened butter. This butter is used to garnish canapes, cold fish or hors d'oeuvres, and to complete fish and shellfish sauces.

Crayfish butter

Pound in the mortar (or crush in a processor) 250 g (9 oz) chopped and cooked crayfish shells and trimmings. Add to the softened butter in bain marie. Melt the butter mixture slowly but thoroughly. Place some muslin (cheesecloth) over a bowl containing iced water. Pour the melted butter on the cloth and wring so that the butter goes into the bowl containing iced water. Pour the melted butter on to the cloth and wring so that the butter goes into the bowl. Place in the freezer or refrigerator to set the butter quickly. As soon as the butter has set, remove from the bowl and blot it dry. Crayfish butter is used for preparing canape, soups, stuffings, shellfish dishes and sauces.

Garlic butter with cooked garlic

Peel 8 large garlic cloves and plunge in boiling salted water. Boil for 7-8 minutes, dry and puree. Work into the softened butter. Garlic butter is used to complete some sauces, and adds the final touch to garnishes for cold hors d'oeuvres.

Garlic butter with raw garlic

Crush 2-4 garlic cloves and add to the softened butter. Mix well. A little finely chopped parsley and grated lemon zest can be added to complement the raw garlic.

Green butter

Wring 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) raw crushed spinach in muslin (cheesecloth) until all the juice is extracted. Pour this juice into a dish and cook in a bain marie until separated, then filter through another cloth. Scrape off the green deposit left on this cloth and work it into the softened butter. This butter is used to garnish hors d'oeuvres and cold dishes.

Hazelnut butter

Lightly grill (broil) some hazelnuts, then make and use like almond butter.

Horseradish butter

Grate 100 g (4 oz) horseradish. Work it into the softened butter in a blender, then sieve. It is used in the same way as garlic butter.

Hotelier butter

In a blender, puree in equal quantity of chopped parsley, lemon juice and mushroom duxelles. Work into the softened butter. This butter is served with fish and grilled (broiled) meat.

Lemon butter

Blanch the zest of a lemon, chop as finely as possible, and work it into the softened butter in a blender, with a dash of lemon juice, salt and pepper. This butter is used to garnish cold hors d'oeuvres.

Lobster butter

This is prepared in the same way as prawn butter using the meat and eggs of the lobster cooked in court bouillon. It is used for the same purposes.

Maitre d'hotel butter

Work 2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley, 1-2 dashes lemon juice and a pinch of salt into the softened butter. This butter is served with grilled (broiled) fish, fish fried in an egg and breadcrumb coating, and various steamed or boiled vegetables.

Montpellier butter

Blanch 10g (½ oz ½ cup) each parsley leaves, chervil leaves, cress leaves, spinach and 1 shallot in salted water. Rinse in cold water and drain thoroughly. Blend with a gherkin (sweet dill pickle), small garlic clove and a hard boiled (hard cooked) egg. Work in the softened butter and season with salt and pepper. Montpellier butter is served with large cold fish. It is sometimes softened by adding a very fresh raw egg yolk and 4 tablespoons olive oil.

Mustard butter

Add 2 tablespoons tarragon mustard to the softened butter and season with salt and pepper. A hard boiled (hard cooked) egg yolk, some chopped herbs and a dash of lemon juice may also be added. Use like anchovy butter.

Pepper butter

Remove the seeds from a large green or red (bell) pepper, dice and cook very gently in butter until it is soft enough to be pureed. Work the pureed pepper into the softened butter, season with salt and pepper, add a pinch of cayenne pepper and press through a sieve. Pepper butter is used to finish some sauces or garnish hors d'oeuvres.

Red butter

Prepare with the crushed shells of various shellfish, in the same way as crayfish butter. The uses are the same.

Roquefort butter

Puree 150 g (5 oz) Roquefort cheese with 1 tablespoon Cognac or white brandy and 2 teaspoons white mustard (optional). Work into the softened butter. This butter is used to garnish canapes, vol-au-vent and puff pastries, or served with raw vegetables.

Shallot butter

Peel 150 g (5 oz) shallots and chop finely. Blanch for 2-3 minutes in boiling water, blot and puree in a blender. Work into 150 g (5 oz, 2/3 cup) softened butter. Season with salt and pepper. This butter is served mainly with grilled (broiled) fish and meat.

Tarragon butter

This is prepared in the same way as watercress butter and is used to finish sauces or garnish cold hors d'oeuvres.

Watercress butter

Blanch 150 g (5 oz) watercress leaves, soak in cold water and blot. Puree then, work into the finely softened butter, season with salt and pepper. Watercress butter is used principally for canapes and sandwiches.

Plain Butters and Butter Sauces

Beurre noir

This recipe for black butter is a very old one, dating from the 16th century. Cook some butter in a frying pan until dark brown in colour. Add capers and chopped parsley, together with a little vinegar, which is warmed through in the same pan.

Black butter was formerly an essential accompaniment to skate poached in stock.

Clarified butter

Melt some butter gently in a heavy based saucepan, do not stir. Continue to heat gently until the butter ceases spitting this indicates that the water content has evaporated. There should be a small amount of white residue in the bottom of the pan. Carefully pour the butter into another container so that the whitish sediment stays in the pan. Clarified butter is used particularly for frying and for emulsified sauces.

Creamed butter

Cream the butter in a warm earthenware container, carefully adding lemon juice and a little cold water. Serve with fish in court bouillon and Vichy carrots.

Landais butter

Roll small balls of butter in breadcrumbs until thickly and evenly coated, then cook under a hot grill (broiler) to form a golden crust, turning and sprinkling with melted butter. Serve with grilled (broiled) meat and fish.

Melted butter

Melt the butter very gently in a heavy based saucepan with lemon juice, salt and white pepper. This butter is used with poached fish or steamed or boiled vegetables.

Noisette butter

Gently heat some butter in a frying pan until it is golden and gives off a nutty smell. Serve scalding hot with lambs or calves sweetbreads. Serve scalding hot with lambs or calves sweetbreads, fish roe, vegetables (boiled and well drained) eggs or skate poached in stock. Noisette butter is known as meuniere butter when lemon juice is added.

BUTTER DISH A container for keeping butter or serving it at the table. For storage it must have a lid. Since fresh butter is particularly delicate and readily absorbs smells. For setting on the table, the appearance of the dish and its size must be the main guide. Flavoured butters are usually served in a sauceboat or a small dish.

Formerly butter had to be stored either submerged in salted water or in a glass container placed in a double porous earthenware bell into which water was poured daily. Refrigerators made such methods obsolete.

BUTTER MILK. A slightly sour whitish liquid obtained after churning cream to separate the butterfat. Buttermilk is slightly acidic with a tangy flavour. Buttermilk was once recommended for feeding children and was used for making soups. Traditionally, buttermilk is used in combination with bicarbonate of soda to act as a raising agent for scones and breads, such as soda bread, and thick pancakes, such as drop scones. It is still a popular drink in Scandinavian countries. The supermarket product is often skimmed milk thickened with a culture.

BUVETTE Under the Ancient Regime in France, a buvette was a small bar set up within the precincts of the courts of law, where judges and lawyers could take light refreshments between sessions. The word has retained this meaning in the case of the Buvette de l'Assemblée nationale. Nowadays a buvette is a small bar in a railway station, theatre or public garden. It can also serve ice creams, sandwiches or sweets. In a spa, the buvette is the place where people drink the waters.

BUZET Red AOC wines from a small vine growing area situated east of Agen in south western France. The reds are from Bordeaux grapes Cabernet Sauvignon, Cabernet Franc, Merlot and Malbec. They are usually matured in wood, thanks to the efforts of the Buzet sur Baise cooperative, Up to the end of the last century the region was large, but the vineyard was completely destroyed by phylloxera and has only recently been rehabilitated. A small amount of white wine is made from Semillon, Sauvignon Blanc and Muscadelle grapes, these are best enjoyed when fresh and young.

BYZANTINE, A LA A French side dish for meat, particularly beef, consisting of potato shells browned in the oven, garnished with cauliflower a la crème, and lettuce halves stuffed with mushroom duxelles and braised in the oven on a bed of herbs. Also called a la bisontine, meaning from Besancon.

C

CABARDES French red and rose wines produced in the region of the Aude, to the north of Carcassonne, by 2,200 hectares (5,400 acres) of vineyard next to those of the Minervois. The varieties of vine from which these wines are made include Grenache Noir, Cinsault, Carignan, syrah, Cabernert auvignon and Merlot. Now upgraded to AOC status, these are promising wines with a pleasing bouquet and good ageing potential. Drink with grilled (broiled) dishes, roast pork, kidneys and calf's liver.

CABARET (establishment) The modern cabaret, a nightclub or restaurant with a floor show, has little in common with the original French cabaret, which until the end of the 19th century was a modest bar serving mainly wine.

Before the 17th century, there was a clear distinction in France between the taverne and the cabaret. Originally, the novelty of the cabaret consisted of selling wine a l'assiette, serving it on a table at which the customer could sit and possibly have something to eat. If the cabaret proprietor did not have permission to do this, the wine was sold au pot (by the jug).

Henri IV reorganized the wine retailers as follows (1) wine merchants selling wine by the jug did so without having a taverne – an opening was made in the outer grille of the shop, through which the purchaser would pass his jug; (2) tavern-keepers sold drinks in a place arranged for this purpose; (3) proprietors of cabarets served not only drinks, but also food – they had permission to provide nappes et assiettes (tablecloth and plate) service. Both tavern-keepers and proprietors of cabarets employed criers to go through the streets announcing the price of the wine sold in the premises.

In the 13th century, among the first cabarets were the Trois Maillets, frequented by scholars from the Sorbonne who were extremely rowdy, according to the priests of Saint-Severin, and the Pomme de Pin. In the course of the following centuries, the best-known cabarets were the Sabot (Saint-Marcel district), where Ronsard was a frequent customer, and the Ecu d'Argent (near the Place Maubert), where menage was said to have set up residence. The Epee de Bois and the Mouton Blanc (in the Rue de la Verrerie) were the meeting places of La Fontaine, Boileau and Racine (who wrote les Plaideurs there). Cabarets thus become fashionable in the 17th century and were frequented, in particular, by writers and artists, who later patronized the cafes, restaurants and brasseries. In the 19th century, low-class cabarets again attracted the Romantics. Some of them were squalid hovels, like those described by Eugene Sue in Les Mysteries de Paris. It was at the gate of one such cabaret – the Chat Blanc – that the body of Gerard de Nerval was found hanging.

The etymology of the word has given rise to various interpretations, possible roots are the Hebrews word cabar (to meet), the Celtic words cah (head) and aret (ram – an animal sacrificed to Bacchus), the Latin cabare (to dig, to make a cellar), the Arabic khamarat (a place where drinks are sold), and, more recently, the Dutch cabret, itself derived from the old Picardly word combrette, meaning 'little room'.

CABASSOL A stew made from sheep's heads simmered in white wine. It is a speciality of Albi in Languedoc (in this region cabassol means 'head'). At Resquista (Aveyron) there is a Cabassol Club, where it is customary to eat the stew on shrove Tuesday. The tongue, brains, cheeks and ears are considered to be delicacies. At Lodeve near herault, cabassol is made with lamb's feet, heads and mesentery (intestinal membranes), cooked with ham and knuckle of veal. It is served with vinagrette and puree of lamb's brains, Sometimes, it is eaten with stockpot vegetables and herbs. In rouergue, cabassol is simply a lamb stock.

CABBAGE A widely cultivated vegetable of the family Cruciferae. Wild cabbage, from which all the cultivated varieties are derived, is a perennial with broad thick curly leaves, growing in coastal regions of western Europe. Known for over 4,000 years in Europe, it was at first valued for its medicinal properties, but later was used as food, particularly as a basis for soups. Through cultivation and selection white, green and red varieties of cabbage were produced, as well as many other brassicas – including Brussels sprouts, cauliflower and broccoli.

The different varieties of full-hearted cabbage are distinguished by their colour (white, green or red), their shape (rounded for winter cabbages, pointed for spring cabbages), the texture of their leaves (crinky in Savoy cabbages, or smooth) and whether they are soft- or hard-hearted. Ideally, cabbage should have crisp shiny leaves and, where applicable, a dense heart. Cabbage is included in numerous garnishes (a la flamande, a l'auvergnate, a la bercbonne, a la strasbourgeoise) and can be prepared in many ways. It is used as a base for soups, stews and stuffings. White and red cabbage predominate in the cookery of eastern and northern Europe, while green cabbage is more popular in the west and south.

RECIPES

Green or White Cabbage

Braised cabbage

Prepare a cabbage: blanch, drain, cool in cold water and drain once again. Separate the leaves and discard the large ribs. Scrape and dice a carrot. Line a flameproof casserole with bacon rashers (slices) stripped of half their fat and add the diced carrot, then the cabbage, forming a heap. Add salt, pepper, a little grated nutmeg, an onion stuck with a clove and a bouquet garni. Two-thirds cover the cabbage with stock and put a very thin strip of bacon on top. Cover and bring to boil over a ring. Then place the casserole in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) and cook for about 1½ hours.

Green cabbage salad

Remove any withered out leaves, cut the cabbage into four and blanch for about 12 minutes in boiling salted water. Drain, cool and wipe. Cut the quarters into a julienne and season with a well-spiced vinaigrette, Sprinkle with chopped herbs or finely shredded spring onions (scallions).

Paupiettes of cabbage

Blanch a whole cabbage for 7-8 minutes in boiling salted water, then drain and cool it. Pull off to be delicacies. At Lodieve near herault, cabassol is made with lamb's feet, heads and mesentery (intestinal membrane), cooked with ham and knuckle of veal. It is served with vinaigrette and a puree of lamb's brains. Sometimes, it is eaten with stockpot vegetables and herbs. In Rourgue, cabassol is simply a lamb stock.

CABBAGE A widely cultivated vegetable of the family (cruciferae. Wild cabbage, from which all the cultivated varieties are derived, is a perennial with broad thick curly leaves, growing in coastal regions of western Europe. Known for over 4,000 years in Europe, it was at first valued for its medicinal properties, but later was used as food, particularly as a basis for soups. Through cultivation and selection, white, green and red varieties of cabbage were produced, as well as many other brassicas – including Brussels sprouts, cauliflower and broccoli.

The different varieties of full-hearted cabbage are distinguished by their colour (white, green or red), their shape (rounded for winter cabbages, pointed for spring cabbages), the texture of their leaves (crinkly in Savory cabbages, or smooth) and whether they are soft- or hard-hearted. Ideally, cabbage should have crisp shiny leaves and, where applicable, a dense heart. Cabbage is included in numerous garnishes (a la flamande, a l'auvergnate, a la berichonne, a la strasbourgeoise) and can be prepared in many ways. It is used as a base for soups, steps and stuffings. White and red cabbage predominate in the cookery of eastern and northern Europe, while green cabbage is more popular in the west and south.

RECIPES

Green or White cabbage

Braised cabbage

Prepare a cabbage blanch, drain, cool in cold water and drain once again. Separate the leaves and discard the large ribs. Scrape and dice a carrot. Line a flameproof casserole with bacon rashers (slices) stripped of half their fat and add the diced carrot, then the cabbage, forming a heap. Add salt, pepper, a little grated nutmeg, an onion stuck with a clove and bouquet garni. Two-thirds cover the cabbage with stock and put a very thin strip of bacon on top. Cover and bring to the boil over a ring then place the casserole in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) and cook for about 1½ hours.

Green cabbage salad

Remove any withered out leaves, cut the cabbage into four and blanch for about 12 minutes in boiling salted water, drain, cool and wipe. Cut the quarters into a julienne and season with a well-spiced vinaigrette. Sprinkle with chopped herbs or finely shredded spring onions (scallions).

Paupiettes of cabbage

Blanch a whole cabbage for 7-8 minutes in boiling salted water, then drain and cool it. Pull off the large outer leaves, removing the tougher ribs. Chop the leaves from the central heart and to them add an equal volume of forcemeat. Make paupiettes by rolling this mixture in the large leaves, using 1 tablespoon per leaf; tie them up with kitchen thread. Braise as for stuffed cabbage, but reduce the cooking time to 1 ¼ hours. These paupiettes form a perfect garnish for braised meat.

Stuffed cabbage

Blanche a whole cabbage in salted boiling water for 7-8 minutes. Cool it in cold water, drain and remove the stump (core). Moisten a piece of fine cloth or muslim (cheescoloth), wring it out and lay it on the working surface. On top of the cloth, lay four lengths of kitchen thread to form a star shape. Place the cabbage in the centre of the crossed threads and open out the larger leaves one by one. Remove the central heart, chop and mix with an equal volume of the fine well-seasoned pork forcemeats. Fill the centre of the cabbage with the mixture, then fold back the large leaves to recreate the original shape. On top, place two very thin strips of fat bacon in a cross and secure them by knotting the threads over them. Wrap the cabbage in the cloth and tie it up.

Line a flameproof casserole with 100 g (4 oz) bacon, 150 g (5 oz. 1 cup) diced carrots and 150 g (5 oz. 1 cup) finely diced onion, put the cabbage on top and barely cover it with rich stock. Cover, bring to the boil, then cook in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 1½ hours. Drain the cabbage, unwrap it and remove the strips of fat bacon. (alternatively, the cabbage may be prepared and cooked in a net, and without the strips of bacon.) serve the cabbage in a deep dish, keeping it hot, and coat with the cooking juices, reduced by half.

Red cabbage

Pickled red cabbage

Prepare the cabbage cut it into quarters, remove and discard the large ribs, then cut it into strips. Place in a large basin, sprinkle with a generous tablespoon of fine salt and mix. Cover and leave for at least 48 hours in a cool place, turning over several times. Drain the cabbage and arrange it in layers in an earthenware jar, inserting between each layer 4-5 peppercorns, 3 small pieces of bay leaf and half a garlic clove, chopped. Boil enough red wine vinegar to cover the cabbage, leave to cool, then cover the cabbage with it. Seal the jar and leave to marinate for at least 36 hours. It can be served in various hors d'oeuvre or as a condiment with cold beef or pork.

Red cabbage a la flamande

Remove any withered leave, slice off the stump (core) at the base of the leaves and cut the cabbage into four, then into thin strips. Wash and dry. Melt 40 g (1½ oz. 3 tablespoons) butter in a saucepan, add the cabbage, sprinkle with salt and pepper, moisten with 1 tablespoons vinegar, then cover and cook over a gentle heat. Meanwhile, peel 3 or 4 tart apples, cut them into quarters, remove the core and slice then finely. Add them to the cabbage after 1 hour of cooking, sprinkle with 1 tablespoons brown sugar, replace the lid and cook for a further 20 minutes. Serve to accompany boiled pork or boiled or braised beef.

Red cabbage a la limousine

Prepare the cabbage and cut it into thin strips. Melt 4 tablespoons lard (shortening) in a saucepan. Add the cabbage and about 20 large peeled sweet chestnuts. Add sufficient stock to barely cover the vegetables. Season with salt and pepper, cover the pan and leave to cook gently for about 1½ hours. Serve to accompany roast pork or pork chops.

Red cabbage salad

Select a very fresh and tender red cabbage (break off a large leaf to test it), remove the large outer leaves, cut the cabbage into four and remove the large outer leaves, cut the cabbage into four and remove the white centre. Slice the quarters into fine strips, about 5 mm (1/4 in) wide, blanch them for 5 minutes in boiling water, then cool and wipe them. Place in a salad bowl, sprinkle with 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup)boiling red wine vinegar, mix, cover and leave to marinate for 5-6 hours. Drain the cabbage and season it with salt, pepper and oil, unblanched red cabbage can be used for a very crisp salad; shred the wedges finely. Add 2 tablespoons of soft brown sugar with the vinegar if liked.

CABEOU A small soft French cheese (45% fat content) from quercy and Rouergue, made from a mixture of goat's milk, ewe's milk and cow's milk. (the literal meaning of the word is 'little goat') It is a fairly firm ivory-white cheese with a fine bluish crust and a nutty flavour. The main varieties of Cabecou are Cahors, Gramat, Entraygues, livermon, Rocamadour and Gourdon, all in season from April to November. Some of the cheese are wrapped in vine leaves and stored in a jar with vinegar. They are eaten when they turn pink. In Quercy, the cheese is soaked in plum brandy.

CABERNET FRANC. The eighth most important red grape variety in France, grown particularly in Bordeaux and the Loire, but also grown extensively in Italy, California and Argentina. Depending on the region, it is known as Bouchet (in Bordeaux), Bouchy (in the Pyrenees) and dBretton (in the Loire Valley), its loose, medium-sized bunches have small black berries with a thin skin which ripen a week earlier than cabernet Sauvignon.

The Cabernet Franc is used in making most of the AOC red wines of Bordeaux (particularly St-Emillion), where it is often blended with Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot and Malbec.

Use on its own in the Loire Valley (Chinon, Bourgeaul, Saint-Nicolas-de Bourgeuil. Saumur) cook over a gentle heat. Meanwhile, peel 3 or 4 tart apples, cut them into quarters, remove the core and slice them finely. Add them to the cabbage after 1 hour of cooking, sprinkle with a 1 tablespoon brown sugar, replace the lid and cook for a further 20 minutes. Serve to accompany boiled pork or boiled or braised beef.

Red cabbage a la limousine

Prepare the cabbage and cut it into thin strips. Melt 4 tablespoons lard (shortening) in a saucepan. Add the cabbage and about 20 large peeled sweet chestnuts. Add sufficient stock to barely cover the vegetables. Season with salt and pepper, cover the pan and leave to cook gently for about 1½ hours. Serve to accompany roast pork or pork chops.

Red cabbage salad

Select a very fresh and tender red cabbage (break off a large leaf to test it), remove the large outer leaves, cut the cabbage into four and remove the white centre. Slice the quarters into fine strips, about 4 mm (1/4 in.) wide, blanch them for 5 minutes in boiling water, then cool and wipe them. Place in a salad bowl, sprinkle with 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup) boiling red wine vinegar, mix, cover and leave to marinate for 5-6 hours. Drain the cabbage and season it with salt, pepper and oil. Unblanched red cabbage can be used for a very crisp salad: shred the wedges finely. Add 2 tablespoons of soft brown sugar with the vinegar if liked.

Other recipes See confit, sausage, sau-fassum.

CABECOUC. A small soft French cheese (45% fat content) from Quercy and Rouergue, made from a mixture of goat's milk, ewe's milk and cow's milk. (The literal meaning of the word is 'little goat'). It is a fairly firm ivory-white cheese with a fine bluish crust and a nutty flavour. The main varieties of Cabecou are Cahors, Gramat, Entraygues. Livermon, Rocamadour and Gourdo, all in season from April to November. Some of the cheeses are wrapped in vine leaves and stored in a jar with vinegar. They are eaten when they turn pink. In Quercy, the cheese is soaked in plum brandy.

CABERNET FRANC The eighth most important red grape variety in France, grown particularly in Bordeaux and the Loire, but also grown extensively in Italy, California and Argentina, Depending on the region, it is known as Buochet (in Bordeaux), Bouchy (in the Pyrenees) and Breton (in the Loire Valley). Its loose, medium-sized bunches have small black berries with a thin skin which ripen a week earlier than Cabernet Sauvignon.

The Cabernet Franc is used in making most of the AOC red wines of Bordeaux (particularly St. Emilion) where it is often blended with Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot and Malbec.

Used on its own in the Loire Valley (Chinon, Bourgeoul, Saint-Nicolas-de-Bourgeoul, Champigny), it produces wines with bouquets of strawberries and violets, which should be drunk fairly young.

CABERNET SAUVIGNON The noblest of French red grape varieties and now grown extensively around the world. It has small, tightly packed bunches of grapes which are dark and thick skinned, with a high ratio of pips to juice.

The vine buds and the fruit ripens late, which can be a problem in marginal climates. It is used as a major variety in many Bordeaux blends to provide colour and structure along with a bouquet and flavour reminiscent of blackcurrants. It is planted extensively in Chile, California and Australia where the grapes ripen fully to give softer berry flavours. Many New World winemakers prefer not to blend Cabernet Sauvignon with other varieties.

CABESSAL, EN a method of preparing stuffed hare, which is tied up with string so that it forms a round and can be cooked in a circular dish. It is then said to be en cabessal. The method originated in the region of Limousin and Perigord. A Cabessal (or Chabessal) is also a French dialect word for the twisted cloth that women wore on their heads to carry a pitcher of water.

RECIPE

Hare en cabessal

Skin and gut a hare, reserving the liver and blood. Pound the liver with a garlic clove, then add the blood and 1 tablespoon vinegar. On the day before cooking, place the hare in a marinade of red wine, oil, carrots, thinly sliced onions and shallots, thyme. A bay leaf, a clove, salt and pepper. Prepare a stuffing with 500 g (18 oz) fillet of veal, 250 g (9 oz) raw ham, 205 g (9 oz) fresh pork, 2 garlic cloves and 2 shallots. Chop the ingredients finely, season with salt and pepper, and bind with an egg. Remove the hare from the marinade, wipe and stuff.

Sew up the opening in the belly. Bard the hare all over with larding bacon, then tie it with string so that it forms a round dish with a little goose or pork grease, some pieces of larding bacon and a few small onions. Add a small glass of brandy and a bottle of good-quality red or white wine, then a roux made with flour and goose fat. Cover the dish and cook in a preheated oven 150°C (300 °F, gas 2) for 4 or 5 hours. When three-quarters cooked, add the pounded liver and blood. Check the seasoning. When cooking is complete, the sauce should be substantially reduced.

When serving, remove the string, the larding bacon and the bones (which should come away easily from the flesh). Serve with croutons of bread fried in goose fat, which may be rubbed with garlic if desired.

CABINET PARTICULAR A private room placed at the disposal of customers by certain de luxe restaurants. They were very fashionable in Paris under the Second Empire and during the Belle Epoque in such establishments as the Café Anglais, the Café de Prunier and the Café de Laperouse.

CABOULOT A small French suburban or country café, or a small modest restaurant that permits dancing. The term appeared in 1852, being a Franche Comte word meaning 'hut' or 'small room'. It is described as a popular meeting place in a song by Francis Carco.

CABRALES The DOP handmade blue cheese (45—48% fat content) from the Picos de Europa mountain region of northern Spain is made from a mixture of unpasteurized goat's, ewe's or cow's milk. Commercial versions use pasteurized milk. Produced in 18-20 cm (7-8 in) diameter wheels weighing around 2.5—4.5 kg (5-9 lb), the cheese is wrapped in green foil instead of the original leaves. The best cheese are available in the spring. The paste has intense purple veining with a robust flavour and salty tang. Serve as part of a cheeseboard or mix with chopped black olives to spread on toast. The Spanish also use this cheese in sauces to serve with steak or vegetables.

CACIOCAVALLO an Italian DOP cheese made from cow's milk (44% fat content) and often smoked. It is spun-cut or pasta pilata cheese with a compact, straw-coloured pasta and a pale, fine, oily crust. It is moulded into the shape of a narrow ground with a smaller swelling on top and weighs 3-4 kg (6½-9 lbs. Its name, a combination of the Italian words cacio (cheese) and caravillo (horse), could come from the fact that the ripening cheeses are tied together in pairs with wisps of straw and hung on sticks (a cheval, that is mounted) to dry. Another possibility is that it was named after the seal of kingdom of Naples, which depicted a galloping horse and was imprinted on the cheese in the 14th century. It is also possible that it was so named because. Caciocavallo was originally made with mare's milk. Today, the best Caciocavallo still comes from southern Italy. It is usually eaten at the end of a meal. It is matured for a long period, it becomes very hard and a is then granted before it is used.

CADILLAC a sweet white wine area, situated in the Bordeaux region, across the Garonne River from the Sauthernes vineyard. The wines are made from the semillion, Sauvignon Blanc and Muscadelle vines, the grapes being picked when ripe or overripe. Formerly, Cadillac was included in the Premieres Cotes de Bordeaux AOC, but now it is produced in 21 parishes (communes), including Langoiran and Gabarnac. Usually drunk as a dessert wine, it may also be enjoyed with foie gras or as an aperitif.

CADRAN BLEU a former café-restaurant in Paris, in the Boulevard do Temple. Having opened in 1773 as a small café, it was damaged during the storming of the Bastille and was subsequently used as a meeting place for the leaders of the uprising of 10 August 1792. It became a very popular restaurant under the Consulate (179-1804) and the Empire, specializing in wedding and banquets (with its room, seating a hundred people, but poorly heated and lighted', according to Monsieur de Jouy in 1813). The establishment also provided private rooms of dubious repute. The house had not one upright window or storey, wrote Balzac in Le Cousin Pons. Around 1840, the Cadran Belu had declined as a fashionable place. A battery of artillery shook the building in the Revolution of 1848, and in 1860 it was demolished.

CAERPHILLY Shaped like a small millstone weighing around 3.5 kg (8 lbs), this semi-hard pressed cow's milk cheese was traditionally made in Wales, but it is now produced in both England and Wales. The best cheeses are farm-made from unpasteurized milk. They are lightly pressed and brined for 24 h hours before being rubbed with rice flour. The flavour is delicate but subtle, with a lightly salty quality.

CAESAR'S MUSHROOM Edible wild mushroom with an orange yellow cap., known as the royal agaric or the "king of mushrooms" because of the fineness of its flesh and its scent. Found in southern France, Caesar's mushroom likes warmth and even survives a certain amount of dryness. It grows spontaneously in woods, particularly in open oak grove with a good aspect, and also in coppices and plantations of sweet chesnut trees, from summer to autumn. When harvested in its juvenile stage, it is important not to confuse it with the white agaric (amantia blanche), which is fatal, or the fly agaric which is highly toxic

RECIPES

Hazelnut and Caesar's mushroom soup

Clean, peel and finally dice 657 g (1½ lb) Caesar's mushrooms, then wash and shred 6 round lettuces. Season the lettuce with salt and pepper and 1½ tablespoons caster (superfine) sugar. Heat 75 g (3 oz. 6 tablespoons) butter in a saucepan until it begins to turn brown, then put in the lettuce and the mushrooms; cook over a low heat, with the pan covered, for 30 minutes. Add a knuckle of veal, 1 litre (1½ pints, 4½ cups) milk and 6 tablespoons rice which has been boiled for 1 minute. Salt lightly and mix in 1 tablespoon fairy-ring mushrooms (marasmius oreades) or wood blewits (Lepista nuda) in dried or powdered form. Cook over a moderate heat for 2 hours.

Take out the knuckle and rub the soup through a fine sieve, return it to a low heat. Pound a handful of shelled and skinned hazelnuts and mix them with 75 g (3 oz. 6 tablespoons) butter. Press this paste through a fine sieve into hot tureen; add 3 egg yolks and 120 ml (4½ fl oz. 1/3 cup) double (heavy) cream. Pour on the soup, beating vigorously.

CAFÉ A place selling drinks (particularly coffee, beer, wine, aperitifs and fruit juices) and also snacks (sandwiches and salads). Originally, only coffee was served in these establishments.

The first café in the world was opened in Constantinople in 1550. In 1672 an Armenian called Pascal set up a little stall selling cups of coffee at the Saint-Germain fair in Paris. His success was only fleeting and he left to try his luck in other European countries. For some time, the fashion of selling coffee to be drunk at home continued in Paris. The French gradually, however, discovered the social aspects of drinking coffee in a public place, combined with the delights of conversation. Until then, there had only been premises selling wine, such as the calbaretts and taverns. The cafés, or maisons de café, began to open; they sold brandy, sweetened wines and liqueurs, as well as coffee. In 1696 the lemonade and brandy vendors' guild was formed.

Palais-Royal, Grands Boulevards, Left Bank and bougnats The first café (in the modern sense) was the Café Procope, opened in 1696 by an Italian. Cafés soon became a new way of life: people read the news there, played chess or cards, exchanged ideas, talked politics and smoked. The hero of Montesquieu's Lettres persannes said, 'If I were the king of this country, I would close the cafés, because the people who frequent those places become tediously overheated in the brain when they go there'. The 'club' cafés boasted a clientele of artists, officers and writers. In the 17th century, and more especially the 18th century, the cafés became the meeting places of men of letters and literary critics: La Fontaine, Crébillon, Fontenelle and the Encyclopedists were the habitués. The cafés of the Palais-Royal galleries – 'porticoes of the Revolution' – included the Foy, Regence, Mille Colonnes, Aveugles and Caveau; they became highly fashionable meeting places for discussing politics and listening to the best orators.

After the revolutionary turmoil, rustic cafés, cafés with performers, and pleasure gardens, such as the Tivoli and Frascati, opened. However, the return of the Bourbons put the political cafés (for example, the Lemblin) back into fashion. Here, in front of the bourgeoisie, dandies vied for the limelight with journalists. The Romantics deserted the Palais-Royal and literary life took refuge in the salons, where tea was the main drink.

Soon, when the Grands Boulevards became the focus of attention in the capital, it was the ice-cream sellers and the restaurateurs who drew the crowds with establishments such as the Café Riche, the Café de Paris and the Tontoni, but nevertheless the café survived. It often took the form of a club or society. On the terraces of the fashionable cafés and in the first cafés-concerts (cafés with performers) – supervised by the "garçon de café" clad in his black jacket and long white apron – artists and singers, writers, dandies, grisettes (French working girls) and young celebrities could be found. Such establishments included the Café des Varietes and the Divan Lapeletier. The cafes of the Left Bank also began to become important. These were the domain of writers, poets and intellectuals, while the newly emerging brasseries constituted serious competition for the cafe-restaurants. In the early 1900s, the Montmartre cafes served many artists. Later on, Montparnasse stole the limelight with the Closerie des Lilas, and the Parisian tradition of café life survived after the war in the Café de Flore and at the Deux Magots.

After the arrival of the bougnuts (wine and coal merchants) in the 19th century, the corner cafes owned by the bougnuts became firmly established, here the petit noir (cup of black coffee), the bullion de rouge' (glass of red wine) and pastis are consumed) at the bar and card games are played. (Note that in France, café or rut de café is a light red wine served in cafes at the bar.)

Cafes in Europe. In England, coffee was at first regarded as a paanacea against alcoholism, and the coffee houses were all the more successful as the turmoil in the political parties at the end of the 17th century created a need for public meeting place. Also English literature was then going through its 'French' period.

In Germany, cafes were set up on hamburg, Berlin and especially Leipzig, a town of printers that was frequented by writers and wits (J.S. Bach even composed a Coffee. At the beginning of the 18th century, the right to sell coffee was restricted to four 'distillers', but the fashion for drinking coffee became so widespread that the law was flouted and coffee beans were illegally roasted. Bootlegging was organized and ersatz versions of coffee appeared. In Berlin, cafes, assumed the signing tradition of cabarets. However, in Germany, most coffee was drink at home, with plenty of cakes. It was, moreover, more of a woman's drink, as men usually preferred beer

In Vienna, the café became firmly established in 1683, when the invading Turks abandoned 500 sacks of coffee. this was given to Kolschitzky, the hero of the victory over the invaders, and it was he who turned Turkis coffee into Vinnese coffee. It was filtered, flavoured with honey, enrich with cream and usually served with croissants. The Viennese had always considered the café to be a natural extention of their homes and offices. They spent many hours there – in the morning to read the news, in the afternoon to discuss business and in the evening to talk, receive guests and play billiards. It was in Vienna that the café-concert was born. The great Viennese cafes that perpetuate the tradition, with their hangings, soft lights and wooden panelling, are the Sacher, a veritable national institution. The same grand scale is seen in the salon de tbe (tea room), an important place for political and literary notables in Lisbon and Budapest.

Italian cafes existed before the first ones opened in France – especially in Venice, where the coffee shop (celebrated by Goldoni) was part of daily life. However, the most famous ones date from the 18th century: the Greco opened in Rome in 1760, and the Florian, which opened in Venice in 1720, held public concerts under the arcade of Saint Mark's Square, its elegant rooms were frequented by such figures as Mme de Stael, George Sand, Alfred de Musset and Marcel Proust.

CAFÉ ANGLAIS An establishment se up in the Boulevard de Italiens in Paris in 1802. It was named in honour of the Peace of Amiens, which had just been signed and which everybody hoped, would make the start of a long period of peace with England. English breakfast was served there (see café handy). At first, it was frequented by coachmen and servants, but in 182 as new owner, Paul Chevreuil, made it into a fashionable restaurant, famous for its roats and grilled (broiled) dishes. According to Veron this was 'the place in Paris where one dines best. However, it was with the arrival of Adolphe Duglere that the Café Anglas acquired a great gastronomic reputation, it was here that the great chef created potage Germany, poulard a la d'Albufera, sole Dugleen and Anna potatoes. At that time, the clientele of the Café Anglais came from the world of finance and the smart Parisian set. The Grand seize(one of its private rooms where the King of Prossia, Emperor Nicolas II and Bismarck had supper) was immortalized in Offenback's La Vie parisienne. The house was demolished in 1913, but its cellar, and the wood panelling of the Grand Seize, were purchased by Andre Terrail, the owner of the Tour d'argent, who married the daughter of the last owner of the Café Anglais.

Before the Revolution, another café Anglais existed in Paris, at the quai Conti. Its habitués used to meet there to read the English newspaper.

CAFÉ AU LAIT Coffee made with milk. It is usually drunk at breakfast in France. The fashion originated in Vienna and goes back to the end of the 17th century in France café au lait was the favourite drink of Marie-antoinette.

Opinions have always been divided about the benefits of this drink, which is said to be indigestible and rather unrefined. Madame de servigne, however, wrote in 1680. 'we have a fancy to skim the good milk and mix it with sugar and good coffee. It is marvelous, and will greatly console me for lent, Du Bois, my doctor, approved it for the chest and for chills. In those days it was called lait cafee, or café laite, and was recommended for its nutritional properties. It rapidly became popular and Sebastian Mercier remarked, in this Tableaux de paris. Café au lait has become the eternal breakfast of workers on building sites. They say that in most cases, it keeps them going until evening. However, Balzac, in his Nouvelle Theorie du dejeuner, was intransigent. 'To offer café au lait is not a mistake, it is ludicrous. Only porter now drink such a vulgar mixture. The drink saddens the soul... and weakens the nervous system.' For many years in the countryside of northern and eastern France, the evening meal consisted of a bowl of café au lait with bread and a cheese.

CAFÉ DE FOY, An establishment set up in Paris 1725, under the arcade of the Montpensier galleery at the Palais-Royal. Famous for its ice creams and sorbets, it was the legendary place where Camille Desmoulins harangued the crowd on 13 July 1789. The following day he stormed the Bastille. The jacobins and Muscadins alternately made it their headquarters, on each occasion purifying the premises by burning gin. It was fashionable until 1820, after which it declined, and Grimod de La Reyniere deplored its 'smoked wood panels, dim gothic chandeliers, cups without handles and cracked glasses'. The freehold was put up for sale in 1863, but no purchase was found.

CAFÉ DE LA PAIX this Parisian café, which was decorated by Garmier, opened in 1862 on the ground of the Grand Hotel, Boulevard des Capucines. It was frequented mainly by foreigners staying in the Grand Hotel. In the belle epoque (the edwardian era), the smart set came to eat an English breakfast (see café Handy) or to have supper after the opera, savouring the specialties of the chefs. Nignon and then escoffer. Massenet, Zola, maupassant, and later Truman, lecderc, Callas and Chagall were among the habitués of the Café de la Paix, an international meeting place for artists and high society.

CAFÉ DE MADRID An establishment in the Boulevard Montmartre in Paris, which suddenly became fashionable in 861, when the owner of the Café des Varietes, situated opposite, refused to subscribe to the newspaper Le Boulevard, which one of his customers had just set up. To support the founder of the paper, some of the customers deserted the Café des varieties for the café de Madrid, where the opponents of the imperial regime were already meeting. Gambetta, Henri de Rochefrot, Bandelaire, Villiers de T'isle-Adam, Monselect, and future members of the commune frequented it assiduously; Alphonse Allais was also an habitué of the Madrid.

CAFÉ DE PARIS an establishment that opened in Paris in 1822 in the Boulevard de Italiens. Regarded as the 'temple of elegance', it was frequented by dandies, fashionable ladies and such celebrities as Musset, Balzac, Dumas, Gautier and Veron, Successive managers brought with them a spectacular cuisine: Belle Alliance pheasant stuffed with truffles and rock patridges sur pedestal. The owner (the Marchioness of Hertford) specified in the lease that the café must always close its doors at 10 pm. It ran successfully for 20 years, but then declined and finally disappeared in 1856.

Another café de Paris, just as splendid, smart and expensive as the first one, was in business in the capital from 1878 to 1953, in the Avenue de l'Opera. Opened by Auguste Joliveau, it was frequented by the Goncourts and their friends and the Prince of Wales, the future Edward VII. Leopold Mourier managed it from 1897 to 1923, engaging famous chefs (such as Tony Girod) whose creations mark a milestone in culinary history, with such dishes as snipe à la Diane.

CAFÉ DES AVEUGLES an establishment that opened during the Revolution, at the Palais-Royal in Paris, in the basement of the Lemblin. It was frequented at first by the sans-culottes. A notice announced: 'Here you will be honoured by the title of 'citizen'' and can use the familiar form of address, and smoke.' An orchestra composed of five blind people, including one woman, inspired boisterous evenings, and it was claimed that blind musicians were employed so that they could not see the scenes of debauchery taking place before them. The café de Aveugles (literally, café of the blind) closed down in 1867.

CAFÉ DES VARIETES An establishment that opened in 1807 in Paris, in the Boulevard Montmartre. It began modestly, in a one-storey building backing on to the Passage des Panoramas, but was extended in 1831. The natural meeting place of actors from the Theatre des Varietes, it remained open late at night, attracting such famous customers as Villiers de l'Isle-Adam, Daudet, Murger, Baudelaire and Banville, who would come and enjoy the onion soup. Its decline began in the 1960s.

CAFÉ D'ORSAY Set up in Paris at the beginning of the 19th century, on the corner of the Quai d'Orsay (now the Quai Anatole-France) and the Rue du Bac, this establishment was the meeting place of officers from a barracks then occupying the site of the Palais d'Orsay. Musset and Barbey d'Aurevilly were also customers. The café then became the headquarters of the members of the central committee of the Commune. It had a particularly high reputation in 1975 and was later frequented by the editors of L'Officiel.

CAFÉ DU CAVEAU An establishment that was opened in Paris in 1784 by Cuisinier, in the Beaujolais gallery at the Palais-Royal. It was frequented by artists and musicians, including Boieldieu, Mehul, Talma, David, Chenier and Rodolphe, and it was here that supporters of Puccini and admirers of Gluck confronted one another. Coffee with cream and hot chocolate were served. In a small colonnaded temple called La Rotonde, built in front of the café's arcade in 1802, it was possible to see the table at which Bonaparte had eaten. The Café de Caveau (not to be confused with the Caveau) was in business until about 1885.

CAFÉ HARDY. This was opened in 1799 in the Boulevard des Italiens, in Paris. It became famous after 1804, when Mme Hardy started serving English breakfast. Customers selected their meat from a buffet, then a head waiter would skewer it on a fork and have it grilled (broiled) on silver grill in a white marble fireplace. The gourmets of the capital there, paying very high prices for kidneys, cutlets, andouillettes with truffles and poultry joints en papillote. This caused Cambaceres to say: "You have to be very rich to go to Hardy, and very hardy to go to Riche" (another famous café in the same boulevard). The establishment declined in about 1836 and the building was demolished. Four years later, a new restaurant (La Maison Dorée) opened on the same site.

CAFÉ LIEGEOIS an iced dessert, made of coffee mixed with fresh cream. Alternatively, it may be made with coffee ice cream, served in a large glass, with a tablespoon of very strong coffee and topped with Chantilly cream. The origin of this dessert is actually vietnamese. Café viennoise was popular all over Europe, but the Germanic associations of a name caused it to change during World War I.

CAFÉ NAPOLITAN Situated in Paris at No. 1. Boulevard des Capucines, this establishment (originally called the Café de la Ville de Naples) was famous from 1870 to 1910 for its selection of ice cream and sorbets. Its elegant terrace was frequented by fashionable Parisians, with such personalities as Counteline, Catulle Mendès, Barbey d'Aurevilly, Lucien Guitry, Jean Lorraine and Laurent Tailhade among the clientele.

CAFETERIA A self-service restaurant. The ready prepared hot and cold dishes are displayed on the counters or placed in automatic dispensers. In the latter, the choice is reduced to such food as sandwiches, pizzas, guiches, and cakes and pastries. The food may be eaten sitting down or standing. Hot and cold drinks may also be supplied, often in automatic vending machines. The world appeared in France in the 1950s, and came from Spain. In France, 'coffee-shops' are similar establishments that may be supplemented by table service by table service.

CAFETIERE A utensil for making or serving coffee. The word cafetière appeared in 1985, when coffee-drinking began in France, and the use of the cafetière became widespread in the reign of Louis XV; it was later provided with a heating plate and a spirit lamp. Flaubert recalls this antique device in Madame Bovary: 'Madame Homais reappeared, bearing one of those unsteady machines that have to be heated with spirit of wine, for Homais like to make his coffee at the table, having, besides, roasted it himself, ground it himself and compounded it himself.'

For a long time only two models of coffee maker were known in France: the infuse, in which the coffee was held in a filter, and the Dubelloy cafetière, in which the coffee was filtered. The latter, which appeared after 1850 and is known as cafetière de grandmère, was a wide not, made of fire clay. Another method of making coffee became widespread in the period between the World War – the Gona. It consists of two interconnecting toughened glass vessels placed one on top of the other and heated either with a spirit lamp or with an electric or gas heater.

During the 1950s Italian coffee makers began to be widely used in many coffee houses and restaurants. These aluminium or stainless steel coffee makers are placed directly over heat. Water is heated up in the base until it boils, then it is forced up under pressure, through a metal filter basket filled with ground coffee.

At about this time coffee makers using filters (either filter paper or filter pistons) began to be used for very finely ground coffee. Electronic coffee makers use this method; they work by heating water in a container and passing it through a filter full of coffee into a glass jug which stands on a thermostatically controlled hotplate, keeping the coffee hot for a limited period of time. Espresso coffee makers make stronger coffee using finely ground coffee; they work under pressure using the same principles as that for the Italian coffee makers.

The traditional coffee pot, which is often part of a coffee service, may be made of porcelain, earthenware, silver, silver gilt or stainless steel. It is used for making coffee using the 'jug method', the simplest and quickest way of making coffee. Allow 1 tablespoon medium-ground coffee per person, and scald the pot before adding the coffee. Although this method is still used occasionally, electric coffee makers have gained in popularity.

CAFÉ TURC A Parisian establishment opened in 1780 in the Boulevard du Temple and decorated entirely in the Turkish style. There were summer-houses, arbours and bowers that were lit up every night in the gardens alongside the boulevard, and a well-known orchestra played quadrilles. The café turc was still fashionable under Louis-Philippe, but did not survive the changes in the boulevard. It became a restaurant for weddings and bonquets.

CAFFIENE an alkaloid present in coffee (1-2%). Tea (1.5-3%) and cola nuts (2-3%), with stimulating, tonic and diuretic properties. When taken in excessive amounts, caffeine can become toxic. The quantity of caffeine contained in a cup of coffee varies according to the origin of the beans. Robusta beans contain two and a half times more caffeine than arabica beans. Indian and Sri Lankan (Ceylon) teas are normally richer in caffeine than China teas. Decaffeinated coffees and teas have become popular.

CAGHUSE. Also known as cagbuse. A speciality from Picardy, made with a piece of pork knuckle, liberally covered with finely onions and butter. It is cooked in the oven and served cold. The caghuse is traditionally made in an earthenware dish, greatest with lard (shortening).

CAHORS. A red wine from south-western France. It was awarded the appellation d'origine (controlee in 1876. After the fall of the Roman Empire, the Cahors region produced a red wine that was very famous in the Middle Ages. The hundred Years' War and the protectionism practiced by the citizens of Bordeaux curtailed the selling of Cahors wines, which had to be transported by boatmen down the Rivers Lot and Garonne to the Gironde region and the port of Bordeaux, from where they might be shipped to England and northern Europe.

The region of Cahors is situated to the east of Bordeaux and to the north of Toulouse, not far from the Bergerac vineyard. It is a limestone plateau (les Causes) through which the River Lot flows. The vineyard extends over the reddish stony soil, along the banks of the Lot, between Cahors and Soturac. It is made up of small plots scattered over 50 km (31 miles) and is exposed to the south and southeast. The main vine variety is the Malbec (or Cot). Which the Cahors vine-growers call Auxerrois. Other varieties are merlot and Tannat. Cahors wine is so dark and tannic and that it should traditionally be kept for three to five years in cask and five to ten years in bottle before being drunk. The young wine is inclined to be harsh and unrewarding, but later it becomes fine, full of fragrance, well balanced and dark red. Modern versions are becoming less tannic and they mature earlier. It is an elegant accompaniment to many spiced dishes, meats with sauce and game.

CAILLEBOTTE In Poitou and Anjou, a dish made with curdled milk and served cold with fresh cream and sugar. The word comes from catiller (to curdle) and botter (to coagulate on a rush mat). In other regions, the name is given to a cream cheese made from cow's milk (in Anjou and Saintonge) or from goat's milk (in Saintonge and Poitou). When caillebotte is drained in a woven rush basket, it is called joncbee. The traditional preparation of Poitou caillebotte involves adding a pinch of cardoon flower to curdle the milk. Le Vaternne's le Confiturier françois (1664) contained a recipe for this dish.

RECIPE

Poitou caillebottes

Infuse a pinch of cardoon flower in a very small amount of water for 5-6 hours. Pour the liquid into 1 litre (1¾ pints, 4½ cups) fresh milk and leave until it coagulates. Using a knife, cut the resulting solid mass into squares and heat gently until it boils. The curds are cooked when the pieces separate and float in the whey. After chilling, remove the whey and replace it with fresh milk. Top with fresh cream and sweeten to taste.

CAILLETTE A small flat sausage made of minced pork and green vegetables. It is cooked in the oven and may be eaten hot or cold. (caillettes are said to have originated in the Ardeche, but they are prepared in the whole of south-eastern France. The seasoning and secondary ingredients vary from region to region, and even from village to village to village, truffles are used in Pierrelatte, spinach in Soyans, greens in Chabeuil (where a caillette-tasting society, the confrerie de Chevaliers du Taste-Caillette, was established in 1967), pig's and beer in Valence and pig's liver a la pagetoise in Puget-Theniers. Catillettes are similar to a type of sausage made in Cornwall, which is served with mustard and mashed potato.

RECIPES

Ardeche caillettes

Blanch 250g (9 oz. 3 cups) beet leaves, an equal quantity of spinach and a large handful of dandelion leaves, nettles and poppy leaves. Drain and chop finely. Also chop 250 g (9 oz. 1 packed cup) pig's liver, an equal quantity of lights (lungs) and a little fat bacon and mix together. Brown a chopped onion in some lard (shortening) and add the meat, vegetables and a garlic clove; season with salt and pepper. Cook for 5 minutes, stirring continuously. Remove from the heat, divide the mixture into 8 pieces and roll each into a ball. Wrap each ball in pig's caul and pack them close together in an earthenware dish. Put a strip of fat bacon on each coillette and cook in preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 30—40 minutes. Cool the coillettes and store in earthenware pots, covered with lard, they may be served hot, browned in lard, or cold with a dandelion salad.

Provencale caillettes

Use only beet leaves, spinach and fine sausagemeat. Make a mixture consisting of half meat and half vegetables, season with salt and pepper, and add some chopped garlic. Divide the mixture into balls about the size of a tangerine, wrap them in caul fat, and flatten them slightly. Bake in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for about 40 minutes. Serve the caillettes either very hot, with a well-seasoned tomato sauce, or completely chilled with a salad.

CAILLIER A wooden drinking vessel used in the Middle Ages and until the end of the 16th century. The largest of these vessels were used as containers for wine and the bowl-shaped lids were used as drinking cups.

CAISSES Also known as caissettes. Cases used in cookery, pastry-making and confectionery. Savoury preparation en caisse (in cases) or en caissette (in small cases) are served as hot hors d'oeuvre or small entrees. They are generally filled with salpicons, ragouts or the various fillings used for harquettes, patties pies or tartlets. The cases are served in small round or oval receptacles made of ovenproof china, tempered glass, metal, plastic or light aluminium (frequently used for caterers' preparations). Petits fours, certain sweetmeats (bouchees) and cakes (such as individual babas) are placed in cassettes made of pleated paper. Caissets de Wassy are famous sweetmeats from champagne made of meringue with almonds, apparently created because Mary Stuart stayed in the town.

The term caisse is also used in France to denote various tins (pans and similar kitchen utensils).

CAJUN COOKERY Cajun cooking was introduced to Louisiana by the Acadians, descendants of 17th-century French settlers in Nova Scotia (then known as Acadia), who were driven out in the mid 18th century by the British. They fled to New Orleans, taking with them their French-influenced cooking style. Cajun evolved from Cagian, the Indian interpretation of Acadian.

Cajun cooking is often grouped with Creole cooking (see Creole cookery) and the two styles overlap in the use of ingredients and seasonings. Cajun cooking is referred to as more country style than creole, with its full-bodied, spicy and rich approach. With the same local ingredients, it is hardly surprising that onions, peppers and celery provide the same base for many savoury dishes, often seasoned and thickened with file powder. Shared recipes include gumbo and jambalaya.

Features of Cajon cooking include the traditional use of pork fat and a dark roux, cooked to a rich brown as a starting point for many stews. Etouffee combines freshwater crayfish with onions, peppers and tomatoes, crayfish are just as likely to feature in a blisque ofr jambulaya. The same stew may be prepared with chicken instead of crayfish, with the chicken fried to a deep rich brown in the first stages. Dirty rice is a cajun dish of rice cooked with chicken giblets – taking its name from the colour given by the liver and other giblets, the flavour is good and rich.

The idea of browning ingredients seasoned with dry spices until they are virtually black is associated with contemporary Cajun cooking. A mixture of dry spices is rubbed on ingredients before grilling or pan-frying them in a heavy dry pan until almost black and the spices smoke. This method is particularly good for oily fish and rich or fatty meats.

CAKES AND GATEAUX Although both terms can be used for savoury preparations (meat cakes or vegetables gateaux) their main use is for sweet baked goods. Cakes can be large or small, plain or fancy, light or rich, Gateau is generally used for fancy, but light, preparations, often with fresh decoration, such as fresh fruit or whipped cream. Whereas a cake may remain fresh decoration or ingredients that do not keep well, such as fresh decoration or ingredients that do not keep well, such as fresh fruit or whipped cream. In France, the word ‘gateau’ designates various patisserie items based on puff pastry, shortcrust pastry (basic pie dough, sweet pastry, paste sablee, choux pastry, Genoese and whisked sponges and meringue. To these may be added various additional ingredients, such as ground almonds, almonds paste, chocolate, fruit (fresh, preserved or dried), fondant or water icing (frosting), pastry and butter creams, liqueurs and fresh cream.

The word gateau is derived from the Old French wasted, meaning ‘focused’. The first gateaux were simply flat round cakes made with flour and water, but over the centuries these were enriched with honey, eggs, spices, butter, cream and milk. From the very earliest times, a large number of French provinces have produced cakes for which they are noted. Thus Artois had gateaux razis, and Boubonnais the ancient tartes de fromage broye, de crème et de moyeux d’oeulz. Heath cakes are still made in Normandy, Picardy, Poitouu and in some provinces of the south of France. They are called variouisl fottaces, fonaches, fonees or foyuyasses, according to the district.

Until the 17th century it was usual at Whitsuntide in Paris to throw down nienles and outblies (wafers), local Parisian confections, on the head of the worshippers gathered under the valued roofs of the cathedral of Notre-Dame. At the same time blazing wicks were showered on the congregation.

Among the many pastries which were in high favour from the 12th to the 15th centuries in Paris and other cities were echatudes, of which two variants, the flageols and the gobeth, were especially prized by the people of Paris, and darioles, small turtles covered with narrow strips of pastry. Two kinds of darioles were made, one filled with cream cheese, the other with frangipane cream. Talemouses, which are known today as talmouses (cheese turnovers), were also much appreciated.

Casse-museau is a hard dry pastry still made today; rations, petities choux and gateaux faitilletes are mentioned in a charter by Robert, Bishop of Amiens in 1311, which proves that puff pastry was known in France before the 17th century, when, someone writes claims, the process of making puff pastry was invented.

In the following centuries, pastrycooks, organized into guilds, produced not only the pastries listed above, but also *brioche*s, spice cakes, waffle of various kinds, marzipan biscuits, tarts and flans decorated in various ways, pates royales (a kind of meringue), almond cakes, dough cakes, cracknels and flamiches. Then came grand architectural, creations (pieces montees), often more decorative than delectable. In the 18th and 19th centuries, cakes became masterpieces of refinement and ingenuity, especially where pastrycooks were in the service of a prince or a large house.

- Traditional cakes Many cakes have a ceremonial or symbolic significance, linked to a religious feast - such as Christmas, Easter, Epiphany (Twelfth-Night cake) and Candlemas. In Addition, cakes have always featured prominently in family celebrations (for baptisms, birthdays and weddings). Formerly, tourteaux fromages were served in Poitou at wedding breakfasts. In Brittany, the bride and groom were given the gateau de la demande. In the country, cakes were provided for social evenings and gatherings, market days and threshing days.

A number of foreign cakes are also well-known in France(strudel, fruit cake, baklava, vatrushki, linzerlotte and panettone). On this subject, Jean-Paul Same gives a supervising example of culinary anthropomorphism: 'Cakes are human, they are like faces Spanish cakes are ascetic with a swaggering appearance, they crumble into dust under the tooth, Greek cakes are greasy like little oil lumpy when you press them, the oil oozes out. German cakes are bulky and soft like shaving cream; they are made so that obese easily tempted men can eat them indulgently, without worrying what they taste like but simply to fill their mouths with sweetness. But those Italian cakes had a cruel perfection really small and flawless, scarcely bigger than petitis fours, they gleamed. Their on the sideboard like pieces of painted porcelain.

RECIPES

Fruit cake

Soften 125 g (4½ oz, ½ cup) butter at room temperature. Cream it with 125 g (4½ oz, ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar and a pinch of salt until pale and soft. Add 3 eggs, one at a time. Mix 175 g (6 oz, 1½ cups) plain (all-purpose) flour with 1 teaspoon baking powder. Wash and dry g (9 oz, 1½ cups) currants or mixed dried fruit and add them to the flour. Mix well and stir into the mixture of butter, sugar and eggs. Refrigerate the mixture for 30 minutes.

Butter a loaf tin (pan) about 23 cm (9 in) long, line it with buttered greaseproof (wax) paper and fill with the cake mixture. Bake in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) for about 12 minutes then reduce the temperature to 180° (350°F, gas 4) and bake for 45 minutes. Check that the cake is sufficiently cooked by piercing with the point of a knife, which should come out clean. Allow the cake to become lukewarm before removing from the tin. Cool on a rack.

Gateau Alexandra

Gently melt 100 g (4 oz, 4 squares) sweetened chocolate in a bowl over a pan of hot water. Whisk 3 egg yolks, 1 whole egg and 125 g (4½ oz, 2/3 cup) caster (superfine) sugar in a basin until the mixture is almost white and is very thick. Blend in 75 g (3 oz, ¾ cup) ground almonds, then the melted chocolate, 3 tablespoon plain (all-purpose) flour, and 75 g (3 oz, 2/3 cup) cornflour (cornstarch). Whisk 3 egg whites with a pinch of salt until stiff, then gently blend them into the chocolate mixture together with 75 g (3 oz, 1/3 cup) melted butter.

Grease and flour an 18 cm (7 in) square cake in (pan) and pour in the mixture. Bake in a preheated oven at 180°F, gas 4) for 50 minutes. When cool, cover the cake with 200 g (7 oz, 2/3 cup) apricot jam, then refrigerate for about 10 minutes.

Meanwhile, melt 75 g (3 oz, 3 squares) chocolate with 2 tablespoons water and, in another saucepan, very gently warm through 200 g (7 oz, 1 cup) fondant. Add the melted chocolate to the fondant the mixture must be liquid enough to be spread easily. Cover the cake with this chocolate fondant, then store in a cool place until ready to serve.

gâteau flamand

make a smooth pastry dough by mixing 175g (6 oz, 1 1/2 cups) sifted plain (all-purpose) flour, 65 g (2 1/2 oz, 5 tablespoons) butter, 50 g (2 oz, 1/4 cup) sugar, 1 egg and pinch of salt. Roll it out to a thickness of 3 mm (1/8 in) and use to line a buttered manqué mould or sandwich tin (layer cake pan) 20 cm (8 in) in diameter, place it in the refrigerator.

For the filling, mix together 125g (4 1/2 oz, 2/3 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, 1 teaspoon vanilla sugar and 100 g (4 oz, 1 cup) ground almonds. Whisk in 3 egg yolks, one by one, then add 3 tablespoons kirsch and continue to whisk the mixture until it turns white until very stiff and blend them into the mixture together with 40 g (1 1/2 oz, 3 tablespoons) melted butter.

Pour the filling into the lined mould and bake in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for about 45 minutes. Then remove from the oven and allow to cool for a least 15 minutes before taking out of the mould. Melt 200 g (7 oz, 1 cup) fondant very slowly in a saucepan. Blend in 3 tablespoons kirsch and spread the fondant over the cake. Decorate with glaze (candied) cherries and sticks of angelica.

Gateau le parisien

Pare the zest from a lemon, blanch it for 1 minute, cool, dry and cut into short very fine julienne strips. Whisk 3 egg yolks with 100 g (4 oz, 1/2 cup) caster (superfine) sugar until the mixture is almost white. Pour in 25 g (1 oz, 1/4 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, 40 g (1 1/2 oz., 1/3 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, 40 g (1 1/4 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, 40 g (1 1/2 cup) cornflour (cornstarch), 1 teaspoon vanilla sugar and the zest, then carefully fold in the 3 egg whites, whisked with a pinch of salt until very stiff. Pour this mixture into a buttered fairly deep 23 cm (9 in) sandwich tin (layer cake pan) or manqué mould and bake in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 40 minutes.

During this time, make a frangipane cream with 3 egg yolks, 7 g (3/8 oz, 6 tablespoons) caster sugar, 25 g (1 oz, 1/4 cup) cornflour, 400 ml (14 fl oz, 1 3/4 cups) milk, 11 teaspoon vanilla sugar and 125 g (4 1/2 oz, 1 cup) ground almonds. Blend in 125 g (4 1/2 oz, 1/2 cup) chopped crystallized (candied) fruits.

When the cake is cooked, leave it to cool. Makes some Italian meringue with 3 egg whites, 2 tablespoons icing (confectioner's) sugar, and 175 g (6 oz, 3/4 cup) caster sugar. Cut the cooled cake into 3 equal rounds. Cover each layer with the frangipane cream and crystallized fruit mixture and re-form the cake. Spread some meringue on the top, then fill a fluted piping bag with the zest of the meringue and decorate all round the cake with regular motifs. Sprinkle the meringue with icing sugar and put in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4). Take out the cake as soon as the meringue turns brown. Leave to cool completely.

Honey and cherry cake

Soften 100 g (4 oz, 1/3 cup) butter at room temperature. Divide into small pieces, and then cream with 100 g (4 oz, 1/2 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, a large pinch of salt and 2 tablespoons liquid honey. Mix in 1 tablespoon baking powder, 200 g (7 oz, 1 3/4 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour and 3 eggs, added one at a time. Flavour with 2 tablespoons rum. Halves 9125 g (4 1/2 oz, 1/2 cup) glaze (candied) cherries and add them to the cake mixture. Pour immediately into buttered loaf tin (pan) and bake in a preheated oven at 190°C (375°F, gas 5) for about 45 minutes. If the cake is browning too quickly. Cover it with a piece of foil. Turn the cooked cake out of the tin when lukewarm and leave to cool on a rack. Decorate with glaze cherries and a piece of angelica.

Marble cake

Melt 175 g (6 oz, 3/4 cup) butter very slow, without letting it become hot. Whisk in 200 g (7 oz, 3/4 cup) caster (superfine) sugar and then 3 egg yolks. Sift 175 g (6 oz, 1 1/2 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour and 1 teaspoon baking powder and stir into the egg mixture. Whisk 3 egg whites with a pinch of salt until stiff and fold them into the mixture. Divide the mixture in half. Fold 25

g (1 oz. ¼ cup) cocoa into one portion. Pour the two mixture into a greased 20 cm (8 in) cake tin (pan) in alternated thin layers. Bake in preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) for 1-1 ¼ hours.)

Strewberry gateau

Wash, hull and dry 1 kg (2¼ lb). Large strawberries. Bring 150 g (5 oz. 2/3 cup) granulated sugar and 5½ tablespoons water to the boil, add 2 tablespoons of kirsch and 2 tablespoons wild strawberry liqueur. Place an 18 x 23 cm (7 x 9 in) rectangle of sponge cake on a baking sheet lined with greaseproof (was0 paper. Soak it with one-third of the syrup. (whip 500 g (18 oz. 2 ¼ cups) butter cream to make it lighter and, using a wooden spatula, incorporate 100 g (4 oz, ½ cup) of confectioner's custard (pastry cream). Spread one-third of this mixture on the sponge cake. Arrange the strawberries on top, very close together and pointing upward, pressing them well into the cream. Pour 2 tablespoons kirsch on top and sprinkle on 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) caster (superfine) sugar. Level the top of the strawberries using a serrated knife and cover with the remaining butter cream mixture, smoothing the top and sides with the spatula. Cover with another rectangle of sponge cake the same size and pour the remaining syrup over it. Coat the gateau with a thin layer of pistachio-flavoured almond paste (75 g. 3 oz, 1/3 cup). Leave the strawberry gateau for at least 8 hours in the refrigerator. Before serving, tidy the edges with a knife dipped in hot water. Decorate with strawberries sliced into a fan shape and coated with 100 g (4 oz, 1/3 cup) of apricot glaze, applied with pastry brush.

CALABASH The fruit of various plants of the gourd family. The sweet calabash is a creeping shrub from America and Africa. Its soft delicate flesh may be eaten raw in a salad. Baked in the oven, boiled, stewed with bacon and herbs (in martinique) or curried with beef (in Sri Lanka). In Japan, the flesh of some calabashes is dried, cut into thin strips and used as a garnish for soups. When dried, the fruit becomes hard and woody. These gounds are hollowed out and used as kitchen utensils, drinking vessels and other articles.

In South America liquid extracted from the pulp is used to make a syrup.

CALAMARI see squid.

CALCIUM A mineral that is essential for the development and functioning of the human body and is an important constituent of the bones and teeth. The principal source of calcium are milk, yogurt and cheese. Calcium is also found in fish in which bones are eaten, green leafy vegetables and a variety of other foods.

CALDEIRADA A thick Portuguese soup made from mollucs and fish with white wine, poured over slices of bread glazed with olive oil.

RECIPE

Caldeirada

Mix together 1 finely chopped onion, ¼ chopped pepper, 2 small tomatoes, peeled, seeded and crushed, ½ teaspoon crushed garlic, salt and black pepper from the mill. Place 12 clams in a heavy-based casserole with 60 ml (2 fl oz, ¼ cup) olive oil. Cover with half the mixture of vegetables, then 400 g (14 oz) white fish, skipped, filleted and cut into pieces, and 300 g (11 oz) squid, cleaned and cut into strips. Cover with the remaining vegetables and add 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup) white wine. Bring to the boil, then cover and simmer for 20 minutes. Heat 60 ml (2 fl oz. ¼ cup) olive oil in a frying pan and fry 4 slices of sandwich bread on both sides until golden. Drain on paper towels. Put 1 slice of bread on each plate. Pour a ladle of stock over each slice, then arrange the fish, clams and squid on top. Sprinkle generously with finely chopped parsley.

CALDO VERDE A Portuguese national dish consisting of a soup made with olive oil, potatoes and dark green Portuguese curly cabbage. It is garnished with slices of garlic sausage and served with maize (corn) bread and red wine. The cabbage has a very strong flavour and is cut into very thin strips.

CALIFORNIAN WINE Despite California's long history of winemaking, its influence did not become important until the latter part of the 20th century. California's grasp of modern winemaking in the 1870s was the driving force in opening up the New World of wine. A small cluster of wines from the Napa Valley, produced by pioneers such as Robert Mondavi, Joe Heitz and Warren Winiarski, were the first to prove that quality winemaking was not necessarily confined to the classic regions of Europe.

Vine-growing was introduced to Mexico by Cortes in the early 16th century and slowly spread to the north via the Spanish missions. It was not until the second half of the 19th century, when California ceased to be Mexican and became one of the States of the Union, that modern vine-growing really began. The credit for this goes to a few pioneers, including the great Hungarian nobleman, Agoston Haraszthy, considered to be the 'father of Californian wine-growing'. They imported a large number of European vines to replace that of the Mission – a variety of grape formerly introduced by the Jesuits, which has a very high yield but produces only mediocre wines.

Phylloxera in the late 1800s followed by prohibition had a severe effect on the industry. In the late 1980s the resources of California's wine industry were tested again when a second wave of Phylloxera swept through the State. Many growers used this as an opportunity to replant with greater consideration to variety, density, training and soil type.

Three-quarters of California's grape growing is concentrated in the Central Valley – between Sacramento in the north and Bakersfield in the south. This hot, dry, irrigated area is the source of much of California's inexpensive, 'jug wine' made from a range of grapes, including French Colombard, Chenin Blanc and Zinfandel.

In contrast with the central Valley, the Napa Valley, north of San Francisco, is renowned for its quality rather than quantity. This narrow, flat, 30 km. (18 mile) long valley has a unique climate, heavily influenced by a natural fog bank extending from the San Francisco Bay which lowers temperatures. This is heartland of California's top-quality producers, many of whom make wines which can challenge the best from around the world. Cabernet Sauvignon does particularly well here, as do Syrah and Chardonnay. Sonoma Valley to the west of Napa and Mendocino to the north are less famous but also capable of making good wines. Los Carneros to the south produces some excellent Pinot Noir and this is the centre of California's quality sparkling wine industry, some of which is owned by outposts of French champagne houses. South of San Francisco, the Santa Cruz Mountains, Monterey and Santa Barbara all produce quality wines for international and local markets.

After a fairly erratic development, involving trial and error, the European vine finally became adapted to growth in the varied soils and climates of California. Two major vine-growing areas can be distinguished the relatively cold north coast, which produces table wines, some of which are excellent and the much warmer inland valleys, producing mainly sweet wines and dessert wines, which are high in alcohol but in general of rather indifferent quality.

- Table wines The California wineries are outstanding well equipped and planned. They make in general, three main types of wine. The inexpensive red, white and rose 'jug wines' are often from table grapes (such as Thompson Seedless) and tend to be somewhat mediocre. Some of the better-quality wines bear European names, often those of classic grape varieties, but the use of classic regional names is declining and it must be said that such wines bear scant relation to their French counterparts. The 'varietal wines' bear the names of the grape or grapes from which they are made, although regulations do not yet insist on a 100 % use of these varieties, which is something often stressed on label's by top producers. Such wines can equal in quality many European fine wines.

- Sweet and sparkling wines. The aperitif and sweet wines are, in general, versions of European classics – sherry, port, Tokay, and so on, few of them attaining more than ordinary quality. The sparkling wines, however, made by the champagne process, can be really good, notably the dry ones.

CALISSON a diamond-shaped sweetmeat from provence produced on a small scale. Calissons are actually a centuries-old speciality of Aix-en Provence. In the 17th century they were distributed among the congregation during religious ceremonies held in memory of the plague of 1630. Later, they were traditionally eaten at Easter. The Provencal word calissoun (or carissoun), which comes from the Latin Canna (a reed), is used for the wire stand on which confectioners display crystallized (candied) fruit and calissons.

Calisson are made of 40% blanched almonds and 60% crystallized fruit (melon with a little orange) mixed with orange-flower water and syrup. The mixture is placed on a base unleavened bread and coated with royal icing. Calissons should be bought when very fresh and soft and kept only for a short time. They must be protected from the air as they dry quickly.

CALVADOS Brandy made distilling cider. Cider distillation is a very old tradition in Normandy – it was mentioned in 1553 in the diary of Gillies de Gouberville, a gentleman of the cotentin. The best Calbados in made with cider that is over a year old.

Distilling may be carried out throughout the year, but it is usually from March to April and August to September. Traditional stills with a double distillation are used for the appellation countrolee Calvados, which is made in the Auge region, comprising part of the department of Calvados and several crommunes of the Orne and Eure. The appellation reglementee Calvados are made by a single distillation process.

Calvados is a harsh rough brandy, 72° alcohol per volume, which must mature for a time in oak casks. It may be sold only after a year's ageing. It is usually categorized as follows: Trois etoiles' or Trois Pommes' Calvados are aged for two years in wood; 'Vieux' or 'Reserve' are aged for three years, "VO' (Vevery Old) or 'Vieille Reserve' for four years; 'VSOP for five years; 'Extra', 'Napoleon', 'Hors d'Age' or Age Inconnu' for more than five years.

Since the middle of the 20th century, Calvados has been subject to strict controls and, in export markets, has become one of the most sought after French spirits. (it is not, however, the same as the American spirit applejack.) old Calvados is to be enjoyed as a digestive, in a tulip glass. The Normans and Bretons have popularized the customs of café calva: the brandy is either served in a small glass at the same time as the coffee, or else is poured into the empty coffee cup while this is still warm (see Trou normand.)

Like most spirits, Calvados may be used in cooking and pastry-making, particularly in dishes that are Norman specialties, such as chicken or leg of mutton with cream and Calvados, apple desserts, omelettes and crepes flambees.

CAMACHO'S WEDDING An episode in Don Quizote in which the hero and Sancho Panza attended the wedding feast of a wealthy farmer, Camacho. The enormous number of dishes served at this repast has become provbial and the expression noces de Camache is used to describe a particular sumptuous feast costing an inordinate amount of money, 'The first thing that met sancho's eyes was a whole ox spitted on the trunk of an elm and, in the hearth over which it was to roast, there was a fair mountain of wood burning. Six earthen pots were arranged around this blaze... whole sheep disappeared within them as if they were pigeons. Innumerable skinned hares and fully plucked chickens, hanging on the trees, were soon to be swallowed up in these pots. Birds and game too, of all kinds, were also hanging from the branches so that they were kept cool in the air... There were piles of white loaves, like heaps of wheat in burns...

cheeses, built up like bricks, formed walls and two cauldrons of oil, bigger than dver's vats, were used for frying pastries, which were lifted out with two sturdy shovels and then plunged into another cauldron of honey standing nearby.'

CAMBACERES, JEAN-JACQUES REGIS DE

French jurist, politician and gastronome (born Montpellier, 1754; died Paris, 1824). During a particularly turbulent period in French history (from the French Revolution to the Restoration), Cambaceres adroitly advanced his career in the public sphere. He proved equally skilled in gastronomy. His table was reputed to be the most sumptuous and lavish in Paris equalling that of Talleyrand, and the dinners that he gave at his house in Rue Saint-Dominique were celebrated. Cambaceres chose the dishes himself and knew all the gastronomics skills, so that he was regarded as a supreme arbiter of taste. But he was accused of stinginess and gluttony by the famous chef, Carme, probably in an effort to blacken the name of the man that rivalled Caremes's employer Talleyrad, who also practiced 'table politics', during the Congress of Luneville, when Bonaparte ordered that postal services should carry nothing but despatches and food parcels were banned, Cambaceres pleaded: 'How can one make friends without exquisite dishes! It is mainly through the table that one governs!' the first Consul described in his favour.

More often than not, Cambaceres was accompanied by the Marquis d'Aigrefeuille, his faithful taster and table companion, to whom Grimod de la Reyniere dedicated his first Almanach de gourmands. An anecdotal guide to Paris. Cambaceres also prescribed over Grimod's Jury of Tasters from 1805 onwards. A healthy eater and generous host, who entertained distinguished guests on behalf of Napoleon, he died of apoplexy at the age of 70, after Louis XVII granted him permission to return from exile.

Three very elaborate dishes were named after him a cream soup of chicken, pigeon and crayfish, garnished with quenelles made with the same meats; a7 timbale of macaroni and foie gras; and salmon trout with crayfish and truffles.

CAMBRIDGE SAUCE An emulsified sauce found in traditional English cooking that is made from anchovies, egg yolks and mustard. It is served as an accompaniment to cold meats.

RECIPE

Cambridge sauce

Thoroughly desalt 6 anchovies, then remove the bones. Blend together 3 hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolks, the anchovy flesh, 1 teaspoons capers and a small bunch of tarragon and chervil. Add 1 teaspoon English mustard to the mixture and season with pepper. Thicken with groundnut (peasant) oil or sunflower oil, as for mayonnaise, then add 1 tablespoon vinegar. Adjust the seasoning. Add chopped chives and parsley.

CAMEL A ruminant manual of Asia and Africa, which possesses either one hump (dromedary) or two. Camel meat, mostly from young animals, whose tender flesh is similar to veal, is consumed in several countries of North Africa and the Middle East. The thigh joint of the dromedary is cooked chopped, as meatballs, or whole in marinade. In Mongolia, the fat from the hump is issued to make a widely used butter. The heart and other offal are also eaten. Considered unclean in the Bible, the camel was highly esteemed a choice dish. Parish during the 1870 siege, it appeared on the Christmas Eve menu at the Vision restaurant. Camel's milk is a nutritious and well balanced food for humans.

CAMELINE A cold condiment for pates, roasts and fish, used in medieval time. It was made of grilled bread soaked in wine, drained, squeezed and ground with spices (cinnamon, ginger, pepper cloves and nutmeg), then diluted with vinegar. After sieving, the sauce was kept in a pot, ready for use Taillevant criticized lazy people criticized lazy people 'who rather than make a pepper sauce to accompany stuffed young pig, are content to eat it with cameline'. A special version, served with fried fish, was called aux comelins (bread, cinnamon and garlic cloves ground with vinegar and fish liver).

CAMEMBERT A soft cheese (45-50% fat content) made from cow's milk, pale yellow in colour with a white furry skin speckled with brown flecks. Each cheese measures about 11 cm (4 ½ in) in diameter and is 3—1 cm (1 ½ in) thick,

There is a story that this cheese was invented at the time of the French Revolution in the Auge region a Normandy. A certain Marie Hated, who had hidden a recalcitrant priest from Brie, developed a new cheese by combining the method used in Normandy with that used in Brie. Marie Harel disclosed her secreted to her daughter, who set herself up in the village of Camembert near Vimoutiers (Orme) to sell the cheeses. While passing through the region for the opening of the Paris-Granville line, Napoleon II tasted the cheese and found it delicious. On learning that it came from Camembert, the Emperor named it after the village. However, amembert cheese is recorded in parish records as having been around as early as 1681. Whatever de origins, the name was never registered and a judgment of 1926 stipulated that Camembert could not have an appellation d'origine. This is why camembert is now mass produced throughout France and even in other countries.

Towards the end of the 19th century, a certain M. Ridel invented the cylindrical wooden box that enabled the cheese to be transported. The white mould with which Camembert is covered today was selected in 1910. (originally, Camambert was covered with blue mould and wrapped in straw.)

- Manufacture. Real farmhouse Camembert cheeses are rare today, but dairy cheeses are manufactured on both a small and large scale. It takes 4 litres (7 pints, 4 quarts) milk to make a Camembert. The best cheeses, made from raw milk curdled with rennet, are moulded with a ladle, then drained, salted, turned over. Removed from the mould and left to mature for about month in a dry cellar that the skin forms naturally. The cheese should be wrapped in transparent parchment paper, thereby showing the slightly bulging skin with its uneven coating of fur and orange streaks. The aroma should be delicate and full-flavoured. Since August 1983, the AOP Camambert de Normandie has been reserved for cheeses manufactured in the five departments of Normandy, which are produced in this way and are sold in thin wooden boxes. The village of Camembert is not in these regions and no cheese is actually made there.

Mass-produced Camemberts are made from pasteurized skimmed milk to which pasteurized cream is added. They are of uniform quality and keep longer than traditionally made cheeses, but the taste is never as good. They are drained faster and moulded mechanically. Demi - camemberts. (half-Camameberts) and Camembert portions are also found.

CAMERANI, BARTHELEMY-ANDRE Italian comedian and gastronome (born Ferrara, c. 1735; died Paris, 1816), working mainly in France, he became administrator of Favart and Feydeau the attrés. But above all, Camerani was famous for his groumandise, being a member of Grimod de La Reyniere's Juyr of Tasters' and giving his name to a soup which he invented and which was served around 1810 in the Café Anglais, when he was working at the Opera-comique.

In classic French cuisine, the name of Camerani is also applied to a garnish for poached chicken and calve's sweetbreads, consisting of small tartlets filled with a puree of foie gras (topped with slices of truffle and pickled ox tongue cut into the shape of cockscombs) and macaroni a l'Pitalienne, all bound together with supreme source.

RECIPE

Camerani soup

Slowly cook in butter 200 g (7 oz. ½ cups) finely shredded mixed vegetables, including a small turnip. Add 2 chicken livers, peeled and diced very finely, season with salts and pepper, and brown over a brisk heat. Meanwhile, cook 125 g (4½ oz) Naples macaroni in fast-boiling salted water. Drain, bind together with butter and season. In a serving dish, buttered and sprinkled with grated Parmesan, arranged alternate layers of the macaroni and the chicken liver mixture, also sprinkled with Parmesan. Heat gently for a few minutes before serving.

CANAPE A slice bread cut into various shapes and garnished. Cold canapes are served at buffets or lunches or with cocktails or aperitifs; hot canapes are served as entrees or used as foundations for various dishes. When served with game birds, canapes are generally fried in butter and spread with a gratin forcement, a puree made of the internal organs of the bird (cooked undrawn) or foie gras.

RECIPES

Preparation of canapes

Unlike sandwiches, which consists of 2 slices of bread with a filling in the middle, canapes are made with a single slice of bread; they may be rectangular; round or triangular in shape and the bread can also be lightly toasted. Cold canapes are usually made from white bread (slightly stale, so that it does not crumble, and with the crust removed) or rye bread; hot canapes are made from white or whole meal bread. Cold canapes should be served as soon as possible after preparation to they do not dry out. They may be stored in a cool place covered with a cloth (a damp cloth if kept in a hot or dry place).

There is a wide variety of garnishes for canapes, including all the garnishes indicated for croutes as well as various flavoured butters, spinach mixed with bechamel sauce and Parmesan (a la florentine), ham, scrambled eggs with cheese, and sardines (fresh sardines (fresh sardine fillets or puree of sardines in oil with hard-boiled-hard-cooked –egg and English mustard).

Cold canapes

Canapes a la bayonnaise

Spread some slices of bread with parsley butter and garnish with very thin slices of Bayonne ham cut to the exact size of the bread. Glaze with aspic.

Canapes a la boardelaise

Spread some slices of bread with shallot butter Garnish with a salpicon of cooked cep mushrooms and lean ham surrounded by a thin border of paprika butter.

Canapes with anchovies

Spread some Montpellier butter on lightly toasted rectangular slices of bread cut to the same length as the anchovies. Garnish each canape with 2 anchovy fillets separated by cooked egg white and egg yolk (chopped separately) and chopped parsley.

Canapes with asparagus

Spread some thickened mayonnaise on rectangular slices of bread. Arrange very small asparagus tips on each canape and 'tie' each bunch with a thin strip of green or red sweet pepper.

Canapes with cavier

Spread fresh butter on some round slices of bread and garnish with caviar. Sprinkle each with a little lemon juice and a pinch of chopped chives. Very thick soured (sour) cream may be used instead of butter if desired.

Canapes with shrimps, lobster or langouste

Spread shrimp (or lobster) butter on some round slices of bread. Garnish canape with a rosette of shrimp tails (or a medallion of lobster or langouste tail) and a border of chopped parsley or shrimp butter.

Canapes with smoked eel

Spread some round slices of bread with mustard butter or horseradish butter. Garnish each slice with 2 or 3 thin slices of smoked eel arranged in a rosette..surround with a double order of hard – boiled (hard-cooked egg yolk and chopped chives. Sprinkle with a little lemon juice.

Canapes with smoked salmon

Butter some slices of bread and garnish with slices of smoked salmon cut to the exact size of the bread. Garnish each canape with half a slice of fluted lemon.

Canapes with watercress

Spread watercress butter on some round or rectangular slices of bread. Garnish each canape with a centre of blanched watercress leaves and a border of chopped hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg (yolk and white together).

Danish canapes

Spread horseradish butter on some rectangular slices of black rye bread. Garnish with strips of smoked salmon or smoked herring, filling the spaces with salmon roe or peeled rounds of lemon cut in half and fluted.

Harliquin canapes

Spread some flavoured butter or thickened mayonnaise on slices of bread cut into various shapes garnish with various chopped items: pickled ox (beef) tongue, ham, truffles, yolks and whites of hard-boiled (hard-cooked) eggs, parsley. Surround the canapes with a thin border of butter.

Herring canapes a la hollandaise

Spread some slices of bread with a puree of herring soft roe. Garnish each canape with strips of smoked herring fillet, arranged to form a lattice, sprinkle with a little lemon juice and fill the lattice spaces with chopped hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolk.

Hot Canapes

Canapes with cheese

Butter some slices of bread. Top with a thick layer of Gruyere cheese (or Comte, Beaufort, Cheddar, Appenzell), either grated or cut into very thin strips. Brown in a hot oven. The canapes may be served with seasoned tomato sauce. Alternatively grated Gruyere can be added to a well-reduced bechamel sauce, seasoned with cayenne, and spread over the slices of bread, which are then sprinkled with grated Gruyere or small cubes of Gruyere and browned in a preheated oven at 230°C (450°F, gas8).

Canapes with crab

Finely crumble the crab meat (fresh or canned), removing all the cartilage, and flavour with a little lemon juice. Add an equal amount of bechamel sauce seasoned with nutmeg or saffron. Butter some lightly toasted slices of white bread and spread them with the crab mixture. Sprinkle with fresh breadcrumbs and melted butter and brown in a preheated oven at 230°C (450°F, gas 8). Garnish with half a round of fluted lemon.

Canapes with mushrooms

Prepare a dry well-browned duxelles of mushrooms and add bechamel sauce (1 part to 3 parts duxells). Spread this on lightly toasted slices of bread and sprinkle with fresh breadcrumbs and little melted butter. Brown in a preheated oven at 230°C (450°F, gas 8).

CANCALAISE, A LA A term describing several fish dishes using oysters from the Bay of Canale, in Brittany. Whiting sole or brill a la cancalaise are stuffed with poached oysters and prawn tails and coated with Normandy sauce or white wine sauce.

Fish consomme a la camalaise with tapioca is garnish with poached oysters. Sometimes sole fillets cut into small strips (en julienne) or small quenelles of pike are added.

RECIPES

Fillets of sole a la cancalaise

Fillet the soles and poach some oysters, allowing 2 per fillet. Fold the fillets and poach them in a full-bodied fish fumet to which the poaching water from the oysters has been added. Drain the fillets, retaining the juices, and arrange them on a dish in the form of a turba. Garnish the centre of the dish with peeled prawns (shelled shrimp) and arrange 2 oysters on each fillet. Coat with a white wine sauce to which the reduced cooking juices have been added.

Ragout a la cancalaise

Remove the beards from some oysters and poach in their own liquid or a well-seasoned fish fumet. Add some peeled prawns (shelled shrimp) and bind all the ingredients together with normande sauce. This ragout is used for filling pies, tarts and volsan vent. It can also accompany whole fish or fish fillets, such as whitening, sole for brill.

CANCOILLOTTE A specialty of the Franche-Comte region based on metton, a skimmed cow's-milk cheese. Metton takes the form of hand hazelnut-sized grains with a strong smell and has a long ripening process. The cheese is mixed in a bain marie with salted water and fresh butter to form a pale-yellow homogeneous paste, with a strong flavour. It is sweetened with white wine and eaten warm.

CANDISSOIRE A flat rectangular cooking utensil with raised edges and a removable wire grid forming the base. The candissoire is used to hold such items as crystallized (candied) fruits or fresh petits fours after glazing with melted sugar. It is also used for draining small pastries soaked with alcohol, especially, individual babas.

CANDALEMAS the Christian festival held on 2 February to celebrate the Presentation of Christ at the Temple and the Purification of the Virgin Mary. The word comes from the Latin Festus Comdelarian (feast of the candles) because many candles are lit in churches on that day. The origin of candlemas is the ancient Roman festival of fertility, Lupercalia, dedicated to the god Pan. Pope Gelasius I abolished it in 492 and replaced it with processions holding lighted candles to symbolize the light of the divine Spirit. The festival also coincided with the resumption of work in the fields after the regions of winter. This is probably why candlemas is the occasions when flour-based dishes such as pancakes and fritters, are made. Pancakes were considered to be a symbol of the sun because of their round shape and golden colour. To use the wheat from the previous harvest was also a means of attracting a blessing upon the future harvest.

The tradition of making pancakes is a very old one. It was mentioned in Le Menagier de Paris (1393), and there are various superstitions attached to it. In Burgundy, you must toss one on the top of the cupboard to avoid being short of money during the year! While pancakes the being made, shame on the clumsy one who drops it while turning it! At the Candlemas of 1812, prior to his departure for the Russian campaign, Napoleon made some copies a la Malmaison. It is said that four out of the five he made were successful, thus forecasting his victory in four battles. The fifth spoils pancake worried him, and on the day of the Moscow fire, he said to Marshal Ney: "it is the fifth pancake!"

CANDYFLOSS A confection known as cotton candy in the United States, made from coloured sugar syrup (usually white or pink), cooked and spun using a special machine into spidery threads which are rolled around a stick like a wool on a distaff. The earliest machine, operated by a crank shaft, appeared in France at the Paris Exposition of 1900. Today, high-speed electric machines are used.

CANDY SUGAR Refined crystallized sugar. The Arabic word qandi means 'cane sugar', but candy sugar can be made from sugar beet or sugar cane. It was used therapeutically from the 12th century onwards and was often flavoured with rose, violet lemon or redcurrant.

Candy sugar takes the form of large crystals, which are obtained by slowly cooling a concentrated sugar syrup so that it crystallizes around threads stretched out in the tank. Brown candy sugar is obtained from a brown syrup.

Candy sugar dissolved very slowly and is preferred to ordinary sugar for preparing fruits in a brandy and domestic liqueurs, since it allows time for the flavour of the fruits to emerge. It is also used in making champagne.

CANELLING. The technique of making V-shaped, grooves over the surface of a vegetable or a fruit for decoration, using a canelle knife. The vegetable or fruit is often sliced after the canelle grooves have been cut, to make decorative borders to the slices.

CANESTRATO Traditionally made in central and southern Italy from ewe's milk or a mixture of cow's and ewe's milk, this semi-hard cheese takes its name from the baskets in which it ripens and the imprint they leave on the rind. The ewe's milk cheeses may also be known as Pecorino canestrato or Pecorino Siciliana.

CANETTE A traditionally French wine bottle characterized by having a porcelain bung with a rubber washer, which is attached with a metal clamp. This bung has been largely replaced with a seal. The word canette originated in Picardy and originally meant an elongated jug. It is also used to hold sparkling lemonade.

CANNA A vigorous tropical plant with a thick fleshy underground stem. Which is eaten as a vegetable. Some varieties produce an edible starch, used particularly in Australia, where it is known as 'Queensland arrowroot'.

CANNELLONI A type of pasta dish originating in Italy. The word derives from canna (reed) and literally means 'big tubes'. Pasta squares are simmered in water and a knob of savoury filling is placed in the centre of each. They are then rolled up into cylinders to form the cannelloni, usually covered with tomato sauce and cooked au gratin. Alternatively can be bought in the form of dried tubes, ready for filling.

RECIPES

Cannelloni a la bechamel

Chop 2 large onions and soften them in 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter. Chop 3 slices of ham and about 250 g (9 oz) cooked chicken, add these to the onions and adjust the seasoning. Make a bechamel sauce with 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) butter, 50 g (2 oz, ½ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) milk, salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Add 75 g (3 oz, ¾ cup) grated cheese and the chopped meat and onions. Fill fresh pasta rectangles with this mixture, then roll them up. Alternatively, use bought cannelloni tubes cooked according to the packet instruction. Butter an ovenproof gratin dish and arrange the cannelloni in it. Cover with the remaining bechamel sauce. Sprinkle with 50 g (2 oz, ½ cup) grated cheese and a few knobs of butter. Brown in a preheated oven at 240° C (475 F, gas 9) or under a hot grill (broiler).

Cannelloni a la Florentine

Hard-boil (hard-cook) 2 egg and remove the shells. Boil some spinach and drain it. Make a very smooth bechamel sauce. Roughly chop the spinach and heat it gently in butter, allowing 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter to 1 kg (2 ¼ lb). Spinach. Finely chop the hard-boiled eggs and add to the spinach. Also add 2 raw egg yolks mixed with 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) double (heavy) cream, 40 g (1 ½ oz, ½ cup) grated Pamesan cheese, salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Gently reheat the mixture without boiling, then leave to cool. Fill fresh pasta rectangles with this mixture and roll them up. Alternately, use bought cannelloni tubes cooked according to the packet instructions. Arrange in a buttered ovenproof dish, cover with the bechamel sauce and sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese and a few knobs of butter. Cook in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) or under a hot grill (broiler) until the surface is brown and crusty.

Meat cannelloni

Fill fresh pasta rectangles with a meaty bolognese sauce. Roll them up and arrange in a buttered ovenproof dish. Alternatively, use bought cannelloni tubes cooked according to the packet instructions. Cover with tomato sauce, sprinkle with grated cheese, and place in preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) or under a hot grill (broiler) until the surface is well browned.

Seafood cannelloni

Fill fresh pasta rectangles with a stuffing of crab meat or chopped peeled prawns (shelled shrimp) bound with a well-seasoned bechamel sauce. Roll up the cannelloni and arrange in a buttered oven-proof dish. Alternatively, use bought cannelloni tubes cooked according to the packet instructions. Cover with normande sauce, sprinkle with a few knobs of butter and cook in preheated oven at 240 ° c (475 F, gas 9) or under a grill (broiler) until the surface is well browned.

CANOLE. A dry biscuits that is a specialty of Rochechouart (haute-Vienne region). It originated in 1371, during the hundred Years' War. The town, which had been under siege by the English, was relieved by due Guesclin. The inhabitants duly pillage the enemy camp and found wheat and fresh eggs, with which they made these biscuits, mockingly named after the captain of the English troops, Sir Robert Canolles (or Knobles).

CANON-FRONSAC AOC red wines from Fromsac, east of Bordeaux and near Libourne. The vineyards are on Limestone slopes overlooking the Dordogne, Canon-Fronsac is part of Fraonsac. The wines are full-bodied, well-balanced and deep in tone; they usually benefit 3-5 years' bottle age.

CANOTIERE, A LA A name usually given to poached freshwater fish covered with batarde sauce. It is also given to a carp dish in which the carp is stuffed with a fish mousse, baked in a white wine stock, then a fish mousse, baked in a white wine stock, then arranged on a gratin dish with sliced shallots and mushrooms and lemons juice, and sprinkled with breadcrumbs. The sauce, which is made with the reduced cooking juices, is thickened with butter. The dish is garnished with crayfish cooked in court-bouillon, and with fleurons (crescents of puff pastry). The same stuffing and garnish are used for matelote a la camahere.

RECIPE

Matelote a la canotiere

Butter a frying pan and make a bed of 150 g (5 oz, 1 cup) sliced onions and 4 crushed garlic cloves. add 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb) freshwater fish (carp, eel) cut into equal-sized pieces, a large bouquet garni and 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 2/3 cups dry white wine. Bring to the boil. Add 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) brandy and flame. Cover and gently simmer for about 25 minutes. Drain the fish pieces, placing them in another frying pan, and retain the stock. To the fish add 125 g (4 ½ cups) cooked button mushrooms and 125 g (4 ½ oz., ¾ cup) small glazed onions. Reduce the fish stock by two-thirds and bind with beurre manie – for a litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups of stock, bind with 50 g (2 oz, ½ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour kneaded with 50 g (2 oz., ¼ cup) butter; finally, add a further 150 g (5 oz, 2/3 cup) butter. Pour the sauce over the fish and simmer gently. Serve the matelote plain, with rice, or garnished with gudgeons fried in bread-crumbs, or whitebait, and crayfish cooked in a court-bouillon.

CANTAL. A high-fat (45% fat content) cow's-milk cheese from the Auvergne region of France. It is ivory in colour with a naturally darker crust, a flexible finely granulated texture and a sweet nutty flavour riper cheeses are a little firmer and more highly flavoured. It is also called Fourme du Cantal or Fourme de Salers (where the cows produce a rich full flavoured milk). An OP label means that the production region is strictly defined as the department of Cantal and the arrondissements of Tulle, Ussel, rioude, Clermont-Ferrand and Issoire. Cantal is considered the ancestor of French cheese. Pliny the Elder mentioned it, as did Gregoire de Tours. The similarity of its manufacture to that of British cheddar suggests that the Romans may have introduced the technique to the Bretons across the English channel.

Cantal comes in the form of a cylinder, 35—40 cm (14—16 in). high and the same in diameter, weighing 35—45 kg (77-100 lb.). dairy Cantal is produced all the year round, whereas farm Cantal comes from the shepherds' butts of the Cantal. Connoisseurs prefer it when it has matured for three months the thick crust sinks into the cheese, forming brown marks, and it has a fairly sharp taste. A smaller central is also produced, called a cantolet or cantolon, weighing 4-10 kg (9-22lb.) an intermediate petit cantal weighs 20-22 kg (44-48 lbs.) cantal is often served after a meal, with wine and fruit; it is also widely used in gratins, coutes, soups and souffes, as well as in typically regional dishes (such as aligot, gatis, patrnque and truffade).

CANTHARUS A bell-shaped drinking vessel used by the Greeks and Romans. Made of ceramic, bronze or silver it stood on a single foot and had two vertical handles that those above the rim.

CANTONNAISE, A LA The French term for a garnish rice dish inspired by Cantonese cuisine. For Cantonese fried rice, the grains must be well separated from each other after cooking. The rice is cooked plain, then left to rest for a few hours in the refrigerator, it should be fluffed up from time to time to aerate it. For the garnish, some lard (shortening) is heated in a frying pan, together with salt, smoked bacon for ham, or even lacquered pork) cut up into small pieces, chopped celery sticks and prawns (shrimp). After a few minutes, the rice is added; when this is set, some eggs are broken into the pan. The mixture is stirred until the eggs are just set.

The dish can also include crab meat, shellfish bamboo shoots or peas. The traditional Chinese seasoning is soy sauce and rice alcohol.

CAPACITY Also referred to as content. The volume of a vessel, which determines the quantity of a substance it can hold. In practice, the term capacity is used for bottles and cans of liquid and content for other receptacles. There is always a difference between the nominal content of a receptacle (the capacity) and the actual content (volume or net weight contained).

CAPE GOOSEBERRY The fruit of a bush originating in Peru, which grows wild in hedgerows and thickets in the warm coasted regions of the Atlantic and Mediterranean. Also called physallis, Chinese lantern, strawberry tomato, love-in-a-cage and winter cherry, the Cape gooseberry is yellow or red, the size of a small cherry, and is enclosed in a papery brown calyx. It has a tart flavour and is used to make syrups, jams and aperitifs, as well as in fruit salads, sorbets and ice creams. It also make an excellent accompaniment to some savoury foods, particularly fish or rich meats.

RECIPES

Cape gooseberry compote

Dissolve 500 g (18 oz, 2 ½ cups) lump or granulated sugar in 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup) water. Strip the fruits from their calyces and drop them into the boiling syrup. Cook for 5 minutes, then drain and put them into a compote dish. Add the rind of a lemon to the syrup, reduce this by a quarter and pour it over the fruit. The rind should not be cooked with the fruit as it would affect its flavour.

Cape gooseberry jam

Gently heat 800 g (1 ¾ lb. 3 ½ cups) lump or granulated sugar with 800 g (1 ¾ lb) cape gooseberries. Stir from time to time until the sugar is dissolved, then bring to the boil. Boil the jam until the setting point is reached, then pour into jars immediately.

CAPER. The flower bud of a shrub which is native to eastern Asia but widespread in hot regions. Capers are used as a condiment, either pickled in vinegar or preserved in brine or in dry, coarse salt. Salted capers are rinsed before use. When pickled, they are sour but still of flavour. The Romans used them to season fish sauces. Capers are also used to flavour rice and meatballs (lamb and veal) and garnish pizzas; they go well with mustard and horseradish. (see Gribiche, Ravigote). The flower buds of nasturtium, butercup, marigold and bottom are sometimes used as substitutes for capers.

RECIPE

Caper sauces

To accompany boiled fish, add 2 tablespoons pickled capers, well drained, to 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) hollandaise sauce or butter sauce.

To accompany English-style boiled muttons, prepare melted butter sauce, adding the mutton cooking juices to the roux, followed by well-drained capers and a little anchovy essence (extract) or a puree of desalted anchovies.

CAPERCAILLIE The largest species of grouse. The adult male is the size of a turkey and can weigh up to 8kg (18 lb). The hunting of female and young capercaillies is forbidden. The bird lives in coniferous hilly woodlands, feeding on coniferous hilly woodlands, feeding on conifer shoots, which gives its flesh a pronounced flavour of resin. It is rare in France, being found in the mountains of the Ardennes, Vosges and Pyrenees. The black grouse is often preferred for cookery: its delicate flesh is whiter than of the pheasant, but it is prepared in the same way.

CAPILOTADE A ragout originally from classic French cookery, made of cooked meat leftovers

(poultry, beef or veal) that are stewed until they disintegrate. The word comes from the Spanish capitrotula, which was a brown sauce made with garlic, eggs and herbs, used to cover the cut pieces of meat. The expression en capilotade (meaning in small pieces) is used in cookery, particularly for poultry dishes.

RECIPES

Chicken en capilotade

Take a chicken (boiled, braised, poached or roasted) and remove the bones. Cut the meat into small pieces and place in a well-reduced cold sauce (chasseur, Italian, Portuguese or Provençal). Cover and leave to simmer gently until the meat forms a mass. Then pour into a deep dish.

Alternatively, the chicken and sauce can be poured into a grain dish, sprinkled with breadcrumbs and knobs of butter, then cooked in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) or under a hot grill (broiler) until the surface is well browned. Served with rice à la Créole.

CAPITAINE. Sea fish related to the sea bass, sometimes called grand pourceau ('big swine'), living off the coast of West Africa, where it enters the estuaries and swims up the rivers. About 50 cm (20 in) long, it has a pinky-white flesh with a very delicate flavour which it preserves well and does not lose in cooking. It may be steamed, grilled (broiled) on one side like salmon, cooked en papillote or chopped up with tartare sauce, herbs and lemon. In Senegal, it often forms part of the bou diène.

RECIPES

Capitaine in banana leaves

Wash 4 medium-sized banana leaves, remove the central rib, then scald briefly to soften them. Lay them out flat and place 1 capitaine fillet on each one. Plunge 2 tomatoes in boiling water for a few seconds, then remove the skin and seeds and roughly chop the flesh. Halve and thinly slice 1 onion, then cook it briefly in a little olive oil until slightly softened but not cooked. Allow long enough to take the raw edge off the flavour of the onion. Season the pieces of fish with salt and pepper. Arrange the tomatoes and onion on top. Fold the banana leaf over and secure with cocktail sticks (toothpicks). Steam for 30 minutes. Sautéed or steamed okra go well with the steamed fish.

CAPLIN refers to two species of marine fish, up to 15 cm (6 in) long. One is a Mediterranean species; the other is common in the English Channel and the Bay of Biscay. They have a fairly thickset body, brownish-yellow on the sides and white on the belly. The large head has large bulbous eyes and a bomb under the chin. The two species are distinguished by the spacing of the caudal fins. The caplin, whose delicate flesh flakes easily, is used especially in fish soups.

CAPON A young cock that has been castrated and fattened. The meat is remarkably tender and this method of rearing poultry is a very ancient one. It was a speciality of the French city of Le Mans, but gradually disappeared because of the cost and the length of time involved. In Bresse and Landes. Homosexual castration of cockerels has been banned since 1959. Capon is prepared in the same way as chicken.

The abundance and great delicacy of the flesh of a capon is due to the accumulation of fat, which is stored in successive layers in the muscles. A capon may weigh as much as 6 kg (13 lbs.)

Capon from Landes are fed on maize (corn) and are yellow, whereas those from Bresse are white. They are suitable for serving on festive occasions when there are plenty of guests.

RECIPE

Roasted poached capon with pumpkin gratin

seasoned the body cavity of a 3-3.5 kg (6 ½ - 8 lb) capon. Place 1 peeled onion and a large bunch of taragon and parsley in the cavity, then truss the capon securely. Place in a large pan and pour in enough chicken stock to cover. Heat, gently until simmer gently for 30 minutes. Drain the capon well and transfer it to a roasting tin (Pan).

Dot the capon with 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) butter and roast it in preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) for 30 minutes. Reduce the temperature to 220°C (425°F gas 7) and cook for a further 30 minutes. Baste the bird well, then add 2 diced carrots, 1 chopped onion, the chopped green part of 1 leek, 1 dice 3 celery stick, 1 crushed garlic clove and 1 bouquet garni to the container. Turn the vegetables in the juices and cook for a further ½-1 hour. Basting frequently, until the capon is cooked. Cover the top loosely with foil, if necessary to prevent the capon from becoming too brown.

Meanwhile, peel and seed a 3 kg (6 ½ lb) pumpkin and cut it into wedges. Cook the pumpkin in boiling salted water with 1 bouquet garni and 3 peeled garlic cloves for 12 minutes, or until tender. Drain the pumpkin thoroughly.

Press the garlic cloves over the bottom of a large gratin dish. Coarsely mash the pumpkin with a fork, adding salt to taste, a little grated nutmeg and a pinch of cayenne pepper. Spread the pumpkin out evenly in the dish. Pour 400 ml (14 fl. Oz. 1 ¾ cups) double (heavy) cream over the pumpkin and sprinkle with 90 g (3 ½ oz., 1 cup) grated Gruyere cheese. Place the pumpkin gratin in the oven with the capon for the final 15-20 minutes cooking, until it is golden and bubbling.

Transfer the capon to a serving platter. Skim off and reserve excess fat, then add 100 ml (4 fl oz 7 tablespoons) dry white wine to the vegetables remaining in the roasting tin. Boil until well reduced and nearly dry. Pour in 250 ml (8 fl oz, 1 cup) chicken stocks and bring to the boil for a few minutes, scraping all the cooking juices into the liquor. Strain through a fine sieve and return to the pan. Bring to the boil and boil until reduced slightly and full flavoured. Whisk in a knob of butter and a little of reserved cooking fat. Serve this sauce with the carved capon and the pumpkin gratin.

CAPONATA. A Sicilian speciality made of aubergines (eggplants), celery and tomatoes, sliced and fried in olive oil and flavoured with capers, olives and anchovy fillets. This dish is served as a cold hors d'oeuvre.

RECIPE

Caponata

Peel, 4 aubergines (eggplants), cut into large dice and sprinkle with salt. When they have lost some of their water, wash and wipe them and fry in oil. Cut the following ingredients into very small pieces: 100 g (4 oz, ¾ cup) olives, a head of celery scalded in salted water, 4 desalted anchovies and 50 g (2 oz. 3 tablespoons) capers. Slices an onion and brown in oil. Heat up 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup) tomato passta (puree) with 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) sugar until it is well reduced and darker in colour. Then add 3 tablespoons vinegar and leave to simmer for a few minutes. Season with salt and pepper, add some chopped parsley, then mix the sauce with the aubergines and other ingredients. Allow to cook thoroughly. Arrange in the shape of a vegetable dish.

CAPSICUM The botanical name for the species of plants bearing peppers Capsicum annam includes the mild peppers, simply referred to as peppers, and sometimes known as capsicums, sweet of bell peppers. Pimiento or pimento. Capsicum frutescens produces hot peppers or chillie peppers, known as chillies, and capsicum cbinense also yields hot chillies, including the Scotch bonnet and Habanero varieties. Belonging to the same family as the tomato and aubergine (eggplant), they were discovered by Christopher Columbus in America and described by botanists at the beginning of the 10th century; they soon spread through Europe and the rest of the world. Capsicums are sold fresh, dried or ground See pepper and Chilli.

CAPUCIN A small savoury tartlet, filled with Gruyere choux pastry and served as a hot entee.

RECIPE

Capucins

Make a rich shortcrust pastry (basic pie dough) using 200 g (7 oz., 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ cups). Plain (all-purpose) flour, 100 g (4 oz. $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) well-softened butter, a large pinch of salt and 2 or 3 tablespoons very cold water. Use this pastry to line 8 tartlet tins (pans) also make some choux pastry using 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) water, 50 g (2 oz, $\frac{1}{4}$ cup) butter, a large pinch of salt and 125 g (4 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz, 1 heaped cup) plain flour. Then, away from the heat and one at a time. Add 3 whole eggs and 75 g (3 oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) grated Gruyere cheese. Place a ball of the Gruyere Choux pastry in each tartlet and bake in a preheated oven at 190°C (375°F, gas 5) . serve hot.

CAQUELON An earthenware dish with a glazed interior, used in southern France to cook dishes that require simmering. Originally it was placed in hot ashes. When used on a cooker (stove), a difusing device must be placed between the caquelon and the gas flame or hotplate. It is customary to rub the inside with a garlic clove the first time it is used, so that it does not crack. In south-western France, it is called a Toupiat pale caramel colour at 160°C (325°F). Pour the caramel into the mould and tilt the mould in all directions to distribute the caramel over the bottom and sides. Continue to tilt until the caramel no longer flows.

CARAMELS. Sweet (candies), often square-shaped, made from a mixture of sugar, cooked glucose syrup and dairy products (milk, butter or cream), plus vegetable fats and flavorings. These are various types—hard and soft caramels, fudge, hopje and toffee—depending on the composition, degree of cooking, shape and flavour. The French town of isigny, famous for its milk, also makes famous caramels.

- HARD CARAMELS – These are made using glucose syrup, sugar, water and milk. Fats and flavourings are also added. After homogenization, the mixture is heated until it reaches the required degree of hardness, then cooled, cut up and (if required) wrapped. Hard caramel is also made into lollipops. Although cocoa, coffee or vanilla can be used as flavouring, it is essentially milk, more or less caramelized, that gives it its flavour.
- SOFT CARAMELS – The Glucose syrup is dissolved in an emulsion of milk and fats, then cooked and flavoured with vanilla, cocoa, coffee or hazelnuts. Cutting is done after cooling. Making caramel at home requires special equipment, particularly a wooden frame in which the caramel sets.

RECIPES

Hard chocolate caramels

Mix 250 g (9 oz. Generous 1 cup) granulated sugar 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) double (heavy cream, 40 g (2 or 2 tablespoons) honey or glucose and 50 (2 oz. ½ cup) cocoa in a thick saucepan. Heat while stirring continuously with a wooden spoon, until the mixture reaches a temperature of 142°C (288°F). Oil a marble or other heat-resistant surface and a caramel frame, pour the caramel into the middle of the frame and leave to harden, but do not allow to cool completely. Remove the frame and pass a flexible metal spatula under the sheet of caramel to detach it from the surface. Cut the caramel into 2 cm (¾ in) squares.

Hard coffee caramels

Mix 250 g (9 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) double (heavy) cream, 1 tablespoon coffee and 12 drops of lemon juice in a thick saucepan. Heat while stirring continuously with a wooden spoon, until the mixture reaches a temperature of 142°C (288°F). Oil a marble or other heat-resistant surface and a caramel frame, and proceed as for chocolate caramels.

Soft butter caramels

Place 250 g (9 oz, generous 1 cup) granulated sugar, 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) milk, and 3 tablespoons honey or liquid glucose in a thick saucepan. Add a vanilla pod (bean) split into two and bring to the boil while stirring continuously with a wooden spoon. Add 150 g (5 oz, 2/3 cup) butter in small quantities and lower the heat. Continue to cook while stirring, until the temperature reaches 120°C (248°F). Oil a marble or other heat resistant surface and 4 caramel rules or an 18 cm (7 in) tart ring. Remove the vanilla pod from the saucepan and pour the caramel into the ring or between the rules, on top of the prepared surface. Leave to cool completely for 2-3 hours before cutting up the caramel with a large knife.

Soft cream caramels.

Put 250 g (9 oz. Generous 1 cup) granulated sugar, 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) double (heavy) cream, 1 tablespoon coffee extract and 2 tablespoons honey or liquid glucose into a thick saucepan. Stir over a high heat with a wooden spoon, then reduce the heat and allow the cooking to continue at a simmer, still stirring, until the temperature reaches 120°C (248°F). Continue as for soft butter caramels. The coffee can be replaced with 75 g (3 oz. ¾ cup) cocoa or 150 g (5 oz. 1 ¼ cups) crushed hazelnuts or pistacio nuts, moistened with boiling milk and pressed through a sieve.

CARAWAY An aromatic plant, common in central and northern Europe that is grown mainly for its brown oblong seeds. When dried, these are used as a spice, particularly in eastern Europe, to flavour sauerkrut and stews and to accompany certain cheeses (Gouda and Munster). In Hungary and Germany, where caraway is very popular, it is used to flavour bread and cakes. In Britain, it is added to cooked potatoes and baked in cakes and biscuits (Shakespeare's shallow invites Falstaff to partake of 'a last year's pippin of mine own grafting, with a dish of caraways'). In France, it is used to flavour Vosges dragees. Caraway is also widely used in making liqueurs, such as Kummel, Vespetto, schnapps and aquavit. Caraway was used in prehistoric times (the seeds have been found at ancient sites) and was appreciated by the Romans, who ate the root like a vegetable.

CARBONADE. A Flemish specialty made of slices of beef that are browned and then cooked with onions and beer. The word comes from the Italian carbonata (charcoal-grilled). The name carbonade (or carbonade) is also given to grilled (broiled) pork loin, as well as to certain beef stews with red wine prepared in the south of France.

RECIPES

Carbonade à la flamande

Slice 250 g (9 oz, 1 ½ cups) onions. Cut 800 g (1 ¾ lb) beef flank or duck steak into pieces or thin slices, and brown over a high heat into a frying pan in 40 g (1 ½ oz, 3 tablespoons) lard. Drain. Fry the onions until golden in the same fat. Arrange the meat and onions in a flameproof casserole in alternate layers, seasoning each layer with salt and pepper. Add a bouquet garni. Deglaze the frying pan with 600 ml (1 pint, 2 ½ cups) beer and 3 tablespoons of beef stock (fresh or made with concentrate). Make a brown roux with 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter and 25 g (1 oz, ¼ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, and add the beer mixture, then ½ teaspoon brown sugar. Adjust the seasoning. Pour the mixture into the casserole, cover and leave to cook very gently for 2 ½ hours. Serve in the casserole.

CARCASS. An animal after slaughter and processing at the abattoir. The ratio between the weight of the carcass and the weight of the live animal represents the killing-out percentage and reflects the animal's meat yield. Large cattle, calves and sheep are bled after slaughter, then skinned and eviscerated; the feet and head are cut off. Pigs, on the other hand, are not skinned, and the carcass includes the head and feet. For large cattle the carcass is cut into four quarters, fast-cooking parts are at the back, low cooking parts at the front. The 'fifth quarter' comprises the offal and byproducts. The carcasses are hung from large pegs, called chevilles in French, which is why butchers' wholesale suppliers are called chevillards.

CARDAMOM also known as cardamon. An aromatic plant from the Malabar region or southwestern India, whose capsules contain seeds that are dried and used as a spice. Cardamon is used much more in the East than in Europe, except for Scandinavian countries, where it is used to spice mulled wines, stewed fruit, cakes, flans and some charcuterie products. White cardamoms, occasionally found in some Indian stores and used in some sweet recipes, are bleached green cardamoms. Green cardamoms are the most widely used. The small, papery, pale green and conical pods cover chambers containing tiny black seeds. Their flavour is refreshing, with citrus and eucalyptus qualities, it is light but distinctive and invasive.

Brown cardamoms are large, hairy and brown black in colour. They are used in Indian cooking in some savoury dishes, to which they are added whole and removed after cooking. Their flavour is less 'clean' not as fresh and not as distinct. Cardamom is widely used in Indian cooking, both savoury and sweet it is also chewed as a breath freshener. In Arab countries its spicy flavour is appreciated with coffee.

CARDINAL A fish dish that is garnished with lobster escalopes (or sometimes slices of truffle) or coated with a white sauce containing lobster stock. The name refers to the colour of the lobster after cooking, just as the French very cardinaliser is used to describe sellfish cooked in stock – their shells became red, like a cardinal's robes.

Cardinal is also the name of iced deserts containing red fruit (such as bombe cardinal) or fruit desserts. The fruit can either be cold (raw or poached), sometimes arranged on vanilla ice cream and coated with strawberry or raspberry sauce, or hot (poached) and coated with the reduced cooking juice plus cassis (blackcurrant liqueur), as a pears cardinal.

RECIPES

Bombe cardinal

Line conical ice mould with strawberry or raspberry ice cream and fill the inside with vanilla mousseline mixture flavoured with praline.

Brill cardinal

Prepare the fish, season with salt and pepper, then stuff with pike forcemeat to which lobster butter has been added. Poach the brill in white wine, drain and arrange on the serving dish. Garnish with thick medallions of lobster, cover with cardinal sauce and sprinkle with lobster coral.

Cardinal eggs in moulds

Butter some dariole, sprinkle the bottom and sides with lobster coral, break an egg into each mould and cook in a bain marie. Fill some baked tartlet cases with salpicon cardinal and invert each mould into a tartlet. Cover with cardinal sauce.

Cardinal sauce

Heat 200 ml (7 fl oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) cream sauce and 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) fish stock and reduce and bring to the boil. Remove from the heat and add 50 g (2 oz, 4 tablespoons) lobster butter. Season with a little cayenne and strain through a conical strainer. Garnish with a spoonful of chopped truffles, unless the recipe already contains them.

Salpicon cardinal

Chop some lobster meat, truffles and mushrooms, and bind with cardinal sauce.

Strawberries cardinal

Arrange some chilled strawberries in glass goblets. Cover with fresh raspberry puree and sprinkle with fresh almond flakes.

CARDOON A southern European plant, related to the globe artichoke, whose leafstalk is eaten as a vegetable cardoons are available at the end of autumn and in winter, in the south of France they were formerly traditionally eaten with Christians dinner. In Tours, they are cooked au gratin.

When purchases, the stalks must be firm, creamy white in colour, wide and plump. They are sold with the leafy part and top of the root, which means they can be kept for a few days in cold salted water. The stalks are especially good fried or with bone marrow, they can also be served cold, with vinaigrette. They are casually used to garnish white or red meats (with the meat, butter or bechamel sauce).

RECIPES

Cooking cardoons, cutting off the hard stems. Remove the tender stalks, one by one, and cut into 7.5 cm (3 in) slices; sprinkle with lemon juice. Cut the heart into four and plunge the stalks and heart into boiling water. Bring back to the boil, cover and leave to simmer very gently until tender.

Buttered cardoons

Braise some blanched cardoons in butter for 20 minutes. Arrange in vegetable dish and sprinkle with roughly chopped mint or parsley.

Cardoon puree

Prepare some buttered cardoons and reduce to a puree by pressing through a sieve or using a blender. If desired, a third of its volume of potato puree or a few tablespoons of thick bechamel sauce may be added, add butter to serve.

Carbon salad

Cut some cooked cardoons into thick matchsticks. Add some well-seasoned vinaigrette and sprinkle with chervil and roughly chopped parsley.

Cardoons in bechamel sauce

Drain the blanched cardoons and arrange on a flameproof dish. Add butter, cover and leave to simmer for 15 minutes. Now, add some bechamel sauce and simmer for another 5 minutes. Serve in a vegetable dish.

Cardoons Mornay

Drain the cooked cardoons and arrange on a buttered gratin dish. Cover with Mornay sauce and sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese and melted butter. Brown in a preheated oven at 240°C (75°F, gas 9).

Cardoons with herbs

Braise some blanched cardoons in butter. Add several tablespoons of fines herbes sauce and simmer for 10 minutes.

Fried cardoons

Drain the cooked cardoons and marinate for 20 minutes in a mixture of olive oil, lemon juice and chopped parsley. They dip the cardoons in batter and deep-fry in hot oil. Drain and season with salt.

CAREME, MARIE-ANTOINE (known as Antonin) French chef and pastry cook (born Paris, 1783; died Paris, 1833). Born into a large and very poor family at the age of ten, to be taken in by the owner of a low-class restaurant at the Maine gate, where he learned the rudiments of cookery. At 16, he became an apprentice to Bailly of the Rue Vivienne, one of the best pastry cooks in Paris. Amazed by Careme's abilities and willingness to learn to learn, Bailly encouraged him. Then the young man's talents became noticed by Talleyrand, who was a customer at Bailly's and he offered to take Careme into his service.

Careme's genius. For 12 years Careme managed the Talleyrand kitchens. The culinary and artistic talents of his chef enabled Talleyrand to wield gastronomy effectively as a diplomatic tool. Careme also served the Prince Regent of England, the future King George IV, and was then sent to the court of Tsar Alexander I, he was responsible for introducing some classic Russian dishes into French cuisine, including borsch and kouloubiac. Careme numbered among his other employers the Viennese Court, the British Embassy, Princess Bagration and Lord Steward. He spent his last years with Baron de Rothschild and died at 50, burned out by the flame of his genius and the charcoal of the roasting spit (Laurent Talleyrand), but having realized his dream: "To publish a complete book on the state of my profession in our times.

The works written by Careme include Le Pâtissier pittoresque (1815), Le maître d'atelier français (1822), L'Art de la cuisine au XIX siècle (1833). This last work was published in three volumes, the two were written by his follower, Plumery. Written in a majestic style, Careme's books invite the reader to the table of the emperor, kings and princes of whom their author worked. Alexander I said to Talleyrand: "What we did not know was that he taught us to eat.

- Careme's contribution. A theoretician as well as a practitioner, a tireless worker as well as an artistic genius, Careme nonetheless had a keen sense of what was fashionable and entertaining. He understood that the new aristocracy, born under the Consulat, needed luxury and ceremony. So he prepared both spectacular and refined recipes, including chateaus, desserts on pedestals, elaborate garnishes and embellishments, new decorative trimmings and novel assemblies

A recognized founder of French grande cuisine, Careme placed it at the forefront of national prestige. His work as theoretician, sauce chef, pastry cook, designer and creator of recipes raised him to the pinnacle of his profession. Some of his formulae are still famous, especially his sauces.

Careme was proud of his unique arts sensitive to decoration and struck on elegance, he always had a sense of posterity. He wanted to create of school of cookery that would gather together the most famous chefs, in order to 'set the standard for beauty in classical and modern cookery, and attest to the distant future that the French chefs of the 19th century were the most famous in the world.

In parallel with his strictly culinary of literary activities, Careme was also concerned with details of equipment. He redesigned certain kitchen utensils, changed the shape of saucepans to pour sugar, designed moulds and even concerned himself with details of clothing, such as the shape of the hat. The vol-au-vent and large meringues are attributed to him. Although an incomparable pastry cook, he was also famous for sauces and soups there are 186 French ones and 103 foreign ones in L'Art de La cuisine). Yet on Reading some of his recipes, one may wonder if he was concerned more with ceremony than gastronomy, in fact, Cereme used money, political power and social connections to enhance his reputation, indeed, he considered that only the great people in the world could appreciate him. Certainly his name is es on in the recipes he created and the dishes name d in his honour.

RECIPES

Eggs in moulds Careme

Butter somedariole moulds; sprinkle the buttom and sides with truffies and pickled ox (beef) tongue cut up into small squares. Break an egg into each mouled and cook in a bain marie. Remove the eggs from the moulds and place on some artichoke hearts. Garnish with a ragout of lamb's sweetbreads, truffles and mushrooms. Add some cream to a Madeira sauce and cover the eggs with the mixture. Place a round of pickled ox tongue, cut out a saw-tooth pattern on each one.

Soft-boiled or poached eggs Careme

Braise some artichoke hearts in butter and arrange the eggs, either soft-boiled (soft-cooked) or poached, on them. Garnish as in the previous recipe.

CARREBBEAN CABBAGE The edible root of an anum, which is cultivated in the West Indies as a vegetable. in is prepared like trunip: scraped, washed, cut into slices and cooked in boiling water. The Caribbean cabbage and the closely related Asheen cabbage are ingredients in West Indian stews (the leaves are also used) and accompany colombos and curries. The grated root is used in the preparation of across. The root is also a source of starch and even of drink (loadgi, typical of Jamaica).

CARIBOU Canadian name for reindeer, which is generally held to be the most highly flavoured of game animals. It is commercial production is permitted and regulated, and carried out by the fruit people, who maintain their ancestral right to hunt it. The animal is butchered and cooked in the same way as beef. It is often served rare with a pepper sauce, accompanied by a pear cooked in red wine or by winter vegetable, such as grated ceeleriac or beertroot (red beef).

Garibon, is also the name of a Quebec apertifi made of sweet red wine with added alcohol.

CARIGNAN, A LA a traditional bouite cuisine dish made with lamb cutlets and fillet (sirloin) steak, sauteed, then arranged on Anna potatoes (shaped into litele tarts) and served with a sauce made by delglazing the pan with port and tomato-flavoured veal stock. The garnish consists of buttered asparagus tips and eggs mouleded in a duchesse mixture breaded, fried, scooped out and filled with foie grasspuree.

The same name is used for a cold dessert in which a pear, peach or apple is poached, hollowed out and filled with chocolate ice cream, then arranged on a Genoese sponge base and covered with vanilla fondant.

CARMELITE, A LA A cold dish consisting chicken supremes, covered with chaud froid sauce garnished with slices of muffle and dressed with a mausseline of crayfish and crayfish tails.

The name because of its association with the Cannelite nuns white habit and black veil, is also used for an egg dish, in which soft-boiled (soft-cooked) or poached eggs are arranged in a flan crust, garnished with creamed mussels and covered with white wine sauce.

CARMEN Any of various dishes, including consommé, eggs or fillets of sole that contain tomato or pimiento and generally, a highly seasoned garnish or flavouring a Lespagnole.

Carmen salad consists of boiled rice, diced white chicken, strips of red sweet pepper and peas, all flavoured with a mustard and chopped tarragon vinaigrette.

Recipe

Eggs sur le plat Carmen

Cook some eggs sur le plat, then cut round the whites with a circular pastry (cookie) cutter, fry in oil some round slices of stale bread with the crusts removed. Cover each slice of bread with a slice of ham of the same size and place an egg on top. Cover with well-seasoned and reduced tomato sauce.

CARMINE. A natural red food colouring also called cochineal or carminic acid (E120). It is used especially in confectionery and patisserie – jams, jellies, filled biscuits (cookies), fruit pastes, ice creams, instant desserts and preserved red fruits. Carmine is also used to colour delicatessen meats and cured meat products, preserved shrimps, and dried fish, syrups, liqueurs and aperitifs, and flavoured cheeses and milks.

CARNIVAL A programme of popular festivities and masquerade that traditionally took place in the days preceding Shrove Tuesday and Ash Wednesday, the start of Lent. The word comes from the Italian carnevale (Shrove Tuesday) which derives from carne leranare (leaving out meat), a reference to the Lenten fast immediately following the carnival period, during which the Church forbade the consumption of meat and cakes.

The carnival theoretically extended from Twelfth Night to Ash Wednesday, but it used to reach a climax at the Shrove Tuesday meal, traditionally marked by an abundance of all types of meat (hence the customs of a procession with the fatted ox). In the champagne region, this last rich meal had to include pig's trotters (feet), and in Ardeche, pigs ears. The cocks that had lost that day's fight were eaten in the Marine region., while in Touraine the special dish was a leg of great. Other traditional shrove Tuesday dishes included a stuffed rabbit (in Limousin), a huge volauvent containing chicken in salsify sauce (Query) and the famous aioli (garlic mayonnaise) of Provence.

Carnival originated in the Roman feasts of the calends (first day) of march, which celebrated the awakening of nature. On this occasion, the rules were broken and disguises worn, straw dolls were burned amidst shouting and chanting. (The word carnival in folk tradition still means a grotesque mannequin that is solemnly burned or buried on ash Wednesday) hence, in the French countryside, magical rites are combined with feasting in particular, the stock from the stockpot was sprinkled around the houses of the Morvan region toward off snakes, around the hen houses to ward off foxes and angoumois, or on the manure heap to make it bigger, in limousin.

The large attendance at these festivities meant there was a need for fairly cheap cakes, quickly prepared cakes and also waffles and fritters. Crespets de Landes, merveilles and botteraux, Sainte-Menehould fazerolles and sologne generous. Also, worthy of mention are Belfort secbu (dried apples or pears with slices of bacon) and the cheese soup in Isere. In Nivernais, the Shrove Tuesday mead consisted of : pasta bouillon, boiled beef with vegetables, coq au sang (or with white sauce), roast goose or turkey, garlic and oil salad, white cheese with cream and palum tart with flamed marc brandy.

CAROB The bean from the carob tree which is native to the Mediterranean region but is cultivated in other warm climates. Up to 30 cm (12 in) long, the carob bean has a nutritious refreshing pulp, as rich in sugar as molasses. It contains hard reddish seeds, which in the Kabylia region of North Africa are crushed and used to make pancakes. In the food industry, carob meal (E410) is that day's feast were eaten in the Marne region, while in Touraine the special dish was a leg of goat. Other traditional Shrove Tuesday dishes included a stuffed rabbit a huge vol-au-vent containing chicken in salsify sauce and the famous aoli (garlic mayonnaise) of Provence.

Carnival originated in the Roman feasts of the calends (first day) of march, which celebrated the awakening of nature. On this occasion, the rules were broken and disguise worn. Straw dolls were burned amidst shouting and chanting. Hence, in the French countryside, magical rites are combined with feasting. In particular, the stock from the stockpot was sprinkled around the houses of the Morvan region to ward off snakes, around the hen houses to ward off foxes in Angoumois, or on the manure heap to make it bigger, in Limousine.

CAROLINE A savoury miniature éclair, baked in the oven, then filled with a cheese or ham mixture, or with caviar, salmon mousse or foie gras. Carolines, also known as Karoly eclairs are served hot or cold as buffet snacks. They can also be made to the size of an ordinary éclair and served as an hors d'oeuvre or as a hot entrée.

RECIPES

Carolines à la hollandaise

Prepare a sugarless choux paste. Using a piping bag, squeeze out some small eclairs, about 4 cm (1 ½ in.) long on to a baking sheet. Brush with beaten egg. Bake in a preheated oven at 220°C (425 °F, gas 7) for 10 minutes. Reduce the temperature to 180°C (350°F, gas 4) and continue to cook for a further 10 minutes. Allow to cool. To make enough filling for 12 carolines, desalt 4 herring fillets, drain, and wipe them. Pound the fillets, or put them into a blender, together with 2 hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolks and 75 g (3 oz, 6 tablespoons) butter. Add 1 teaspoon chives and 1 teaspoon chopped parsley. Gently split the eclairs along the side and put the filling bag. Brush the carolines with melted butter and immediately sprinkle with a little hard-boiled egg yolk and chopped parsley. Cool before serving

Carolines à la mousse de foie gras

Make some small eclairs as for carolines à la hollandaise. Prepare some duck (or goose) foie gras mousse and add an equal quantity of butter and (Optional) a little Cognac. Pipe the filling into the split eclairs. Chill before serving.

Carolines joinville

Make some small eclairs as for carolines à la hollandaise. To fill 12 Carolines, prepare a thick béchamel sauce using 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter, 25 g (1 oz, ¼ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour; and 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup) milk. Heat 75-100 g (3-4 oz. About ½ cup) peeled (shelled) shrimps in some butter, flame them with marc brandy and add to the béchamel sauce. Season with salt and pepper and leave to cool. Finally, pipe the filling into the split eclairs and brush the eclairs with melted butter. Cool before serving.

CARP. A freshwater fish, found in sluggish rivers and also reared commercially on fish farms. Up to 1 m (39 in.) long, the carp's thick body is covered with thick scales and is brownish on the back, golden yellow on the sides and whitish on the belly. Its small toothless mouth has four minute barbs. Improved yields have been obtained by crossbreeding, which has produced the leather carp that has scales only in mid-body and at the base of the fins, and the mirror carp, which is the finest variety, with scales only at the base of the fins. When buying carp, choose a plump one that is carrying egg's, or milk. With spawning taking place between April and June, carp are empty at this time. If a live carp is chosen, the fishmonger should kill and gut it, removing the gall bladder, which is at the base of the throat and is difficult to extract. It is advisable to soak the gutted and scaled fish in a bowl of vinegar and water (which should be replenished as necessary) in order to remove its 'muddy' taste.

The carp can be roasted, stuffed (especially a la juive). Grilled (broiled), cooked in court-bouillon or stewed in white wine or beer, small fish can also be fried. Carp has been eaten since the Middle Ages, and used to be the dish of kings. They were usually cooked in wine with a lot of spices. The tongue was considered a delicacy. Carp is also the fish most prized by the Chinese, the lips are considered the finest part. (teep-frozen. Asiatic carp are sold in France, their flesh is regarded as firmer and tastier than French carp.

RECIPES

Carp a la chinoise

Clean and gut a carp weighing about 1.5 g (3 ¼ lb.) and cut it into sections. Finely chop 2 large onions and fry, in oil until slightly brown. Add 2 tablespoons vinegar; 1 tablespoon sugar, 1 tablespoon freshly grated root ginger (or 1 teaspoon ground ginger). 1-2 tablespoon rice alcohol (or more brandy. Salt, pepper and a glass of water, stir, cover and leave to cook for about 10 minutes fry the carp pieces in oil for 10 minutes, then add the sauce and leave to cook for other 4-5 minutes. Some strips of cucumber may be added to the carp along with the sauce, if desired.

Carp a l'alsacienne

Choose a carp weighing at least 1.5 kg. (3 ¼ lb. And clean and gut it. Fill it with a fish cream forcemeat, clean and gut it. Fill it with a fish cream forcemeat, place in a buttered ovenproof dish and add mixture of court bouillon and white wine so that it half-fills the dish (one-third court-bouillon to two-thirds white wine). Cook for 30-40 minutes in a preheated oven at 220°F, gas 7) protecting with buttered greasedproof (wax) paper if necessary. Drain retaining the liquid, and arrange the fish on a bed of sauerkraut, surround it with small boiled potatoes. And keep hot. Reduce the cooking liquid, bind with a little beurre manie and cover the fish with it.

Fried carp

Select a small carp, weighing about 400 g (14 oz.) clean, gut, wash and wipe the fish. Immerse it in milk, then in flour, and then deep-fry in hot oil. When cooked, remove, drain and add salt. Garnish with fried parsley and lemon quarters.

Stuffed carp a l'ancienne

(from a recipe by Careme provided by Plumerey) Take a large carp that is carrying eggs (milk), remove the scales and bones, and lift off the flesh. Taking care to leave the backbone intact, complete with head and tail. To the carp flesh, add the meat from a small eel, as desalted anchovies, and make a fairly firm quenelle forcemeat in the usual way, but without adding any sauce. Scald the ross, cut into several pieces, saute in butter with a little lemon juice, add some truffles and mushrooms and bind with a few spoonfuls of chick allemande sauce.

Take a tin tray that is as long as the carp and butter it thickly. Spread a layer of stuffing on it, about 2.5 cm (1 in) thick, making it the shape of the carp. On the place the carp backbone with head and tail and attached. Cover the backbone with a little stuffing and cover this with the roes regout; then add another layer of stuffing, 2.5 cm. (1 in.) thick, still in the shape of the carp. Smooth with a knife dipped in hot water.

Butter a baking sheet large enough to hold the carp and sprinkle breadcrumbs on the butter. Carefully heat the tin tray to that the butter smelts and slide the carp on to the baking sheet without damaging the shape. Brush with beaten egg, coat the top with breadcrumbs. Press the breadcrumbs down firmly and cover with clarified butter. Then, with the tip of a small spoon, press in a pattern of scales, starting at the head.

Cook the carp in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 45 minutes, basting frequently with clarified butter during cooking so that it turns a golden colour. When it is cooked, transfer it carefully from the baking sheet to the serving dish. With a long fish slice. Work some fish essence into a financière sauce and serve in a sauceboat to accompany it.

CARPACCIO An Italian antipasto (appetizer) consisting of very thin slices of raw beef served, cold with a creamy vinaigrette sauce made with olive oil. This dish, named in honour of the Renaissance Venetian painter, originates from Paris's but in Venice (not connected with the famous American bar in Paris.)

RECIPE

Remove the fat, nerves and gristle from a piece of very tender sirloin weighing 1.25 kg (2 ¾ lb.) so as to obtain a meat cylinder. Put in the freezer. When it has hardened sufficiently, cut into very thin slices using a very sharp knife. Arrange these sliced on plates, season lightly with salts and put back in the refrigerator for at least 15 minutes. Mix 200 ml (7 fl. Oz, ¾ cup) mayonnaise with 1 or 2 teaspoons of Worcestershire sauce and 1 teaspoon of lemon juice. Season with salt and white pepper. Pour a little of this sauce over the slices of meat, making a few decorative motifs with it.

CARPET SHELL (CLAM) palourde A bivalve mollusc, 3-5 cm (1 ¼-2 in.) long that is more plentiful on the Atlantic coast and in the English Channel than in the Mediterranean. Its thin shell, convex in the centre, is pale yellow to dark grey marked with brown spots and two series of very fine streaks, one radiating the other concentric, forming a lattice. Carpet shells are eaten raw in seafood platter or stuffed like muscles.

Three very closely related species of false carpet shells (or clams) are distinguished by the colour of the inside of the valves (gold or pink instead of pale grey) and by the fineness of the radiating streaks, only visible with a magnifying glass. They are less delicate than the true carpet shells.

CARRAGEEN Also known as carrageen. A red seaweed, known as Irish moss, of the group that also produce agar-agar, so much used in the food processing industry as a gelling agent. Its fan-shaped fronds grow on the low water-line on the rocks of the American and European Northern Atlantic Shore (up as far as Scandinavia), but it is particularly associated with Ireland. In late summer it is picked, washed and dried for about ten days in the sun, when it turns silvery white. It is named after the Irish village of Carrageen, the classic Irish in which it is used is milk jelly.

CARRE DE L'EST. A soft high fat (45% fat content) cheese made from pasteurized cow's milk, and originating from Champagne and Lorraine, where it is now mostly produced. Sold in boxes

7.5-19 cm.(3-4 in) square and 25-3 cm (1-1 ¼ in) deep, Carre de l'Est is a mild cheese with a white deoury crust.

The term 'carre ' is also applied to Normandy cheeses, related to Bondard, from the Pays de Bray or the Pays d'Auge.

CARRE, FERDINAND French engineers (born Moislains, Somme, 1824; died Pommese, Seine-et-Marne, 1900), who pioneered methods of refrigeration. One of Carre's machines was installed in 1859 at the Velten brewery in Marseille. In 1862 at the Universal London Exhibition, he exhibited an ice machine with an output of 200 kg (440 lb) per hour. In 1877, after setting up a business exporting machines to Germany, England and the United States, he repeated Teller's experiment: he equipped the ship Paraguay with refrigerated holds and loaded it with 80 tons of meat destined for Buenos Aires. On the return voyage, with Argentine meat on board, Carre's refrigerator ship ran aground on the coast of Senegal. In spite of a two-month delay, the emat arrived at Le Havre in perfect condition and a great banquet was held to celebrate the event.

CARROT A vegetable grown widely for its orange-red edible root. It is one of the most popular and versatile of vegetables.

Although the ancients recognized that carrot is good for the eyesight, they did not cultivate it as a vegetable. Until the Renaissance era, carrots had a yellowish tough root, very woody in the centre and, like other root crops, it never appeared among high-class foodstuffs. Little by little, the carrot was improved and cultivated varieties were sold in the markets. Its orange dates from the middle of the 19th century.

- Carrots throughout the year. The first new carrots may be round or slightly elongated and sold in bunches. Traditional early carrots include Grlots – tender, sweet and full of flavour – or the Bellot variety. Nantaise carrots are another classic variety – long with a crisp texture.

Long or semi-long crop carrots are used freshly cut or stored for winter use. They are not as sweet, light and crisp as the new and early varieties, but they have a full flavour and crunchy, firm texture. If the carrots are old, split them in half and hollow them, discarding the yellow core.

- Cooking. To retain the maximum nutritional value, carrots should not be scraped or peeled, but brushed under running water, because the vitamins are concentrated in the skin. However, because of the risk of pesticide residues, it is advisable to peel or scrape them.

Carrots are widely used in savoury dishes worldwide. Along with onions, carrots are an essential flavouring ingredient for stocks, soups, casseroles and sauces, they are also used in a standard mirepoix of vegetables as a base for roasting poultry and meat, carrots flavour fish and seafood dishes, from lightly steamed shellfish to baked chunky fillets, steaks and whole fish. They are also used to flavour dishes or mixed vegetables, pulse and grains.

Carrots are also a valuable ingredient in their own right. They make delicious soup. As a vegetable – across into thick or fine slices, lengthways into wedges, fingers or julienne strips; or they can be cut into chunks or dice. Baby carrots are usually cooked whole. They can be boiled, steamed, stir-fried or glazed by cooking with the minimum of water and a little butter. The latter method is excellent for fine fingers or julienne to accompany fish, poultry or meat main dishes. They can be cooked on their own or in combination with other vegetables. Tarragon goes very well with carrots as does orange.

Used raw, they may be coarsely or finely grated, or pared into ribbons for use in salads. Dressed with a little vinaigrette and tossed with chopped parsley, chervil or tarragon, they make an excellent salad they are an ingredient in the classic coleslaw. Carrot sticks are popular crudites.

The sweet flavour of carrots simmered in milk and sugar, flavoured with a little cardamom and enriched with nuts and raisins. They are used in cookies and the popular American-style carrot cake. Carrots also feature in preserves, including, an Indian syrup-based preserve. Carrots were used very successfully to make a sweet preserve resembling marmalade when orange were scarce in the 1940's

Carrot juice is also a popular drink, both bought and freshly extracted.

RECIPES

Carrot flan

Bake a pastry flan case blind and fill with a lightly sweetened carrot puree. Cover with slices of glazed carrot, pour over the cooking juices from the carrots, and place in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) for a few minutes.

Carrot puree

Cook 500 g (18 oz) sliced new carrots in staled water to which 1 teaspoon granulated sugar and 1 tablespoon butter has been added. When the carrots are cooked, drain and make into a puree by pressing them through a fine sieve or using a blender. Heat the puree, adding a few spoonfuls of the carrots cooking liquid if it is too thick. At the last moment, add 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) fresh butter. Mix well and arrange on a vegetable dish. Carrot puree can also be made using the carrots from a pot-au-feu.

Carrot puree with cream

Heat 4 tablespoons double (heavy) cream and add to some carrot puree.

Carrots with cream.

Cut some old carrots into segments and hollow out the centres. Cook in salted water, and before they become soft, drain, cover with boiling cream and reduce by two-thirds. Arrange in a vegetable dish and serving very hot.

Carrots with raisins

Cut some new carrots into slices and fry in melted butter. Lightly sprinkle with flour, then add just enough water to cover them and 1 tablespoon brandy. Cover. Halfway through cooking (after about 15 minutes), add a handful of raisins. Finish cooking with the lid on over a gentle heat.

Glazed carrots

Clean some new, preferably fat, carrots, leaving medium-sized ones whole, cut cutting large ones into halves or quarters. Place in a frying pan large enough to hold them all without overlapping. Cover with cold water. For every 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) water add 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) sugar, 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) butter and ½ teaspoon salt. (when old carrots are used, hollow out the centres, scaled them and drain, then cooked with sugar and butter). Bring to the boil over a high heat. When the water is boiling briskly, lower the heat cover the pan and leave to simmer until the liquid has almost completely evaporated. The carrots should now be cooked. Shake the pan so that the carrots are coated with the syrupy liquid.

Glazed carrots may be served with bechamel sauce (add a few spoonfuls of the sauce at the last moment), butter, cream (cover with boiling cream and reduce by two-thirds). Herbs (sprinkle with chopped parsley or chervil) or meat juices (add a few spoonfuls of roast veal or poultry cooking juices.).

Grated carrots with currants

Steep some dried currants in barely tepid lemon juice, add then to grated raw carrots mixed with well-seasoned olive oil vinaigrette.

CARROT CAKE A cake typical of North America, consisting of a sponge made of flour, eggs, sugar and oil, in which puree or grated carrots are incorporated. Alternatively, a creamed butter and sugar mixture may be used as base, Thick and moist, carrots cake is coated with a vanilla icing (frosting) and it may be served with nuts and raisins.

CARVING The action of slicing or cutting up meat, poultry, game or fish into sections, either for serving or for further preparation.

The art of carving was formerly held in great esteem and attended by a certain amount of ceremony (see Ecuyer tranchant). In ancient times, specialist carvers gave courses in cutting up and carving, using wooden 'chickens with pieces that could be fitted together again. Noblemen in the Middle Ages like to show off their skill, and Joinville recounts with pride that he carved one day at the King of Navarre's table. In the 17th century, young gentlemen were trained in the carving of meat and thus learned how to distinguish the best joints. The wing of birds who scratch at the earth with their feet; the leg of birds who live in the air; the white meat of large roast poultry; the skin and the ears of a suckling pig; the saddle and the legs of hares and rabbits', large fish, such as salmon or pike, were cut in two, and the front portion, considered the most delicate, was placed at the head of the table, where the honoured guest sat.

Modern carvers, particularly in the catering trade, must combine culinary competence with a knowledge of anatomy, manual dexterity and a certain panache. Each joint of meat or species of poultry requires a particular carving technique. As a general rule, meat is carved perpendicularly to the direction of the muscle of fibres, the slices should be as large as possible and of even thickness. The introduction of service à la russe (Russian style), in which meat is presented already cut up, has caused the disappearance from many tables of an operation that was formerly done with pride by the master of the house.

CARVING KNIFE. A knife with a very long – 18-35 cm (7 – 14 in). – flexible blade and a sharp point. It is used for thinly slicing bacon and roast meat, hot or cold.

CASANOVA DE SEINGALT, GIOVANNI GIACOMO Italian adventurer (born Venice, 1725, died Dux, Bohemia, 1798). Famous for his romantic and chivalrous exploits, Casanova was an attentive observer of contemporary gastronomic etiquette. This, and his own culinary tastes, occupy an important place in his Memoires, he invented a special vinegar to season hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg and anchovies, he advocated Chambertin as an accompaniment to Roquefort cheese; and he claimed that forcemeat of beatilles and very frothy chocolates worked as an effective restorative. Between adventures, he would often make a detour to taste famous pates, the rare Hermitage Blanc of the Cotes-du-Rhone. Grenoble's liqueur, Genoese cep mushrooms and Leipzig's skewered larks. Truffles, oysters, champagne and Marashino owe their reputation as aphrodisiacs largely to him. The Prince of Ligne said of him. at 73, no longer a god in the garden or a satyr in the forest, he is a wolf at table.

CASHEW APPLE. A fleshy pear-shaped swelling that is part of the fruit of the cashew trees; the cashew nut hangs below this swelling. The cashew apple is picked when ripe and usually eaten with sugar because it is slightly tart. In Brazil, where it is widely used, it is made into jams, jellies, compotes and beverages, and fermented to produce a dessert wine and a vinegar.

CASHEW NUT The fruit of the cashew tree, originally from South America but widely cultivated in India and other tropical countries since the 16th century. The nut contains a smooth creamy-white kidney-shaped kernel with a mild, slightly sweet flavour and tender texture. In Europe it is usually eaten dried, roasted and salted as an appetizer and in salads. In Indian cooking it is used in a variety of dishes, including lamb curry, beef stew, rice with prawns vegetable dishes, stuffings for chicken, and cakes and biscuits (cookies).

CASK. Tonneau Wine casks come in a wide range of different sizes, some of which have special regional names, such as the Bordeaux barrique, The word tonneau, however, comes from tonnee, a very large cask formerly used, especially in the port of Bordeaux, to store wine and then ship it, the mighty cask being rolled from the quayside into the hold of a ship in the wine fleet. according to how many tonnes the hold could take, the capacity of the vessel began to be given in terms of tonnage, a system still in use today. The tonne itself is no longer used, but the English word 'tun' perpetuates its association with a gigantic wooden container, such as is still used for cider and beer.

CASSATA An iced dessert of Italian origin, made of bombe paste set in a rectangular mould and lined with fruit ice cream. The name means 'little case' due to its brick shape, although triangular cassatas can be found. A cassata can also be an ice cream shaped like a brick, consisting of several ice creams of different flavours with a filling, of chantilly cream.

On the other hand, Sicilian cassata, also in the shape of a brick, is a cake. It is made with slices of enoia cake (a type of light fruit cake) steeped in Maraschinos or currao and covered with a mixture of Ricotta cheese, flaked chocolate, crystallized (candied) fruits and sugar syrup; the whole is finally coated with a thick layer of chocolate. This Christmas and Easter cake is also traditionally eaten at weddings.

RECIPE

Strawberry cassava

Prepare 100 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) strawberry ice cream (see ices and ice creams), the same quantity of vanilla's ice cream, and 400 ml (14 fl oz. 1 3/4 cups) whipped cream mixed with crystallized (candied) fruits steeped in brandy or a liqueur. Spread the vanilla ice cream in a rectangular mould, cover with the whipped cream and fruits, and place in the freezer until the cream just hardens. Cover with the strawberry ice cream, press down firmly smooth the surface and leave to set.

CASSE-MUSEAU a very hard biscuit (cookie) that keeps well; it was formerly very common in France, but is now made only in certain areas. The name, meaning 'jaw breaker', comes from its hardness and from the custom of tossing biscuits at the face during certain popular festivals, such as the Rogation Procession held in Poitiers. In Corsica they are known as sciappa denti (tooth-breaker). The casse-musseau is usually made of a mixture of coarsely chopped almonds and curd cheese, which is rolled into a sausage shape, cooked, then cut into slices and returned to the oven; this double baking produces the very hard consistency.

CASSEROLE A cooking utensil, made of metal or other ovenproof material, which is fitted with a lid and designed for long, slow cooking in the oven. Many are decorative enough to use as serving dishes. The name is also given to the food cooked in a casserole.

In classic French cookery, a casserole is a dish generally made with cooked rice moulded into the shape of a casserole or timbale; it can also be made in a duchess potato mould. Rarely made nowadays, these dishes can have various fillings, including mousses, fat or lean minced (ground) meat, game puree, calves or lamb's sweetbreads and escalopes of truffled foie gras. Casserole can also be garnished à la sagan, à la venitienne, à la bouquetière, à la regence and à la Nantua. If the contents are cold, they can be glazed with aspic jelly.

RECIPE

Rice casserole à l'ancienne

(from a recipe by Careme) wash about 1 kg (2 1/4 lb) long-grain rice in several changes of warm water, then place it in a large saucepan. Cover with cold water and heat; after it has boiled for several seconds, drain, then moisten the rice with about two to three times its own volume of beef stock and thicken with fat skimmings from a chicken broth. Return the pan to the heat. As soon as the rice boils, take it off the heat and remove the scum from the surface. Now simmer gently, stirring after about 1 hour and again after further 20-25 minutes. The rice should now be soft. (Further stock may be added during cooking in order to keep the rice moist). Remove from the heat, stir for several minutes with a spatula and allow to cool.

When the rice is only just warm, work it with a wooden spoon until the grains have all burst and the rice is a smooth paste, adding a little stock if necessary. Pile the rice into a baking tin (pan), forming a casserole shape about 13 cm (5 in) high; smooth it well. Garnish with slices of carrot. Now coat the surface of the rice casserole with a little clarified butter and cook in a preheated oven at 160°C (325 °F, gas 3) for about 1 ½ hours. During cooking, it will turn bright yellow. When cooked, carefully remove the garnished top crust and remove from the inside all the rice that does not adhere to the crust, even if this crust is very thin. Mix a large spoonful of rice taken from the interior with a little sauce (bechamel, espagnole or any other suitable sauce, depending on the filling to be used), and glaze the crust with this mixture after putting the filling in the case.

If good stock or fat are unavailable, the rice can be moistened with water, butter and salt. This will make the rice much whiter.

Careme also gave a recipe for small individual rice casseroles (casserolettes). They are placed on a baking sheet in a hot oven and cooked until evenly coloured.

CASSIS AOC wines from a vineyard close to the small Provençal port of Cassis, between Marseille and La Clotat. This vineyard, famous since the 15th century, is known especially for its dry white wine. The vines, planted on the chalky cliffs overlooking the sea, include such varieties as Clairette, Marsanne, Sauvignon Blanc and Ugni blanc. The sunny southerly aspects is sheltered by the hills, which protect the vines from the mistral. They are also protected from excessive heat by the proximity of the sea. Cassis also produces a little red and rose wine from Grenache, Mourvedere, Carignan, Cinsault and other varieties of grape. But the white wines remain the most attractive and are enjoyed particularly for their fruitiness, freshness and delicacy. They are among the best white wines of Provence and are a delightful complement to bouillabaisse.

CASSIS A liqueur of pronounced flavour made by macerating blackcurrants in spirit and sweetening the resulting liquid. There are several categories: 14° for most ordinary and culinary purposes; 15° for 'crème de cassis'; 20° for 'double crème' or 'super cassis'; and there are even versions of 25°. Cassis is a speciality of Dijon and the Cote d'Or; it was first made commercially in 1841 by one Claude Joly. The popularity of Kir has stimulated production. This drink, a Burgundy aperitif consisting of a spoonful of cassis liqueur topped up with dry white wine, has acquired the name of the late canon Kir, Mayor of Dijon and a Resistance hero. 'Kir royale' is made with sparkling wine.

RECIPE

Cassis

For every litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) of eau de vie, take 12 small washed leaves from the tip of a blackcurrant branch and place them in a bowl together with 1 clove and a good pinch of crumbled stick cinnamon. Wash and dry the blackcurrants and weigh them. Crush them roughly and put them in the bowl, allowing 1 kg (2 1/4 lb. 9 cups) blackcurrants per 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) eau de vie. Now add 800 g (1 ¾ lb. 3 cup) granulated sugar per kg (2 1/4 lb. 9 cups) of blackcurrants and mix all the ingredients thoroughly. Pour into jars, seal and store, preferably in a warm sunny place, for about 1 month. Then pour the contents through a cloth secured over a large bowl and extract all the liquid. Filter and bottle. If the liqueur is too strong, some sugar dissolved in cold water can be added – about 500 g (18 oz. 2 ¼ cups) sugar per 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) water.

CASSOLETTE A small container with lugs or a short handle, made of heatproof porcelain, tempered glass or metal, which is used to prepare and serve hot entrees or certain hors d'oeuvre and cold puddings. The word can also apply to a variety of dishes that are served in cassolettes. Savoury cassolettes may consist of salsiccons and ragouts of all sorts, including sweetbreads, chopped chicken, mushrooms and fish mousses, bound with a white or brown sauce; sweet cassolettes, which are sometimes served in nougat cups instead of the cassolette itself, can include flavoured creams, custards and peached fruits.

CASSONADE Raw crystallized sugar extracted directly from the juice of the sugar cane. The small irregular crystals have a high-brown colour and a slight taste of rum, caused by the residues of gum and wax. When further refined, cassonade makes white cane sugar.

Cassonade is used to make chutneys and features in certain recipes from northern Europe, including civet of hare, Flemish red cabbage and black pudding (blood sausage), and in some sausage), and in some southern European ones, such as Pezenas mutton pie. In cake-making it gives a special flavour to tarts and yeast cakes.

Until the 16th century cassonade was called casson and took the form of an irregular loaf of crumbly sugar.

RECIPES

Belgian cassonade tart

Make some pastry using 250 g (9oz, 2 ¼ cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, 125 g (4 ½ oz, ½ cup) butter, a pinch of salt, and 4 tablespoon cold water; Roll into a ball and leave to rest for 3-4 hours. Use it to line a tart tin (pan) and bake blind in a pre heated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6). Grind 150-200 g (5-7 oz, 1 ¼ - 1 ¾ cups) almonds in a blender and mix with 3 egg yolks, 200 ml (7 fl oz ¾ cup) double (heavy) cream, and 300g (1 1 oz, 1 ¾ cups) cassonade (raw brown sugar). Beat 3 egg whites until they form stiff peaks and add to the mixture. Pour into the tart case and bake for about 40 minutes.

French cassonade tart

Mix together 125 g (4 ½ oz, ½ cup) melted butter, 2 egg yolks and a pinch of salt. Sprinkle in 250 g (9 oz, 2 ¼ cups) sifted self-raising flour and add sufficient water to give a smooth firm dough) – about 3 ½ tablespoons. Roll the dough into a ball, wrap it in a cloth and leave to rest for 1 hour. Butter a baking sheet and roll out the pastry into a circle. Pinch around the rim and, with the tip of a knife, lightly trace lozenge shapes on the top. Sprinkle evenly with 150 g (5 oz. ¾ cup) cassonade (raw brown sugar) and divide 50 g (2 oz, 4 tablespoons) butter into small balls and place these on top of the sugar. Place in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) and bake for about 35–40 minutes.

CASSOULET A dish, originally from Languedoc, which consists of haricot (navy) beans cooked in a stewpot with pork rinds and seasonings. A garnish of meats, which varies from region to region, and a gratin topping are added in the final stages. The word comes from cassole, the name of the glazed earthenware's cooking pot traditionally used.

The haricot beans (known as moutons) are the essential ingredients, giving cassoulet its creaminess and flavour – originally, fresh broad (fava) beans were used; haricots come from Spain and were not used in France until the 19th century, Cassoulet is divided into three types according to the meats used. Prosper Meontagne called them the ‘Trinity’, the ‘Father’ being the cassoulet from Castelmaury, the ‘Son’ the cassoulet from Carcassonne and the ‘Holy Ghost’ that from Toulouse. The first, which is undoubtedly the oldest, contains pork (joint, ham, leg sausage and fresh rinds) with perhaps a piece of preserved goose. In Carcassonne, leg of mutton and, during the shooting season, partridge are used, the same ingredients are used in Toulouse as in Castelmaury but in smaller quantities, the difference being made up with fresh lard, Toulouse sausage, mutton and duck or goose. Other variations exist, including Montauban (with Pmiers beans garnished with sausages and garlic sausage) and Comminges (with pork rinds and mutton). There is also a fish cassoulet, made with salt cod (which replaces the duck or goose).

Whatever the ingredients, the Etats Généraux de la Gastronomie Française of 1966 decreed the following proportions for cassoulet: at least 30% pork (which can include sausage and Toulouse sausage), mutton or preserved goose; 70th haricot beans and stock, fresh pork rinds, herbs and flavourings.

The preparation of cassoulet requires that the beans and the meat are cooked at the same time (pork and mutton are cooked separately) while braising the rinds and cooking the sausages. A final coating of breadcrumbs is essential for a fine golden crust. Purists insist on certain refinements, such as rubbing the cooking pot with a garlic clove and above all, breaking the crust several times. (seven times in Castelmaury Toulouse).

Now far removed from the mutton and bean stew made by the Romans and Spaniards, cassoulet has become a classic dish. In 1909, at a journalists lunch, President Fallières, a native of Lot-et-Garonne, had a cassoulet made to his own instructions, which he then ordered to be put on the menu at the Elysee Palace once a week. But this dish remains a subject of controversy, especially regarding the addition of mutton; this is considered by some a sacrilege (except in the Toulouse version, according to Closs – Jouve) and by others, such as Prosper Montagne and James de Coquet, as indispensable. Curnonsky, however, would accept only the inclusion of poached sausages, a small piece of shoulder of lamb, goose in tomato sauce and garlic sausage.

The Guide Gourmand de la France (Hachette) by Gault and Millau describes the preparation of the Toulouse, as set out by the famous local cook and eminent gastronomic writer from the south-west, Louise Cazals. Soak the white haricot beans (known as cocos) for 12 hours. Boil them in salted water for a good hour, then drain. Return them to the cooker (stove), this time into boiling water, and add the bacon rinds, which have first been blanched and rolled up, the carrots cut into rounds, and some garlic cloves. Add a sausage and leave the ingredients to cook together. Meanwhile, lightly brown a goose quarter with good-quality goose fat and two crushed garlic cloves, plus two peeled seeded tomatoes. Add the goose to the haricot beans and leave to cook for a further 2 hours. Do not forget a bouquet garni. Put the sausage (cut into slices) and the haricot beans into a stewpot or earthenware casserole, add the fresh sausage and cook in a slow oven. Allow a crust to form, which you then break eight times during the cooking. Serve in the cooking pot. To conclude; it is said that the Toulouse cassoulet is the most complete (or least simple). Of all the regional cassoulets. It is, of course, subject to minor variations. The dish is generally accompanied by a Corbeires wine (which is found more and more often on the wine lists of Toulouse) or, better still, by a hearty old Villaudric.’

The syndicat d’initiative (tourist office) of Castelmaury, which proclaims its city to be the world capital of cassoulet, provides the following recipe. ‘Here we give the ingredients for the true dish as it is still prepared by local families in Castelmaury. First of all is the choice of bean, preferably the lingot. Secondly the meat – hock of pork, pork ribs, pork rinds, local sausage and preserved goose liver from Lauragais. Place the beans in a pot (preferably earthenware), cover them with cold water and blanch them by bringing to the boil for 5 to 10 minutes. Drain of this water and cover the beans with fresh warm water. Garnish by adding a good helping of pork rinds cut into reasonably large pieces and add some hash made from a large piece of salted fat, a small piece of slightly rancid fat and a generous quantity of garlic. Add some salt and leave to simmer for about 2 ours preferably on the hearnt. The beans should be well cooked but remain firm. In a large pan male the fat off the preserved goose, then remove the goose and fry the meat in the fat. Off preserved goose is not available, goose or pork fat can he used.) when these preparations have been completed, place the ingredients in a cassole (never use any other type of utensils, for example enamel or glass) as follows first a layer of beans, rinds and juice, then a layer of meat, which is tehn covered by the remaining beams. Pepper the surface generously. Separately cookd a fresh sausage in a frying pan or in teh oven until it is lightly browned. Then coil the sausage on the surface of the cassoulet, press down lightly and spirnkle teh whole surface with the boiling hot fat from the sausage. Put the cassole into the oven and leave to cook until a brown uniform crust forms on top. Break the crust and allow it to reform several times, as desired. Check the cassoulet from time to time and if it appears to be dry, sprinkle with warm water, but he careful not to down it. Allow to cook for 3 to 4 hours. Serve very hot in its cooking pot. Make it the day before to serve at lunchtime, or early in the morning for the evneing meal.

Important note - never use smoked meat, strashbouting sasuauges or mutton.

RECIPES

Cassoulet (1)

(from a recipe given by a gourment from Castelnaudary) Use a galzed earthenware pot, known as a toupix, to cook white haricot (navy) beans – those from Pamiers and Cazeres are best – with seasoning, plus the usual meat, vegetables, garlic and herbs. When the beans are well cooked but still whole, put them in a special cooking pot (of Issel earthenware), the sides of which have been lined with fresh bacon rinds (these are cooked with the beans). Add the pork hock, fat, sausage and a leg of preserved goose. Srinkle the top with coarse breadcrumbs and then with goose fat. Place in a baker's oven (ideally fuelled by mountain gorse) and cook gently for several hours. When a beautiful golden crust has formed, break it with a wooden golden crust has formed, break it with a wooden spoon, repeat this essential operation two or three times. Then you will have a fine cassoulet that can be served with either a fine red Aquitaine wine or an old Minervois wine.

Cassulet (2)

(from a recipe by Prosper Montagne) For 8 people, soak 1 litre (1-1/4 pints, 4-1/2 cups), white haricot (navy) beans in cold water for a few hours (but do not allow them to ferment). Drain, thn add to them 300 g (11 oz.) pork fat, 200 g (7 oz) fresh pork rind tied in a bundle, a carrot, a onion sudded with cloves and a bouquet garni containing 3 garlic cloves. Season carefully, using very little salt as the fat contains salt. Add enough water to allow the beans to 'swim' well. Simmer gently so that the beans remain intact but are well cooked.

Place some dripping or goose fat ina separate pan and brown 800 g (1 ¾ lb) pork sparerib or bladebone and 500 g (18 oz) oned shoulder of mutton, well seasoned with salt and pepper. When the meats are well browned, put them in a large frying pan contining 200 g (7 oz. 1 ¾ cups) cooked chopped conion, a bouguet garni and 2 crushed garlic cloves. Cover and cook. Moisten from time to time with good meat juice or stock from the stock pot. If desired, add some spoonfuls of tomato puree or 3 peeled, seeded and crushed tomatoes.

When the beans are almost cooked, remove the vegetables and bouquet garnis and add the pork, mutton and onions, together with some garlic sausage, a leg of preserved gosse or duck, and, if desired, a piece of home-made sausage. Simmer gently for a furhter hour. Remove al the meat from the beans and drain. Cut the mutton, pork and goose (or duck) into equal pieces and cut the rind into ractangles, the sausage into slices (removing the skin) and the fresh sausage into small rings.

Line a large earthenware dish or individual dishes with the rind, then add a layer of the various meats (moistened with their sauce) and another layer of beans, seasoning each layer with fresh ground pepper. On top of the final layer place the pieces of fat, the remaining rind and some sliced sausage. Sprinkle with white breadcrumbs and melted goose fat. Cook gently in the oven (preferably a baker's oven) for about 1 ½ hour. Serve in the cooking dish.

CASTIGLIONE, A LA A preparation in which small pieces of meat are fried, arranged on slices of aubergine (eggplant) fried in butter, topped with slices of pouched bone marrow and garnished with large mushroom caps stuffed with risotto and gratin mixtures, sole or fish fillets (place, whiting) a la castiglione are glazed with a white wine and garnished with mushrooms, lobster pieces and steamed potatoes.

CASTILLANE, A LA A term used for lamb, topped with crushed tomatoes thickened in olive oil (these are sometimes placed in tartlets and arranged beside the meat) and served with croquette potatoes and fried onion rings. The sauce is based on veal and tomato. This preparation is used only for lamb or mutton, which is a famous product of the Castile region of Spain.

CATALANE, A LA A term used to describe garnishes inspired by Spanish cooking (Catalonia, in particular, is famous for its seafoods and garlic). Chicken, lamb or veal sautéed a la catalane is garnished with tomato quarters fried in butter, chestnuts poached in consommé, chipolata and stoned (pitted) blanched olives, large pieces of meat are garnished with diced aubergines (eggplants) fried in oil and rice pilaf. Grilled tournedos and dnoisettes of lamb are arranged on a bed of artichoke hearts and surrounded by grilled tomatoes.

Fried eggs a la catalane

Cook separately some seeded tomato halves and aubergine (eggplant) slices in olive oil. Add salt, pepper, a little crushed garlic and some chopped parsley. Cover a serving dish with the vegetables. Fry the eggs in the same pan and slide on the vegetables.

Sausages la catalane

In a frying pan, fry 1 kg (2 ¼ lb.) thick sausages in dripping until they are golden then drain and remove them. Add 2 tablespoons flour to the pan and stir until it is coloured, then add 1 tablespoon tomato puree (paste), 120 ml (4 ½ fl. oz. ½ cup) white wine, and 120 ml (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) stock. Stir well, cook for 10 minutes, then sieve. Blanch 24 peeled garlic cloves. Return the sausages to the frying pan, add the garlic, a bouquet garni and a piece of dried orange peel. Pour the sieved sauce on to the sausage, cover and cook gently for 30 minutes. Fresh bread crumbs may be used instead of flour, if desired.

Stuffed aubergines a la catalane

Cut 2 good-sized aubergines (eggplants) in half lengthways to form boat shapes. Leaving a 1 cm (1/2 in) rim around the top, scoop out the flesh without damaging the skin. Chop the flesh together with 2 hard-boiled (hard-cooked) eggs, 2 crushed garlic, 2 large chopped onions per aubergine, add it to the egg and aubergine mixture, and fill the aubergine boats. Arrange in an oiled ovenproof dish, sprinkle with fresh breadcrumbs and oil, and cook in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7-).

CATERER One who prepares meals to order for private individuals or dishes to be taken away.

Under the Ancien Régime, traiteurs formed a corporation, specializing in wedding, feasts and banquets. They also had the right to hire out cutlery, crockery and table linen. The profession of traiteur was at that time considered more honorable than that of the innkeeper or rousseur. The traiteur was the predecessor of the restaurateur, the difference being that customers were not able to eat on his premises. In addition, as Brillat-Savarin said at the end of the 18th century, traiteurs 'could only sell whole joints; and anyone wishing to entertain friends had to order in advance, so that those who had not the good fortune to be invited to some wealthy house left the great city without discovering the delights of Parisian cuisine'. Restaurants were not yet in existence and respectable people did not frequent inns. However, following the success of restaurants towards the end of the 19th century, the term traiteur acquired a rather derogatory meaning and was applied to restaurants of the lowest class and wine merchants who provided meals.

The modern caterer specializes in banquets, cocktail parties and lunches, served either in the clients' homes or in hired rooms. These services can be provided by pastrycooks, confectioners, restaurateurs and delicatessen owners.

The kitchen of the pastrycook who provides a catering service is very different from that of the restaurateur, firstly because the transport and reheating of dishes require special methods and secondly because he has to cater sometimes for several thousand and sometimes for a mere dozen. The dishes provided typically include croustades, bouchees, timbales, vol-au-vent, pates, galantines and ballotines, chauds-froids, dishes in aspic, canapes and, of course, set pieces for special occasions and a variety of desserts, ice creams and petits fours. Restaurants providing a catering service often offer dishes from their menu which can be easily transported, such as cassoulet, sauerkraut, confit and civet.

CATFISH An American freshwater fish that inhabits calm waters and is found principally in the Mississippi basin it is 30-35 cm (12-14 in). long with scaleless, sticky, blackish skin, a massive head with eight whisker-like barbels around the mouth and a second fatty dorsal fin. Despite its ugly appearance, the flesh is excellent and practically boneless. It can be prepared in the same way as trout or perch.

The European catfish (Silurus glanis) is a very large freshwater fish of central European origin, which is found in the Danube, some Swiss lakes and sometimes in the River Doubs in France. Growing up to 4 m (13 ft) long and weighing as much as 200 g (440 lb), it has a massive six-barbed head, a small dorsal fin close to the head and a very long anal fin which extends over more than half the abdomen. Its flesh, which is firm and white but rather fatty, resembles that of the eel.

AUCHOISE, A LA Describing dishes of the Caux region in France, especially saddle of hare or rabbit, marinated in white wine with herbs, cooked in the oven, then sprinkled with the reduced marinade and coated in a sauce made by binding the reduced juices with fresh thick cream and mustard. Serve garnished with Reinet apple fried in butter.

Sole a la cauchoise is braised in cider in the oven, then coated with a sauce made from the cooking juices and butter. It is garnished with shrimps (famous in the Caux region) cooked in a court bouillon to which fried mussels, poached oysters and mushrooms have been added.

Cauchoise salad combines potato slices, slender celery sticks and slivers of cooked ham. It is seasoned with a sauce made of fresh cream, cider vinegar and chervil.

RECIPE

Tarte cauchoise

Prepare some short-crust pastry (basic pie dough). Roll into a ball and leave to rest in a cool place for at least 1 hour. Line a flan tin (tart pan) and bake blind. Soften 800 g (1 1/4 lb. 5 cups) finely chopped onion in butter. Beat 1 whole egg, mix in 200 ml (7 fl oz. 3/4 cup) double (heavy) cream, then add salt, pepper and a little grated nutmeg. Allow to thicken on a gentle heat, without boiling, then add the onions. Fill the flan case with chicken leftovers or finely chopped veal or ham and cover them with the onion mixture. Do with flecks of butter and cool in a preheated oven at 20°C (400°F as 6) of 15-20 minutes.

CAYK A known as caul fat. A thin membrane veined with fat that encloses the stomach, of animals, particularly that of the pig. In charcuterie, the caul is soaked to soften it and make it easier to handle; it is used, for example to wrap around the sausage mat when making crepinettes. Numerous other culinary preparations cooking stuffed leaves, larded calf's liver, fricadeau, foie gras, panes and terrines.

CAULDRON A large deep made of cast iron or copper, with a detachable handle. It was formerly used for cooking thick soups and stews in the hearth, hanging from the chimney-hook. Varying in shape according to different regions (curved sides, with or without feet), it is used today mainly for decoration.

CAULIFLOWER Described by Arab botanists and known to the Romans, the cauliflower originally came from Cyprus and was introduced to France from Italy in the middle of the 16th century. Having been served to Louis XIV, the cauliflower was cultivated extensively particularly in Brittany. The edible part is the flower head, popularly known as the 'heart' or 'head' it white, compact and hard with many compressed flower buds. The trimmed cauliflower may weigh 1-2.5 kg (2 1/4-5 1/2 lbs.). Very small cauliflowers can also be found, each providing a single portion. These are firm and white, but do not have the flavours of the large cauliflowers.

The heart is surrounded by crisp bluish-green leaves, whose condition is a good guide to the freshness of the heart. The heart should be compact, white, firm and undamaged, with no green shoots between the florets. The leaves should be very crisp; do not buy a cauliflower without leaves – it is probably old. Cauliflowers are sold individually, not by weight, and only about half is usable. Allow about 200 g (7 oz) per person if served cooked and 100 g (4 oz) if served raw.

- Cooking cauliflower is the most easily digested member of the cabbage family and can be cooked either whole or as florets. It often gives off a strong smell during cooking. It can be blanched in fast-boiling unsalted water, then cooked in a white stock; a crust of stale bread can be added to absorb some of the smell. Lemon juice may be added after cooking to keep the cauliflower white. It can be eaten raw, in a vegetable fondue, cooked in water (for soup, puree or cold salad), in a soufflé, au gratin, à la hollandaise, à la polonaise, and also lightly braised, sautéed or fried after blanching. It is included in pickles and is a feature of all Du Barry preparation. The leaf ribs and the stump (core) may be used to prepare soups or vegetable loaves.

RECIPES

Cauliflower au gratin

Divide the heart into florets and cook them in salted water or steam. Remove, drain and toss them in butter. Transfer to a buttered gratin dish, coat with Mornay sauce, sprinkle with grated Gruyère cheese and melted butter, and brown for about 10 minutes in a preheated oven at 230°C (450°F, gas 8). The Gruyère may be replaced by Parmesan, which may be sprinkled in the dish before adding the cauliflower.

Sautéed cauliflower

Divide the heart into florets and steam them until they are still slightly firm and do not disintegrate. Heat some butter in a frying pan or sauté pan and lightly brown the florets. Arrange them in a vegetable dish, moisten with the cooking butter in a frying pan or sauté pan and lightly brown the florets. Arrange them in a vegetable dish and moisten with the cooking butter. Cauliflower may also be sautéed in olive oil with chopped garlic.

CAVEAU. A literary, epicurean and gastronomic society founded in Paris in 1729 by Prion, Colle, Galler and Crebillon the Younger, during a dinner at Landelles's famous restaurant, Le Caveau, in the Rue Buci. Boucher, Rameau and Maurepas were also members. The rule of the society was strick any member who lacked decorum durign the discussions had to drink water. The society was dissolves in 1757 after internal disputes disputes, but was restarted some years later at the Palais-Royal on the initiative of General Pelletier. It lasted until 1976 and was patronized by the performers of the Vauderville theatre, who published nine volumes of songs entitled Les Diners du Vaudeville. A new Caveau, founded by Amand Gouffe, was named the Caveu Moderne-Segur the Older, Desaugniers, Cadet-Gassicourt, Grimod de la Reynaiere and Beranger were members for several years the society publised Le Journal des gourmands et ales belles, and it held dinners at the Rocher de Cancale until 1817. The last Caveau was reformed in 1834 but did not last long and never achieved the success of its predecessor.

CAVIAR Sturgeon's eggs that have been salted and allowed to mature. The word comes from the Italian caviale, itself derived from the Turkish kauyar. It apears as early as 1532 in Rabelais Pantagruel, in which caviar is described as the choice hors d'oeuvre, Colbert organized the production of caiar in the Gironde using the sturgeons passing through the estuary. But the caviar we know today is Rossian. It was introduced to France in the 1920s following the exile of Russian princess during the Universal Exhibition of 1925 the Petrossian Brothers learned, through their Russian Friends, that caviar was known to very few French people. Charles Ritz formally launched caviar by putting it permanently on the menu at his hotel.

The sturgeon lives in the sea, but returns in wintner to estuaries throughout temperature regions of Asia to lay its eggs. Today the Caspian Sea provides 88% of the world's caviar. The surgeon was still common in the Gironde at the beginning of the 20th century, but it becomes so rare tha fishing for it is prohibited.

The former soviet Union ws for a long time the sole producer of caviar. But since 1953, factories on Iran's Caspian coast have prduced 180 tonnes annually; Russia produes 1,800 tonnes every year .

The eggs constitute about 10% of the female's body weight. After they have been removed, they are washed, drained, put into brine, drained again and finally packed into tins (cans). There are two sorts caviar in grains and pressed caviar. The name 'red caviar' is sometimes used incorrectly for salamon eggs.

- Types of caviar. Sold fresh or sometiems pasteurrized, there are three types differently by size coloru and species of sturgeon.
- Belluga the most expensive and produced by the largest species, which can weight up to 800 kg (1,700 lb). The eggs are more or less dark grey, firm, heavy and well separated. These are the biggest hut most fragile eggs, and if they burst the caviar becomes oily.
- OSSETRA Characterized by smaller more even grains, which are golden yellow to brown and quite oily; considered by many as the best.
- SEVRUGA produced by small sturgeons, which are the most prolific and give very small light- no dark grey eggs. This is the cheapeast type.
- Prossed caviar This is made from the ripest eggs, taken towards the end of the fishing season, which are then compressed. Abuot 5 kg (11 lb) fresh caviar are needed to make 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) pressed caviar. It has a strong and rather oily taste and is sometimes considered too salty, although it is appreciated by Russioan coinnossecurs.

Caviar is a semi-serve and perishable; it should be kept between - 2°C and +4°C (28-39°F). as an hors d'oeuvre, allow 50 g (2 oz., 3 ½ tablespoons) per person crushed ice take the tin (can) out of the refrigerator an our before serving Blinis and sourced (sour) cream or lightly butterd toast make an ideal accompaniment never use lemon, which affects the taste.

RECIPES

Raw scallops with caviar

Open and trim the scallops. In an earthenware dish mix 2 tablespoons pure olive oil and 3 tablespoons groundnut (peanut) oil. Slice the raw white and coral meat into rings. Dip each ring in the oil mixture, wipe off the excess oil and put them on a plate, allowing 2 scallops per serving. Season each plate with 3 pinches of salt and 3 turns of the pepper mill. With the tip of a coffee spoon handle, place 5-6 grains and surround the caviar grains with slices of coral meat. Serve with hot buttered toasts.

Smoked salmon frivolities with caviar

Cut six 18 x 7.5 cm (7 x 3 in) rectangles from 6 very fine, large slices of smoked salmon and set aside. Place the leftovers in a blender and add 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) unsalted butter, at room temperature. Puree the contents briefly until smooth. Gently heat 60 ml (2 fl oz, ¼ cup) prawn stock over a low flame. Add 1 ½ sheets of leaf gelatine or 1 ¼ teaspoons (1/2 envelope) powdered gelatine, previously softened or sponged in cold water, to the stock and stir until dissolved. Pour this mixture into the blender, then add 1 drop of Worcestershire sauce and 2 drops of tabasco. Pulse the blender just 2 or 3 times. Whip 120 ml (4 ½ fl oz, ½ cup) chilled double (heavy) cream in a cold mixing bowl until it forms stiff peaks on the whisk. Add one-third of the salmon puree and stir carefully until thoroughly combined, then stir in the rest of the puree.

Place pieces of cling film (plastic wrap), slightly larger than the pieces of salmon on the icing film and spread 2 tablespoons of the mousse lengthways along the centre of each. Using the cling film, roll up the salmon slices from their long sides into cigar shapes. Twist the ends of the cling film to keep the salmon rolls in shape. Chill for at least 2 hours, but not more than 24 hours.

Remove the cling film from the rolls and cut them in half. Arrange in a V-shape on a very cold plate and garnish with a ribbon of caviar along the line where the edges meet. Garnish with slices of lemon and serve.

CAVOUR The name given to two garnishes inspired by Piedmontese cooking and named after the Italian statesman. One is used with veal escalopes (scallops) or veal sweetbreads, which are fried, drained and arranged on polenta biscuits. They are then surrounded with grilled (broiled) mushrooms and garnished with puree chicken livers and slices of truffle.

The other Cavour garnish, for large pieces of meat, consists of croquettes of semolina and ravioli.

CELERIAC a variety of celery grown for its fleshy swollen stem base, which can weigh 800 g – 1 kg (1 ¾–2 ¼ lb). Celeriac has a rough surface and thick skin. It is sold without the leaves, looking like a heavy white boil. Select vegetables that have as even a surface as possible to avoid waste when peeling. The celeriac should not be cracked. Celeriac is treated like the majority of root vegetables in that it is peeled and (usually) cut up before cooking. It can be used raw-grated, shredded or cut into sticks. Its pale flesh discolors with prolonged exposure to air, so it should be tossed with lemon juice or a suitable dressing. Celeriac is milder than celery and it has a 'firm' rather than crisp texture. Coarsely grated or shredded, it goes well with creamy dressings.

Celeriac can be cooked in a variety of dishes. Plain boiled celeriac can be mashed with butter or pureed with cream, it goes well with potatoes, mashed to a smooth and luffy texture. It can be braised and served coated with sauce or used in soups and casseroles. Fine strips of celeriac are suitable for stir-frying.

Celery salt, which is extracted from dried pulverized celeriac, is used as a condiment for tomato juice, vegetable moulds and salad sauces. It is also used in salt-free diets.

RECIPES

Preparation of celeriac

Peel like a potato, rinse and sprinkle with lemon juice. To eat cooked, cut into pieces and blanch for 5 minutes in boiling salted water. "to serve as a vegetable. It may be braised, cooked in its juices or prepared as a julienne and braised. It can also be prepared as a puree (like cardoons) and as a cream soup. Steamed in slices, it retains all its flavour.

Celeriac croquettes

Peel a celeriac root, cut it into pieces and blanch. Then cook in salted water for about 30 minutes. Add the same weight of peeled potatoes and leave until cooked. Drain the vegetables and dry, either in the oven or in a sauté pan. Pass them through a vegetable mill and mix the resulting puree with egg yolks – 4 per 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) of puree – and chopped parsley. Divide the paste obtained into little balls, flatten them out and coat in batter. Plunge the croquettes into boiling oil or fat and leave to turn golden, then remove and drain on paper towels. Serve with roast beef, veal, pork, leg of lamb or leg of venison.

Celeriac en remoulade

Peel a large celeriac root, grate it coarsely and blanch for 2 minutes in boiling salted water. Drain and refresh with cold water. Dry thoroughly. Add remoulade sauce and, if desired, sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Celeriac julienne

Peel a celeriac root and cut into thick strips. Blanch for 3 minutes in boiling salted water, then refresh in cold water and drain. Put the strips into a pan with a knob of butter and a little sugar, to taste. Cover and sweat for about 15 minutes. Adjust the seasoning and sprinkle with finely chopped herbs. Use to garnish roast meats, fried meats and braised fish, such as cod.

Stuffed celeriac à la paysanne

Cut some small celeriac roots in half and blanch them. Scoop out the pulp, leaving a lining at least 1 cm (1/2 in) thick. Dice the pulp and add an equal volume of both carrots and onions softened in butter. Season with salt and pepper. Fill the half celeriacs with this mixture and place on a buttered overproof dish. Sprinkle with grated gruyère cheese and small knobs of butter. Pour 3 tablespoons stock into the dish and cook in a preheated oven at 220°(425°F, gas 7) until browned.

CELERY A vegetable grown for its roots, stems, leaves and seeds, all of which can be used. Wild celery, from which cultivated strains have been developed, was used both gastronomically, for soups and fish dishes, and therapeutically, as smelling salts. For a long time, both popular opinion and gastronomic writers considered celery to be an aphrodisiac.

Several varieties of cultivated celery are grown for their white fleshy sticks, which are easily broken when fresh. Canned celery hearts and slices, preserved in natural juice, are used as a garnish. Celery is also very suitable for freezing. It can be kept fresh for several days if the bottoms of the sticks are stood in cold salted water, it becomes limp if simply put in the refrigerator. The sticks are eaten raw, in mixed salads or cooked.

The leaves fresh or dried, can serve as a garnish for salads, soups, sauces and stock and may be used in brushed dishes. The seeds are used as a seasoning, having a taste similar to fennel. Celery salt is prepared from celeriac.

RECIPES

Preparation of celery

Remove the hard outer stems and the green leafy branches. Trim the stalk to a point and cut the sticks to a length of about 20 cm (8 in). For eating raw, detach the sticks from one another, wash them and remove the stringy fibres, for cooking wash the trimmed celery in cold water, splashing out the stems. Remove the stringy outer sticks, rinse the rest, then blanch in boiling salted water for 10 minutes. Drain, salt the insides and tie the sticks in bunches. Braised celery hearts can accompany fatty meats, roasts and chicken. Celery can also be cooked in béchamel sauce, au gratin, in meat juice or gravy, or with bone marrow. Celery puree is used in soups and in a sauce for boiled or braised poultry.

Braised celery

Drain some blanched celery sticks on a cloth. Tie them in bunches of two or three, and place them in a buttered flameproof casserole lined with bacon rinds or chopped bacon, chopped onions and sliced carrots. Add sufficient stock to cover the vegetables and seasoning to taste. Bring to the boil over the heat, then cover and transfer to a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) to cook for 1 ½ hours.

Celery can be prepared au maigre by omitting the bacon rinds and replacing the stock with water.

Celery in butter

Blanch and drain the sticks and place them in a well-buttered pan. Add salt and pepper. Moisten with seven / spoonfuls of white stocks or water, cover and cook for about 45 minutes.

Celery sauce

Trim and slice the tender sticks and hearts from two bunches of celery. Place in a saucepan with a bouquet garnish and an onion studded with cloves. Add sufficient stock just to cover the contents, cover and heat until simmering. Simmer until the celery is tender. Puree the celery with its cooking juices and return it to the rinsed pan. Add 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup) cream sauce, and reduce until the required consistency is achieved. Adjust the seasoning and sprinkle with very finely chopped parsley. This sauce can accompany boiled or braised poultry.

Celery with béchamel sauce

Braise the celery and arrange in a buttered dish. Sweat for 10 minutes. Cover with béchamel sauce and simmer for a few minutes.

Celery with cream

Blanch the celery and cut each stick in half lengthways. Arrange in a buttered flameproof casserole and season with salt and pepper. Cover with light stock and bring to the boil. Cover the casserole and transfer to a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) to cook for about 1 hour.

Drain the celery and bend the pieces in half, arranging them in a vegetable dish. To make the sauce, skim any butter off the cooking liquid, reduce, and add 3 tablespoons béchamel sauce. Moisten with 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup) double (heavy) cream and reduce by half. Add 1 tablespoon butter, mix, sieve and pour the sauce over the celery.

CELESTINE A chicken dish named by the chef at the Cercle restaurant in Lyon in honour of the owner of the restaurant. A young chicken is fried with mushrooms and peeled tomatoes. Flamed with Cognac, moistened with white wine and served with powdered garlic and chopped parsley. This recipe was given by its creator to Lucien Tendret, who made it famous.

The name is also used for a chicken soup thickened with tapioca and garnished with strips of pancake seasoned with fines herbes, poached chicken breast and a coating of chervil (a brunnoise of truffles can replace the fines herbes in the pancakes). Certain ingredients of this soup are found in omelette at la Celestine.

RECIPES

Omelette a la Celestine

Prepare two small flat omelettes. Place one on a round plate, garnish with chicken breast and cover with a thick cream sauce containing chopped parsley. Place the second omelette on top and sprinkle with melted butter.

CENDRE One of various cow's-milk cheeses produced in Burgundy (Aisy Cendre, which contains 45% fat) or in Orleanais and Champagne (the Cendres of Argonne, Riceys and Rocroi, which contain 30% fat). Soft-centred and yellow in colour, cendres are fairly firm to the touch and disc-shaped. They are matured in wooden boxes or lined with the ashes and have a fairly strong flavour.

CENDRE, SOUS LA CENDRE A rustic method of cooking meaning literally 'under the ashes', which requires an open hearth or a wood fire. It is used mainly for cooking potatoes and truffles. It is also possible to cook poultry or an animal with protective coat, such as hedgehog, in this way.

- POTATOES SOUS LA CENDRE Preferably choose some fine Fontenay potatoes; wash and dry them. Slide them under the hot coals (with the fire extinguished) and leave without disturbing for 35-40 minutes. Dust them off and serve with semi-salted butter. They can be cooked wrapped in foil if the fire is still glowing and there are few ashes.
- TRUFFLES SOUS LA CENDRE Brush the truffles carefully in cold water, wash and wipe them. Dip them in Cognac or Armagnac, then wrap them singly in pieces of buttered foil or greaseproof (wax) paper. If the embers are very hot, the truffles are placed in an earthenware pie dish with a lid, which is slipped under the embers. If the fire is almost out, the wrapped truffles may be placed directly under the cinders. Cooking takes 35-45 minutes.

CENTREPIECE. An item of gold plate or porcelain that is placed in the centre of the table as decoration for a large formal dinner. The centrepiece is usually in the form of a long tray lined with mirror, on which candelabra, baskets of fruit or vases of flowers are displayed.

The use of centrepieces goes back to the Middle Ages, but it was in the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries that this type of table decoration had its heyday.

CEP cepe. An edible boletus mushroom with a large bulbous stalk that resembles a tree trunk, known as porcini in Italian and particularly popular as a dried fungus. There are over 20 edible varieties, which may be recognized by their swollen stalks and the distinctive tubes (the 'choke' or 'beard') that line the inner surface of the cap.

Two varieties are highly valued in gastronomy the Bordeaux (whitish to dark brown cap; swollen stalk; becomes cylindrical when the mushroom is old), traditionally known as the 'peny' bun' in England, and the bronzed cep (every dark-coloured: bulging stalk) which is particularly delicious and flavoursome in mid-September. These varieties are grown in south-western France, Sologne and Alsace and are sold between July and October. The pine cep (mahogany-brown) and the reticulated cep (yellow-ochre) are also very highly esteemed.

Ceps are always better when young than it is sufficient to wipe them gently with a damp cloth. The bases of the stalks are removed when they are too ripe or maggoty. In wet weather, the 'choke' of certain ceps becomes slimy and must be removed, as it would spoil any dish.

The finest ceps may be eaten raw in salad, cut into thin slices, but they are especially delicious cooked, particularly in an omelette, in a velouté or as a garnish (for confit, stew or river fish). They may be preserved by drying or oil.

Many French regions have cep specialities. In auvergne, chataigneraie ceps are eaten stuffed. In Aquitaine, they are prepared en cocotte, stuffed or cooked in embers. In Poitou and south-western France, they are grilled (broiled) in walnut oil. Bonleaus ceps, always cooked in oil (rather than butter), are dressed with garlic or parsley. Auch is famous for its ceps in white wine. In Gascony, they are eaten à la viande (studded with garlic and accompanied by raw ham), grilled, in a stew or with salmis. Brantôme is one of the most important producing centers in France, several hundred tonnes of ceps are sent to Bordeaux and Paris each year.

The culinary value of ceps has been appreciated only since the 18th century. Their popularity can be traced to the court of Stanislas Leszczyński in Lorraine, hence the adjective polonais (Polish) applied to the Bordeaux cep.

RECIPES

Baked ceps

Wipe 4 perfect cep caps. Make a cross-shaped cut on top of each and place in an ovenproof dish or roasting tins (pan). Season lightly with salt and pepper and add a drop of olive oil. Put in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) for 5 minutes. Turn the ceps, season again and bake for a further 3 minutes. Arrange the ceps with their undersides facing upwards and garnish each with a very thin slice of lightly cooked foie gras or diced lightly grilled Parma ham. Serve with a red chicory salad, in a dressing of sherry vinegar and olive oil.

Ceps à la bordelaise

Trim the ceps; cut them into thin slices if they are very large, have them if of medium size, or leave them whole if they are small. Put them in a shallow frying pan with oil and lemon juice. Leave to cook slowly with the lid on for 5 minutes, then drain. Heat some oil in another frying pan, place the ceps in it and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Lightly brown them, then drain. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve very hot.

In Paris, ceps à la bordelaise are lightly fried and served with chopped shallots, fried bread and chopped parsley.

Ceps à la hongroise

Trim and wash 500 g (18 oz) ceps. Cut them into thin slices if they are large; leave them whole if they are small. Cook them slowly in butter with 2 tablespoons chopped onion, salt, pepper and 1 teaspoon paprika. Then add sufficient crème fraîche to cover the contents of the pan and reduce. Finally, sprinkle with chopped parsley if desired.

Ceps à la mode bernoise

Trim and wash some large ceps and put them in the oven to release the excess juices. Stud them with garlic, sprinkle with salt and pepper, coat with oil and grill (broil) them. Chop and mix some breadcrumbs, garlic and parsley and brown this mixture in a frying pan with oil. Scatter the grilled ceps on top and serve immediately.

Ceps à la provençale

Prepare as for ceps à la bordelaise, but use olive oil and fry for longer. When cooked, sprinkle with chopped garlic as well as parsley.

Ceps au gratin

Trim the ceps, separating the caps from the stalks; season with salt and pepper, then coat with melted butter or oil. Arrange the caps in a buttered or oiled gratin dish with their tops downwards. Chop the stalks and add 1 chopped shallot for every 200 g (7 oz, 2 cups) stalks, together with some parsley, brown in oil and season with salt and pepper. Finally add 1 tablespoon fresh breadcrumbs for every 200 g & oz. 2 cups) stalks and mix all the ingredients together. Fill the caps with this mixture, sprinkle with some more fresh breadcrumbs, moisten with oil or melted butter, and brown in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) or under a hot grill (broiler).

Ceps en terrine

Trim and wash 800 g (1 ¾ lb) ceps and separate the caps from the stalks. Chop the stalks together with 3-4 garlic cloves, 3-4 shallots and a small bunch of parsley and brown everything in a shallow frying pan in 3 tablespoons olive oil. Add salt and pepper. Place the caps in a separate covered frying pan with 2 tablespoons olive oil and some salt, and heat gently until they have discharged their juices. Drain them. Line the bottom and sides of an ovenproof earthenware dish with very thin rashers (slices) of smoked belly bacon. In it, place a layer of the caps, then the chopped mixture, then a second layer of caps. Cover with more smoked rashers, put the lid on the dish, place in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) and leave to cook for just under an hour.

Grilled ceps

Thoroughly clean and trim some fresh ceps. Lightly slit the caps and marinate the ceps for at least 30 minutes in a mixture of olive oil, lemon juice, chopped garlic, chopped parsley, a pinch of cayenne, salt and pepper. Drain the ceps and grill (broil) them. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve very hot. Alternatively, the ceps, moistened with melted butter or simply washed and wiped, may be sprinkled with salt and pepper; quickly grilled and basted with oil or melted at the time of serving.

Marinated ceps

Trim and wash 800 g (1 ¾ lb) ceps and cut into thin slices. Plunge them into boiling oil for 2 minutes, then cool them under cold water and wipe off the excess. For the marinade, heat a mixture of 200 ml (7 fl. oz. ¼ cup) olive oil, 3 tablespoons wine vinegar, 1 tablespoon chopped fennel, 2 teaspoons lemon peel, a bay leaf cut into four, 2 small sprigs of thyme, salt and freshly ground pepper. Bring this mixture to the boil and leave to boil for 5 minutes. Place the ceps in an earthenware dish and cover with the boiling marinade, strained through a sieve. Add 2 large garlic cloves and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley. Stir, then leave in a cool place for at least 24 hours before serving.

Other recipes. See chicken, egg (scrambled eggs), omelette (omelettes cooked with their flavouring), saute.

CEPAGE The French word meaning variety of vine, or 'varietal'. The grape vine, Vitis vinifera, has existed since before records were kept. There are no thousands of varieties, but in France only about 50 types are in use. The Institut National des Appellations d'Origine specifies the grapes for each AOC wine and others subject to regional controls. Some wines, such as red Bordeaux (claret), are made from several grape varieties in conjunction; others are made from a single variety – red Burgundy and Beaujolais, Muscadet, Sancerre, and so on. In Alsace the wines are named after the single grape varieties that are used to make them – Sylvaner, Riesling, Gewurztraminer, and others. It should be noted that in some regions a variety may have a local name or nickname; for example, the Chenin Blanc may be known as the Pineau de la Loire, and the sauvignon is the Blanc Fume of Pouilly-sur-Loire.

CEREAL Any of several grasses cultivated widely for their seeds (grain), which provide a staple food for humans and their livestock. Different cereals are grown in different regions of the globe; wheat and barley in temperate parts of Europe and Asia; rye and oats in northern and eastern Europe, rice in the wetter warm-temperate and subtropical parts of Asia maize (corn) on the American continent; and millet and sorghum in Africa. Cereals in their simplest forms remain the basic foodstuff in many countries, especially the poorest ones, but industrialized countries have tended to favour more elaborate processed foods. Types of refined cereals that are easy to prepare and quick to cook have replaced crude grains. Products such as pastas, pastries, breads and breakfast cereals are popular. However, there is a renewed interest in natural foods, including unprocessed cereals.

Their dietary role as important sources of unrefined carbohydrate and fibre is valued and they are also appreciated for their texture flavoured and versatility.

- WHOLE CEREALS. The husks have to be removed from some grains, such as rice, barley and oats, as they are too hard for human consumption. Wheat and rye can be milled with their husks. Refined cereals have less flavour and are less nutritious than whole cereals.
- FLAKES Grains of wheat, oats or maize (corn) that have been crushed, steam-cooked, crushed again and grilled.
- PUFFED GRAINS Grains of maize (corn) or rice that have been subjected to a vacuum, this causing them to swell up; they are sometimes coated with sugar
- PRETREATED GRAINS grains that have been cooked slowly in their husks before refining; this operation concentrates the nutrients in the centre of the grain.
- PRECOOKED GRAINS Grains (whole or portions of grains) partially steam-cooked and then dried, this reduces the cooking time.

CERISE SUR LE GATEAU A milk chocolate gateau, created in 1993 by Pierre Herme (a French pastry chef born in 1961), who was responsible for the composition, and Yann Pennor, who designed it. The round gateau consists of a biscuit dacquoise (crushed almonds sponge mixed with butter cream) on which rests a layer of almond-flavoured puff pastry and chocolate cream filling separated by thin leaves of milk chocolate. The top consists of crème chantilly flavoured with chocolate. This assembly is then cut into equal parts; six of these parts are piled upon and topped with a crystallized (candied) cherry. The gateau is presented in a specially made case, which gives the illusion that it is a large slice of cake lying on its side.

CERVELLE DE CANUT A speciality of Lyons traditionally served in taverns as a mid-morning snack. It consists of fairly soft curd cheese known as claqueret, which is well beaten, seasoned with salt and pepper and blended with shallot chopped with herbs, crème fraîche, white wine and a little oil.

CEVENOLE, A LA A term describing one of many sweet or savoury dishes that contain chestnuts, a speciality of the Ardeche region of France. Used in purees, stews, whole or poached, chestnuts can accompany a range of roasts and braised meats, including loin of pork, mutton, calves' sweetbreads, fillet of beef and game. Marrons glacés are used in a variety of hot, cold and iced sweets.

RECIPES

Ragout à la cevenole

The garnish for this ragout consists of braised chestnuts, small glazed onions and very coarsely diced lean bacon, blanched and lightly fried. The pan juices from the braised meat of the ragout are used to bind the garnish.

Sweet Dishes

Bavarian cream à la cevenole

Make a Bavarian cream mixture and add an equal volume of pureed marrons glacés flavoured with kirsch. Brush a round mould with sweet almond oil and heap the mixture into it. Set in the refrigerator, then turn out on the serving dish. Decorate with piped Chantilly cream and halved marrons glacés.

Choux à la cévenole

Prepare some sweet choux buns. Mix together equal volumes of chestnut cream and whipped cream sweetened with vanilla-flavoured sugar and fill the choux with it.

Coupe glace à la cévenole

Prepare separately 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) vanilla ice cream and 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) Chantilly cream. Add 1 liqueur glass of kirsch to 250 g (9 oz, 1 ¼ cups) marron-glace fragments and divide equally between 4 sundae glasses. Cover each with a layer of the vanilla ice cream and smooth the surface. Use a piping bag with a fluted nozzle to decorate with the Chantilly cream, then arrange some marrons glacés and sugar violets on top.

Crepes à la cévenole

Prepare some sweet pancakes, spread them out on the worktop and cover each with a thin layer of marron-glace puree flavoured with rum. Fold the pancakes over, arrange them in an ovenproof serving dish, dust with sugar and glaze in the oven. Serve very hot.

CEVICHE also known as cebiche. A dish, characteristic of Peruvian cookery, that is based on a raw fish marinated in lemon juice and is served with sweet limes, raw onion rings, tomatoes and boiled sweetcorn.

CHABICHOU A small goat's milk cheese from Poitou, which contains 45% butterfat and has a soft centre and a natural crust. Usually, in the shape of a truncated cone, but sometimes cylindrical, it weighs about 100 g (4 oz) and is sold unwrapped when farm-produced, wrapped in paper from a dairy. It is eaten fresh. When ripened, it is firm without being hard, with a fairly pronounced flavour and a strong goatlike smell. It is at its best in the summer.

CHABLIS White Burgundy of worldwide repute. Situated between Tonnerre and Auxerre and crossed by the small unnavigable River Serein, the Chablis vineyard acquired fame because of the high quality of its white wines. Monks played a great part in the history of the vineyard. The first monks, in 867, were those of the abbey of Saint-Martin-de-Tours; the Cistercians of Pontigny arrived three centuries later. Since then, the sale of Chablis wines has been increasing all the time, in spite of the ravages of wars, vine phylloxera (in 1893) and, above all, frosts, which almost completely destroyed the vineyard in 1957 and did much damage in 1985. The name Chablis has acquired common usage in the United States and Australia as a generic term to describe any dry white wine of unspecified origin. Within the European Union, its use is protected to refer only to the wines of the specific Chablis region.

Chablis, situated in the north of Burgundy, is nearer to certain vineyards of the Loire (Pouilly and Sancerre) than to Beaune. The vines are grown on hillsides in poor, shallow, chalky soil. The Chardonnay vine, which is called beaunois (of Beaune) in the region, is today the only one authorized for the production of AOC Chablis. The work of the grower, already arduous on such a barren soil, is often ruined by May frosts, as the vineyard is particularly exposed.

Chablis is a very dry white wine that can keep well. Pale yellow in colour with glints of green, it is at the same time powerful and delicate. There are, in order of merit, four categories – Chablis grand cru, Chablis premier cru, Chablis, and petit Chablis – originating from different soils and grown under conditions of varying exposure.

- Seven Chablis grands crus are officially recognized: Vaudesir, Les Clos, Grenouilles, Les

- Preuses, Bougros, Valmur and Blanchots.
- Chablis premiers crus, of which there are about 40, cover some neighbouring parishes situated on the banks of the River Serein. Some well-known names are Montmains, Vaillons, Beugnons, Mont-de-Tonnerre and Fourchaume.
- Chablis and petit chablis come from within the delimited AOC region.

CHAFING DISH a small item of portable-kitchen equipment consisting of a pan fitted over a source of heat, usually a spirit lamp, but sometimes a butane gas burner or an electric element. Made of copper, stainless steel or silver plate, it is used to cook dishes at table, such as fondues (when it forms part of a fondue set) or flambe dishes.

It can also serve as a hotplate, for keeping cooked dishes warm.

CHAI This term, meaning 'wine store', is mostly used in the Bordeaux region, where underground cellars cannot be excavated, to designate the place where the wines mature, in vat or cask. The maitre de chai decides when to draw off the wine and bottle it.

CHAKCHOUKA A traditional Arabian and North African dish comprising a ragout of potatoes and onions, cooked in oil and seasoned with chilli peppers, harissa, and tomato sauce, over which eggs are broken; when the eggs are cooked, the dish is sprinkled with dried mint. The potatoes may be replaced by green peas, beans, a mixture of sweet peppers and tomatoes or courgettes (zucchini) and aubergines (eggplants). Chakchouka is often garnished with grilled merguez or slices of dried meat.

CHALEUTH A desert Jewish cuisine, made from a mixture of breadcrumbs, finely sliced apples, eggs and sugar, flavoured with rum, raisins and cinnamon. The dish is baked in an oiled casserole and served warm. It is also prepared by cooking sliced apples with sugar and cinnamon, again in a casserole but between two pastry crusts, the top being sprinkled with small pieces of fat.

CHALLAH Jewish loaf, pronounced 'Halah' (the spelling that may be used in Arab countries). Made from white bread dough enriched with eggs, and sometimes flavoured with saffron, the loaf is plaited and glazed with egg, then sprinkled with poppy or sesame seeds. Challah is served on the Sabbath and for festivals.

CHALLONNAISE, A LA A classic garnish, now rarely used, intended to accompany poultry and calves sweetbreads. Named after the town of Chalon-sur-Saône in France, it consists of cockscombs, kidneys, mushrooms and thin slices of truffle in a supreme sauce.
CHAMBARAND An unpasteurized soft cow's-milk cheese (45 % fat) from Dauphiné, lightly pressed and with a natural washed crust. Created by the Trappists of the Abbey of Chambarand, it is a small round, 8 cm (3 1/2 in) in diameter, weighing 165 g (5 1/2 oz.). Smooth and light ochre in colour, it has a mild, creamy flavour.

CHAMBERTIN A famous red Burgundy vineyard in the Côte-de-Nuits which, together with Chambertin Clos de Beze, make up a 28 hectare (70 acre) vineyard. The names derive from the plot (clos) at Gevrey, given in about AD 630 to the monks of the Abbey of Beze. The owner of the adjacent field, a man called Berlin copied the monks' successful methods. The Pinot Noir is grown on a chalky soil that also includes ferruginous marls. There are a number of grand cru sites that may put their names before that of Chambertin – Charmes, Latricières, Mazis, Griottes, Ruchottes and Chapelle. They are all magnificent wines and should be served with respect and in the context of the food.

RECIPES

Chambertin sauce

Peel and dice 2 carrots and 2 onions. Soften them with 20 g (3/4 oz. 1 1/2 tablespoons) butter in a shallow frying pan. Add a bouquet garni, 100 g (4 oz. 1 1/4 cups) chopped mushrooms (including stalks and peelings), half a chopped garlic clove, 250 g (9 oz with 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) Chambertin and cook for at least 20 minutes in a covered pan. Remove the lid and reduce by a third. Pass through a conical strainer and bind with 1 tablespoon beurre manie.

Fillets of sole with chamberti

Season some fillets of sole with salt and pepper and fold them in two. Butter an ovenproof casserole and line the bottom with finely diced carrots, chopped onions, fresh crumbled thyme and a crushed bay leaf. Add some chopped mushroom stalks; the caps will serve for the garnish. Arrange the fillets in the dish, dab them with knobs of butter and barely cover them with Chambertin. Cover with the lid and bake in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9). Remove and drain the fillets, then arrange them in the serving dish; keep hot. Reduce the cooking liquid by one-third, pass through a conical strainer and bind the strained liquor with 1 tablespoon beurre manie. Coat the fillets with this sauce and garnish with sautéed mushroom caps and small glazed onions.

CHAMBOLLE-MUSIGNY A parish in the Cote-d'Or in Burgundy, famous for the musigny and Bonnes Mares grands crus vineyards among others. These covers about 24 hectares (59 acres). Other well known wines originating here, and combining their names with that of the parish, include premiers crus Les Amoureuses, Les Charmes, Les Combettes and Les Grands Murs. A very small quantity of white Chambolle-Musigny is made but is seldom found outside the region. Chicken cooked in beer

Cut a 1.25 kg (2 3/4 lb) chicken into pieces and fry them in butter in a casserole until golden. Add 2 peeled, chopped shallots and fry lightly. Add 60 ml (2 fl oz. 1/4 cup) Dutch gin and flambe it. Now add 400 ml (14 fl oz. 1 3/4 cups) beer, 60 ml (2 fl oz. 1/4 cup) crème fraîche, 1 bouquet garni, salt and little cayenne pepper. Cover and simmer. Clean and finely slice 250 g (9 oz) mushrooms and add the contents of the casserole. After 45 minutes of cooking, take the chicken pieces out of the casserole, drain and arrange on a serving dish. Put aside in a warm place. Remove the bouquet garni, add 60 ml (2 fl oz. 1/4 cup) crème fraîche and reduce by half. Mix a little of the sauce with an egg yolk and stir, then pour back into the casserole and beat vigorously. Pour the sauce over the chicken and sprinkle with finely chopped parsley.

Chicken dauphinoise

Insert some slivers of truffle beneath the skin of a good large Bresse chicken. Sprinkle with salt and pepper inside, then stuff with its own liver 100 g (4 oz, 1/2 cup) foie gras, both diced, mixed with a little chopped truffle. Truss the bird and put it in a pork bladder, sprinkle again with a little salt and pepper, add 3 tablespoons brandy and the same quantity of Madeira, then seal the bladder.

Make some stock with the giblets, pour it into a flameproof casserole, add the chicken in the bladder and bring to the boil. Cook gently for 45 minutes. Remove the chicken from the pan, being careful not to pierce the bladder, untie it and drain the cooking liquid into a bowl. Remove the forcemeat from the chicken and press it through a sieve. Cut the chicken into joint arrange on a warm dish. Thicken the cooking liquid with the sieved forcemeat and serve separately in a sauceboat.

Chicken in a salt crust

In a bowl mix together 1 kg (2 ¼ 9 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, the same weight of coarse sea salt and 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) cold water, Knead this dough and roll it out on a pastry board. Sprinkle the inside of a chicken with salt and pepper and insert a sprig of rosemary, a bay leaf, its own liver and the livers of 2 other chickens. Place the chicken on the dough, wrap it up and seal it, place on a baking sheet and cook in a preheated oven at 160 °C (325 °F, gas 3) for 1 ½ hours. Break off the hard salty crust and discard, remove the chicken and carve. Serve with a salad dressed with walnut oil.

Chicken Maryland

Cut the raw chicken into joints and dip the pieces into cold milk. Drain them, coat with flour and fry in butter until golden. Continue cooking over a very low heat, turning once, until cooked through. Meanwhile, place the carcass and giblets in a saucepan with garlic, onion, a little stock and some milk. Bring to the boil and simmer for a few minutes, then strain the liquid and pour over the fried chicken pieces. Garnish with fried bacon rashers (slices) and serve with corn fritters or grilled (broiled) corn on the cob.

Chicken mireille

Heat 65 g (2 ½ oz. 5 tablespoons) butter in a sauce pan and gently cook a large Bresse chicken, cut into 8 pieces are firm, but not coloured, add 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) dry white wine and reduce until almost all the liquid has evaporated. Add 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) fresh morels, carefully cleaned, washed and patted dry, then 1 litre (1 ¾ pints 4 ½ cups) double (heavy) cream cook gently for 35 minutes.

Remove the pieces of chicken and the morels and arrange on a hot serving dish. Reduce the cooking liquid to 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) Thicken it with 1 egg yolk, whisking over the heat but not allowing it to boil. Pour this sauce over the chicken.

Chicken petit-duc

Cook some morels and truffle slivers in butter. Saute a chicken a brun, then drain it and keep warm in a serving dish. Deglaze the pan in which the chicken was cooked with 3 tablespoons Madeira, reduce and then moisten with 150 ml (¼ pint 2/3 cu) demi-glaze sauce. Garnish the chicken with the morels and truffles and pour the sauce over.

Chicken rosiere

Stuff a large roasting chicken with panada forcemeat made with cream, truss and bard it then cook in white stock, like chicken with tarragon. Prepare separately some slices of calves, sweetbreads cooked in white stock, and a mushroom puree. Untie the chicken, remove the barding fat, cut into joints and arrange in a round dish, surround by the calves, sweetbreads and the forcemeat, cut into slices. Pour over all this a sauce made from the cooking liquid, strained and reduced. Serve the mushroom puree separately.

Chicken with artichokes

Saute a chicken a brun, adding some artichoke quarters (blanched in salted water) halfway through the cooking period. Drain the chicken and its garnish, arrange in a serving dish and keep warm. Deglaze the cooking pan with white wine and stock, reduce, thicken with a little beurre manie and pour this sauce over the chicken and artichokes. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Chicken with basil

Saute the chicken a brun. Drain it and arrange on a warm dish. Deglaze the cooking pan with 200 ml (7 fl oz $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) dry white wine. Add 1 tablespoon chopped fresh basil and whisk in 50 g (2 oz. 4 tablespoons) butter. Pour this sauce over the chicken.

Chicken with ceps

Saute a chicken a brun in equal quantities of butter and oil. Three quarters of the way through the cooking time, add 300 g (11 oz 4 cups) ceps or other mushrooms, sliced and sauteed in oil, then 2 chopped shallots. Finish cooking. Arrange the drained chicken and mushrooms in a serving dish. Deglaze the casserole with 100 ml (4 fl oz 7 tablespoons) white wine reduce, then pour it over the chicken and mushrooms. Sprinkle with chopped parsley. A small crushed garlic clove can be added to the sauce.

Chicken with cream

Saute a chicken a blanc, drain it arrange on a serving dish and keep warm. Pour off the cooking fat from the pan, add 150 ml ($\frac{1}{4}$ pint, $\frac{2}{3}$ cup) dry cider and reduce until all the liquid has evaporated. Then mix in 200 ml (7 fl oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) double (heavy) cream and reduce just enough to make the sauce very smooth, adjust the seasoning. Pour the sauce over the chicken and sprinkle with chopped parsley. The chicken can be flamed in Calvados, or the cider can be replaced with white wine.

Chicken with oysters

Saute a chicken a blanc. Poach 12 oysters in their own liquid. Drain the cooked chicken and keep warm in a serving dish. Deglaze the cooking pan with 100 ml (4 fl oz 7 tablespoons) white wine and the liquid from the oysters, reduce by half and add 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) chicken veloute sauce. Add a squeeze of lemon juice, then 40 g time. Arrange the oysters around the chicken and pour the sauce over.

Chicken with plantains

Saute a chicken a brun in a flameproof casserole, when golden, add 1 large chopped onions, 5 peeled tomatoes and 250 g (9 oz) streaky bacon, cut into pieces. Cook for 1 hour, occasionally adding a little cold water to prevent the fat from blackening season with salt and pepper. While the chicken is cooking cut 12 plantains in half and boil them in a saucepan of water for 30 minutes. Drain them and place in a casserole with the chicken, simmer for a further 15 minutes. Serve very hot.

Chicken with rice a la bourbon

Fry a large roasting chicken with a little lard (shortening) in a flameproof casserole, until just golden. Add 1 finely chopped onion, 2 whole carrots, 1 tablespoon tomato puree (paste) and a bouquet garni. Season with salt and pepper half, cover with stock and cook gently for $1\frac{1}{4}$ - $1\frac{1}{2}$ hours, according to the size of the bird.

Blanch 250 g (9 oz $1\frac{1}{4}$ cups) rice for 5 minutes, then drain and cool. Add twice its volume of stock to the rice and cook until soft, but do not allow the grains to disintegrate (about 18 minutes) Pack into a greased ring mould and unould on to a round serving dish. Cut the chicken into pieces and arrange in the middle. Strain the chicken cooking liquid and pour it over the chicken.

Chicken with rice and supreme sauce

Truss a large chicken as for roasting and cook it in white stock, like chicken with tarragon, but for only 40 minutes. Blanch 250 g (9 oz. 1 ¼ cups) rice for 5 minutes, drain it, rinse it and drain once more. Drain the half cooked chicken, strain the stock, then return the chicken to the casserole, add the drained rice and the stock it should come to about 3 cm (1 ¼ in) above the rice. Add 25 g (1 oz 2 tablespoons) butter and continue cooking gently for 20 minutes. With the rest of the stock, make a supreme sauce. Place the chicken on a warm dish, pour over a little of the sauce and surround with rice. Serve the remaining sauce separately in a sauceboat.

Chicken with tarragon

Clean a large roasting chicken and put a bunch of tender tarragon sprigs inside it. Truss as for roasting, rub lightly with half a lemon and bard the breast and back with thin slices of rindless bacon. Place in a flameproof casserole and just cover with white stock, adding a small bunch of tarragon. Cover, bring quickly to the boil, then cook gently for about 1 hour (when pricked, the juice which comes out of the chicken should be clear). Drain the chicken, untie it and remove the barding fat and the tarragon leaves and put it in a warm place on a serving dish.

Thicken the cooking liquid with a little arrowroot or beurre manie strain it and add 2 tablespoons chopped fresh tarragon. Pour a little of this sauce over the chicken and serve the remainder in a sauceboat.

Alternatively, the casserole can be deglazed with a glass of white wine and a little thickened and strained veal stock to which a handful of chopped tarragon elaves has been added.

Chicken with tarragon in aspic

Cook a large roasting chicken in white stock as in the recipe for chicken with tarragon. Drain it, untruss it and pat dry, leave it to cool, then place it in the refrigerator.

Skim the fat off the cooking liquid and strain it, then heat it, adding 20 g (¾ oz. 3 envelopes) powdered gelatine completely dissolved in cold water. In a saucepan, whisk together 100 g (4 oz. ¾ cup) lean minced (ground) beef, 1 egg white and a handful of tarragon elaves, roughly chopped. Add the cooking liquid, whisking all the time, and bring to the boil. Simmer gently for 30 minutes, then strain the liquid, add 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) Madeira and leave to cool.

Steamed stuffed chicken with ragout of broccoli

Peel 100 g (4 oz) carrots and 100 g (4 oz) turnips. Chop very finely and cook in boiling water. At the same time, cook separately 100 g (4 oz) unpeeled courgettes. (zucchini) in boiling water making sure they remain firm. Drain thoroughly and dice.

Braise 500 g (18 oz) calves, sweetbreads until brown and cut into small dice. Strain the braising juices and reduce to a quarter of their original quantity. Pour 100 ml (4 fl oz 7 tablespoons) of this reduced juices on to the sweetbreads, finely chopped carrots, turnips and courgettes.

Using a wide kitchen knife, flatten 4 chicken fillets between 2 pieces of cling film (plastic wrap) Sprinkle a little pepper on top, then put a small amount of sweetbread mixture in the centre. Roll individually into small cylinders and wrap in cling film. Steam for 20 minutes.

Cook 575 g (1 ¼ lb) broccoli for a few minutes in boiling salted water. Fry 1 finely chopped onion and 150 g (5 oz. 2/3 cup) lardons of smoked streaky bacon in 20 g (¾ oz 1 ½ tablespoons) butter, until golden, then add the broccoli. Season with salt and pepper and keep warm. Unwrap the chicken filets and cut them in half. Put 2 half chicken fillets on each plate and pour over the braising juice. Arrange the broccoli and the smoked bacon around the fillets.

Spring Chicken

Frbilled spring chicken

Prepare the spring chicken en crapoudine, Sprinke with salt and pepper, brush lightly with clarified butter on both sides and half roast it in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F. gas 9) Mix 2 tablespoons mustard with a little cayenne and brush this over the chicken. Coat generously with fresh breadcrumbs and sprinkle with a little clarified butter. Finish cooking under the grill (broiler) on both, side Serve with gherkins (sweet dill pickles) lemon halves and devilled sauce.

Fried spring chicken

Cut a spring chicken into 6 pieces (2 wings, 2 legs and 2 pieces of breast) Mix 2 tablespoon oil with 1 tablespoon lemon juice, some salt and pepper, a little cayenne, 1 finely chopped garlic clove, 1 tablespoon very finely chopped parsley and, if liked ½ teaspoon ground ginger. Marinate the chicken pieces in this mixture for 30 minutes. Drain them coat in breadcrumbs, then deep fry very hot oil (180°C, 350°F) When they are golden (13-15 minutes) drain on paper towels, sprinkle with the salt and serve with lemon quarters.

Spring chicken a la sicilienne

Boil some pasta shapes in salted water. Drain, reheat for a few minutes in very hot butter, then mix with a puree of pistachio nuts. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and leave to cool. Stuff the chickens with this mixture and truss them, then spit-roast basting frequently. Three-quarters of the way through cooking, sprinkle with fresh breadcrumbs and allow to colour. Serve the cooking juices as a gravy separately.

CHICK PEAS A bushy leguminous plant, cultivated in southern Europe for its rounded edible pealike seeds, which are enclosed in pods. The English name is derived from the French chicke, from the Latin cicero is said to have been so nicknamed because of the pea shaped wart on the end of his nose. The plant originated in the Mediterranean basin and the seeds may be sold dried or precooked in cans.

Dried chick peas should always be soaked before cooking Canned chick peas are cooked and need draining, then rinsing. Used in purees, soups and stews, they feature in numerous dishes in the south of France and also in Spain and the Middle East olla podrida, puchero, hummus and cocido. They are a traditional ingredient in sauces served with couscous and are used in various preparations with dried beans and even in salads. Chick peas and chick pea flour (besan) are also popular in Indian cooking.

RECIPES

Chicken peas a la catalane

Soak 500 g (18 oz. 3 cups) chick peas in cold water for at least 12 hours, changing the water several times. Drain them and place in a pan with a carrot, an onion, 2 celery sticks and the white part of an onion, 2 celery sticks and the white part of a leek, all thinly sliced. Add a piece of smoke bacon weighing about 250 g (9 oz) and a bouquet garni and cover with 2 litres (3 ½ pints 9 cups) cold water. Bring to the boil, skim, add salt and pepper, reduce the heat and add 3-4 tablespoons oil.

Simmer gently for 2-3 hours, depending on the quality of the chick peas. Then add a piece of strong chorizo and cook for a further 30 minutes. Remove the bouquet garni, the bacon and the chorizo and drain the chick peas. Then put the chick peas into a saucepan together with 200 ml (7 fl oz. ¾ cup) tomato sauce spiced with garlic. Cut the chorizo into slices, the bacon and add them to the chick peas. Simmer for 15 minutes, pour into a deep dish and serve piping hot.

Ragout of mutton with chick peas

Soak some chick peas in cold water for at least 12 hours, changing the water several times. Then place in a large pan of cold water allowing 2 litres (3 ½ pints, 9 cups) for every 500 g (18 oz, 3 cups) chick peas. Bring to the boil, skim add some salt and simmer gently for about 2 ½ hours. Drain.

Prepare a mutton ragout a la bonne femme, but add the chick peas (instead of potatoes) with the bacon. Cook for a further 30 minutes.

CHICORY (ENDIVE) A winter vegetable with tightly bunched leaves that form a firm elongated heart. In about 1850, a peasant from the Brussels suburbs observed that wild chicory roots cultivated in warmth and shade grew elongated shoots with yellowish edible leaves. Later, a Belgian botanist called Brezier improved the technique of etiolation to produce the modern chicory. It first appeared at Les Halles in Paris in October 1879.

The nomenclature of this vegetable is rather confusing it is called chicory in English and endive or Belgian endive in the United States (in England, endive is a curly leaved salad plant called chicory in America) For the sake of clarity, the English nomenclature is used in this article.

Chicory is grown in northern France, Belgium (where it is called chicon or witloof and cooked au gratin, virtually a national dish) and the Netherlands, and is available from October to May. Carefully cleaned and packed, and kept in the dark to prevent it from turning green the chicory should be firm, shiny, swollen and unblemished.

Chicory for coffee Certain varieties of chicory in the north of France and in Belgium with large smooth roots are used as a substitute for coffee. These roots are dried, cut, roasted and then ground to make an infusion. Chicory is produced commercially in the form of grounds, a soluble powder or as a liquid extract. It gives a bitter and very dark coloured drink, which is often blended with breakfast coffee. Chicory has been used as a substitute for coffee since 1769) first in Italy and then in German, It does not have the aroma or stimulating properties of coffee.

Trimming and preparation Remove any damaged leaves, rinse the chicory quickly in water, dry and wipe. Avoid soaking it in water, because this makes it bitter. Hollow out a small cone about 2.5 cm (1 in) high from the base using a knife this is where the bitterness is concentrated. Never scald or blanch chicory.

Chicory can be served raw in salads with vinaigrette and often with hard boiled (hard cooked) eggs and any of the various ingredients used in winter salads, including beetroot (red beets) apples, nuts, cheese and orange or pgrapefruit quarters. For cooked dishes, chicory heads are braised and drained, they can then be coated with bechamel sauce, sprinkled with noisette butter, served with gravy or with plain butter and herbs, topped with grated cheese and browned, or made into a puree. They can be served as an accompaniment to roasts and poultry. They can also be braised, make into a chiffonade or prepared as fritters, (especially when served with fish). As a main dish, chicory is braised rolled in slices of ham and coated with a port and raisin sauce, or stuffed (with a fatty or lean stuffings) and browned on top.

RECIPES

Braised chicory

Trim and wash 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) chicory and place in a flameproof casserole with 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter, a pinch of salt, the juice of a quarter of a lemon, and 3 tablespoons water. Bring quickly to the boil without a lid, then leave to boil over a medium heat for 35 minute.

The chicory can also be braised by cooking very gently in 50 g (2 oz. 4 tablespoons) butter, with a pinch of salt and a few drops of lemon juice, but without water, for 45 minutes.

Chicory a la Mornay

Braise some chicory heads, drain them, and add 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) Mornay sauce to the cooking juices. Coat an ovenproof dish with this sauce and put the chicory in the dish. Cover with more sauce, sprinkle with grated cheese and then lightly with melted butter, and brown in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F, gas 9).

Chicory au gratin

Braise some chicory heads and drain them thoroughly. Arrange them in a gratin dish that has been buttered and sprinkled with grated cheese (Comte, Gruyere, Parmesan or even dried Edam). Sprinkle the chicory with more grated cheese and melted butter, then brown in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F, gas 9)

Chicory fritots

Braise some chicory heads, keeping them fairly firm, then drain thoroughly and leave to cool. Cut them into quarters and steep for 1 hour in olive oil containing some lemon juice and pepper. Drain, dip in batter and deep fry in very hot oil (180 °C, 350 °F. When the fritters have turned golden, remove sprinkle with fine salt and serve with fried parsley.

Chicory puree

Braise some chicory until very soft, then rub through a sieve or use blender to obtain a puree. Butter or cream can be added (reduce the cream a little first) as can white sauce use 300 ml (½ pint, 1 ¼ cups) sauce per 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) puree. The puree can be browned in a hot oven if desired.

Chicory salad a la flamande

Wash and wipe some fresh chicory. Separate the leaves and divide them in half, trimming if necessary. Wipe thoroughly. Sprinkle lightly with lemon juice to prevent discoloration. Add some diced cooked beetroot (red beet) and garnish with peeled orange quarters. Season with a mustard vinaigrette and sprinkle with chopped hard boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolk and chopped chives.

Chicory with Ham

Braise some chicory heads. Prepare some very thick white sauce (enough for 2-4 tablespoons per head) and add 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) grated Gruere cheese per 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) sauce. Drain the chicory heads, wrap each in a slice of Paris ham and arrange side by side in a buttered gratin dish. Cover with the hot white sauce, sprinkle with grated Gruyere cheese and dot with butter. Brown in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F, gas 9).

Chicory with noisette butter

Braise some chicory heads, drain them and put them in a serving dish. Add 20 g (¾ oz, 1 ½ tablespoon) butter to the cooking juices and reduce until they turn brown. Sprinkle the chicory with the noisette butter.

Scallop and chicory cassolettes

Cut 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) chicory into 1 cm (½ in) segments, wash, drain and sprinkle with lemon juice. Season with salt and sugar, and 2 tablespoon groundnut (peanut) oil and fry for 7-8 minutes in butter without covering the pan. Shell and trim some scallops, put them in a frying pan, season with salt, pepper and a little cayenne, and brown (3-4 minutes) keeping them fairly soft. Arrange them in cassolettes on top of the chicory. Reduce 3 tablespoons port by two thirds, add the juice of a lemon and 50 g (2 oz. 4 tablespoons) butter cut into pieces, then whisk into an emulsion. Add a little lemon zest, pour over the scallops and serve.

CHIFFONNADE A preparation of sorrel, chicory lettuce or other leaves, cut into even shreds or strips. Cutting en chiffonnade in the term for shredding, green leaves. The leaves may be cut very finely or into wider strips as required for the recipe. A chiffonnade may be softened in butter garnish moistened with stock, milk or cream and used as a garnish for soup. Lettuce chiffonnade may be used to garnish cold bors d'oeuvre.

RECIPES

Chiffonnade of chicory with cream

Wash and dry the chicory (endive) and remove the small bitter cone situated at the root. Cut the leaves into thin strips 1 cm (½ in) wide. Melt some butter in a shallow frying pan and add the chicory use 40-50 g (1 ½ -- 2 oz, 3-4 tablespoons) butter for each 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) chicory. Stir and add ½ teaspoon sugar, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, and salt and pepper. Cover the pan and cook gently for 30-35 minutes. Stir in 100-150 ml (4-5 fl oz ½-¾ cup) double (heavy) cream and heat quickly. Serve very hot.

Chiffonnade of cooked lettuce

Prepare in the same way as chiffonnade of raw lettuce. Melt some butter in a shallow frying pan and add the lettuce chiffonnade and some salt use 40 g (1 ½ oz. 3 tablespoons) butter per 500 g (18 oz.) lettuce leaves. Cook gently without a lid until all the vegetable juice from the lettuce has evaporated. Then add 2 tablespoons double (heavy) cream and reheat.

Chiffonnade of raw lettuce

Wash and dry some lettuce leaves, discarding the coarser leaves. Roll up several leaves and cut each roll into very thin strips. Toss in vinaigrette if it is to be used as a garnish for meat, fish or cold shellfish. It may also be mixed with green walnuts, a julienne of ham, meat or cold chicken and Emmental cheese, and then sprinkled with vinaigrette and chopped herbs.

CHILL To cool an item of food, a drink or a dish quickly. Ice cream is chilled by surrounding it with crushed ice or by placing in the freezer so that it sets. Jellies, cold mousses and terrines are chilled in the coldest part of the refrigerator prior to serving. When preparing some foods, such as certain forcemeats, the ingredients should be chilled when mixed by placing them in a bowl over crushed ice.

Champagne is chilled by placing the bottle in a bucket of crushed ice and water (never in the refrigerator). A cocktail is chilled by shaking it with ice in a cocktail shaker or pouring the mixture over crushed ice.

CHILLI Related to the pepper (sweet or bell pepper) this is a hot fruit of the capsicum family generally referred to as a spice but, depending on type, also used as a vegetable. Native to South America, there is now a vast array of different chillies, ranging from mild varieties to extremely fiery examples, and a large number of types are found in Mexico and the West Indies. Some traditional West Indian varieties have colourful names, for example zozio pepper, meaning parrot's tongue. Chinese lantern pepper and seven courts bouillonn pepper.

Portuguese and Spanish explorers introduced chilli peppers to Asia, they were then taken to the Middle East, Africa and Europe. Harissa, a chilli sauce used in North African cooking, is known particularly as a seasoning for couscous. Pickled chillies are often served whole in the Middle East. Several kinds of chillies are used in Indian cooking fresh or dried as chilli powder, and India is one of the world's foremost chilli producers. Sichuan cuisine, in China makes use of small hot chillies many Indonesian and Thai dishes are also spiced with small, hot chillies.

In Europe, the cooking of Spain and Portugal includes mild and hot chillies, dried chillies feature in Italian dishes and fresh chillies are used in some regional Italian specialities.

Chilli products include dried chillies, whole or crushed in flakes, chilli powder, of which there are different types, chilli sauces, chilli paste, and chilli oil (oil infused with chillies).

Mild and sweet to fiercely hot One of the best known scales for grading the heat of chillies is the Scovilla heat scale, devised in the United States of America early in the last century and based on taste tests for detecting capsaicin, the substance that gives the chillies their hot flavour. The score ranges from units for sweet peppers to 120,000 units or more for some of the very hot African chillies. In terms of buying chillies for home use, most stores indicate whether they are mild, hot or very hot, it is a good idea to remember that some of the very small chillies are extremely hot. Small and dark green are usually good indicators of a hot flavour. There are of course, also large and/or red varieties with a powerful flavour.

Individual taste also varies and those who are used to eating chillies do not notice the heat, so they require more for an intense flavour. Those who do not eat chillies often should take care when making authentic dishes from areas where chillies are widely used, such as Mexico and India, as the amount suggested may be far too hot for the uninitiated palate. Try chillies and their products sparingly at first until acquainted with their flavour.

Types of chillies. Chillies range in colour from pale creamy white through green, yellow, orange, red to black. They may be tiny or large and long, similar to long sweet peppers. As for all ingredients, as their international popularity has grown and their use become more varied, many plants, have been crossed to provide a broader range. The following examples give some indication of the choice, but there are literally hundreds used in cooking around the world.

Preparing chillies Chillies may be used whole (then removed from the dish before serving for a mild flavour) or cut up. Large mild chillies can be stuffed or prepared in other ways as a vegetable. The seeds inside chillies are extremely hot and should be removed unless a fiery result be required. Capsaicin is the alkaloid substance that gives chillies their hot flavour it is also a severe irritant which can burn the skin, particularly delicate areas around the eyes and nails or any cuts. Capsacin is particularly concentrated in the white fibrous core and path, and the seeds. When rinsed under running water, hot chillies give off a pepper gas. Always wash your hands thoroughly after preparing chillies and avoid touching your eyes, alternatively, use disposable plastic gloves to prepare chillies.

CHILI CON CARNE A Mexican dish that is popular throughout the United States it was a typical dish in the cookery of the pioneers of Texas. The name means literally chili peppers with meat, and the authentic dish is a ragout of minced (ground) or cubed beef cooked with thinly sliced onions and seasoned with chili peppers, powdered cumin and other spices. Red kidney beans are sometimes added during the cooking although purists object to them.

CHILLI POWDER A hot spice prepared from ground dried red chillies and varying in intensity. The type of chillies are not usually specified and the spice is usually hot some products are labelled as hot chilli powder indicating that they are extremely hot. Some types of chilli powder include other spices of ingredients, for example, chili powder or seasoning used for chilli con carne may be flavoured with cumin, garlic and oregano.

CHIMAY ALA The name of various preparations dedicated to the Princes of Chimay (formerly Madame Tallien) who was a regular guest at the sumptuous dinners given by the Vicomte de Barras under the Directory. Chicken a la chimay is a dish of lightly braised chicken stuffed with buttered noodles and foremeat, coated with gravy and served with noodles and bunches of asparagus tips. Hard boiled or soft boiled eggs a la chimay are prepared with mushrooms and cooked au gratin.

RECIPE

Hard boiled eggs a la Chimay

Cut some hard boiled (hard cooked) eggs in half lengthways and remove the yolks. Pound the yolks in a mortar with an equal amount of very dry mushroom duxelles. Fill the white with the mixture and arrange them in a buttered ovenproof dish. Coat with Mornay sauce and sprinkle with grated Gruyere cheese. Moistn with melted butter and bake for a few minutes in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F gas 9)

CHINESE ARTICHOKE A plant cultivated for its edible tubers. Originating in Japan, this delicate vegetable was brought to France by the agronomist Paileux and first cultivated in 1882 at Crosne. Chinese artichokes taste similar to Jerusalem artichokes, once cleaned and blanched, they may be fried, cooked slowly in butter or prepared like Jerusalem artichokes. The Chinese artichoke was a very popular exotic vegetable between 1890 and 1920, but since then its popularity has declined, despite its delicate flavour, because it dried out quickly and takes a long time to peel.

RECIPE

Preparation of Chinese artichokes

Instead of peeling with a vegetable peeler, place the Chinese artichokes in a strong linen cloth with a handful of sea salt and shake them vigorously. Wash them and remove all the remaining skin. Alternatively they may be scrubbed and cooked in their skins. Blanch slightly in slated water, then cook them slowly in butter in a pan with the lid on, without letting them colour. Prepared in this way. Chinese artichokes may be served as a vegetable or as a garnish for roasts. They may also be dressed with cream, herbs or gravy.

CHINESE CABBAGE Of the numerous varieties of Chinese cabbage, two are readily available in most supermarkets pak choi (bok choy) and pe-tsai. Example of these are shown in the illustration of vegetables in the cabbage family accompanying the entry on Cabbage.

Pak choi does not form a heart its white and fleshy leaf stalks somewhat resemble celery sticks and it has bright green leaves. The elongated leaves have smooth edges and are 20-50 cm (8-20in) in long. Pak choi is stir-fried or added to soups and casseroles.

The popular Chinese cabbage or Chinese leaves known as pe-tsai, resembles a large cos lettuce, the heart reaches 40-50 cm (16-20 in) and its irregularly serrated leaves extend to the base of their stalks. It is eaten raw and finely shredded in salads poached or stir fried.

In Chinese cookery, stir-fried or braised cabbage is often part of composite dishes of fish and shellfish, poultry or meat. The cabbage may also be used in mixed vegetable dishes or in vegetarian dishes. The leaves may be filled, folded into bundles or rolled and steamed. They are sometimes, used as scoops for eating finely cut, full flavoured cooked mixtures, such as minced poultry, pigeon or meat.

RECIPE

Chinese cabbage a la pekinoise

Remove the outer leaves from a Chinese cabbage and slice the heart into 10 cm (4 in) strips. Cut some very thin slices of ham to the same length and finely slice 5 or 6 spring onions (scallions) and their stems. Heat 2 tablespoons oil in a shallow frying pan, add the cabbage and brown for 2-3 minutes. Arrange the pieces of cabbage in a steaming basket, add the sliced onion and a little fine salt, and steam for 30 minutes. Then insert the slices of ham between the pieces of cabbage and steam for a further 4-5 minutes. Serve the cabbage and ham together.

Sichuan style Chinese cabbage

Clean a Chinese cabbage and cut it into pieces about 3 cm (1 ¼ in) long. Wash, blanch, cool and drain. Heat 3 tablespoons oil in a frying pan. Chop a large garlic clove and lightly brown it in the oil. Add the cabbage a little Sichuan pepper and some salt, stir well and leave to cook for 1 minute. Then add 1 teaspoon caster (superfine) sugar and stir well for 1 minute. Adjust the seasoning and serve very hot.

CHINOIS A conical strainer with a handle. There are various models the chinois with a metallic mesh is used for straining broths, sauces, fine creams, syrups and jellies, which need to be very smooth, the perforated tinplate chinois is used to strain thick sauces, which are pressed through with a pestle to remove the lumps.

CHINOIS CONFIT The French name for a small bitter Chinese orange, macerated in several syrups of increasing concentration then drained and crystallized. The tree that produces this fruit is native to China, but grows wild in Sicily. The chinois is usually green, as it is picked before it is ripe, when it is considered to be at its best for crystallization.

CHINON A mainly red AOC wine of the Loire/They are extremely over the left bank and to the banks of the Vienne, its tributary, around the ruins of the castle where Joan of Arc came to find the Dauphin and encouraged him to kick the English out of France. Later, Rabelais, whose family had a vineyard at the foot of the citadel, sang the praises of the wine of Chinon. He called it this good Breton wine that does not grow in Brittany, because chinon is made from the Cabernet Franc grape, known locally as the Breton.

Fuller styles of Chinon with potential for long term ageing are produced mainly on the tuffeau limestone slopes of Cravant les Coteaux, while lighter wines are produced from vines grown on the sandy, gravelly soils near the river.

CHINONAISE, ALA In classic French cookery, a garnish for large joints of meat comprising potatoes sprinkled with chopped parsley and small balls of cabbage stuffed with sausage meat and braised.

In the region of Chinon, hare and lamprey, lightly browned in walnut oil, are also described as a la chinonaise.

CHIPOLATA A small fresh sausage, about 2 cm ($\frac{3}{4}$ in) in diameter, made with medium or coarsely chopped sausage meat enclosed in a natural casing or a synthetic one. Chipolatas are eaten fried or grilled. The name comes from the Italian word cipolla and was originally applied to a stew made with onions and small sausages.

CHIPOLATA, A LA A garnish for game, braised poultry, meat or eggs consisting of braised chestnuts, glazed small onions, glazed carrots, sauteed mushrooms, blanched and lightly fried strips of bacon and fried chipolatas. The garnish may be bound with reduced Madeira sauce.

In classic French cookery, the term describes a pudding based on pig's kidney, forcemeat and small sausages.

RECIPE

pudding a la chipolata

Stone (pit) 12 Agen prunes and steep for 1 hour in red wine. Brown a thinly sliced pig's kidney a chopped veal. Flavour with mixed spice and salt. Cook 4 tablespoons large macaroni until al dente. Grease and flour a fine cloth. Mix the kidney, macaroni, forcemeat and prunes with 16 chipolatas and tie the mixture very tightly in the cloth. Poach for 1 hour in either a chicken broth or a very concentrated stock. Untie the pudding and serve hot with a charcutiere sauce.

CHIPS (FRENCH FRIES) Fingers of potatoes, deep fried until crisp and golden outside, tender inside. Chips are thicker than French fries, which are cut in thin sticks. American potato chips are called crisps in Britain.

Good chips are cooked in very hot, high quality oil or fat, drained when tender and very lightly browned, then fried very briefly a second time. This makes the chips crisps and slightly puffy.

CHIQUE A large bonbon made of cooked sugar filled with almonds and flavoured with mint, aniseed or lemon. Chiques from Montluçon and Allauch are famous.

CHIQUETER A French culinary term, meaning to indent the edges of vol-au-vent cases, pies and cheese straws with a small knife. This helps them to swell during cooking and is decorative.

CHIROUBLES One of the Beaujolais regional wines smooth, light and fruity, this is possibly the one that is the most enjoyable when drunk young and cool.

CHIROUBLES One of the Beaujolais regional wines smooth, light and fruity, this is possibly the one that is the most enjoyable when drunk young, and cool.

CHIVES An alliaceous plant, related to the spring onion (scallions) that produces small elongated bulbs and clumps of tubular green leaves. The leaves are chopped and used for seasoning salads and omelettes.

CHIVRY A flavoured butter containing herbs that may be used with cold hors d'oeuvre. It is also used to flavour chivry sauces. The chivry sauce served with fish is made with a fish stock, while the sauce served with poached chicken or soft boiled (soft cooked) or poached eggs is prepared with a chicken veloute.

RECIPES

Chicken a la chivry

Poach a chicken in a white stock. Slowly cook some green asparagus tips in butter and prepare some green peas a la franchise. Cook some artichoke hearts in a court bouillon and use half of them to garnish the asparagus tips and the other half to garnish the peas. Arrange the vegetables around the chicken and coat with chivry sauce.

Chivry butter

To prepare about 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) butter use 150 g (5 oz. 2 cups) mixed parsley, tarragon, chervil, chives and, if possible, burnet, and 2 tablespoons chopped shallot. Blanch the mixture for 3 minutes in boiling water, drain, cool immediately in cold water and wipe dry. Chop very finely (or pound in a mortar) add 200 g (7 oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) butter, season with salt and pepper and press through a fine sieve.

Chivry sauce for eggs and poultry

Put 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) dry white wine. 1 teaspoon finely chopped shallot and 1 tablespoon chopped chervil and tarragon in a small saucepan. Reduce by half. Add 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ cups) chicken veloute and reduce by a third. Finally add 2 tablespoons chivry butter and press, through a fine sieve.

Soft boiled or poached eggs a la chivry

Fry some round croutons and place a soft boiled (soft-cooked) or poached egg on each. Garnish with asparagus tips that have been slowly cooked in butter and coat with chivry sauce.

CHLODNIK An iced soup of Polish origin, common to several Slavonic countries. The word literally means refreshment. The soup is made with sorrel beetroot (red beet) leaves and cucumber puree. It is sometimes thickened with wheat semolina, flavoured fennel and tarragon, and garnished with various ingredients, such as slices of hard boiled eggs, crayfish and fresh diced cucumber.

CHOCOLATE Essentially a mixture of cocoa and sugar, to which milk, honey, dried fruits or other products may be added.

The first French chocolate factory was situated in Bayonne, where a guild of chocolate makers had existed since 1761. The city exported chocolate to Spain and Paris, and its trade calendar of 1822 quotes more than 20 prestigious firms.

In 1778 the first hydraulic machine for crushing and mixing the chocolate paste appeared in France, and in 1819 Pelletier built the first factory to use steam. It was at about this time that the famous family businesses were set up in Europe. Van Houten in the Netherlands (1815). J. Van Houten discovered a method of solubilization in 1828. Cadbury and Rowntree in England and Suchard, Nestle, Lindt and Kohler in Switzerland. Docteur Peter, a Swiss, was responsible for the invention of milk chocolate in 1818. After 1885, the chocolate industry was developed throughout the world.

Chocolate is not only used in confectionery but is also an essential ingredient of numerous cakes, pastries and desserts.

Soon after its introduction into France, the medical profession considered chocolate to be a panacea for fevers and chest or stomach illnesses. Cocoa was registered in the codex in 1758 and the confectioners of the 18th and 19th centuries gladly became apothecaries, chocolate was believed to have medicinal qualities. Chocolates were sold by Debauxe and others of his profession. These included pungatives, cough mixtures, aids to digestion, aids to put on weight antispasmodics, tonics and carminatives. The expression health chocolate, for the mixture containing only sugar and cocoa, remained common until the beginning of the 20th century.

Chocolate products Apart from the wide variety of confectionery and chocolate snack products, there are also preparations intended for use in cooking.

- Cocoa powder. This is normally unsweetened. It is strongly flavoured and widely used in cooking, particularly in baking, as well as for flavouring drinks.
- Drinking Chocolate This is a mixture of sugar and cocoa. Its main use is for flavouring drinks. It is used in some baking recipes, but its sugar content makes it unsuitable as a direct substitute for cocoa powder its flavour is also milder.
- Chocolate Flavoured Care covering. These are inexpensive products with a low cocoa butter content and containing a high proportion of vegetable fat. They are manufactured to melt easily and successfully, but they have an inferior flavour and are not recommended for use in good quality recipe.
- Types of chocolate
- Chocolate converture. This is high quality plain or bitter chocolate for use in cooking and preparing confectionery. It has a high cocoa butter content and is suitable for use in gâteaux, mousses and chocolate icing (frosting) or sauces.
- Plain or Bitter Dessert Chocolate (semisweet or bittersweet) This is dark in colour and lightly sweetened. There are many types of different quality, some less sweet and more bitter than others.
- Mix Chocolate. This is sweeter and has milk solids added. Again, the types and quality vary.
- White Chocolate. This is available in varying qualities. It is made from sweetened pale cocoa butter.

The quality of chocolate The quality of chocolate depends both on the quality of the raw materials and on the care taken at the different stages of manufacture roasting and crushing the cocoa beans and mixing the cocoa paste or mass with sugar and possibly milk.

A good chocolate is shiny brown, breaks cleanly and is free of lumps, tiny burst bubbles and white specks. It melts on the tongue like butter, has a true flavour of chocolate rather than of cocoa and is neither greasy nor sticky.

The cocoa butter content and price are indicators of quality. Inferior chocolate may contain a small proportion of cocoa butter and other vegetable fats.

For cakes and desserts, it is best to choose a dessert chocolate with a high cocoa content, the flavour may be intensified by adding unsweetened cocoa. For coating decoration, icing or making fondants, chocolate converture is used.

Tempering chocolate This different fats in cocoa butter melt at different temperatures. To achieve a smooth, glossy result some types of chocolate with a high cocoa butter content have to be tempered before use. This involves heating and cooling specific temperatures, then working the chocolate with a palette knife or spatula to ensure that the fats are thoroughly combined. Chocolate converture has to be tempered before use.

Classic chocolate dishes. The basis of chocolate cakes is often a sponge cake mixture, a Genoese cake mixture or a meringue. Sachertorte, Doboschtorie and Black Forest gâteau bear witness to the quality of chocolate patisserie in Germany and Austria. Italy is renowned for the traditional New Year's Eve cake, the pan pepato of Ferrara a brioche flavoured with cocoa, sweetened with honey, enriched with almonds and lemon zest, coated with chocolate and decorated with sweets and Sicilian cassata. In France, the great classics are the Queen of Sheba the Yule log, the dacquoise, marble cake paves and the various desserts that are decorated with chocolate vermicelli or grated chocolate also be added to confectioner's custards and it may be mixed with butter and used as a filling, for example in eclairs and choux. It may also be used in the sauce that coats profiteroles, Belle-Helene fruits, puddings, brioches or iced desserts.

Chocolate is a basic flavoring for ices, ices-cream desserts and cooked custards. It is also used in various charlottes, souffles and mousses.

When making biscuits it may be used as a filling or a coating and in Viennese baking it is used to make small chocolate flavoured loaves.

Chocolate is used extensively in confectionery for making a great variety of bouchees, truffles, chocolate and Eastern eggs.

The use of chocolate in savoury cookery is less well known. Chocolate was commonly used by the Aztecs and one of the great dishes of Mexican cookery is still mole poblano de guajolote. In 1809, Baron Brisse suggested cooking scoter with chocolate. In Spain, two dishes use bitter chocolate in a sauce, calves tongue and langouste, specialities of Aragon. Finally, in Sicily, there is a popular recipe for jugged hare with chocolate.

RECIPES

Bacchus

Two days in advance, prepare some macerated raisins, wash 75g (3 oz. 2/3 cup) Californian raisins or sultanas (golden raisins) in lukewarm water changing the water several times. Soak for 4 minutes, then drain and place in a non stick saucepan. Cook gently, stirring until the raisins are hot. Add a small liqueur glass of rum and flammable white rotating the saucepan. When the raisins have coloured slightly, remove from the heat, then transfer to a dish. Cover and leave to macerate for 2 days.

Make two meringue bases using 6 egg whites and 100 g (4 oz ¾ cup) icing (confectioner's) sugar, whisked into a soft meringue. Fold in 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) ground almonds and bake the mixture in a Swiss roll tin (jelly roll pan) Leave to cool in the tin. Make a chocolate sponge cake base and whipped chocolate ganache. Prepare a syrup with equal quantities of water and granulated sugar flavoured with a little rum.

Saturate the chocolate sponge with this syrup. Add two thirds of the raisins to the ganache. Assemble the cake, starting with a layer of the almond base, then add a layer of ganache with raisins, chocolate sponge, another layer of ganache and, finally a second layer of the almond base. Decorate the top with a few raisins. Glaze the whole cake with pouring ganache. Place in the refrigerator until set. Serve with creme anglaise and any remaining macerated raisins.

Chocolate cake

Separate 3 eggs. Add 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) aster (superfine) sugar to the yolks and beat until the mixture is pale, thick and foamy.

Break 150 g (5 oz. 5 squares) bitter (bittersweet) chocolate into small pieces in a saucepan. Heat it gently with 4 tablespoons milk in a bain marie with the lid on.

Blend 125 g (4 1/2 oz. 1/2 cup) softened butter with the chocolate, stir until it has melted and become smooth and then pour the chocolate mixture into a warm mixing bowl. Immediately add the egg yolk mixture and stir briskly. In a clean bowl, whisk the egg whites until stiff. Add 125 g (4 ½, oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour to the chocolate mixture and stir until combined. Then quickly fold in the whisked egg whites.

Pour the mixture into a buttered mango mould and bake in a preheated oven at 190 °C(375 °F, gas 5) for about 45 minutes.

Meanwhile, prepare a caramel with 2 tablespoons sugar, 1 tablespoon water and 1 tablespoon vinegar. Roll 10 walnuts in the caramel and set aside on oiled plate.

When the cake is cooked, leave it to cool in its mould and prepare a chocolate icing (frosting) Turn out the cold cake on to a rack over a dish. Pour the icing over the cake and spread it over the top and sides with a palette knife. Decorate with the walnuts.

Chocolate Genosse sponge

Melt 65 g (2 ½ oz. 5 tablespoons) butter in a bain marie and use part of it to butter a Genoese mould.

In a heartproof bowl, mix 75 g (3 oz. 6 tablespoons) caster (superfine) sugar with an equal quantity of cocoa and 4 eggs. Place over a saucepan of hot, not boiling water or in a bain marie, and whisk until the mixture is greatly increased in volume and thick. Remove from the heat or bain marie and continue to whisk until completely cool (the mixture should run off the whisk in a ribbon).

Fold in 125 g (4 ½ oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour and the remaining melted butter. Pour into the mould and cook in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for 25 minutes.

Turn the cake out on to a rack and leave it to cool. Cut the cake horizontally in half. Sandwich the layers of cake together with chocolate butter cream or whipped cream. The outside may be spread with cream and coated with toasted chopped almonds.

Chocolate ice cream

Beat 4 egg yolks and 200 g (7 oz. ¾ cup) caster (superfine) sugar, together until pale and thick. Melt 250 g (9 oz. 1 ½ cups) grated bitter (bittersweet) chocolate in a covered pan with 200 ml (7 ft. oz ¾ cup) water. Add 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 ½ cups) boiling milk to the chocolate and stir well until the mixture is completely smooth. Pour the boiling chocolate mixture over the egg yolk mixture and cook over a very gentle heat until the custard coats the spoon. Immediately dip this saucepan in cold water to prevent further cooking and continue to beat until the cream is lukewarm. Stir it occasionally until it is completely cold. Complete the ice cream in the usual way.

For a richer ice cream, replace 200 ml (7 ft. oz. ¾ cup) of the milk with the same volume of double (heavy) cream, and use 10 egg yolks instead of 8.

Chocolate icing

Sift 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) icing (confectioner's) sugar. Melt 125 g (4 ½ oz) bitter (bittersweet) chocolate in a bain marie, working it with a wooden spoon. Add the sifted icing, sugar, then 65 g (2 1/1 oz. 5 tablespoons) butter. When the mixture is completely smooth, add 40 g (1 ½ oz, 3 tablespoons) caster (superfine) sugar and 1 tablespoon double (heavy) cream. Stir until smooth, then remove at once from the heat.

CHOCOLATE A hot or cold drink made by mixing chocolate or cocoa in water or milk, or mixture of both.

It was in the form of a drink that chocolate was discovered in Mexico and then introduced into Europe by the Spanish. The Aztecs prepared a highly spiced beverage with cocoa beans that were roasted, pounded in a mortar and mixed and flavoured with pepper, chills, vanilla annatto and sometimes honey and dried flowers. The emperor Montezuma had zocoatl of different colours served in gold cups at the end of meals. The people also consumed large quantities of chocolate in the form of a thick paste, often thickened with cornflour.

The Jesuits were the first to improve this exotic product in order to make a profit from it. Chocolate, at this time was always prepared with water, but it was very sweet and flavoured with vanilla strengthened with ambergris and musk. Soon chocolate became fashionable among Spanish high society.

In 1615, Ann of Austria introduced this novelty to the French court and her maids of honour circulated the recipes. Even under Louis XIV, who had little sympathy for his queen liking for his drink, chocolate was still regarded as a curiosity. It was in England that it became customary to prepare it with milk and even to add Madeira and beaten eggs. The Church did not consider that chocolate broke the fast (although doctors thought it more nourishing than beef and mutton) and the days of Lent became already sweetened. Society ladies had the drink served in church during the sermons. The Marquise de Sevigne wrote. The day before yesterday. I took some chocolate to digest my dinner in order to sup well, and I took some yesterday evening so as to nourish myself well and be able to fast until evening that is why I find it pleasant because it acts according to the purpose.

RECIPES

Foamy chocolate

For 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) milk, allow 200-250 g (7-9 oz. 7-9 squares) chocolate and 1 tablespoon vanilla floured sugar or a pinch of powdered cinnamon. Break the chocolate into the chocolate begins to soften, add the chosen flavouring together with a small cup of boiling milk. Beat the chocolate thoroughly with a whisk. Then gradually pour in the remaining milk. Warm over a gentle heat, whisking at all the time to make the chocolate foamy. For a richer drink. 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) single (light) cream may be added. The vanilla or cinnamon may be replaced by 1 tablespoon instant coffee.

Ice chocolate

Prepare a foamy chocolate as in the recipe above, but reduce the quantity of chocolate to 125-150 g (4 $\frac{1}{2}$ - 5 oz. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ - 5 squares) and add 2-3 tablespoons caster (superfine) sugar. Allow the chocolate to cool completely and then put it in a blender, adding crushed ice. Serve immediately.

Viennese chocolate

Melt 200 g (7 oz. 7 squares) chocolate in a bain marie with a cup of milk. Stir, while letting it come to the boil slowly (about 10 minutes). Heat 750 ml (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pint, 3 $\frac{1}{4}$ cups) milk with 1 tablespoon sugar. Pour it into a saucepan and whisk for 5 minutes. Make a Chantilly cream by whisking 5 tablespoons double (heavy) cream with 2 tablespoons icing (confectioner's) sugar and flavour with vanilla. Pour the chocolate into cups and top each with a dome of Chantilly cream.

CHOCOLATE POT A tall vessel for serving hot chocolate. It is often shaped like a truncated cone or like a jug, with a spout and a horizontal wooden handle. The chocolate pot has a lid pierced with a hole for a beater to pass through to make the chocolate foam. The pot may be made of silver plated metal, solid silver, porcelain or earthenware. The first models, which came from Spain with Maria Theresa of Austria, appeared in France in the reign of Louis XIV.

CHOCOLATES Confectionery made from chocolate or covered in chocolate. There are many different types of filled chocolate, the filling may consist of coloured and flavoured fondant cream, praline, almond paste, soft caramel, nougat, liqueur or liqueur soaked fruit. The chocolate coating is very liquid when hot and rich in cocoa butter. In the case of liqueurs, these are first poured into starch moulds to crystallize, the liqueur sweets are then removed from the starch and carefully brushed before being coated. Fruit, such as cherries in brandy, are first dipped in fondant and then coated in chocolate after about two weeks, the moisture from the cherry causes the fondant layer to liquefy, producing a cherry liqueur.

The coating for moulded chocolates is poured into moulds, which are immediately turned over, thereby emptying most of the chocolate and leaving only a thin film which forms the outside of the chocolate. The filling is then poured into the mould and allowed to set. Finally, the chocolates are sealed with chocolate coating which becomes the base.

CHOCOLATE TRUFFLE Confectionery made of chocolate melted with butter or cream, sugar and sometimes eggs. The truffles are flavoured with brandy, rum, whisky, vanilla, cinnamon or coffee and shaped into balls, which are coated with chocolate or rolled in cocoa.

Chocolate truffles, which keep only for a short time, are traditionally given at Christmas in France. They are a good accompaniment to coffee. Muscadines are long truffles, dipped in chocolate, then sprinkled with icing (confectioner's) sugar. Chambéry truffles, or truffettes, a speciality of the town, are made of praline mixed with chocolate, fondant icing and butter, then coated with cocoa and sugar or rolled in grated chocolate.

RECIPES

Chocolate truffles with butter

To make 20 truffles, melt in a bain marie 250 g (9 oz. 9 squares) bitter (bittersweet) chocolate with 1 tablespoon milk. When the mixture is very smooth, add 100 g (4 oz ½ cup) butter cut into small pieces and mix well. Blend in 2 egg yolks, then 3 tablespoons double (heavy) cream and 125 g (4 ½ oz. 1 cup) icing (confectioner's) sugar. Leave in the refrigerator for 25 hours. Shape the truffles rapidly, spooning out the paste with a teaspoon and rolling it into walnut sized balls on a marble surface with the palm of the hand. Drop them one by one into a bowl containing 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) unsweetened cocoa, twisting the bowl to coat the truffles with cocoa. Store in a cool place.

Chocolate truffles with cream

Melt 300 g (11 oz 11 squares) bitter (bittersweet) chocolate and 75 g (3 oz. ¾ cup) pure cocoa with 120 ml (4 ½ fl. oz. ½ cup) strong coffee in a bain marie. Mix well. Heat 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) double (heavy) cream and as soon as it starts to boil, mix with the chocolate paste. Remove from the heat and leave for a few hours in a cool place. Pipe into small balls on foil, leave in a cool place for 1 ½ hours then roll in pure cocoa.

Truffles to paprika

Melt 150 g (5 oz, 5 squares) bitter (bittersweet) chocolate. Add 175 ml (6 fl. oz. ¾ cups) boiling whipping cream and mix well. Leave to cool, finely chop 40 g (1 ½ oz 3 tablespoons) prunes in Armagnac and incorporate into the paste. Shape into small balls and roll in a mixture of half unsweetened cocoa, half mild paprika. Store in a cold place.

CHOESELS A speciality of Belgian cocokery consisting of a ragout made with various kinds of meat and offal (variety meats) especially beef pancreas simmered with onions and beer.

RECIPE

Choesels a la bruxelloise

Clean and blanch a choice calf's sweetbread, cool it under a press and cut it into thin slices. Cut an oxtail into pieces. Clean a heifer's kidney and cut it into pieces. Peel and finely slice 100 g (4 oz. 1 ½ cups) onions. Heat 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) clarified beef dripping in a frying pan, add the pieces of oxtail and sweetbread, and brown gently for 45 minutes. Then add 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) breast of veal cut into even sized pieces, together with the thinly sliced onions. Brown again, still stirring for 30 minutes. Add the pieces of kidney. When they have stiffened, add 300 ml (1/2 pint 1 ¼ cups) lambic (belgian beer) a bouquet garni salt and a pinch of cayenne. Cook very gently for 30 minutes. Finally add a bottle of lambic and 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) mushroom stock to the choesels.

CHOISEUL A preparation of poached sole or fillets of sole coated with a white wine sauce containing a julienne of blanched truffles.

CHOISY Any of various preparations containing lettuce. The Choisy garnish for meat (tourmedos steak, veal chops or rib of veal) combines chateau potatoes with braised lettuce. Choisy omelette is filled with a creamed lettuce chiffonade and surrounded by a thin border of cream sauce. Sole Choisy is poached, coated with white wine sauce and garnished with julienne of lettuce and mushrooms. Potage Choisy is a cream of lettuce soup.

CHOLENT A Jewish stew containing beans and kosher beef or chicken, traditionally prepared in a sealed pot and cooked in ashes. The name is derived from the Hebrew word for warm. Does

CHOP The technique of cutting food into very small pieces, using either a knife or a hand chopper or food processor. The resulting food is cut into small pieces, fairly even in size and the texture varies from very coarse to very fine, depending on requirements. The French term baçage can also describe food that has been chopped, although the more common French word is hachis.

CHOP. Also known as a cutlet. A small cut of meat comprising a rib bone and the meat attached to it. The animal whose meat is sold by butchers normally have 13 pairs of ribs, commonly called ribs for beef, chops or cutlets in veal and lamb, chops to pork and cutlets or noisettes in stag or venison.

Beef – The rib with the bone in is a prime cut, for roasting in the oven or grilling. It is marked and full of flavour and can be of various thicknesses. The back ribs, which are cut into slices entrecote style, are somewhat finer in texture, when boned, they can be roasted in the same way as boned middle rib, whose flavour is very fine.

Mutton and lamb . Best end of neck cutlets (cut from the loin with a long bone often decorated with a paper frill when serving) have lean flesh which forms a central nut surrounded by fat. The middle neck cutlets are more fatty, with meat which extends along the bone Loin chops (both Joints) do not have the long bone and the nut is joined to a band of meat with strips of fat in it, rolled up on itself.

What the French call lamb chops are lamb cutlets cut across the best end (ribs) and comprising two cutlets joined together at the bone, but cut less thick than a single one. They are also known as honeties d agneau

Pork . Loin chops from the hind loin have lean and fairly dry meat. When cut from the foreloin, they are more fleshy wider and more tender. When taken from the spare rib they are more fatty Chinese spare ribs come from the belly and are often barbecued. In wild boar, both mature and young, the cutlets can be eaten marinated and fried.

Veal. Prime and best end of neck cutlets (ribs) are lean and tender in the centre, more fatty at the edge, and can be fried or grilled, Middle neck cutlets which are firmer and more sinewy, are better fried . Loin chops are fairly wide, they are often stuffed and sometimes coated in breadcrumbs. The Parisian chop is a slice from the breast.

CHOPE A large cylindrical goblet with a handle, used for drinking beer. It appeared in France in about 1845, at the time when the great Paris brasseries were set up. The chope is made of stoneware, pottery, thick glass or sometimes copper and may be fitted with a hinged lid.

CHOPSTICKS Chopsticks are used as cooking and eating utensils in the Far East. They can be made of bamboo, lacquered wood, plastic, china or ebony and often bear simple designs or elaborate decoration. Chinese chopsticks are sometimes slightly larger than Japanese chopsticks, and the latter are tapered to pointed ends.

In the same way as etiquette is applied to the use of knives and forks, there are correct and polite methods of handling chopsticks. They must not be sucked (since they are considered to be an extension of the fingers) and the tips should be at the same level, the ends, however must never be stood on the table in order to bring them together. According to Chinese etiquette, they must be held in the middle. If they are held too high, it is considered a sign of arrogance, too low means lack of elegance. In Japan, however the higher they are held the better. Etiquette also dictates the ways in which chopsticks should be laid on the table and set aside during or at the end of a meal.

Chopsticks used in food preparation and cooking are larger and longer. Especially long ones are used for rearranging and mixing food during cooking, for example, when stir frying..

CHOP SUEY A popular Chinese style dish invented at the end of the 19 century in the United States very immigrant Chinese cooks for their American customers. It consists of a mixture of Oriental vegetables, particularly bean sprouts, sometimes accompanied by seafood or meat (such as chicken or pork)

RECIPES

Chopsuey

Prepare a julienne of young vegetables in season, such as carrot, turnip, leek, onion, peppers and courgettes (zucchini) Place them in a shallow frying pan with some oil 2 tablespoons for 500 g (18 oz, 4 ½ cups) vegetables. Stir well, and cook for 4-5 minutes, stirring frequently. During the cooking time, cut some spring onions (scallions) into small sticks. Pick over and rinse some bean sprouts and drains. Chop finely 1 small garlic clove and dice some peeled and seeded tomatoes. Add the bean sprouts to the pan, mix well and stir fry for 1 minute. Finally add the tomato, onion, garlic, pepper and 2 tablespoons soy sauce to 500 g (18 oz 4 ¼ cups) vegetables with a little salt if necessary. Mix and serve hot. This mixture may also be seasoned with 1 teaspoon sesame oil.

CHORBA A thick Arabic soup, made from pieces of lamb's tail and lambs cutlets sauteed in oil with onions and tomatoes to which coungrettes garlic thyme and bay leaves are added. This is covered with water, finished off with whole haricot beans or chick peas, and seasoned with red pepper, black pepper and saffron. Before the soap is served, macaroni or vermicelli and dried fruit is added. Similar dishes are found in the cooking of the Balkans, with the Yugoslav corbat and the Romanian or Bulgarian etobed.

CHORIZO Spanish sausage flavoured with red peppers available as two main types. The cooking variety is spain's main pork sausage and it may be smoked or plain, varying according to focal recipes, but red in appearance and yielding bright coloured juices flavoured with garlic during cooking. Sausages tied with red string are hotter than those with ordinary string.

The second type of chorizo is the cured sausage larger than the cooking sausage, this pava appear is sliced and eaten as a tapa, served uncooked on bread.

CHORON A French cook from Caen who became chef de cuisine of the famous Voisin restaurant. He invented a hot emulsified sauce to serve with grilled fish, tournedos steaks and soft boiled or practiced eggs, and also a garnish for sauteed meat consisting of noisette potatoes with artichoke heart filled with either green peas or asparagus tips in butter. During the siege of 1870, Choron served several dishes at Voisin based on elephant including elephant's trunk in chasseur sauce and elephant bourguignon.

RECIPE

Choron sauce

Dilute 200 ml (7 fl. oz. ¾ cup) bearnaise sauce with 2 tablespoons tepid tomato puree which has been well reduced and sieved. It is essential to use a very concentrated puree.

CHOU A small sweet or savoury bun, made from choux paste, eaten cold, often filled with a cream or garnish. In patisserie, choux are often used to make croquemboucbes or are filled or iced to make profiteroles,. Savoury choux, filled with savoury mixtures, such as shellfish, vegetables, cream cheese and foie gras, are served as hors d'oeuvre.

CHOULEND A kind of Jewish ragout made with braised beef. Since the rules of the Sabbath forbid fires being lit from sunset on Friday until sunset on Saturday. The prolonged slow cooking gives these dishes a remarkable flavour.

CHOUQUETTE A small unfilled chou bun sprinkled with a little granulated sugar. Made from ordinarily choux paste, chouquettes are sold at baker's and confectioner's shops.

CHOUX PASTE Although it is often referred to as choux pastry, choux is completely different from other types of pastry such as short crust, flaky puff, filo and so on. The mixture is based on a paste of flour and water, enriched with butter, then lightened with egg and by thorough beating. When cooked, the paste rises to form a crisp shell with a thin moist lining of cooked paste and a hollow centre. The paste can be baked to make small or large buns or rings. It can also be deep fried.

The first stage in making the paste is to heat the liquid and butter until the butter melts. This should be done slowly at first, without allowing the liquid to boil. When the butter has melted bring the mixture to the boil as quickly as possible. Add the sifted plain flour immediately and all at once, and remove the pan from the heat. Stir the mixture until it forms a smooth thick paste that comes away from the side of the pan in a soft ball. If the mixture is too thin, cook it briefly until thickened. Do not beat the paste at this stage or the fat will separate out slightly, making it oily. Leave the paste to cool slightly, then gradually mix in beaten eggs and beat until the mixture is smooth and glossy.

Flavouring ingredients, such as grated cheese, herbs, spring onions, a little sugar or vanilla, can be added to the paste. To make fritters or beignets, chopped or diced ingredients, such as vegetables or fruit, can be added.

Use a piping bag or spoon to shape the paste. Bake the paste at a high temperature first, so that it rises well, then reduce the temperature to allow the shell to cook. When cooked, the choux paste should be browned and crisp outside, hollow and moist inside. To prevent the cooked paste from softening.

Slit it as soon as it is removed from the oven to allow steam to escape.

Uncooked choux paste freezes well. Shape and open freeze the mixture, then pack the pieces in polythene bags when firm. Cook from frozen, allowing slightly longer. Unfilled cooked paste also freezes well, but it tends to soften, so should be placed in a hot oven for 1-2 minutes to crisp up before any filling is added.

RECIPES

Choux paste

To make about 40 small buns. 20 larger buns or eclairs, measure 250 ml (8 fl. oz, 1 cup) water or milk and water (in equal proportions) into a saucepan. Add a large pinch of salt and 65 g (2 ½ oz, 5 tablespoons) butter cut into small pieces. Add 2 teaspoons butter cut into small pieces. Add 2 teaspoons caster (superfine) sugar for sweet choux. Heat gently until the butter melts, then bring to the boil. As soon as the mixture begins to boil, take the pan off the heat, add 125 g (4 ½ oz, 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour all at once and mix quickly. Return the saucepan to the heat and cook the paste until it thickens, stirring it takes about 1 minute for the paste to leave the sides of the saucepan. Do not overcook the mixture or beat it vigorously as this will make it greasy or oily. Remove from the heat and cool slightly. Beat in 2 eggs, then 2 more eggs, one after the other, continuing to beat hard until a smooth glossy paste is obtained. Use as required.

Making choux buns or fingers

Transfer the pastry to a piping bag fitted with a plain nozzle, 1 cm (1/2 in) in diameter, and pipe small balls, 4-5 cm (1 ½ -2 in) in diameter, on to a lightly oiled baking sheet, spacing them out so they do not stick to each other as they swell during cooking. Alternatively pipe the paste into larger buns or fingers to make eclairs.

Bake choux pastries in a preheated oven at 220°C (425 °F, gas 4) and continue to cook, allowing a further 10 minutes for small buns or up to 25 minutes for large puffs. Transfer cooked choux pastries to a wire rack to cool and split them immediately to allow steam to escape, so that they stay crisp outside, but slightly moist on the inside.

Savoury Choux

Cheese puffs

Prepare a bechamel sauce using 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter, 25 g (1 oz, ¼ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour and 300 ml. (½ pint 1 ¼ cups) milk. Add 75 g (3 oz. ¾ cup) grated Gruyere or Cheddar cheese, or 50 g (2oz. ½ cup) Parmesan, a little grated nutmeg, salt and pepper . Leave to cool until lukewarm. Fill the split choux buns or finger with this mixture. Cover with foil and reheat gently in a preheated oven at 160 °C (325 °F, gas 3) As an alternative, the quantity of cheese may be reduced by half and 75 g (3 oz. ¾ cup) finely diced ham added.

Choux a la nantua

Fill some small cooled choux buns or fingers with cold crayfish mouse. Keep hem cool. They can be served with a hot natua sauce if desired.

Green vegetable puffs

Fill some small cooled choux buns or fingers with a thick puree of green peas, French beans and asparagus tips, bound with cream.

Sweet Choux

Almond choux fritters

To make about 20 fritters, use 500g (18 oz) choux paste and 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) shredded almonds. Scatter the almonds over a baking sheet and bake in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425 °F, gas 7) until golden. Mix these almonds with the choux paste. In a deep pan, heat some oil to 175 °C (345 °F) Drop teaspoonfuls of paste into the oil to make the fritters, which turn over by themselves in the oil when they are cooked (about 6 minutes) Cook them in batches of 10. Drain the fritters on paper towels and serve them hot, sprinkled with plenty of icing (confectioner's) sugar. They may be accompanied with a fruit sauce, such as apricot, cherry or raspberry.

Apple cream puffs

Fill some choux with a well blended mixture of thick apple puree and a third of its weight of confectioner's custard flavoured with Calvados. Dust the choux generously with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

Chantilly cream puffs

These are made to resemble swans. Prepare some choux paste, using the quantities in the basic recipe, and place it in a piping bag fitted with a plain 1.5 cm (3/8 in) diameter nozzle. On to a lightly oiled baking sheet, pipe 10 oval-shaped buns, each about the size of a soup spoon. Now replace the nozzle with one 4-5 mm (about ¼ in) in diameter and pipe 10 'S' shapes, 5-6 cm (2-2 ½ in) long on to the sheet. Cook the S shapes, which will be the swans necks. Following the basic recipe, allowing about 15 minutes for the S shape once the temperature is reduced and 20-25 minutes for the buns.

During this time, prepare this Chantilly cream, using 400 ml (14 ft oz. 1 ¾ cups) very cold double (heavy) cream, 100 ml (4 ft oz. 7 tablespoons) caster (superfine) sugar and 1 tablespoon vanilla sugar. Place the cream, milk and vanilla sugar in a chilled bowl and begin to whip. When the cream starts to thicken, add the caster sugar while continuing to whip. Place the cream in cool place.

Split and cool the buns. Then cut the top off each bun and cut the tops in half lengthways, they will form the swans wings. Fit the piping bag with a large diameter fluted nozzle, fill the bag with the Chantilly cream and fill the buns with it, forming a dome on each. Place a neck at one end of each bun and stick the wings into the cream on either side. Dust generously with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

Cherry cream puffs

Prepare some confecitoner's custard, flavour it with kirsch and add some stoned (pitted) well-drained cherries in syrup. Separately prepare some white fondant icing (frosting) flavoured with kirsch. Fill and decorate the choux as for coffee cream puffs.

Chiboust coffee cream puffs

Prepare enough choux paste for 12 puffs. Using a piping bag, pipe the paste into balls on a buttered baking sheet and sprinkle with shredded almonds. Cook them, leave to cool, then fill with Chiboust cream flavoured with coffee. Cool before serving so that the cream becomes firm.

Chocolate cream puffs

Prepare some confectioner's custard and flavour it with melted chocolate. Separately prepare some chocolate fondant icing (frosting) using 200 g (7 oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) fondant icing and 50 g (2 oz. $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) cocoa blended with 2 tablespoons water. Fill and decorate the choux as in the recipe for coffee choux.

Coffee cream puffs

Fill some cooked choux with confectioner's custard flavoured with coffee essence (strong black coffee). Prepare 200 g (7 oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) fondant icing (frosting), flavour it with coffee essence (or instant coffee made up with 2 tablespoons of water) and heat until it is runny. Ice the tops of the puffs with the fondant and leave to cool completely.

Pastry cream puffs

Prepare 12 choux and fill them with confectioner's custard made using 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) milk, 3 egg yolks, 50 g (2 oz. $\frac{1}{4}$ cup) caster (superfine) sugar, 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour. Flavour the custard to taste. The filled puffs may be dusted with icing (confectioner's) sugar or iced with fondant and, if desired, decorated with crystallized (candied) fruits.

Pastry cream puffs with grapes

Prepare some confectioner's custard, flavour it slightly with marc brandy and add some fresh grapes with the skins and seeds removed. Fill some choux with the custard and sprinkle them generously with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

CHRISTMAS The feast of the Nativity of Christ, some of whose customs and celebrations are taken from the pagan festival of the same date, which is officially replaced in AD 336.

Prominent among the festivities is the distribution of gifts, a custom often associated with one of the great figures of popular myth- St. Martin in Belgium, Germany and the Netherlands, St. Nicholas in the north and east of France, and Father Christmas. An ancient custom in many regions of France is for god parents to give their godchildren a cake in the shape of puppet, a swaddled infant or perhaps just a spangle. In Ardeche this cake is known as Pere Janvier. In northern France it is called cougnou (cugnot or cougnant, hersthbroden in Flemish) and consists of a brioche cake decorated with raisins and sprinkled with icing sugar. In Berry the cake is called naulet.

The custom of the village children going from house to house on Christmas Eve is a very ancient one. Good wishes and Christmas carols brought their reward, traditionally food bacon, eggs, flour, sweet candies, dried fruit and cakes. In Burgundy the cornette, a cornet shaped wafer made from cornmeal, has given its name to the annual round of visits. In Touraine, children are given the guillaumeu, a long cake split at both ends, specially made for the event.

The Christmas meal. The main celebration of Christmas centres on a special meal, although what is eaten varies from country to country. In France the traditional Christmas meal was the reveillon, a supper eaten on Christmas morning, immediately on returning from Midnight mass. The word comes from reveiller, meaning to begin a new watch after Midnight Mass. The length of the three low masses and the time taken to walk to church and back used to justify a substantial meal eaten in the early hours of Christmas morning.

Virtually throughout France, roast turkey with chestnuts has become the classic Christmas dish. In former times, different regions of France had their own specialities, a daube in Armagnac, sauerkraut and goose liver in Alsace, aligot in Auvergne, black pudding (blood sausage) in Nivernais and goose in south western France. In the southeast, a large supper was eaten before Mass, consisting of cauliflower and salt cod with raito, or perhaps snails, grey mullet with olives or omelette with artichokes and fresh pasta.

In Germany carp is the traditional Christmas dish, and in some regions carp are still fattened for Christmas from August onwards. However, the main dish today is more likely to be goose, turkey, venison, wild boar, a roast or even veal schnitzel. Some traditional foods are always eaten, particularly apples, walnuts and almonds.

In Sweden, a centuries old tradition at Christmas was marinated ling served in a white sauce with butter, potatoes, mustard and black pepper. This has been replaced by a new favorite dish, roast goose stuffed with apples and prunes and garnished with red cabbage, caramelized potatoes and cranberry sauce, dessert may be rice porridge or rice with almonds covered with cherry compote. In Norway, large roast pork chops are served with sauerkraut flavoured with cumun, while the Finns cook a ham in a rye flour pastry case. All Scandinavian countries celebrate Christmas with a sumptuous smorgasbord.

CHRISTMAS CAKE A fruit cake traditionally eaten in Britain over the Christmas period. Rich in dried fruits, almonds, spices and usually alcohol. After baking, the top and sides are spread with apricot jam, covered with a thin layer of almond paste, then coated with icing (frosting) and decorated. Glace (candied) cherries and sprigs of holly can provide a simple seasonal finishing touch.

CHRISTMAS PUDDING A British steamed fruit pudding traditionally served at Christmas and also known as plum pudding. Containing suet, breadcrumbs, flour and a high proportion of dried fruit, it is boiled or steamed for several hours and served flambéed with rum or brandy. It improves with keeping and can be stored for up to a year.

This pudding has a long recorded history. It was first made as a Christmas Eve dish of frumenty, with hulled wheat and milk. By the early medieval period, it was made with meat broth thickened with oatmeal and flavoured with eggs, currants, dried plums and spices such as mace and ginger, it had become plum porridge. Elizabethans changed the oats to breadcrumbs and added suet, ale or wine. The big change came with the invention of the floured cloth for boiling puddings. By 1675, it became a round cannonball shape, and remained so for 250 years. The Victorians replaced the dried plums with raisins, currants and peel. Basin puddings were introduced well into the 20th century.

Charles Dickens, in A Christmas Carol, alluded to this distinctive pudding to which the English remain greatly attached. Oh All that steam The pudding had just been taken out of the cauldron. Oh. That smell. The same as the one which prevailed on washing day. It is that of the cloth which wraps the pudding. Now, one would imagine oneself in a restaurant and in a confectioner's at the same time, with a laundry next door. Thirty seconds later Mrs. Cratchit entered, her face crimson, but smiling proudly, with the pudding resembling a cannon ball, all speckled, very firm, sprinkled with brandy in flames and decorated with a sprig of holly stuck in the centre. Oh! The marvellous pudding.

RECIPE

Christmas pudding

Finely chop 500 g (18 oz, 3 ½ cups) suet. Wash and dry 500 g (18 oz, 3 cups) seedless raisins, the same amount of sultanas (golden raisins) and 250g (9 oz, 1 ½ cups) currants. Finely chop 250 g (9 oz, 1 ½ cups) candied peel or 125 g (4 ½ oz, ¾ cup) orange peel and 125 g (4 ½ oz, 1/2 cup) orange peel and 125 g (4 ½ oz ½ cup) glace (candied) cherries. 125 g (4 ½ oz 1 cup) blanched almonds and the zest of 2 lemons. Mix all the ingredient together with 500 g (18 oz. 9 cups) fresh breadcrumbs. 125 g (4 ½ oz 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, 1 tablespoon mixed spice the same amount of cinnamon, half a nutmeg (grated) and a pinch of salt. Add 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) milk and, one by one 7 or 8 beaten eggs. Next, add 300ml (1/2 pint 1 ¼ cups) rum (or brandy) and the juice of 2 lemons. Mix everything together thoroughly to obtain a smooth paste.

Wrap the mixture in floured cloths, shaping the portions into balls, or spoon into a greased pudding basin (heatproof mould) Steam or boil.

Keep the pudding in its cloth or basin for at least 3 weeks, in a cool place. Before serving steam the pudding for 2 hours, then turn it out, sprinkle it with rum or brandy and serve it blambeed, decorated with a sprig of holly.

CHRISTMAS YULE LOG A log shaped cake, traditionally prepared for the Christmas festivities. It is usually made of rectangular slices of Genoese is usually made of rectangular slices of Genoese sponge spread with butter cream and placed one on top of the other, and then shaped into log, it is coated with chocolate butter cream, applied with a piping bag to simulate bark. The cake is decorated with holly leaves made from almond paste, meringue mushrooms and small figures. A Swiss roll (jelly roll) may be used instead of sliced Genoese cake. There are also ice cream logs, some made entirely of different flavoured ice creams and some with the inside made of parfait or a bombe mixture.

The cake is a fairly recent creation of the Parisian pastrycooks, inspired by the real logs which used to be burned in the hearth throughout Christmas Eve. Before then, the cakes of the season were generally brioches or fruit loaves.

RECIPES

Chestnut log

Line 2 shallow square cake tins (pans) measuring about 23 cm (9 in) square with squares of greaseproof (wax) paper. Prepare a Genoese cake mixture using 125 g (4 ½ oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour. 4 eggs and 125 g (4 ½ oz ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar. Spread the mixture in the buttered lined tins with a moistened metal spatula, leaving a gap of 2 cm (¾ in) between the mixture and the top of the tin. Put straight into a preheated oven at about 180 °C(350 °F, gas 4) and bake for 25-30 minutes. Take the tins out of the oven, turn over on to a cloth and immediately remove the paper from the bottom of the cakes. Cover with another cloth and allow to cool.

Prepare 200 ml (7 fl oz. ¾ cup) sugar syrup by boiling 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) granulated sugar with 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) water and flavour it with rum or vanilla. To prepare the chestnut mixture, soften 225 g (8 oz, 1 cup) butter with spatula and add 450 g (1 lb. 2 cups) chestnut cream and if, desired, 2 tablespoons rum. Beat the mixture for 6-8 minutes until light and fluffy, then divide into 2 portions. Soak the 2 squares of cake in the cooled sugar syrup and spread each with half the chestnut mixture. Place the 2 squares of cake facing each other and roll the first one up tightly, then wrap the second one over the first. Cut both ends off diagonally and stick these to the top of the log to represent knots in the wood. Place the cake in the refrigerator for 1 hour. Soften the remaining cream again and cover the entire log with it. Mark with the prongs of a fork to imitate the bark. Decorate with 8 marrons glaces, put back in the refrigerator and dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar just before serving.

Chocolate log

Prepare Genoese cakes as for the chestnut log. To prepare the syrup, boil 100ml (4 fl. oz, 7 tablespoons) water and 100 g(4 oz, ½ cup) granulated sugar in a small saucepan allow to cool, then add 2 tablespoons rum. Finally, prepare a chocolate flavoured butter cream using 400 g (14 oz 1 ¾ cups) butter. Using a pastry brush, cover the 2 cakes with rum syrup, coat with three quarters of the cream and roll up as for the chestnut log. Completely cover the log with the remaining cream and make uneven furrows along it with a fork. Decorate with small sugar or meringue shapes and store in a cool place until required for serving.

CHRYSANTHEMUM The petals are used in Japan, China and Vietnam for adding to salads. Their taste is similar to that of cress.

CHTCHI Also known as tschy or stschy. A thick Russian soup, based on braised sauerkraut cooked in a thickened stock, to which are added pieces of blanched brisket of beef, poached duck or chicken, salted bacon and smoked sausages. Chtchi is served in a soup tureen with smetana and fennel or chopped parsley. Chtchi is also prepared with green vegetables.

CHUB A freshwater fish 30-50 cm (12-20 in) long with a greenish brown back and silvery belly. Several species are known the common chub has a big round head, others have angular heads. All have quite soft flesh but are full of bones, they are therefore kept for fish stews (except for the smallest ones, which are sometimes eaten fried)

CHUCK A lean boneless cut of beef from the shoulder, also known as blade. This traditional cut for casseroles and stews is gelatinous and best braised slowly in dishes such as carbonade, daube or beef à la mode. The name macreuse is used for a type of wild duck whose flesh could formerly be eaten during Lent.

CHUFA Also known as tiger nut or earth almond, this is a small vegetable tuber from a plant in the sedge family. The outside is brown and slightly wrinkled, the flesh white and crisp, with a slightly sweet, nutty flavour. It can be eaten raw or cooked.

CHUMP END (LOIN) A joint of lamb, mutton or venison lying between the leg (gigot) and loin. It may be tied up, boned and stuffed before roasting or cut into succulent chops for grilling (broiling)

The French equivalent settle, means saddle, but it should not be confused with the English saddle of meat, which consists of the two joined loins. The two legs, chump end and saddle together, make an elegant banqueting dish called a baron.

The chump is a prime piece of meat, which inspired Monselet to write.

RECIPES

Chump end of Lamb Belle Otero

Bone a chump end of lamb weighing 2.25 kg (5 lb) Make a stock with 250 g (9 oz. 1 ½ cups) finely diced trimmings browned in butter with the bones, a carrot and a medium sized onion (cut up into small pieces), and season with salt and pepper. After browning add 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) white wine. Reduce, then add 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) stock simmer for 1 hour, then pass through a fine strainer.

Prepare the forcemeat. Finely dice an onion, a celery stick and a carrot, and cook gently in a knob butter. Add 200 g (4 oz) whole truffles, and then 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) port and 200 ml (7 fl oz, ¾ cup) strong chicken stock. Season with salt and freshly ground pepper. Cook for 15 minutes. Take the truffles out and reduce the liquid. Prepare a duxelles with 500 g (18 oz. 6 cups) button mushroom (cleaned and finely chopped, then wrung out in a cloth to extract all their juice) cooked for 10 minutes in butter with 4 chopped shallots, salt, pepper and nutmeg. To the duxelles, add 50 g (2 oz 2/3 cup) cooked diced truffles and 65 g (2 ½ oz) foie gras cut into matchsticks. Bind with a little of the truffle cooking liquid and season with salt and pepper.

Stuff the lamb with this forcemeat, then arrange the remaining truffles on top, together with another 65 g (2 1/2 oz) foie gras matchsticks. Roll and tie up the meat, wrap it in barding then tie it up again. Roast for 50 minutes in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425 °F gas 7). Serve the meat juices mixed with the truffle juices in a sauceboat. Untie the string, remove the barding and garnish the meat with bunches of buttered asparagus tips or barded artichoke hearts. Medoc would complement this dish.

Chump end of lamb Callas

Bone a chump end of lamb weighing about 2.75 kg (6 lb), trim the excess fat and season with salt and pepper. Prepare a mushroom julienne, cook it in butter and leave it to cool. Also prepare a julienne of fresh truffles. Put the truffle julienne down the centre of the meat with the mushroom julienne on each side. Roll and tie up the joint. Roast in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425 °F, gas 7) allowing 12 minutes per 450 g (1 lb). Deglaze the roasting pan with a little veal stock and sherry. Serve with buttered asparagus tips.

CHUNK A regular shaped piece obtained by cutting up an elongated foodstuff or preparation such as a celery stick or croquette mixture. The French word tronçon also refers to a short wide piece cut from the middle of a large flatfish such as turbot or brill.

CHURN The apparatus used for agitating cream to make butter. The traditional churn is a teak barrel which rotates about a horizontal axis. The plungers fixed to the walls assist the churning process. Modern commercial churns are made of stainless steel and the churning process is continuous. They are equipped with beaters and mixers which give the butter the required consistency and are maintained at a constant temperature of 10-13 °C (50-55 °F). The speed of rotation varies from 25 to 50 rpm.

Small plastic household churn of 3 litre (5 pint, 13 cup) capacity with stainless steel beaters are also available. They should only be half filled to allow the mechanical action to take place as the weight of the cream falls from one end to the other.

CHURROS Long, thin Spanish fritters, rolled or wound round on themselves, prepared with a batter made of cornflour (cornstarch), water with salt, and fried in boiling oil. Churros are eaten with sugar for breakfast.

CHUTNEY A savoury preserve made of fruits or vegetables cooked in vinegar with sugar and spices until it has the consistency of jam. Chutney is served as a condiment or relish. Considered as typically Indian, chutney from the Hindustani chatni (strong spices) is in fact a British speciality dating from the colonial era. Chutneys, sold in jars under various trade names, may contain exotic fruits as well as tomatoes, onions and familiar vegetables. Some chutneys are reduced to a pulp, others retain recognizable pieces of their ingredients, all are characterized by a syrupy and sometimes highly spiced juice which coats the ingredients.

As well as cooked chutney, fresh chutneys, made from raw ingredients may be prepared. Indian cooking includes many fresh chutneys of finely cut vegetables mixed with chopped fresh herbs and/or spices. These are not preserves, but are prepared specifically as an appetizer or to accompany particular dishes.

RECIPES

Apple and mango chutney

Peel and finely slice 1.5 kg (3 1/4 lb) cooking apples. Bring 1 litre (1 3/4 pints, 4 1/3 cups) white vinegar to the boil, put the apples in it and cook for 5 minutes. Add 500 g (18 oz. 3 1/4 cups) brown sugar, 25 g (1 oz. 1/4 cup) finely sliced chillies, 200 g (7 oz. 1 1/4 cups) seedless raisins, 200 g (7 oz. 1 1/4 cups) sultanas (golden raisins) 100 g (4 oz. 1/2 cup) sorted and washed currants. 500 g (18 oz. 2 ¾ cups) candied lemon peel cut into large dice and 2 crushed garlic cloves. Season with 25 g (1 oz. 1 ½ tablespoons) salt. 125 g (4 ½ cup) mustard seeds and 2 tablespoons ground ginger. Finally, add 500 g (18 oz.) well drained canned mangoes. Cook for about 25 minutes. Scald some jars and pour the hot chutney into them cover and seal.

Fruit chutney

Cut ¼ red (bell) pepper into 3 mm (1/8 in) dice, having first removed the membrane and seeds. Peel 1 pear, 1 Granny Smith apple and 1 pineapple and cut into 5 mm (1/4 in) dice. Peel 25 g (1 oz.) of fresh root ginger and chop very finely. Put 2 tablespoons rice vinegar and 2 tablespoons soft brown sugar in a saucepan and bring to the boil. Add the diced pepper and fruits, ginger, 1 tablespoon currants and 5 cumin seeds. Bring to the boil and cook over a brisk heat for 15 minutes. Remove from the heat and put in a jar. It will keep a few days in the refrigerator.

Pineapple chutney

To 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) white vinegar, add 500 g (18 oz. 3 ¼ cups) moist brown sugar, 2 tablespoons mustard seeds, 5 cloves. 1 cinnamon stick and 1 teaspoon ground ginger. Boil for 15 minutes, then add the drained contents of 2 large cans of pineapple pieces and 250 g (9 oz. 1 ½ cups) of both sultanas (golden raisins) and raising. Leave to cook gently without a lid until the mixture has the consistency of jam. Scald some bottling jars, preferably ones with a rubber ring and a metal clip and pour the hot chutney into them.

Spanish onion chutney

Peel and slice 2 kg (4 ½ lb) Spanish onions or large mild onions. Tip them into a large saucepan along with 675 g (1 ½ lb, 3 ½ cups) brown sugar, 400 g (14 oz 2 ½ cups) raisins or sultanas (golden raisins) 400 ml (14 fl oz. 1 ¾ cups) dry white wine, 400 ml (14 fl oz. 1 ¾ cups) white wine vinegar, 2 garlic cloves, 300 g (11 oz) crystallized (candied) ginger cut into pieces, a pinch of curry powder and 5 cloves. Boil for 1 ¾ -2 hours, leave to cool completely, then put in jars.

CIDER A drink produced by the natural fermentation of apple juice. The word comes from the Greek sikera and the production of cider certainly dates from antiquity. In France regulations were introduced under Charlemagne, and in the 12th century cider making became established in Normandy and Brittany, where the climate is very favourable for growing apples. Here, cider completely supplanted barley beer.

Calvados, Manche, Orne, Ille-et-Vilaine and Mayenne remain the most important areas of production. The ciders of Dinan and Fouesnant are equally famous. Britain also produces and consumes a great range of ciders, generally pale in colour with a higher alcohol content than in France, where processes such as sweetening and reconstitution with apple concentrate are prohibited in the United States the term cider refers to pressed apple juice which is used to make sweet cider, hare cider, vinegar and applejack.

Several hundred varieties of apple are used for the manufacture of cider some are sweet, but most are rather bitter or even sour. The cider maker's skill lies in blending different varieties to obtain an agreeable and well balanced cider. The apples are gathered when ripe, then left in a heap for several days before being crushed and pressed. Fermentation, which occurs naturally without the addition of yeast or sugar, take about a month. According to its style and quality and the intended market, it may then be filtered to clarify it, and pasteurized to make it keep longer. Both still sparkling ciders are produced. Its thirst quenching tang and fruity flavour make cider a refreshing drink.

The use of cider in cooking is a characteristic of Britany and Normandy, particularly in recipes for fish chicken, rabbit and tripe. In Brittany, one sits by the fire in the evenings eating chestnuts and drinking sweet cider, as Theodore Botrel sang in La Paludicie. The bowl or cup of cider traditional in Brittany is an excellent accompaniment to the region's pancakes.

RECIPES

Chicken with cider

Peel, quarter and core 500 g (18 oz) sour apples, cut half of them into thin slices. Season the inside the gelatine that surround the meat, cut the meat into pieces and arrange in a warmed serving dish.

Lightly brown the apple slices under the grill. Wash, wipe and chop some parsley. Mix 1 egg yolk with 1 tablespoon double (heavy) cream, add it to the veal cooking liquor, then strain everything. Beat this sauce with a whisk and adjust the seasoning. Arrange the onions and mushrooms around the knuckle. Coat the knuckle with the sauce, putting a little on the garnish too. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve the well browned apple slices separately.

Wild rabbit with farm cider

Remove the bones from a baron (saddle and legs) of young rabbit weighing about 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb). Prepare a brunoise of carrots, celeriac, celery sticks and leeks (green parts). Blanch the vegetables separately, then cool and bind together using 3 egg yolk. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Prepare 200 ml (7 fl. oz. ¾ cup) rabbit stock using the bones, 2 carrot, 1 onion, a bouquet garni, 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 2 cup) farm cider, 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) water, salt, and pepper.

Spread the baron of rabbit out on its back season with salt and pepper, and stuff it with the brunoise. Pull the sides of the legs and belly together over the brunoise and tie up with string. Lay the rabbit in an ovenproof earthenware dish or casserole containing bed of diced vegetables (2 carrots, 2 red onions and 2 shallots) mixed with diced dessert (eating) apple. Roast it with butter in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F gas 9) for 15-20 minutes so that it remains pink. Keep it hot, covered with a sheet of foil.

Boil 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) milk and allow to cool. Peel and slice 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) potatoes, shred half a green cabbage, blanch and cool. Butter an ovenproof, preferably earthenware, dish and arrange in it a layer of the potatoes, sprinkled with salt and pepper, then a layer of the cabbage, a layer of Emmental cheese, and so on, finishing with a layer of potatoes and Emmental. To the cooled milk, add 4 well beaten eggs and a few knobs of butter and pour over the potatoes. Cook in a preheated oven at 200-220 °C (400-425 °F, gas 6-7) for 45 minutes. Keep hot.

For the sauce to accompany the rabbit, add 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) farm cider to the pan juices and reduce by two-thirds, add a small glass of demi-glace, the rabbit stock and 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) double (heavy) cream. Cook over a gentle heat for 5 minutes. Chop some chives and chervil and sprinkle over the sauce.

Surround the rabbit with cress and serve it with the sauce and the potato cake.

CIGARETTE A cylindrical biscuit (cookie) also called cigarette russe, prepared with langues de chat mixture. After baking, the discs are rolled into a cylinder shape around a wooden stick while they are still lukewarm and malleable.

RECIPES

Cigarettes russes

Butter a baking sheet. Melt 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) butter in a bain marie. Whisk 4 egg whites into very stiff peaks, adding a pinch of salt. In a mixing bowl, blend 90 g (3 ½ oz. 1 cup less 2 tablespoons) plain (all-purpose) flour, 165 g (5 ½ oz. ¾ cup less 1 tablespoon) caster (superfine) sugar, 1 tablespoon vanilla-flavoured sugar and the melted butter. Carefully add the egg white. Spread this mixture on the baking sheet, making very thin discs about 7.5 cm (3 in) in diameter, bake only 3 or 4 at a time. Place them in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) and cook for 10 minutes or until the biscuits turn golden. Loosen them and roll each around the handle of a wooden spoon while still hot. Leave them to cool completely.

Lemon cigarettes

Prepare as in the previous recipe, but before baking add to the mixture some finely chopped candied lemon peel, use 100 g (4 oz. 2/3 cup) peel for the quantities given in the recipe. Once the cigarettes have cooled, fill both ends with lemon flavoured butter cream (see creams) using a piping bag.

CINCHONA A tree originating in Peru and cultivated chiefly in Indonesia for its bark, which is rich in quinine. Cinchona bark is also used in the manufacture of aperitifs and alcoholic drinks.

CINGHALAISE, A LA Describes preparations of cold fish or white meats accompanied by cinghalaise, or Ceylon style, sauce, a kind of vinaigrette to which a salpicon of vegetables in oil and herbs is added. Only the presence of the curry powder is evocative of Sri Lanka (Ceylon).

RECIPE

Cinghalaise sauce

Peel a courgette (zucchini) and cook it in water until it is just slightly firm. Finely dice equal quantities of green and red sweet peppers, tomato pulp, cucumber and the cooked courgette. To this salpicon, add some sieved hard boiled (hard cooked) egg yolk, curry powder, salt, pepper, lemon juice, oil and chopped parsley and chives.

CINNAMON A spice obtained from the bark of several tropical trees. The bark is removed, dried and rolled up to make a tube, light fawn or dark grey in colour, depending on the species. The most popular varieties of cinnamon are from Sri Lanka and China. Cinnamon imparts a sweet penetrating aroma common found in the form of a powder and sometimes as an oil or an extract. It is one of the oldest spices, mentioned in Sanskrit texts and the Bible and used by the ancients to flavour wine. In the Middle Ages it was widely used in stews, soups, custards and poultry fricassees. In France it is mainly used in compotes and desserts, and to flavour mulled wine. In eastern Europe its uses are much more numerous, in patisserie, soups and meats. In Indian and Asian cooking it is widely used in savoury dishes as well as for sweet recipes.

Recipe

Mulled wine with cinnamon and cloves

Wash a small orange and stick 2 cloves into it. Leave to macerate for 24 hours in 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) red wine. Remove the orange, pour the wine into a pan, sweeten to taste and add 1 cinnamon stick. Bring to the boil, then remove from the heat and allow the cinnamon to infuse according to taste. Remove the cinnamon and reheat the wine.

CIOPPINO A dish from San Francisco consisting of a stew of white fish, large prawns (shrimp) clams and mussels, with a garlic, tomato and white wine base.

CITEAUX An uncooked pressed cow's milk cheese (45% fat) from Burgundy with a washed crust. Made by the Cistercian monks of the Abbey of Citeaux, Coete d'or, it is a disc shaped cheese 18 cm (7 in) in diameter and 4 cm (1 ¾ in) thick, weighing about 1 kg (2 ¼ lb). Citeaux is similar to Saint Paulin, but its taste is more fruity.

CITRON A citrus fruit originally from China (not Persia, as was formerly believed) and similar to the lemon. It has been used since the 16th century or before. In France the citron tree is cultivated particularly in Corsica and on the Cote d'Azur. The fruit is larger than the lemon and slightly pear shaped, with a thick glossy skin. It is rarely eaten raw and gives little juice, which can be used like lemon juice. Although employed in jams and marmalades, the citron is used mainly for its peel, which is candied as an ingredient for cake making and for biscuits and puddings. In Corsica it is also used to make a liqueur, Cedratine, and to fill sweets(candies.)

CITRONNER A French culinary term meaning to flavour or sprinkle a dish with lemon juice. The term also means to rub the surface of certain vegetables (artichoke hearts, celeriac, mushrooms) with a cuit lemon, or to sprinkle them with lemon juice, to prevent discoloration.

CITRUS FRUITS Fruits of the genus Citrus, including the orange, Seville (bitter) orange, bergamot, grapefruit, pomelo, (shaddock), tangerine, clementine, lemon, lime, citron and sweet lime, as well as hybrids of this genus (citrange) and related genera (kumquat). Originally from Asia, citrus fruits whose French name, agrumes, comes from the Latin acrumen (bitter flavoru) gradually spread throughout the world, particularly to Mediterranean countries (Israel, Spain, Italy) and to the united States (Florida, California).

These fruits, which are rich in vitamin C, have an acid flavour to varying degrees. They are widely consumed either as fresh fruit or in cakes, pastries and preserves, such as crystallized fruit (particularly citron and bergamot) jams and sweets (candies). They are also used in distilling (Curacao) and in some recipes are combined with meat (pork) and poultry (duck).The most important role of citrus fruits, however, is in the fruit juice industry (natural or concentrated). Several by products play an important part in the food industry aromatic essential oils, extracted from the skin. Pectin, which comes from the white part of the rind, and oils made from some pips.

CIVET A game stew typically made from wild rabbit, hare, venison or young wild boar, prepared with red wine and thickened with the animal's blood or pig's blood, this gives it its oily texture and distinctive colouring.Small onions and pieces of larding bacon are generally included. The name is derived from cive (spring onion or scallion), which was formerly used to flavour all stews, particularly hare.

Certain seafood and fish dishes served in sauce are also called civet, at Dinard, abalones en civet are cooked in red wine with onions and strips of larding bacon. In French provincial areas, civets are also prepared from goose gIBLETS or squirrel, in southwestern France, squirrel is cooked in a roux moistured with red wine, with onions and orange zest.

RECIPES

Civet of hare or jugged hare
(basic preparation)

Skin and gut (clean) the hare. Carefully collect the blood and put to one side along with the liver, having removed the gall bladder, and 1 tablespoon vinegar. Detach the thighs and forelegs and chop each thigh in half, splintering the bones as little as possible, cut the saddle into 4 pieces. Place all the pieces in a deep dish and season with salt, pepper, thyme and powdered bay leaf. Add a large finely sliced onion, 3-4 tablespoon oil and at least 1 tablespoon Cognac. After marinating for 24 hours, the hare is ready to be cooked a la flamande, a la francaise or a la lyonnaise.

Civet of hare

Prepare a hare as described above and marinate overnight in red wine containing 3 onions (halved) a sliced carrot and a sprig of thyme.

The following morning, drain the hare in a colander. Heat 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) oil and 40 g (1 ½ oz. 3 tablespoons) butter in a frying pan and lightly brown the pieces of hare on each side, as well as the onions and carrots from the marinade. Then place the pieces in a saucepan and sprinkle with flour. Moisten with the wine from the marinade, a trickle of Cognac and 1 tablespoon tomato puree (paste) add 2 garlic cloves crushed in their skins, a bouquet garni, a quarter of a bay leaf (crushed) salt and pepper. Mix well and leave to simmer for 2 hours.

Separately, cook 20 small onions in a little water to which 1 teaspoon caster (superfine) sugar has been added. Cut 250 g (9 oz) small mushrooms into quarters (or leave tiny button mushrooms whole) and brown them in some butter. Dice 150 g (5 oz) smoked bacon, blanch it, then cook it gently in a frying pan.

When the hare is cooked, arrange the pieces in a dish and keep hot. Chop up the hare's liver and mix it with the blood. Add it to the cooking liquor and bring to the boil. Pass through a fine strainer to form a sauce. Add the garnish of onions, mushrooms and pieces of bacon. Adjust the seasoning, pour the sauce over the hare and serve accompanied by fresh noodles.

Civet of hare à la flamande

Marinate a hare as described in the basic preparation of civet of hare. Drain the pieces of marinated hare, brown them in about 40 g (1 ½ oz, 3 tablespoons) butter in a flameproof casserole, dust them with 2 tablespoons flour and again lightly brown them, turning them with a wooden spoon. Press the liver through a sieve along with the blood and add to it 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) red wine, then add 200 ml (7 fl. oz, ¾ cup) wine vinegar. Pour this mixture into the casserole, add some salt, pepper, 25 g (1 oz, 3 tablespoons) moist brown sugar and a large bouquet garni. Cover and cook for 15 minutes.

During this time, peel and finely slice 500 g (18 oz) onions and brown them in some butter. Add them to the casserole after the 15 minutes have elapsed and leave to finish cooking gently with the lid on. Cooking time depends on the age of the animal, the tip of a knife should pass easily into the flesh when it is cooked.

Remove the cooked hare, drain and place the pieces in a sauté dish. Strain the cooking liquid to remove the onions, pour it into the sauté dish cover and simmer for 5 minutes. Fry some croutons in butter and spread them with redcurrant jelly. Serve the civet in a deep dish, garnished with the croutons. If desired, the ends of the croutons can be dipped in the sauce and then in chopped parsley.

CLAFOUTIS A dessert from the Limousin region of France, consisting of black cherries arranged in a buttered dish and covered with fairly thick batter. It is served lukewarm, dusted with sugar. As a rule, the cherries are not stoned (pitted) but simply washed and stalked, since the kernels add their flavour to the batter during cooking. The Académie française, which had defined clafoutis as a sort of fruit flan were faced with protests from the inhabitants of Limoges and changed their definition to a cake with black cherries. Nevertheless there are numerous variations using red cherries or other fruits. The word comes from the provincial dialect word.

RECIPE

Clafoutis

Remove the stalks from 500 g (18 oz) washed black cherries, dust them with 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) caster (superfine) sugar and leave for at least 30 minutes. Butter a baking tin (pan) and fill it with the cherries. Put 125 g (4 ½ oz, 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour in a mixing bowl and add a pinch of salt, 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) caster sugar and 3 well beaten eggs, mix well, then add 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) milk and mix thoroughly again. Pour the mixture over the cherries and bake in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for 35-40 minutes. When it is lukewarm dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

CLAIRET A light coloured French wine, deeper in tone than pink, but not a vibrant red, which is a specialty of the Bordeaux region. In the past, it might have been made by mixing red and white wine illegal for rose wines today.

The word derives from the colour of the wines of Bordeaux, which in the Middle Ages, when the English Crown owned the entire region of the Gironde, were lighter in tone than the wines of the hinterland that were shipped through the port of Bordeaux. This is why the English term for red Bordeaux is still claret in spite of attempts within the EC to impose the use of red Bordeaux, it had to be agreed that centuries of use of the word claret entitled the UK to retain the expression.

Clairette A white wine grape, grown mainly in the Midi, Because of its grapey flavour it has often been used with the Muscat. It is found in many wines of the south of France, including some with AOC, Clairette de Die made in the Drome, is a sparkling wine made using no more than 30% Clairette grapes, fermented according to the methode dioise, a two part fermentation process followed by decantation and rebottling. Cremant de Die is made from 100% Clairette grapes fermented using the traditional method.

The Clairettes of Bellegarde and of Languedoc are full bodied, dry, still white wines, of a definite yellow colour. The former are at least 11.5% the latter about 13%.

CLAM Name given to a vast number of related shellfish, all bivalve molluscs. They include the venus shells which cover over 500 types. The hinged shells are marked with fine circular striations and they may also have ribs radiating from the hinged area outwards. Clams are gathered from sandy and muddy estuaries, particularly on the east coast of the United States, but also in the French region of Charente. They are eaten raw or cooked like oysters or ala commodore.

Clams are cooked by a variety of methods, depending on their size and texture. Small clams are tender and cook quickly, but very large, giant clams are cut up and simmered or stewed until tender. Small shellfish can be steamed, fried or grilled medium sized examples can be braised or stuffed and baked.

Clam chowder is a soup made from vegetables, onions and clams garnished with strips of larding bacon, it originated in New England. A clam bake is a picnic, originally along the east coast of the United States, at which clams and other shellfish are cooked on heated stones under a layer of seaweed.

RECIPE

Clam soup

Dice 100 g (4 oz) salted bacon, 1 medium-sized onion, 2 celery sticks, 1 red pepper and 1 green pepper. Blanch the bacon for 3 minutes in boiling water, then cool it, wipe it and soften it in a pan containing some butter, without colouring it. Then add the vegetables, sprinkle on 1 tablespoon flour and cook for 2 minutes, stirring all the time. Sprinkle with 1.5 litres (2 ¾ pints 6 ½ cups) stocks and bring to the boil.

Open 36 clams near a heated oven, retaining the liquid. Prepare the clams, chop up the trimmings and put them in a saucepan with the clam liquor plus 200 ml (7 fl. oz, ¾ cup) water. Cook for 15 minutes, strain and add this stock to the soup. Return the soup to the boil, add the clams, bring to the boil again, cover, then turn off the heat. Boil 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) double (heavy) cream and add it to the soup along with 1 tablespoon chopped parsley and 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) butter. Heat and serve with crushed or whole crackers.

CLAMART Any of various dishes that include green peas, either whole or in a puree. It is named after a district of the Hauts de Seine that used to be famous for its pea crops. Clamart soup is a puree of fresh green peas in consomme, served with fried croutons, poached eggs Clamart are served on canapes spread with puree, scrambled eggs. Clamart are served with the peas left whole. The name is also given to puff pastry patties filled with creamed puree, to chicken en cocotte, to a saute and to sweetbreads served with fresh green peas or a Clamart garnish.

The true Clamart garnish, for small items of sauteed red meat, comprises tritlets or artichoke bottoms filled with green peas in butter, for larger pieces, chateau potatoes are added.

RECIPE

Artichokes Clamart

Clean a lettuce and cut it into long thin shreds. Wash 12 small young globe artichokes, break off the stalks and cut away the large leaves. Butter a flameproof casserole and arrange the artichokes in it. Add 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) shelled fresh green peas, the lettuce, some salt, 1 teaspoon caster (superfine) sugar and 3 tablespoons water. Cover and cook very gently. Serve in the cooking dish, adding 1 tablespoon butter at the last minutes.

CLAUQUEBITOU An upasteurized goat milk cheese from Burgundy, not aged. Cream, and flavoured with garlic, parsley and chopped herbs. Of varying shape and weight. Claquebitou is strong smelling and has a fragrant taste which is much appreciated as a groutailon.

CLARENCE Name of various fish and shellfish dishes whose only common feature is a curry flavoured Mornay or Newburg sauce.

Salmon cutlets Clarence are prepared by lining a mould with salmon escalopes and filling it with salmon or lobster mousse. This is then poached removed from the mould, arranged on a base of the same mouse and garnished with mushrooms and shrimps. The sauce is served separately. Fillets of sole are poached and arranged on a rosette of duchesse potatoes, coated with sauce and garnished with slices of truffle.

The word also describes a bombe of pineapple ice cream filled with a violet bombe mixture.

CLAREQUET In old French cookery a transparent jelly prepared with verjuice and apples or gooseberries. The fruits were reduced to a puree, mixed with their weight in sugar, then put in glass moulds., called clarequet moulds, these were placed in a drying oven to set the jelly, so ensuring that it would keep.

CLARIFICATION The process of rendering a turbid or cloudy substance clear. Clarification is applied mainly to liquids, especially stocks and jellies, but the term is also used for sugar, butter and eggs.

* Clarification of stock. Poultry or other stock can be served like soup, garnished in different ways, without having been clarified this is white consommé, which can also be used in sauces, stews or braised dishes. Clarified stock is used for fine soups, such as consommé, and for savoury jellies, such as aspic. Clarification of beef stock involves using chopped lean beef, egg white and an aromatic vegetable brunoise. When the broth boils, the egg whites coagulate, trapping the particles that were making the liquid cloudy. The consequent loss in flavour is restored by the lean beef and the vegetables.

Fish, poultry or game stocks are clarified by simmering with egg white, with or without the main ingredients. For charcuterie items with a jelly base, the egg whites are often replaced by blood.

* Clarification of wine This is achieved by various processes, including filtration and fining. The addition of a suitable agent (egg white, blood, albumen, bentonite) to the wine in cask or vat. The fining agent will attract any particles in suspension in the young wine. Filtration usually takes place prior to bottling.

RECIPE

Clarification of beef stock

In a deep heavy based saucepan, put 800 g (1 ¾ lb) finely chopped lean meat and 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) very finely diced vegetables. Add the white from a very fresh egg and mix well. Gradually add 2.5 litres (4 ¼ pints. 11 cups) tepid stock. Whisk while heating until it boils. Reduce the heat and simmer very gently for 1 ½ hours. Strain the stock through a muslin lined (cheesecloth-lined) sieve.

CLAVARIA Any mushroom of a genus containing many species. Usually found in woodland, they are generally whitish or yellow and shaped like a club, lacking a distinct cap, hence their name, from the Latin clava. Nearly all the edible but they are not great delicacies. After removing the tip of the stalks, clavaria may be cooked au gratin, sauteed with garlic or preserved in vinegar.

CLEAN To remove the viscera from fish, poultry or game before cooking.

Sea fish, usually sold partly cleaned, must be trimmed and scaled and the grey skin should be removed. Large round fish, such as hake, are cleaned through an incision made in the belly. Smaller fish, such as whiting or trout, are cleaned by removing the viscera through the gill covers, thus avoiding opening the belly (unless they are to be stuffed). Large flatfish such as turbot are cleaned on the dark side, while smaller flatfish, like sole, are cleaned by removing the grey skin and then making an incision on the right side. In most cases, the gills are removed. After cleaning, the fish are carefully washed.

Poultry is often sold with the intestines already removed. Drawing, which takes place after singeing and trimming, is carried out by first loosening the skin around the neck to remove the digestive and respiratory tracts, fat, gland and crop. Then the index finger should be inserted through the neck to loosen the lungs. Finally, the anal orifice should be enlarged slightly and the gizzard, liver, heart and lungs pulled through together, taking care not to damage the gall bladder. If the intestine have not previously been removed from the birds, they are taken out at this point. The bird is then ready to be trussed or jointed.

CLEMENTINE A hybrid of the tangerine and Seville orange, produced in 1902 in Algeria by Pere Clement. , orange coloured and spherical, the Clementine has a firm skin, which adheres to the juicy pulp.

Clementines, which are more acid and less aromatic than tangerines, come principally from Spain, Morocco, Italy or Algeria.

The Corsican clementine has orange red skin, is highly scented and contains no seeds. It is usually sold with its leaves.

The Spanish clementine comes in several varieties, including the choice smaller fruit and the larger Nules and Oroval varieties.

The Monreal clementine, from Spain or Algeria, is fairly rare. It appears from mid-October.

Clementines may also be crystallized or preserved in brandy. The juice is used for sorbets and drinks. It is used in patisserie and confectionery in the same way as the orange. A liqueur is made from it and in England it is used with vinegar and spices to make pickles.

CLERMONT Any of several dishes containing chestnuts or cabbage, characteristic products of the Auvergne, of which Clermont Ferrand is the capital.

Clermont garnish for large pieces of red meat combines paupiettes of green cabbage with lightly fried potatoes, a sauce is made from the pan juices of the meat plus the liquid in which the paupiettes of cabbage were cooked, with braised meat, and braising base or a demi- glace sauce is used.

Clermont garnish for small sauteed pieces of meat comprises fried artichoke quarters and onions stuffed with chestnut puree and braised, the whole is coated with a Madeira deglaze. Bavarian cream a la Clermont is a cold dessert made with rum and chestnut puree.

CLITOCYBE Any mushroom belonging to a genus containing numerous species, some of which are edible. Clitocybes are characterized by having gills that extend along the stalk and a drooping cap with a depression in the centre, the name comes from the Greek klitos (sloping) and kube (head). The best for eating are the funnel shaped clitocybe the nebulous or petit gris clitocybe the geotropic or tete de moine clitocybe and the sweet smelling clitocycle. All must be picked when young and consumed fresh, with the stalks discarded. Their aniseed, bitter almond or mint flavour is sometimes fairly strong, so they are used in small quantities to flavour a dish of more insipid mushrooms. They must be cooked thoroughly.

RECIPE

Omelette with green clitocybes

Choose 18 caps of aniseed flavoured green clitocybes and clean them thoroughly. Brown the 6 choicest ones whole in butter with 1 ½ teaspoons chopped onions. Cook in a covered pan for 10 minutes over a gentle heat. Season with salt and pepper and keep warm. Cut the remaining 12 caps into thin strips and cook in butter for 5 minutes over a moderate heat. Remove and drain in a fine sieve.

Beat 8 fresh eggs lightly as for an omelette, add salt and a little curry powder, and blend in 8 knobs of butter, then the drained julienne of mushrooms. Cook the omelette in very hot olive oil, constantly moving the frying pan over a brisk heat and lifting up the edges. Serve garnished with the 6 whole caps and accompanied with a green salad dressed in walnut oil containing ½ teaspoon anisette.

CLITOPILE PETITE –PRUNE A greyish white edible mushroom, also called meunier or mousseron. Its tender flesh has a delicate smell of fresh flour and cooks rapidly. It is used to flavour blander mushrooms and when dehydrated, serves as a condiment.

CLOCHE A convex dish cover made of stainless steel or silver plated metal with a knob or a handle. The cloche is used mainly in restaurants to keep food hot. Some restaurants, which provide plate service, use individual cloches for their dishes. It was formerly widely used in Britain, where hot breakfast or dinner dishes were traditionally placed on the sideboard.

The cheese cloche, hemispherical and made of glass or wire gauze, protects cheeses from the air and from flies, it generally rests on a round wooden or marble tray.

CLOD Butcher's term for a neck muscle of beef. The clod is soft and gelatinous and can be braised, cooked à la mode, in a carbonade and in a pot au-feu.

CLOS DES MORILLONS A Parisian wine made from vines planted in terraces in the Square Georges Brassens in the 15th arrondissement, where the enormous abattoirs of the Rue des Morillons used to stand. The grape harvest is enough to make about 600 bottles, and it is a very pleasant occasion for all who live in the vicinity and for many curious visitors.

CLOVE The sun dried flower bud of the clove tree, used since ancient times as a spice. Brown and hard, cloves are about 1 cm (1/2 in) long, with a head 4 mm (1/6 in) in diameter.

Introduced into Europe in about the 4th century, cloves were for a long time in as much demand as pepper. The Chinese used them well before the Christian era for their medicinal and culinary properties. Cloves originated in the Moluccas, where the Dutch for many years held the monopoly of their cultivation, but they were introduced into Reunion in the 17th century and then into the West Indies. In the Middle Ages, great use was made of cloves for their alleged medicinal properties, oranges studded with cloves were supposed to guard against the plague and in Naples clove pastilles were made as aphrodisiacs.

COAT To cover an item with a batter, sauce or other preparation in order to protect it during cooking or improve its appearance or taste. Food is dipped in batter or coated in egg and breadcrumbs to protect it during deep frying.

Traditionally, before refrigerators and freezers were common, a coating of fat was applied to prevent air from entering and spoiling pots of cooked food. A layer of clarified butter or other set fat is the classic topping for pates and terrines. Confits should always be completely coated with fat for better preservation. A layer of olive oil on the surface of some preserves serves the same purpose.

In the food industry, many foodstuffs are coated with a neutral substance to improve presentation and extend shelf-life. Coated coffee has been treated to make the beans black and shiny.

COCHONNAILLE A synonym for charcuterie, sometimes used ironically, suggesting the idea of abundance. The traditional French country buffets and village feasts featured vast assortments of sausages, galantines, hams, pates and other charcuterie.

COCIDO A Spanish pot=au-feu. The ordinary cocido originated in Castile, but numerous regional varieties exist. The cocido of Madrid consists of three dishes served in turn from a pot that has simmered for a long time firstly the stock, strained, enriched with vermicelli and traditionally served with white wine, next a dish of chick peas and boiled vegetables potatoes, carrots and cabbage which are added to the cocido in the final stages of cooking and become impregnated with the juices from the meats, and finally a dish of meats comprising pieces of beef, chorizo, pickled pork, loin of pork, chicken and little meat balls sometimes marrow bones, black pudding and fresh bacon are added. The vegetables and meats are served with red wine and accompanied by sauces and each dish is eaten with crusty bread.

COCK A LEEKIE A Scottish speciality, whose name means literally cock and leek. It is a substantial soup, based on chicken and leeks, with barley and prunes. A more refined version is based on chicken consommé, leek and chicken.

RECIPE

Cock-a-leekie

Prepare a chicken consommé. Cut the white parts of some leeks into fine strips, 200 g (7 oz) are required for 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{3}$ cups) consommé. Cook this julienne slowly in 20 g (3/4 oz 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ tablespoons) butter for 15 minutes. Cut into strips the white chicken flesh that was used to prepare the consommé and add the leek and chicken juliennes to the consommé.

COCKLE A bivalve mollusc, 3-4 cm (1 $\frac{1}{4}$ -1 $\frac{1}{2}$ in) long, which is found near or on the sea bed. The two equal shells have 26 clearly marked ribs and enclose a knob of flesh and tiny coral. Sold by volume cockles may be eaten raw, but are generally cooked, like mussels. Since they retain sand inside the shell, they should be left to clear in salt water for 12 hours or so before they are consumed. The cockles of Picardy, called henous are highly regarded.

COCKSCOMB A fleshy red outgrowth on the top of the head of a cock. For use in cookery it needs to be fairly large, but nowadays most breeds of domestic fowl have small combs and in any case are usually slaughtered when young. Today cockcombs are used in recipes as a garnish for barquettes and croustades. They were frequently used in traditional French cookery in numerous garnishes, including ambassadeur, chalonnaise, financiere, gauloise, Godard and Regence.

Pickled ox (beef) tongue and fine slices of truffle are sometimes cut into the shape of cockcombs for garnish.

RECIPE

Preparation of cockcombs

Prick the combs lightly with a needle and put them under cold running water, pressing them with the fingers to dispel the blood. Cover with cold water and cook until the water reaches a temperature of 40-45°C (104-113 °F), when the skin of the combs begins to detach itself. Drain the combs and rub them one by one in a cloth sprinkled with the fine salt.

Remove the outer skin, put the combs in cold water and, when they are white, plunge them into a boiling white court bouillon. Cook for 35 minutes.

Cockscombs en attereaux a la Villeroi

Cook the cockscombs as described above drain and dry them, then cover with Villeroi sauce. Leave to cool on a grid. Cover the combs with egg, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and fry in clarified butter.

Salpicon of cockscombs

Cook the cockscombs in the manner described above and dice them. Heat them for a few minutes in Madeira or any other dessert wine. Add a few tablespoons of chicken veloute, white sauce or a very reduced Madeira sauce.

COCKTAIL A mixed drink made according to a variety of recipes and containing liqueurs, spirits, syrup, spices, and so on, the end products being pleasing to both eye and palate. The origin of the word is somewhat obscure. It may refer to the shades of colour in a cock's tail, but it is more likely to derive from American racecourse slang, dating from the early part of the 19th century.

Drinking cocktails became particularly fashionable between the two world wars, a time when famous bars were opened in all the capitals of Europe. Barmen, expert in the art of making cocktails, christened their creations with names that have become classics Manhattan gin fizz and Bloody Mary.

The word cocktail is also used in cookery to describe various cold hors d'oeuvre, such as prawn cocktail or lobster cocktail. A macedoine of fruit may also be called fruit cocktail.

COCKTAIL SNACK Known in France as amusegueule, this is a small bite-sized savoury item that is served with aperitifs. Depending on the occasion, cocktail snacks may comprise an extensive or limited range of hot or cold hors d'oeuvre. Examples include plain or stuffed olives, salted nuts, savoury biscuits (crackers) flavoured with cheese, paprika or ham, potato crisps small hot cocktail sausage, cubes of hard cheese on small sticks, canapes, miniature pizzas or quiches, savoury allumettes and shredded raw vegetables.

COCO The plumlike fruit of a tropical tree cultivated in the West Indies and Central America, which is also known as icaco plum. The skin is yellow, white, red or purplish, depending on the variety. The white flesh is soft with a rather sour taste and the kernel is edible. The fruit is also known as the handle plum or the cotton plum and may be eaten raw or used as a preserve.

COCOA A powder made from cocoa beans, which are the seeds of the cacao, a tropical tree 4-12 m (13-39 ft) high. Each fruit (pod) contains 25-40 beans, rounded or flattened in shape and grey purplish or bluish in colour depending on the variety. The beans are extracted from the ripe pods and heaped up into mounds so that they ferment. This process destroys the germ and helps to develop their flavour. They are then sorted, washed, dried and roasted.

Cocoa butter is the natural fatty material in cocoa beans. It is a relatively firm product, yellowish white in colour and is pressed from the paste in variable proportions when manufacturing cocoa powder. Extra cocoa butter is sometimes added in the manufacture of block chocolate, to make it liquid enough to coat sweets and cakes.

COCONUT The fruit of the coconut palm, a tall tree probably originating in Melanesia, but now widely cultivated throughout the tropics. The coconut has a very hard woody shell and is enclosed in a thick fibrous husk. The shell is lined with a firm white pulp and the hollow centre contains a sweet milky white liquid which makes a refreshing drink. The pulp is rich in fat which is unlike other vegetable oils, high in saturated fat.

Used as food in southeast Asia and Polynesia from the earliest times, the coconut was discovered by the explorer Marco Polo, who described the Pharaoh's nut as a fruit full of favour, sweet as sugar and white as milk, providing at the same time both food and drink. A Portuguese doctor who made a detailed study of the coconut in the 16th century wrote. This fruit is called coquo because it has three pores on its surface, giving it the appearance of human being head. The first specimen to arrive in Paris was presented to the Academic Francaise by Charles Perrault in 1674.

A coconut can be opened either by cracking the shell with a hammer or by first piercing the two ends so that the liquid runs out and then heating it in the oven until it cracks, the pulp can then be extracted quite easily. The dried pulp is refined and deodorized to produce coconut butter, used as a cooking fat.

RECIPES

Coconut Cakes

Prepare a syrup using 200 g (7 oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) caster (superfine) sugar and 200 ml (7 fl oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) water. Whisk 4 egg yolks in a bowl over hot (but not boiling) water, then slowly pour in the sugar syrup, whisking constantly. When the yolks have almost doubled in volume, remove the bowl from the hot water and whisk until the mixture is cold. Make 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) fresh Chantilly cream, adding 1 teaspoon vanilla sugar and 2 tablespoons rum. Blend well, then add the egg-yolk mixture and 300 g (11 oz. 4 cups) fresh or desiccated (shredded) grated coconut. Pour into a deep sandwich tin (layer cake pan) and put in the freezer until the mixture is firm to the touch. Then remove the cake from the tin, cover with grated coconut and keep in the refrigerator until required.

Coconut preserve

Open some coconuts, extract the pulp and grate it. Prepare a syrup using 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) granulated sugar to 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{3}$ cups) water and flavour it with either vanilla extract or 1 teaspoon vanilla sugar. Mix together equal quantities of the grated pulp and the syrup and cook very gently until the jam becomes transparent. Pot as for jam.

Coconut pyramids

Open a coconut, extract the pulp and grate it. Add 75 g (3 oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) ground almonds. 150 g (5 oz. $\frac{2}{3}$ cup) sugar, 2 teaspoons vanilla sugar (or a few drops of vanilla extract) and 2 or 3 egg whites, depending on their size. Mix well together, then add another 3 egg whites, whisked to stiff peaks with a pinch of salt. Divide this mixture into portions about the size of tangerines, shape them into pyramids and arrange them on a buttered or oiled baking sheet. Bake in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for about 12 minutes.

COD a large fish, up to 1.8 m (6 ft) long, with an elongated powerful body, very pronounced fins and large head. It has a heavy whisker like barbel on its lower jaw. Its colour varies from greyish green to brown and it has dark spots on the back and sides and a whitish belly. Cod is found in the cold seas of the North Atlantic 0-10 °C (32-50 °F) The female is very fertile and can lay up to 5 million eggs. The eggs, known as roe, can be sold freshly boiled or smoked.

RECIPES

Braised cod a la flamande

Season slices of cod with salt and pepper. Butter an ovenproof dish and sprinkle with chopped shallots and parsley. Arrange the cod in the dish and just cover with dry white wine. Place a slice of peeled lemon on each piece of cod. Bring to the oil, then cook in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425 °F, gas 7) for about 15 minutes. Remove the fish and drain. Arrange the slices on the serving dish and keep warm. Reduce the juices by boiling, then add some pieces of butter, stir and pour the sauce over the cod. Sprinkle with roughly chopped parsley.

Cod braised in cream

Cut 800 g (1 ¾ lb) cod fillets into 5 cm (2 in) squares. Season with salt and pepper. Cook 150 g (5 oz, 2/3 cup) chopped onions in melted butter in a pan and then add the cod. Fry the pieces on all sides until firm. Add 200 ml (7 fl. oz. ¾ cup) dry white wine and reduce by three quarters. Add 200 ml (7 fl. oz. ¾ cup) double (heavy) cream, cover the pan and simmer slowly until the fish is nearly cooked. Remove the lid and reduce the cream over a high heat.

Cod in aspic

Prepare a fish aspic. Make a ratatouille with 3 tomatoes, 1 aubergine (eggplant) 2 courgettes (zucchini) 1 onion, 2 garlic cloves, 3 tablespoons olive oil, some thyme, bay leaves and basil. Dissolve 15 g (1/2 oz, 2 envelopes) gelatine in 4 tablespoons hot water over a pan of simmering water and add to the ratatouille. Lightly oil 4 ramekins and half fill them with the ratatouille. Set aside to cool and then place in the refrigerator. In the meantime, place the cod fillets in an ovenproof dish, add butter and white wine, and cook in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425 °F, gas 7) Arrange a piece of fillet in each ramekin, and cover with the fish aspic. Refrigerate until it is time to serve, remove from the moulds and serve chilled.

Cod with herbs

Coarsely chop ½ bunch flat leaf parsley, ½ bunch of fresh coriander (cilantro) and ½ bunch of fresh mint. Finely chop 2 white onions. Mix together. Prepare the sauce with 80 ml (3 fl. oz. 1/3 cup) lemon juice 60 ml (2 fl. oz. 1/4 cup) groundnut (peanut) oil, 4 teaspoons soy sauce, salt and pepper. Peel the tomatoes, cut into quarters, remove the seeds and cut into diamond shapes. Arrange them round the 4 plates and in the centre of each plate put 25 g (1 oz) spinach shoots. Steam 4 fillets of cod, 200 g (7 oz) each. Pour the sauce over the herb mixture. Place the fish on the spinach and pour the herb sauce over it.

Roast cod

Trim a cod weighing 1.5-1.8 kg (3 ¼ -4 lb) Season with salt and pepper, sprinkle with oil and lemon juice, and leave to steep for 30 minutes. Drain the cod, place it on a spit and brush with melted butter. Then roast before a brisk fire, basting frequently with melted butter oil, for 30-40 minutes. Arrange on a serving dish and keep hot. Deglaze the cooking residue in the pan with dry white wine, reduce and spoon the juice over the fish. The fish may also be roasted in the oven, provided that it is placed on a wire rack so that it does not lie in the cooking juice.

COEUR DE NEUFCHATEL A soft cow's milk cheese (45% fat) from Normandy with a red tinged crust, white and downy. Coeur de Neufchatel is a smooth, heart shaped cheese with an astringent, fruity flavour, weighing 165-300 g (5 ½ - 11 oz)

COFFEE The coffee tree, native to the Sudan and Ethiopia, but now widely cultivated, bears small red berries that contain the seeds. The word coffee comes from the Italian caffè, which is derived from the Turkish kabve and the Arabic quahwah. The Arabic word originally designated any stimulating drink.

RECIPES

Arabic coffee

Put 50 g (2 oz. 1/3 cup) very finely ground arabica coffee and 100g (4 oz. 1/2 cup) granulated sugar into a coffee pot that has a wide bottom and a narrow neck. Boil 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) water in a small saucepan and pour it into the coffee pot all at once. Heat the coffee pot until the coffee boils, stirring continuously. Remove the pot from the heat and then replace it. Repeat this procedure twice more. When the coffee boils for the third time, tap the bottom of the coffee pot sharply on a flat surface. The coffee ground will then begin to sink towards the bottom. Pour the coffee into cups, adding 1 teaspoon hot water to each cup. The grounds will then settle completely.

Coffee essence

Pour some boiling water over ground coffee placed in a filter, using 450 g (1 lb. 5 cups) coffee per 1 litre (1 3/4 pints, 4 1/3 cups) water. Collect the coffee and pour it through the filter 3 more times. The colour may be intensified by adding a little caramel.

Coffee ice cream

Blend together 6 eggs, 200 g (7 oz. 3/4 cup) caster (superfine) sugar and 3 tablespoons instant coffee to make a custard. Whip 200 ml (7 fl. oz. 3/4 cup) cold double (heavy) cream with a quarter of its volume of very cold milk and 1 tablespoon vanilla sugar. Fold the whipped cream gently into the cold custard and leave it to freeze in an ice-cream maker. The ice cream can be decorated with sugar coffee beans or coffee sugar crystals.

Coffee Syrup

Finely grind 500 g (18 oz. 5 1/2 cups) coffee, and pour 1.5 litres (2 3/4 pints 6 1/2 cups) boiling water very slowly over it. Add the hot coffee to 2.5 kg (5 1/2 lb. 11 cups) granulated sugar in a pan and dissolve over a very low heat to prevent it from boiling. Remove the syrup from the heat just before it reaches boiling point.

Coffee with burgundy marc

Put some very hot coffee into hot coffee pot. Add sugar, according to taste, and stir. Add a liqueur glass of Burgundy marc for each 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) coffee and stir again. Foam will form on the top of the coffee. Put 1 teaspoon crushed ice into each cup followed by the very hot coffee.

Ice coffee

Use 300 g (11 oz. 3 1/2 cups) freshly ground coffee and 750 ml (1 1/4 pints, 3 1/4 cups) boiling water. Pour into a bowl with 575 g (1 1/4 lb 2 1/2 cups) granulated sugar. Dissolve the sugar and chill the infusion. Add to the coffee 1 litre (1 3/4 pints, 4 1/3 cups) vanilla flavoured cold boiled milk and 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) single (light) cream. Serve chilled.

COGNAC A world famous brandy distilled from wine, made in the delimited region around Cognac in the Charente region of France. Distillation of the local wine began in the 17th century, when the market for both wine and salt, especially to the Dutch and Hanseatic League export markets, suffered a decline and was also at a disadvantage because of the popularity of Bordeaux wines. Distillation not only disposed of the surplus crop, but brandy as such was easier to transport.

History attributes the invention of Cognac to a certain Chevalier de la Croix-Marrons, who is said to have been the first to have had the idea of heating wine to capture its soul, He then put the distilled wine through the still once more. This distillation, at first considered to be a last resort in times of glut, came into general use. The brandy from the Cognac region soon gained an exceptional reputation for quality. The name Cognac was not applied to the brandy itself until 1783.

Today, Cognac is made exclusively by the distillation of white wine from selected grapes, mainly Ugni Blanc. The wine is made and distilled within the delimited area, which spread over two departments. Brandies distilled elsewhere have neither the same taste nor the same quality.

COLA NUT Also known as a kola nut. The seeds of the cola tree of Africa and South America. Rich in caffeine, they are chewed for their stimulating effects. The caffeine content is similar to that of coffee, but its tonic effect is less harsh and more prolonged.

In the United States and Europe, cola nuts are used to make biscuits (cookies) and more importantly, in the manufacture of non-alcoholic fizzy cola drinks. These drinks are made with natural fruit extracts and also contain caffeine and preservatives. They are drunk chilled and are sometimes flavoured with lemon. Colas are an ingredient in certain cocktails, particularly those containing whisky or rum. The oldest and best known is Coca-Cola, which was created in Atlanta in the United States in 1886.

COLBERT The name given to a method of preparing fish, especially sole, in which the fish is filleted and dipped in egg and breadcrumbs before frying. It is served with a flavoured butter, such as maitre d'hotel butter or Colbert butter. Colbert butter is also served with grilled meat, other grilled fish, fried oysters and softboiled eggs. Colbert sauce is used as an accompaniment to vegetables as well as grilled meat and fish. Finally, the name Colbert is also given to a chicken consommé, to an egg dish and to a dessert made with apricots.

All these preparations are probably dedicated to Jean Baptiste Colbert, a minister of Louis XIV, who employed Audiger as the head of his household.

RECIPES

Colbert butter

Add 1 tablespoon chopped tarragon and 1 tablespoon meat glaze to 200 g (7 oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) maitre d'hotel butter.

Colbert sauce

Blend 2 tablespoons meat glaze with 1 tablespoon water in a saucepan and bring to the boil. Remove from the heat and incorporate 125 g (4 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) softened butter. Season and add a generous pinch each of grated nutmeg and cayenne. Stir continuously while adding the juice of half a lemon, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley and 1 tablespoon Madeira.

Fried oysters Colbert

Shell the oysters and poach them in their own liquid. Drain them, remove the beards and allow to cool. Dip each oyster in milk and coat with flour. Deep fry in oil and arrange on a napkin. Garnish with lemon quarters and fried parsley. Serve with Colbert butter.

Sole Colbert

Remove the dark skin from the sole and slit the flesh on either side of the backbone. Raise the fillets and break the backbone in 2 or 3 places so that it may be easily removed after cooking. Dip in milk and coat in egg and breadcrumbs. Fry the sole, drain it and remove the backbone. Fill the cavity with Colbert butter. Serve on long dish and garnish with fried parsley.

COLBY The popular American hard pressed cow's milk cheese is dyed a deep orange yellow colour as for American Cheddar, but it is softer and more open, with a lacy texture and a milk flavour. Colby cheeses made in an elongated shape are known as Longhorn.

COLCANNON A very popular Irish dish made from mashed potatoes and green cabbage, mixed with butter or milk and strongly flavoured with chopped chives, parsley and pepper.

COLLAGE The French term for fining separating particles in suspension in young wine. This is done by adding a fining agent, according to the region and the wine, this may be egg white, albumen, gelatine or benetomite. The fining agent is mixed with the wine in cask or vat and attracts the particles to itself, so that the wine may then be racked off.

COLLATION Originally, a light meal eaten by Roman catholic on fasting days. The word comes from the Latin word collatio, meaning coming together. It marked a devotional meeting of monks that was followed by a light repast. A collation may also be used to mean a quick meal usually eaten outside normal mealtimes.

COLOMBO A mixture of spices that are often used in the French West Indies. It was imported by Ceylonese coolies who had come to work in the Caribbean and was named after Colombo, the capital city of Sri Lanka. Colombo powder is a mild variation on curry powder and contains garlic,, coriander. Indian wood saffron, curcuma, dried mango pulp and cinnamon.

COLOURING AGENTS Additives used in confectionery, cake making, dairy products and drinks. Their function is essentially a psychological one to give the products a more appetizing appearance, which can often mislead the consumer about the composition of the products.

The use of colouring agents in food is not a new innovation. In the Middle Ages, butter was coloured with marigold flowers, and even at the time their use was subject to certain regulations. Saffron, spinach and caramel have been used as colouring agents for many centuries.

Some colouring agents are natural or manufactured according to a natural formula, others are synthetic. The former are almost all of vegetable origin, except for cochineal and carmine, which are obtained from insects. The red azo dyes form the most important group of synthetic colouring agents. All additives have to be stated in lists of ingredients on packaging.

COMINEE In ancient times, a culinary term for dishes that contained cumin. This spice was widely used in the Middle Ages for seasoning soups, poultry dishes and fish dishes. Taillevent's Viandier gives recipes for cominee d'amandes cominee de gelines and cominee d'esturgeon.

RECIPE

Cominee de gelines

(from an ancient recipe) Boil some chickens in wine and water. Skim off the fat and remove the chicken. Beat some egg yolks, mix them with the cooking liquid from the chickens and add cumin. Replace the chickens.

COMMODORE A term used to describe a very elaborate garnish for poached fish, in which fish quenelles, crayfish tail crouquettes and mussels a la Villeroi are mixed together in a crayfish bisque.

Consomme commode is made with a fish stock thickened with arrowroot and garnished with pieces of poached clam and diced tomatoes cooked in the stock.

COMPOTE A preparation of fresh or dried fruit, cooked either whole or in pieces in sugar syrup. It does not keep for as long as jam.

Fresh fruit should be cooked by poaching it in syrup over a gentle heat, or else by fast boiling. A compote can be made with several different kinds of fruit. The fruit should be arranged in a fruit bowl or dish and served as a dessert. It may be served either slightly warm or chilled, accompanied by whipped cream or sprinkled with cinnamon, vanilla sugar or biscuit (cookie) crumbs. Fresh fruit compotes may be used to prepare rather more elaborate desserts, such as sundaes and mouses. This kind of fruit puree can also be used as an ingredient in turnovers, tarts and charlottes.

RECIPES

Apple compote

Prepare a syrup as for apricot compote (recipe below) Peel the apples, cut them into quarters, remove the pips (seeds) and cover them with lemon juice. Boil the syrup, add the apples remove as soon as they are tender. Serve either warm or cold.

Apricot compote

Halve the apricots, remove the stones (pits) and extract and blanch the kernels. Cook the fruit for about 20 minutes in syrup use 350 g (12 oz. 1 ½ cups) granulated sugar to 600 ml (1 pint 2 ½ cups) water. Arrange the apricot halves in a fruit bowl with half kernel on each pour the syrup over.

Baked apricot compote

Place some apricot halves in an ovenproof dish. Sprinkle them with sugar and bake in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F gas 4) for about 20 minutes Serve in a fruit dish.

Bake cherry compote

Stone (pit) the cherries, place them in a deep dish and sprinkle with caster (superfine) sugar to taste. Leave for 3-4 hours so that the juice runs out then cover and cook in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for about 20 minutes.

Bilberry compote

Dissolve 500 g (18 oz. 2 ¼ cups) caster (superfine) sugar in 200 ml (7 fl. oz, ¾ cup) water. Add a little grated lemon zests, and boil for 5 minutes. Clean 1 kg (2 ¼ lb 5 cups) bilberries (huckleberries) add them to the syrup and boil for 80-10 minutes. Drain the bilberries using a slotted spoon and place them in a bowl. Reduce the syrup by one-third and pour it over the bilberries. Serve well chilled. When prepared by this method, the bilberries can be used to make a tart.

CONDE Name given to various methods of preparing food which were dedicated to the French general, Conde the Great (1621-86) and his descendants by family chefs. Also sometimes referred to as a la Conde Savoury dishes are characterized by the presence of a puree of red kidney beans.

Condes, or Conde cakes, are small cakes made of puff pastry covered with a layer of royal icing with almonds.

The terms are also applied to cold desserts based on rice and poached fruit, classically, the fruit should be apricots in syrup, arranged in a crown around a cake of rice coated with an apricot and kirsh sauce and decorated with cherries and crystallized fruit. This basic recipe has many variations, using slices of pineapple, peaches or strawberries, but always including rice cooked in milk and a fruit sauce.

CONDIMENTS Food substances used to heighten the natural flavour of foods, to stimulate the appetite, to aid digestion or else to preserve certain products. The term condiment is used today to include spices, seasonings, sauces, fruit and various cooked or uncooked preparations. Strictly speaking, however, a seasoning is a substance added to food while it is being prepared, whereas a condiment, chosen to harmonize with the taste of the food, can be either an accompaniment or a preserving agent.

The custom of adding condiments to food is as ancient as cookery itself. Originally it was a means of preserving. Most condiments are of vegetable origin herbs, spices, dried or crystallized fruit, and aromatic vegetables, some, such as the Vietnamese nuoc-mam, are based on dried and pounded fish or shellfish.

CONFIT A piece of pork, goose, duck or turkey cooked in its own fat and stored in a pot, covered in the same fat to preserve it. The confit is one of the oldest forms of preserving food and is a specialty of south western France. Simin Palay, in Cuisine du pays, describes this speciality from the Basque and Bearn regions, Lean pork or a quarter of fowl is rubbed with salt, soaked in brine, then drained and dried and cooked slowly in fat with flavouring and seasonings, finally, it is put into a pot and stored in a cool dry place. Confit of goose or duck, fattened on maize is often prepared with a mixture of pork and poultry fats. If the pot is made of tin plate, the confit must always be well covered by fat.

RECIPES

Confit of goose

Clean the inside of a fat goose thoroughly and remove the bones, keeping the carcass whole. Cut into quarters. Place in a container and season very liberally with coarse salt, then leave in a cold place for 24 hours to allow the salt to penetrate thoroughly into the flesh. Cook in a large copper cauldron with 2 kg (4 ½ lb) goose fat for 2 hours. Make sure the fat simmers while cooking but do not allow it to boil. While the fat is still hot, strain it into a stoneware pot and place the pieces of goose in the fat so they are completely covered. Leave to cool and then cover the pot. To obtain an authentic confit, store in a cellar for 5-6 months. For confit of duck follow the same method.

Confit of goose a la bearnaise

Heat a quarter of preserved goose in its own fat and keep hot in a serving dish. Peel and slice some potatoes and fry them in the confit fat. Chop some parsley and garlic together, add to the potatoes and reheat. Surround the confit with the potatoes and serve very hot.

CONFRERIES Also known as orders and brotherhoods. In the Middle Ages in France, many of those involved with wine formed associations devoted to preserving local traditions and upholding the quality of their particular wines, in addition to acting as benevolent societies to assist members and their families in need. They exercised considerable control over the production and marketing of wines and spirits, but at the time of the French Revolution many ceased their operations, both because of the civic disturbance and because in many regions, the great estates and vineyards changed hands. But records and certain traditions were not quite lost. In Alsace, for example, where the Confrerie Saint Etienne was founded in the 14th century, the ban announced to growers that they could start picking their grapes.

CONGER EEL A common fish in the English Channel and the Atlantic. It is called sili mor in Britany, orratza in Gascony, it is also found in the Mediterranean, where it is known as fiela or fela. Its body is long and smooth and its skin is of a brownish grey colour without visible scales. It is a carnivore and has large jaws and strong teeth. Normally it measures 0.5 – 1.5 m (1 ½ -5 ft) and weighs 5-15 kg (11-35 lb) but it can reach 3 m (10 ft) and 50 kg (110 lb) The conger can be found on the market all the every round, either whole in pieces or sliced. The flesh, which is firm but rather tasteless, is particularly suitable for soups and matelotes. Slices cut between the middle of the body and the head can be roasted.

CONVERSATION A small pastry with an almond filling. According to the Dictionnaire de l'Academie des gastronomes, they were created at the end of the 18th century, taking their name from the title of a popular work. Les Conversations d'Emilie, by Mme d'Epainay (1774) They consist of covered puff pastry tarlets filled with a rum flavoured frangipane or with almond cream and topped by a layer of royal icing. The tartlets are decorated with thin bands of pastry crisscrossed over the top.

RECIPE

Conversations

Break 3 eggs, separating the yolks from the whites. Work 150 g (5 oz. 2/3 cup) butter into a paste with a wooden spatula, adding 150 g (5 oz. 2/3 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, then the 3 yolks one by one. Mix well, then add 175 g (6 oz. 1 ½ cups) ground almonds, 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) cornflour (cornstarch) and 1 teaspoon vanilla-flavoured sugar. Beat thoroughly to obtain a well blended mixture.

Cut 400 g (14 oz) puff pastry into 3 portions. 2 of them equal, the third smaller. Roll out the 2 equal portions into sheets and use one of them to line 8 greased tartlet moulds. Fill each tartlet with the almond cream and moisten the edges of the pastry with water. Then place the moulds close together and cover them with the second sheet of pastry. Pass the rolling pin over this, cutting the pastry off on the rims of the moulds.

Whisk 2 of the egg whites until stiff, adding 200 g (7 oz, 1 ¼ cups) icing (confectioner's) sugar. Spread this icing (frosting) over the tartlets. Roll out the remaining pastry, cut it into thin strips and intertwine these in diamond shapes on the icing. Leave for 15 minutes before cooking in a preheated oven at 190°C (375 °F, gas 5) for 30 minutes. Allow them to cool before serving.

COOKING The process of heating food so as to render it safe and palatable. While some foods have to be cooked before eating, others are usually consumed raw and many may be eaten either raw or cooked, depending on the result required. The reason for cooking are not always purely aesthetic, but they may be for food safety. Cooking can destroy natural toxins that make some raw foods poisonous dried kidney beans and other beans are a good example. Cooking also make food digestible.

The effect of cooking depends on the method used, the type of food and additional ingredients. Complex chemical changes take place during preparation and cooking to alter the appearance, texture, flavour and aroma of food.

Food may become tender or firm on cooking. Solid fats melts, oils become more fluid and foods with a high fat content, such as cheese, soften and with a high fat content, such as cheese, soften and may become runny. Other types of food soften may become runny. Others types of food soften vegetables and fruit become tender, then soft and they may break down, rice and grains.

COOKING BALL A perforated metal utensil of variable size consisting of two halves that open, either to enclose food that needs to be cooked in boiling water, or to immerse dried plants for infusion.

COOLER A deep cylindrical or oval receptacle made of glass, china or metal. Bottles are plunged into the iced or salted water in the container to keep cool. The cooler can was also be set on the table to serve certain foods which must be eaten very cold, such as caviar, it sometimes has a double bottom, which contains crushed ice.

Coolers have been in use since the Middle Ages, in the 17th century and 18th centuries they formed part of the table setting. Glasses, particularly champagne glasses, could be cooled in china receptacles with sloping deeply channeled sides in which the glasses were placed upside down.

COPPER A reddish metal used in the manufacture of many cooking utensils. It is an excellent conductor of heat and cooking pans with a copper base distribute heat evenly. Copper heats up and cools down rapidly and therefore enables greater control to be exercised in certain cooking methods. Although uncoated copper was popular for cooking utensils, especially in professional kitchens, the uncoated metal reacts with food and liquids, particularly acidic ingredients., and corrodes quickly, forming an oxide coating that is toxic when eaten in significant amounts or regularly.

COPRA The dried kernel of the coconut, from which an oil is extracted. This oil, called coconut oil or copra oil, is then refined and used in the manufacture of margarines.

COQUE ALA The French term for describing the familiar method of cooking a soft boiled egg, by immersing the whole egg for 3-4 minutes in boiling water and eating it from the shell. This expression is also applied to any food which is poached without peeling or indeed to any which is eaten directly from its skin, such as avocados or artichokes.

RECIPE

Avocado a la coque

Cut an avocado in half just before serving and remove the stone (pit) Pour into the centre a vinaigrette flavoured with chopped shallots, a mayonnaise to which a little lemon juice and tomato ketchup have been added or a tomato sauce with a dash of Worcestershire sauce.

COQUELET A young cock weighing 450-575 g (1-1 ¾ lb) its meat, which has scarcely had time to mature, is rather tasteless. It may be roasted, grilled (broiled) or fried in breadcrumbs, and requires a sauce with a strong flavour (lemon, green pepper). Young cocks should not be cut into pieces, they are generally cut into two lengthways.

RECIPE

Coquelets en crapaudine a l'americaine

Split and flatten 2 young cocks as spatchcocks. Chop 2-3 garlic cloves and some parsley. Add salt, 3 tablespoons oil, a good quantity of pepper, 2 teaspoons ground ginger and a pinch of cayenne. Cover the cocks inside and outside with this mixture, then the cocks inside and outside with this mixture, then marinate them for 1 hour. Grill (broil) briskly and serve them with a green salad or mixed salad.

CORKSCREW An implement used to open a bottle sealed by a cork. The standard corkscrew has a spiral thread, which can be flat or rounded and is usually nickel plated. The rounded stem is preferable because there is less risk of the cork crumbling. The spiral must be 6-8 cm (2 1/4- 3 1/2 in) long so that the cork which is quite long in a good bottle, is pierced all the way through. Its tip must be sharp and designed in such a way that it is not centered in the spiral.

There are numerous models of corkscrew, some fitted with a casing to protect the neck of the bottle, others with a lever or even with a gearing down system to limit the strain, but also to avoid moving the bottle too much. Some corkscrews are also fitted with a bottle opener and a blade for cutting the seal.

Another system operates with two blades of unequal length. Which are inserted between the neck and the cork, and this obviates the need to pierce the cork. There is also a device which pierces the cork and injects gas underneath. This has the effect of effortlessly forcing out the cork. It is only recommended for a crumbly cork which is in danger of breaking.

CORNERED BEEF Cured beef, of American origin, which may be sold in cans. Pieces of beef are cooked, preserved with salt or brine, and then canned with beef fat and jelly. From the end of the 19th century military slang gave the name bully beef to the preserved beef distributed by the army. During World War I, the corned beef salvaged from American stocks was known as bully beef. It can be eaten cold with salad, or heated up and served with an onion sauce., in the United States it is mostly eaten in a hash or sandwiches.

CORNET A cone shaped pastry. The cornets used as ice-cream cones are made from wafer biscuit. Filled cornets are usually made from puff pastry, cooked while rolled around cornet moulds, and then filled with confecitoners's custard. Chilboust cream of Chantilly cream and decorated with chopped crystallized fruit. Murat cornets are made from the mixture used for langues de chats, filled with sweetened whipped cream and sometimes decorated with candied violets.

The word is also used for a slice of ham or salmon rolled up filled with a cold preparation and served as an hors d'oeuvre.

RECIPES

Ham cornets with foie gras mouse

Roll up some small but fairly thick slices of ham into cornets. Fill them with foie gras mouse (using a piping bag). Arrange on a bed of lettuce or on a dish garnished with cubes of port flavoured aspic jelly.

Smoked salmon cornets with fish roe

Roll up some small slices of smoked salmon into cornets. Fill them with fish roe (caviar, salmon or lumpfish). Arrange them on a bed of shredded lettuce dressed with vinaigrette. Garnish with fluted lemon halves. The base of the cornet can be filled with a little cream mixed with a few drops of lemon juice and grated horseradish, or else this cream can be served in a sauceboat at the same time as the cornets, with hot blinis.

CORNISH PASTY A pastry turnover traditionally made with short pastry but often made using puff pastry. Filled with a mixture of diced beef, onions, potatoes and other root vegetables. Originally from the country of Cornwall in England, they were lunchtime snacks for miners. The twisted pastry at the ends of the turnover acted as handles for the men to hold, then discard when they were blackened by dirty fingers. Traditionally, large pasties were made with a savoury filling one side and sweet the other. In modern times, Cornish pasties are smaller and lighter, and served as a hot snack.

COTIGNAC A pink sweetmeat, popular in France, made from a sweetened quince paste. It is sold in small round boxes made of thin wood and its pink colour is due to the natural oxidation of the fruit while it is drying out. It can be homemade although the most famous cotignac is the one made industrially at Orleans. It is said that cotignac was made in France in the time of Joan of Arc, and her effigy is used to decorate the boxes, but there is no evidence of its existence before the time of Louix XI.

Quince paste has its origins in antiquity and ancient recipes indicate that it was formerly made with honey. Greek legend recounts how the nymphs offered it to Jupiter when he was a child. This has given rise to the popular 19th century tradition that to eat cotignac from Orleans benefited the minds of unborn children a good pretext for satisfying the craving of pregnant women for sweet things.

RECIPE

Cotignac

Wash and peel some quinces, remove the seed and tie them in a small piece of muslin (Cheese cloth). Cut the quinces into quarters and place them in a pan with a small amount of water about 5 tablespoons per 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) fruit together with the seeds in a muslin bag. Cook over a very low heat until the quinces are soft and squeeze the bag of seeds to obtain the maximum flavour. Remove the seeds and reduce the pulp to a puree.

Weigh the puree and pour it into a basin with 400 g (14 oz. 1 3/4 cups) sugar to each 500 g (18 oz. 2 1/4 cups) puree. Reduce the puree, stirring continuously with a wooden spoon, until a small ball of the mixture is able to retain its shape. Spread the paste evenly on a oiled baking sheet and leave to dry out, preferably in a very cool oven. Cut the paste into squares and coat with caster (superfine) sugar. Pack into boxes, separating the layer with greaserproof(wax) paper, and store in a dry place.

COTRIADE A fish soup from the coast of Britany, prepared with butter or lard (shortening) onions and potatoes. The word is said to have been derived from cotet, one of the pieces of wood on which the cauldron rested when the fish was cooked over a wood fire. Anotehr possibility is that it is derived from the French word coterie an old name for the ship's crew, who were given certain fish as food. Thus, a cotriade would have been made with the more common types of fish, the more rare or expensive ones, such as turbot or sole, being reserved for sale.

RECIPE

Contriade

The fish should be selected from the following sardines, macherel, sea bream (porgy) angler, hake, cogner eel, gurnard and horse macherel (saurel) (for a more delicate dish, do not allow the proportion of oily fish, such as sardines and macherel, to exceed a quarter of the total weight). 1 or 2 large fish heads may also be included.

Cut 3 good sized onions into quarters and cook in a large pan with 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter or lard (shortening) until they are pale golden. Add 3 litres (5 pints, 13 cups) water and 6 peeled sliced potatoes. Flavour with thyme, bay leaf and other herbs. Bring to the boil and cook for about 15 minutes, then add 1.5 kg (3 1/4 lb) cleaned pieces of fish. Cook for a further 10 minutes. Pour the stock from the resulting soup on to some slices of bread and serve the fish and potatoes separately, with a sauceboat of vinaigrette.

COTTAGE CHEESE A fresh cow's milk cheese (4-8% fat content). Cottage cheese has a soft, more or less granular consistency and an acid taste.

COULIS A liquid puree of cooked seasoned vegetables or shellfish . It may be used to enhance the flavour of a sauce, it may itself be used as a sauce, or it may be used as an ingredient in soup. Fruit coulis are sauces made with raw or cooked fruit. Red fruit strawberries or yellow fruit may be used the sauces are served as an accompaniment to hot or cold desserts, including ice creams.

In the past, sauces of any kind were called coulis and were prepared in advance using a type of funnel known as a couloir.

RECIPES

Fresh fruit coulis

Prepare 1 kg (2 1/4 lb) fresh fruit (apricots, stawberries, peaches, redcurrants or any other suitable fruit in season) Chop into pieces where necessary and puree in a blender with some caster (superfine) sugar use 575 –800 g (1 1/4 -1 3/4 lb, 2 1/2 - 3 1/2 cups) depending on the acidity of the fruit). Add the sugar a little at a time while blending.

Raspberry coulis

Sort, clean and wipe 1 kg (2 1/4 lb) raspberries. Reduce to a puree in a blender together with about 500 g (18 oz, 2 1/4 cups) caster (superfine) sugar.

Tomato coulis

Choose firm ripe tomatoes. Cover them with boiling water and allow to stand for about 30 seconds, then peel them. Halve the tomatoes and remove their seeds. Sprinkle the cut surfaces of the tomatoes with salt and turn them over so that the juice drains away. Then puree them in a blender with a little lemon juice and 1 teaspoon caster (superfine) sugar for each 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) tomatoes used. After blending, reduce the resulting puree further by boiling it for a few minutes (this is not always necessary) Press through a sieve, season with salt and pepper, and cool.

COUPE A rounded receptacle of varying size, individual coupes are cups or goblets of glass, stainless steel or silver plate, often on a stem, in which ice cream, fruit salads or similar desserts are served. These desserts themselves are also known as coupes. They may be simple or elaborate, coated with syrup or chocolate sauce, and decorated with whipped cream, crystallized fruit, biscuits or wafers. Coupes made with ice cream are known as sundaes in Britain and the United States.

The champagne coupe is a stemmed glass goblet that is wider than it is high. Large coupes, with or without a stem, are used for arranging fresh fruit, fruit salads and desserts.

RECIPES

Apricot coupes

Soak some diced fresh or canned apricots and some apricot halves in brandy. Divide the diced fruit among some sundae dishes (2 tablespoons per dish) Cover with layer of apricot water ice, smooth out the surface and top with an apricot half and some fresh split almonds. Sprinkle with a few drops of brandy or kirsch.

Coupes a la cevenole

Prepare 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) vanilla ice cream, as described in the recipe below. Macerate 300 g (11 oz. 1 ½ cups) split marrons glaces in 200 ml. (7 fl. oz. ¾ cup) rum for 1 hour. Chill 6 sundae dishes in the refrigerator. Fifteen minutes before serving, divide the marrons glaces among the sundae dishes and cover with vanilla ice cream. Decorate the dishes with whipped cream using a piping bag. Each dish can be topped with crystallized (candied) violets.

Coupes malmaison

Prepare 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) vanilla ice cream, as described in the recipe below. Remove the seeds from 400 g (14 oz) Muscat grapes, plunge them into a saucepan of boiling water and then immediately into cold water, then drain and peel them. Boil together 3 tablespoon water with 150 g (5 oz. 2/3 cup) caster (superfine) sugar until the sugar just caramelizes. Divide the ice cream among 4 sundae dishes, cover with the grapes and top with the caramel.

Hawaiian cream coupes

Prepare 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) almond milk and keep it in a cool place. Wash pat dry and hull 300 g (11 oz. 2 ½ cups) strawberries, cutting large ones in half. Peel and dice the flesh of a fresh pineapple. Line some sundae dishes with the strawberries and diced pineapple and completely cover with the almond milk. Top with a layer of raspberry coulis about 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup). Decorate each dish with piped rosettes of whipped cream.

Jamaican coupes

Prepare 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) coffee ice cream, having added 1 tablespoon coffee extract to the boiling milk. Chill 6 sundae dishes in the refrigerator. Clean 165 g (5 ½ oz. 1 cup) currants and macerate them in 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) rum for 1 hour. Peel a pineapple and cut the flesh into small dice. Divide the diced pineapple among the sundae dishes and cover with coffee ice cream. Sprinkle the drained currants over the top.

Pear and caramel cream coupes

Prepare 250 g (9 oz. 1 ¼ cups) caramel cream and keep in a cool place. Divide 500ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) almond milk among 8 sundae dishes and place in the refrigerator. Divide 16 diced canned pear halves among the dishes, cover with caramel cream and put into a cool place. A few moments before serving, decorate with piped rosettes of whipped cream.

Pineapple coupes

Cut some fresh or canned pineapple into dice and diamond shapes and macerate them for 1 hour in white rum. Place 2 tablespoons diced pineapple in each dish, cover with vanilla ice cream and smooth out the surface. Decorate each dish with the pineapple diamonds and sprinkle with a few drops of the white rum.

Vanilla ice cream for coupes

For about 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) ice cream, use 4 egg yolks, 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) milk, 1 vanilla pod (bean) 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar, and 2 tablespoon double (heavy) cream. Split the vanilla pod in two, add it to the milk, and bring to the boil. Work the egg yolks into the sugar with a wooden spoon. When the mixture lightens in colour, add the boiling milk, little by little, whisking constantly. Heat the mixture, add the cream and continue to heat until the mixture is thick enough to coat the wooden spoon. Strain the mixture into a bowl and allow to cool, stirring continuously. Pour into an ice-cream churn and operate this until the ice cream is frozen.

COURGETTE (ZUCCHINI) A variety of marrow (summer squash) usually eaten when young and immature. It has a fine, shiny outer skin, which is edible, and firm flesh with a delicate taste. For a long time it was used primarily in Mediterranean countries, but it is now widely popular and available throughout the year.

Courgettes vary in size from baby vegetables with their flowers still intact and small, firm and fine textured examples, to large, slightly woolly produce. As well as the usual long green skinned vegetables, there are yellow courgettes and round courgettes.

*Preparing and cooking. The peel may be left on or the courgettes may be very finely peeled, leaving a bright green layer covering the creamy white flesh. They may be thickly or thinly sliced, or cut into wedges, sticks or fine julienne. Courgettes can be steamed, braised, sweated in a little butter, fried, deep fried or cooked as fritters. They are equally delicious baked, stuffed, coated in sauce or cooked au gratin.

Courgettes are also good raw cut into fingers or wedges to be served with crudites or used in salads. Coarsely grated courgette may be tossed with a little vinaigrette and chopped fresh herbs or pared ribbons of courgette go well in green salads.

Courgette flowers are a delicacy when deep fried in a light batter and served with lemon juice. They may be stuffed and fried as fritters or steamed.

RECIPES

Preparation of courgettes

Remove the stalks from the courgettes and wipe them. Depending on the recipe, courgettes may or may not be peeled (it is essential to peel them for purees, but optional for fritters). Strips of peel may be removed from the courgettes to make them look decorative in a ratatouille, for example.

Courgette flowers with truffles

Chop 500 g (18 oz) button mushrooms and sprinkle them with the juice of ½ lemon. Melt 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter in a frying pan and add 1 tablespoon chopped shallots. As soon as the butter begins to sizzle, add the mushrooms, season with salt, stir and cook for 3-4 minutes. Drain in a fine colander over a small saucepan and reserve the liquid. Return the mushrooms to the pan and dry over a high heat, then reduce the heat to the minimum setting or turn it off. Pour 5 tablespoon single (light) cream into a

Mixing bowl, add 2 egg yolks and stir the mixture with a whisk. Add to the mushrooms, stirring with the whisk, and cook very gently for 2 minutes. Do not overheat or boil the mixture as it will curdle. Check the seasoning and allow to cool.

Drain 6 black truffles (each 15 g ½ oz) and add their juice to that of the mushrooms. Taking great care not to damage them, wipe clean 6 courgette (zucchini) flowers without washing them. Open up the petals and put 2 teaspoons of the mushroom mixture inside each flower. Put 1 truffle in the middle of each flower and close up the petals again. Place the flowers in the top part of a couscous pan or steamer and cover with foil. Trim and wash 500 g (18 oz) tender spinach or mache, and set aside.

Reduce the mushroom juice until only 3 tablespoons remains. Whisk in 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) butter cut into small pieces. Season with salt and pepper and transfer to a bain marie.

Steam the flowers for 15 minutes. Arrange the uncooked spinach or mache on a dish and place the courgette flowers on it. Pour the butter sauce over the courgette flowers. Sprinkle with chervil and serve.

Courgette puree

Peel and slice the courgettes, place them in a saucepan and just cover them with water. Add some salt and 3-4 garlic cloves and cook them, covered for about 15 minutes. If the resulting puree is very watery, dry it carefully on the heat without allowing it to stick to the bottom of the pan. Add some butter, Pour the puree into a vegetable dish and sprinkle with chopped herbs, or spread it in a greased gratin dish, top with grated Gruyere cheese and butter, and brown in the oven.

Courgette salad

Peel the courgettes and cut the flesh into fine strips. Toss with a little well-seasoned vinaigrette and sprinkle with a mixture of chopped chervil and tarragon. Serve at once.

Courgette salad with lime

Lightly peel and coarsely grate the courgettes. Toss with a little lime juice and the grated zest of ½ -1 lime. Add a generous sprinkling of snipped chives and a little chopped fresh coriander leaves. Season to taste, toss well and serve at once.

Courgettes a la nicoise

Partially peel the courgettes, slice them thinly and saute them in oil with an equal quantity of peeled tomatoes. Add some parsley and garlic, and season with salt and pepper.

Courgettes a la provencale

Do not peel the courgettes. Cut them into long thick slices, sprinkle them with salt and leave for 15 minutes. Then pat them dry, coat them with flour and saute them in oil in a frying pan. Brush a gratin dish with oil, cover the bottom with rice cooked in meat stock, then add some of the courgette slices. Saute some slices of tomato and onion in oil and add chopped parsley and garlic. Place the onion and tomato slices in the gratin dish on the courgettes and cover with the remaining courgettes. Sprinkle with grated cheese and brown in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450°F, gas 8)

Glazed courgettes

Cut the courgettes into small uniform olive-shaped pieces. Blanch them lightly in salted water and drain them. Place them in a saute pan with 2 tablespoons butter, a pinch of salt and a small amount of sugar. Cover with cold water, bring to the boil and cook, covered, over a low heat until the liquid has almost completely evaporated. Saute the courgettes in this reduced sauce.

Glazed courgettes may be used as a garnish for poached fish or roast, fried or sauteed white meats.

Sauteed courgettes

Slice the courgettes and toss them with a little flour. Season with salt and saute in oil or butter. Sprinkle with freshly ground black pepper and a squeeze of lemon juice. Serve immediately.

Stuffed courgettes

Cut the courgettes in half lengthways and hollow them out. Prepare the following stuffing cook some rice and drain. Mix with minced (ground) lamb, chopped onion and fennel softened in butter. Crushed garlic and seasoning.

Fill the courgette halves with the stuffing and place them close together in a greased ovenproof dish. Cover and cook in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for about 1 hour or until the filling is cooked and the courgettes are tender. Uncover for the final 20 minutes. Serve coated with tomato sauce.

COURT BOUILLON A spiced aromatic liquor or stock used mainly for cooking fish and shellfish, but also for preparing white offal and certain white meats. Wine and vinegar may sometimes be added to the court-bouillon, which is usually prepared in advance and allowed to cool. Food cooked in the liquid absorbs the flavour of the ingredients. Freeze dried court bouillon is available in France, it is easy to use and time saving as it is simply diluted with water.

RECIPES

Cour-bouillon eau de sel

This is the easiest kind of court-bouillon to prepare as it consists only of salted boiling water – use 15 g (1/2 oz. 1 tablespoon) coarse sea salt per 1 litre (1 3/4 pints, 4 1/2 cups) water. It is not usually flavoured, but a little thyme and a bay leaf may be added if desired.

Court-bouillon with milk

Add 1 finely shredded onion, a sprig of thyme, salt and pepper to equal quantities of milk, and water (the court-bouillon should cover the food that is to be cooked) it is used principally for cooking flatfish, such as brill or turbot, or smoked or salted fish, such as smoked haddock or salt cod (in the latter case to do not add salt).

COUSCOUS A traditional North African ingredient made with hard wheat semolina and sometimes with barley or, in Tunisia, with green wheat. It was discovered by the French during the reign of Charles X during the conquest of Algeria. There is still some doubt about the original meaning of the word, which is derived from the Arabic kouskous. Some experts believe that the word was originally used for the food in a bird's beak used to feed its young. Leon Isnard, who considers that it is the Gallic form of rac keskes maintains that it is derived phonetically from the words koskos, keuscass, koskosou and kouskous, used in different parts of North Africa from a cooking pot in which semolina is steamed. Made of earthenware or alpha glass, the pot, which is pierced with hole, sits on top of another similar pot containing water or stock. Other experts believe that the sound of the word describes the noise made by the steam as it passes through the holes in the pot.

RECIPES

Preparing traditional couscous

In country villages, where couscous is simply a dish of semolina flavoured with rancid butter (smen) and served with whey, the women prepare the grain in the traditional way by skillfully rolling it by hand. Hard-wheat semolina and flour are placed in a wooden dish (kestr0 or in an earthenware dish, together with a small amount of cold salted water. By boiling the semolina, the flour progressively binds itself around each grain. The grain is then sieved, which enables the particles to be sorted according to their size.

Cooking traditional couscous

The grain is steamed in a couscous pan. Fill the pot two thirds with water or stock and bring it quickly to the boil. Then fit the keskes (steamer) containing the semolina on to the pot. Tie a damp cloth around the part where the keskes and the pot meet so that no steam escapes. After about 30 minutes remove the semolina from the couscous pan, put it in large round dish with a raised edge, coat the grains with oil and break up the lumps with the hands. Put the couscous back in the keskes to steam it and repeat the operation twice more. Without forgetting to work the grain between each steaming. After the third steaming, arrange small knobs of butter on the semolina and serve.

During the second and third steaming, vegetables or meat are added to the pot and raisins are mixed with the grain.

COW The female of the domestic cattle from the time of its first calving. The cow is generally bred for producing milk and calves, but in France a good proportion of beef comes from milch cows which are no longer needed for milk. Such cows are fattened up for the butcher at an early age, giving meat which is often more tender and has more flavour than that from a bullock.

COZIDO A type of Portuguese and Spanish stew consisting of chorizo sausage, Cabbage, carrots, chick peas, white haricot beans, pig's ears, and a piece of charcuterie similar to a black pudding or white pudding. With the addition of vermicelli, the cooking liquid is eaten as soup.

CRAB One of a large group of crustaceans characterized by a wide flat body protected by a hard shell. Crabs are decapods, having five pairs of legs, these vary in size according to the species, but the first pair (pincers) are generally much larger and equipped with strong claws.

In general, crab may not be as highly rated as lobster but its white meat is fine and delicate while the brown meat found in the body, and including the liver and roe, is rich and full flavoured. When buying live crab, look for a plump and heavy creature. Male crabs have larger claws and provide more meat than females. To determine the sex, check the tail or abdomen which is curled under the crab, the female has wide rounded tail flap while the male has narrow, more pointed tail. Crab is usually sold cooked and often dressed. When buying whole cooked crab, shake the shell and reject it if it contains water.

Crabmeat is available frozen or canned. Canned Russian chatka crab from the cold waters of the Kamachatka peninsula is a world class delicacy, when referred to as extra this indicates that the can contains 100% claw meat. Canned crab claws from other species are also available. By way of complete contrast, crab sticks are a manufactured fish product that bear no resemblance to crab and they are to be avoided.

RECIPES

Crab a la bretonne

Plunge a live crab into boiling lemon or vinegar court-bouillon. Cook for 8-10 minutes, then drain and cool. Remove the legs and claws and take out the contents of the shell. Clean the shell thoroughly. Cut the meat from the shell in two, put it back in the clean shell and arrange the legs and claws around. Garnish with parsley or lettuce leaves and serve with a mayonnaise.

Crab feuilletes

Prepare 500 g (1 lb 2 oz) puff pastry. Wash and scrub 2 crabs, plunge them into boiling water for 2 minutes and then drain them. Pull off the claws and the legs, crack the shells and cut the bodies in two. Remove the dead man's fingers and discard. Chop 1 carrot, 1 onion, 1 shallot, white part of ½ leek and 1 celery stick.

Heat 40 g (1 ½ oz, 3 tablespoons) butter in a saucepan, add the pieces of crab, then the chopped vegetables and cook, stirring frequently, until the crab shell turns red. Add 3 tablespoons heated cognac and flame. Then add 1 bottle dry white wine, 1 generous tablespoon tomato puree (paste), a piece of dried orange peel, salt, pepper, a dash of cayenne pepper, 1 crushed garlic clove and a small bunch of parsley. Bring just to the boil, cover the pan and cook for 10 minutes. Remove the crab and cook the sauce, uncovered, for a further 10 minutes. Shell the piece of crab to remove the meat. Puree the sauce in a blender and rub it through a sieve, then mix half of it with the crab meat. Allow to cool completely.

Roll out the pastry to a thickness of 5 mm (¼ in) Cut it into rectangles measuring about 13 x 8 cm (5 x 3 in) and score their tops in criss-cross patterns with the tip of a knife. Glaze with beaten egg and cook in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F, gas 8) for about 20 minutes. When the feuilletés are cooked, slice off their tops. Place the bases on serving plates and top with the crab mixture. Replace the pastry tops and serve with the remaining sauce.

Crab Salad

Clean and cook 2 large crabs. Wash, scald and cool 500 g (18 oz, 4 ½ cups) bean sprouts and dry them. Mix 4 tablespoons mayonnaise, 1 tablespoon ketchup or very concentrated sieved tomato puree and at least 1 tablespoon brandy. Mix the crabmeat, the bean sprouts and the sauce and serve on a bed of lettuce leaves. Sprinkle with chopped herbs.

Crabs in broth

Chop a large onion. Peel and roughly chop 4 tomatoes. Peel and crush 2 large garlic cloves. Plunge 2 crabs in salted boiling water, cook for 3 minutes, then remove the claws and legs and take out the contents of the shell. Crush the empty shell and the intact legs and brown them in 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) fat or 2 tablespoons oil together with the onion. Add the tomatoes, a large pinch of ground ginger, a pinch of saffron, a pinch of cayenne, the garlic and a sprig of thyme. Moisten with plenty of stock cover and simmer very gently for about 2 hours.

Strain through a sieve, pressing well to obtain a fairly thick sauce. Adjust the seasoning. Crush the claws and remove the flesh, cut the flesh from the shell in four, then brown all the flesh together in fat or oil in a sauté pan. Pour the sauce over the top, bring back to the boil and cook for 5-6 minutes. Serve in a soup tureen, accompanied with rice à la créole.

Staffed crabs au gratin

Wash and brush some crabs. Plunge them in court bouillon with lemon. Bring back to the boil, cook for about 10 minutes, then drain and leave to cool. Detach the claws and legs and remove their meat. Take out all the meat and creamy parts from the shells, discarding any gristle. Crumble or dice the meat finely. Wash and dry the shells.

Mix the creamy parts with a few spoonfuls of Mornay sauce and spread this mixture over the bottom of each shell. Then fill with diced or crumbled crabmeat and top with Mornay sauce. Finally, sprinkle with grated cheese, pour on some melted butter, and bake in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F, gas 9) until the surface is brown.

CRAQUELIN A small light crunchy cake or biscuit. It can be a dry petit four (a speciality of Saint-Malo, Binic, Vendée and Beaume-les-Dames), a sort of echaude or a cake of unrisen unsweetened dough made into various shapes, Craquelins formerly resembled three cornered hats or eggs. The word, known as early as 1265, derives from the Dutch crakeline.

RECIPE

Craquelins as petits fours

Knead 250 g (9 oz, 2 ¼ cups) plain (all-purpose) flour with 125 g (4 ½ oz, ½ cup) butter, 2 egg yolks, 3 tablespoons cold milk, 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) caster (superfine) sugar and a generous pinch of salt. Leave the dough to rest for 2 hours, then roll it out to a thickness of 1.5 cm (5/8 in) Cut it into 5 cm (2 in) squares, arrange the squares on a baking sheet, glaze them with egg and bake in a preheated oven 240 °C (475 °F, gas 9) until golden brown. Sprinkle with vanilla-flavoured sugar when cooked.

CRAYFISH A freshwater crustacean resembling a small lobster, the species found in Europe growing to 15-20 cm (6-8 in) long.

During the late 19th and 20th centuries, crayfish became rare in Europe as a result of overfishing, pollution and disease. However, stocks have returned to some area and crayfish are also farmed. Different species fished in France include the redclawed crayfish found particularly in the Auvergne, the smaller white clawed variety, a mountain stream variety, and the comparatively newly introduced American species.

The American crayfish native to California is known as the signal crayfish for its blue green stripes on the pincers. Being more resilient than the original European species, this crayfish is now stocked in Sweden and Germany. The Madagascar crayfish is one of the largest species and the Murray River crayfish of Australia is the second largest type, growing to 50 cm (20 in) long. The Marron is another species native to Australia and subject to farming in order to protect the natural stocks.

RECIPES

Crayfish a la bordelaise

Prepare a finely diced mirepoix of vegetables. Toss 24 crayfish in melted butter and season with salt, pepper and a little cayenne. Pour brandy over the crayfish and set alight, then just cover with dry white wine. Add the vegetable mirepoix and cook together for a maximum of 10 minutes. Drain the crayfish and arrange them in a deep dish. Keep hot. Bind the cooking stock with 2 egg yolks, then beat in 40 g (1 ½ oz. 3 tablespoons) butter. Adjust the seasoning to give the sauce a good strong flavour. Cover the crayfish with this sauce and serve at once, piping hot.

CREAM A dairy product consisting of the part of milk, rich in fat, which has been separated by skimming or otherwise. Often an increase in the thickness of cream denotes an increase in fat content, but this is not always true as the viscosity of cream can be controlled by manufacturing processes, giving a variation in the thickness of creams of the same fat content. For example, double cream is available in either pouring or spooning consistencies.

Originally the cream was separated from the milk by gravity. When milk is left to stand in a vessel, fat globules cluster or aggregate and, being lighter than the rest of the milk, float to form a layer of cream. This can be skimmed off by hand.

CREAM SOUP A thickened, smooth soup enriched with milk and/ or cream. Traditionally, cream soups are based on a roux of fat and flour with stock and milk added. This is used to cook the main ingredients for the soup until tender. The soup is then pureed or pressed through a sieve and enriched with cream before serving. Alternatively, a white sauce may be used or the soup can be thickened with flour, rice flour or cornflour. Root vegetables, such as potatoes or celeriac, may be pureed with liquid to thicken the soup. Breadcrumbs also give a creamy consistency. The basic ingredient can be fish or shellfish, poultry, vegetables or grains. Bright herbs, such as parsley, chives or chervil, bring colours to pale cream soups and crisp garnishes, such as croutons, provide contrasting texture.

RECIPES

Traditional basic cream soups

Shred and blanch the chosen vegetable, then cook it in butter in a covered pan, using 40-50 g (1 ½ -2 oz. 3-4 tablespoons) butter per 500 g (18 oz.) vegetables. Prepare 750 ml (1 ¼ pints, 3 ¼ cups) white sauce by adding 900 ml (1 ½ pints, 1 quart) milk to a white roux of 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter and 40 g (1 ½ oz. 6 tablespoons) plain (all-purpose) flour. Mix this sauce with the lightly cooked vegetables and simmer gently for 12-18 minutes depending on the vegetable used. Puree in a food processor or blender, few tablespoons of white consommé (or milk if the soup is to be meatless) Heat and adjust the seasoning. Add 200 ml (7 fl. oz. ¾ cup) single (light) cream and stir while heating.

Enriching with cream and egg yolks

To enrich a soup in the final stages, just before serving, beat 2 egg yolks with 150 ml (¼ pint, 2/3 cup) single (light) cream until smooth. Stir in a ladleful of the hot soup. Reduce the heat under the soup to ensure that it is not boiling, then stir in the egg yolk and cream mixture. Cook gently for 1-2 minutes, stirring, but do not allow the soup to boil or the egg and cream will curdle.

Cream of asparagus soup

Following the recipe for traditional basic cream soups, blanch 400 g (14 oz) asparagus tips and cook them in butter in a covered pan. Add 750 ml (1 ¼ pints, 3 ¼ cups) white sauce and puree in a food processor or blender. Do not cook the asparagus and béchamel together, but reheat and season the soup before serving.

CREAMS Sweet preparations with the consistency of cream. The term for a wide variety of desserts and dessert toppings or accompaniment, creams may be based on custards or sweet sauces, enriched with cream or lightened with whipped cream. Whipped desserts, such as zabaglione or syllabub, are classed as creams.

Alternatively, creams may be prepared from set mixtures, for example with gelatine or melted chocolate. Bavarian cream is an example of a custard mixture lightened with whipped cream, usually with an additional setting agent, such as gelatine or melted chocolate.

A cooked sauce, thickened with flour or arrowroot, may form the base for a cream as can a fruit puree. Fruit fools, purees of cooked fruit lightened and enriched with custard and/or whipped cream, are also included in this category.

Although traditionally enriched with milk or cream, yogurt or fromage frais may be used for contemporary, lighter results. Similarly creamy mixtures resembling dairy creams can be prepared from bean curd or by grinding and pureeing plain nuts with a little fruit juice, typically apple juice.

RECIPES

Almond cream

Beat 2-3 whole eggs as for an omelette and put them aside. Beat 150 g (5 oz. 1 cup) blanched or ground almonds with the same weight each of sugar and of butter until pale and creamy. When the mixture is thoroughly blended, beat in the eggs one by one.

Caramel cream for decorating desserts

Cook 200 g (7 oz. ¾ cup) caster (superfine) sugar in 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) water to obtain a golden caramel. Pour 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) double (heavy) cream into a large deep basin, sprinkle it with the caramel, and whisk. Then transfer the mixture to a saucepan and cook over a gentle heat. Meanwhile work 225 g (8 oz. 1 cup) butter with a spatula in the deep basin until soft. Test a drop of the caramel cream in a bowl of cold water, if it forms a firm ball, the cream is cooked. Then pour it over the butter, whipping briskly. Set aside in a cool place until used.

Lemon cream

For 8 people, use 2 lemons, 5 eggs, 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) butter and 200 g (7 oz. 1 ½ cups) icing (confectioner's) sugar. Grate the rind from one of the lemons. Then squeeze both lemons and strain the juice. Whisk the eggs with a fork. Melt the butter over a very gentle heat, add the sugar and lemon juice and bring to the boil. Sprinkle the whisked eggs with this mixture, whisking quickly to obtain a very smooth cream. Return to the saucepan, add the grated lemon zest and bring to the boil over a gentle heat, whisking all the time. Pour the lemon cream into a bowl and leave to cool before placing it in the refrigerator.

French Butter Creams

French butter cream or creme au beurre may be used to sandwich and coat layered cakes or gateaux. It can be piped and used for decoration.

Coffee crème au beurre

Add coffee essence (extract) or instant coffee to the milk used when making a custard base. To flavour cream made with sugar syrup, blend the coffee essence or instant coffee with cream, using 1 teaspoon coffee essence to 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) double (heavy) cream, the mixture should become homogeneous when heated.

Praline crème au beurre

Blend some finely crushed praline into the prepared cream, using 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) praline for 300 ml. (11 fl. Oz. 1 2/3 cups) cream.

CRECY Any of various dishes that contain carrots. Puree Crecy is a carrot puree used as a base for a soup and as a garnish for various dishes, including poached eggs, omelette and fillets of sole. In consomme Crecy, the carrots are shredded into a brunoise, while for tournedos Crecy they are turned and glazed.

It is not known whether the name derives from the produce of Crecy-la-Chapelle or Crecy-en-Ponthieu in Somme,

RECIPES

Artichokes Crecy

Prepare 12 very small fresh artichokes and put them in a generously buttered saute pan. Turn 800 g (1 ¾ lb) small new carrots and add them to the saute pan. Season with salt and a pinch of sugar. Moisten with 4 tablespoons water, cover and cook slowly for about 40 minutes. Add 1 tablespoon unsalted butter just before serving.

Crecy soup

Scrape 500 g (18 oz) very tender carrots, slice thinly and cook them with 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) butter in a covered pan. Add 1 tablespoon shredded onion, pinch of salt and ½ teaspoon sugar. When the vegetables are soft, add 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) beef or chicken consomme, bring to the boil and add 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) rice. Cook slowly with the lid on for about 20 minutes, then put it through a blender and strain. Add a few more spoonfuls of consomme, heat and add 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter. Adjust the seasoning. Serve with small croutons fried in butter.

Fillets of sole Crecy

Wash, clean and fold up the fillets of sole. Poach them in a fish fumet for 5 minutes, drain them and arrange on a long dish. Strain the stock, reduce and add 2 tablespoons bechamel sauce and the same amount of carrot puree. Mix well and heat. Coat the fillets with this sauce and garnish them with very small glazed new carrots.

CREMANT This term was used to describe champagne wines with less atmosphere pressure than fully sparkling champagne, but it is now reserved for the finest French sparkling wines made by the traditional method. The principal sources of Cremant are Alsace, Die, Bourgogne, Loire, Limoux and Bordeaux.

CRÈME A sweet liqueur with a syrup consistency. Crème are obtained by soaking various substances in brandy or a spirit containing sugar syrup, fruit (pineapple, bananas, blackcurrants, strawberries, tangerines, sloes, raspberries) various plant parts (vannilla, mint, cocoa, tea, coffee) or flowers (violet, rose) These liqueurs were fashionable in the 19th century and often had exotic name, such a s crème de Barbade and crème civole, cremes are usually drunk as a digestant in small glasses. They are also included in cocktails and sometimes served as an aperitit with ice and water.

The French word crème is also used tin a culinary context for cream soups, for dairy cream and for a wide variety of sweet preparations.

CRÈME BRULEE A dessert consisting of a rich custard of egg yolks, sugar and cream, often flavoured, which is set by cooking in the oven. The chilled custard is covered with brown sugar and caramelized under a very hot grill or with a blowtorch.

CRÈME CATALANE A Spanish cooked cream, similar to confectioner's custard (pastry cream) but thicker as a result of slightly different proportions of ingredients, and flavoured with lemon zest and cinnamon. Traditionally served in flat-bottomed stoneware ramekins, the top is often carmalized.

CREOLE, A LA The name given to numerous sweet and savoury preparation inspired by West Indian cookery. In particular, the term refers to a method of preparing rice by cooking it in plenty of water, draining it and then drying it in the oven in buttered dish. It is finished with tomatoes, sweet peppers and onions, and served with various meats, poultry, fish and shellfish. Sweet dishes a la creole contain rum, pineapple, vanilla or banana.

Recipes

Savoury Dishes

Calves liver a la creole

Cut some fat bacon into very small strips and marinate them in a mixture of oil, lime juice, salt and pepper. Use them to lard some slices of calves liver and them marinate the lever for 20 minutes in the same mixture. Drain them, coat them with flour and cook them in a frying pan in some lard [shortening]. Remove the slices of liver from the pan and keep them warm in a buttered dish. For every 6 slices of liver, flavour the juices in the frying pan with 2 table spoons chopped onion and 1 table spoon chopped parsley. Brown the onion and parsley and then add 1 tablespoon white breadcrumbs, salt pepper and 1 tablespoon tomato puree (paste) diluted with 3-4 tablespoons white wine. Heat the sauce, stirring continuously, and adjust the seasoning. Coat the liver with the sauce.

Chicken a la creole

Cut a chicken of about 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb) into 8 pieces and season with salt and pepper. Heat 3 table spoons oil in a saute pan and brown the chicken pieces. Cover and cook gently for 20-30 minutes. Then hot on serving dish, skim the pot of the cooking juices and add 4 slice canned pineapple (cut into pieces) to the saute pan, together with 3-4 tablespoons of the pineapple syrup. The add 2 tablespoons lime juice and a dash of cayenne. Reduce the sauce and adjust the seasoning. Coat the chicken pieces with sauce and garnish them with pineapple.

Fillets of brill a la creole

Remove the fillets from a brill, clean them and season with salt, pepper and a pinch of cayenne. Coat them in flour and cook them in oil in a frying pan. When they are cooked, sprinkle them with lemon juice and arrange them on a warmed serving dish. In the same pan fry a mixture of chopped garlic and parsley (1 tablespoon for 6 fillets) and pour this over the fillets, together with some oil flavoured with chilli peppers. Brown some halves of tomato in oil and stuff them with rice pilaf. Garnish the fillets with the stuffed tomatoes and with diced sweet peppers that have been slowly cooked in oil.

Sweet Dishes

Bavarin cream a la creole

Grease a mould with sweet almond oil and fill it with alternating layers of rum-flavoured and pineapple flavoured basic Bavarian cream, separating the layers with finely chopped bananas soaked in rum. Place in the refrigerator for about 3 hours. Then turn it out on to a dish and decorate with Chantilly cream. Sprinkle with chopped pistachio nuts.

CREPE A pancake, made by cooking a thin batter sparingly in a very thin layer in a frying or special crepe pan. The word comes from the Latin crispus. Meaning curly or wavy.

Crepe batter is prepared in advance and allowed to stand so that the flour swells and any air beaten in during preparation has time to dissipate. After standing a little extra liquid may be added if the batter has become slightly too thick. Standing and thinning ensures that the batter does not rise and that the crepes are fine and even. Wheat or buckwheat flour may be used of the latter, they are often called galettes and either milk or water to mix. If beer is used to mix the batter, it rises slightly. The number of eggs used depends on the individual recipe, but the batter must always have a pouring consistency. Some recipes require the addition of sugar. The crepes may be fried in oil or butter.

RECIPES

Savoury Crepes

Mix 500 g (18 oz, 4 ½ cups) plain (all-purpose) flour with 5-6 beaten eggs and a large pinch of salt. Then gradually add 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 ⅓ cups) milk or, for lighter pancakes, 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) water. The batter may also be made with equal quantities of beer and milk, or the milk may be replaced by white consommé. Finally, add 3 tablespoons oil, either one with little taste, such as groundnut (peanut) oil or sunflower oil or, if the recipe requires it, use olive oil; 25g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) melted butter may also be added. Leave the batter to stand for 2 hours. Just before making the crepes, dilute the batter with a little water (100-200 ml, 4-7 fl oz, 1/2-3/4 cup).

Buckwheat crepes or galettes

Mix 250g (9 oz, 2 ½ cups) buckwheat flour and 250g (9 oz, 2 ¼ cups) plain (all purpose) flour (or use all buckwheat flour) in a bowl with 5-6 beaten eggs and large pinch of salt.

Add, a little at a time, 500ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) milk and 70 ml (1 ¼ pints, 3 ¼ cups) water and then 3-4 tablespoon oil. Leave the batter to stand for 2 hours at room temperature. Just before making the crepes, thin the batter with 100ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) water as necessary.

Eggs and cheese crepes

Prepare some buckwheat crepes as described above. After turning each crepe over in the pan to cook the other side, break an egg on top. As soon as the white is set, season lightly, sprinkle with grated cheese and fold each crepe into square. Serve immediately, very hot.

Ham crepes

Prepare 12 savoury crepes. Prepare separately a bechamel sauce with 40g (1 1/2oz, 3 tablespoons) butter 40g (1 1/2, 6 tablespoons) plain (all purpose) flour, 500ml (17fl oz, 2 cups) milk, nutmeg, salt and pepper. Add 150g (5 oz, 2/3 cup) diced Paris or York ham and 50 g (2 oz, 1/2 cup) grated cheese to the sauce. Cool and fill each crepe with one twelfth of this mixture. Roll up the crepes and arrange them in a buttered ovenproof dish. Sprinkle with 50 g (2 oz, 1/2 cup) grated cheese and 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) melted butter and brown in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F, gas 8)

Mushroom crepe

Prepare some savoury crepe batter as above and leave it to stand. Meanwhile, prepare a duxelle with 500g (18 oz, 6 cups) mushrooms, 1 or 2 shallots, a small garlic cloves 20 g (3/4 oz, 1 1/2 tablespoons) butter, salt and pepper, and 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 1/4 cups) bechamel sauce.

Make 12 crepes, cooking each one as follow: melt a knob of butter in a frying pan and pour a small quantity of batter into the pan, tilting it in a directions to spread a thin film of batter. Cook over a moderate heat until the crepe slides when the pan is shaken. Then turn the crepe over and cook the other side for about 2 minutes. Place a tablespoon of the mixed bechamel sauce and duxelles on each crepe and roll it up. Arrange the crepes close together on a lightly buttered ovenproof dish and sprinkle them with 50 g (2 oz, 1/2 cup) grated cheese. Top with 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) melted butter and either brown them under the grill (broiler) or reheat them in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F, gas 8) Serve very hot spoons double (heavy) cream.

Sweet Crepes

Sweet crepe batter

Mix 500 g (18 oz, 4 1/2 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour with 1 tablespoon vanilla-flavoured sugar (or a few drops of vanilla extract), 5-6 beaten eggs and a small pinch of salt. Gradually stir in 750 ml (1 1/4 pints, 3 1/4 cups) milk and 250 ml (8 fl oz, 1 cup) water. Flavour with a small glass of rum. Cognac, Calvados or Grand Marnier, depending on the recipe. Finally add 40 g (1 1/2 oz, 3 tablespoons) melted butter or a mixture of 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) melted butter and 2 tablespoons oil. Leave the batter to stand for 2 hours. Just before making the crepes, dilute the batter with a little water or milk 100-200 ml (4-7 fl oz, 1.2 - 3/4 cup).

It was formerly the custom to add 2-3 tablespoons caster (superfine) sugar to the batter, in addition to the vanilla-flavoured sugar. Today, the crepes are usually sprinkled with sugar when cooked, according to individual tastes.

Apple and walnut crepes

Make some sweet crepes. Lightly brown some thin slices of apple in butter and sprinkle them with sugar. Cover a quarter of each crepe with the apple slices and a few peeled moist walnuts. Fold the crepes in four and sprinkle with sugar. The crepe may be flamed with Calvados or with another fruit liqueur.

Chartreuse crepes

Prepare a crepe batter in the usual way. Fifteen minutes before making the crepes, prepare the filling. Beat 50 g (2 oz, 1/4 cup) butter to soft paste and add 50 g (2 oz, 1/4 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, 3 crushed meringues and 3 tablespoons green Chartreuse. Add 6 crushed macarons, the grated zest of an orange and 3 tablespoons Cognac to the batter and mix well. Thin the batter with 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) water and cook the crepes. Spread each one with the filling and fold in four. Dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar and serve very hot.

Pork crepinettes

Prepare some small flatsausages using either fine pork forcemeat into portions of about 100 g (4 oz, 1/2 cu) and wrap each one in a rectangular piece of previously soaked and dried pig's caul. Coat each crepinette in egg and breadcrumbs, brush with melted butter and grill (broil) under a moderate heat (The crepinettes may be grilled or fried without a coating of breadcrumbs). The classic garnish is a puree of potatoes or of haricot (navy) beans, but they may also be served with buttered green vegetables.

CRESS Any of various plants of the mustard family which are cultivated for their sharp tasting leaves, which can be eaten raw or cooked.

Cress is believed to be native to the Middle East but is naturalized and widely cultivated in Europe. In the 14th century, it was used mainly for medicinal purposes, but gradually began to be used in soups. It was not until about 1810 that methods of cultivating the cress in cress beds were introduced in France from Germany. The district of Senlis specialized in growing cress and it soon found a niche in gastronomy in about 1850, the Café Riche included cress puree on its menu.

Today, cress produced in France mainly in Oise, Essonne and Seine-Maritime, When cress is to be eaten raw, it should be picked over carefully, the thicker stems and yellowing leaves removed, and the rest washed and drained carefully. It should not be left to soak in water. Wild cress should not be eaten as it can transmit parasite.

RECIPE

Watercress puree

Cook some watercress in butter for about 5 minutes, until wilted. Puree in a blender or food processor. Add one-third of its volume of either potato puree or a puree of split peas. Add some fresh butter or cream and finish with a little finely chopped raw cress.

CREPINETTE A small flat sausage, generally made of sausage meat mixed with chopped parsley and wrapped in caul. Crepinettes may also be made with lamb, veal or poultry, prepared with salpicon of meat and mushrooms, sometimes garnished with truffles and bound with white or brown stock. This mixture is enclosed in fine forcemeat and the whole is wrapped in caul. Crepinettes are brushed with melted butter sautéed or cooked in the oven. They are served with a potato puree, lentils or boulangere potatoes. They can be served with a strong seasoned sauce or, if they are truffled, with a Perigueux sauce.

Cinderella pork crepinettes (pieds de Cendrillon) are made of fine truffled pork forcemeat. Salpicon of pig's feet is mixed with diced truffles and mushrooms, bound with concentrated veal stock and placed in the middle of each crepinette. Traditionally cooked in wood-ash, wrapped in pieces of buttered paper, today they are wrapped in caul or in paper thin pieces of pastry before being cooked in the oven.

Crepinettes may be used to stuff game and poultry with rather dry flesh, such as rabbit or guinea fowl. In the Gironde, crepinettes are fried and served with oysters from the Arcachon basin and wine.

RECIPES

Calves brain crepinettes

Soak a pig's caul in cold water for a few hours. Clean 2 calves brains in cold water to which vinegar has been added. Then gently simmer the brains in 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) well-seasoned courtbouillon for about 10 minutes. Drain, wipe them thoroughly and allow to cool. Fry 400 g (14 oz, 4 ½ cups) chopped mushrooms, 1 chopped shallot, 1 chopped garlic clove and some chopped parsley in a tablespoon of oil in a frying pan. Season with salt and pepper.

Wipe the caul, stretch it gently so as not to tear it, and cut it into 5 pieces. Cut each brain into 5 slices. Lay each slice in the middle of a piece of caul, cover with mushrooms and place a second slice of brain on top. Wrap in the cauld. Roll the crepinettes in 40 g (1 ½ oz, 3 tablespoons) melted butter, then in some fresh white breadcrumbs, and fry lightly in butter until they turn brown. Serve very hot with a vegetable puree.

CRISPBREAD A small thin crisp biscuit (cracker) made from whole meal (whole grain) rye flour. It is sometimes flavoured with sesame seed, linseed or cumin. It was originally made by Swedish peasants and was intended to be stored for long periods. Today it is manufactured on a large scale, especially in Scandinavia, Germany Britain. Exported all over the world, it is buttered and eaten with cheese and smoked fish. It is also recommended for low caloric diets.

CRISPS (POTATO CHISP) Thin round slices of fired salted potato that are mass produced and sold bags. Crips are served in France and Britain with aperitifs, or with grills and roasts. This method of preparing fried potatoes is a very old one, it used to be called pommes en litards In the United States they are known as potato chips.

RECIPE

Potato chisps

Wash and peel some large firm potatoes. Cut them into very thin round slices (preferably with a mandolin cutter or in a food processor) and immediately place them in cold water. Leave to soak for 10 minutes and then dry them thoroughly. Plunge the slice once only into frying oil at 185 °C (365 °F) Drain on paper towels and sprinkle with salt.

CROCKERY All the items and accessories made of earthenware or china needed for service at the table or use in the kitchen, plates, cups, saucers, bowls, dishes, egg cups and so on.

CROISSANT A crescent shaped roll generally made with a leavened dough.

This delicious pastry originated in Budapest, in 1686, when the Turks were besieging the city. To reach the centre of the town, they dug underground passages. Bakers, working during the night, heard the noise made by the Turks and gave the alarm. The assailants were repulsed and the bakers who had saved the city were granted the privilege of making a special pastry in the form of a crescent in memory of the emblem on the Ottoman flag.

Bakers usually sell two sorts of croissant, those made with butter and the others, which no law obliges them to declare are made with margarine. Croissants may be served at breakfast or tea, or filled with ham, cheese, mushrooms or chicken.

A very popular speciality in Lorraine is the croissant, filled with dried fruit and coated with egg white or sugar. The term croissant is also used for a semicircular petit four made with almond paste and topped with pine nuts or flaked almonds.

RECIPES

Parisian croissants

Blend 25 g (1 oz.) fresh yeast (2 cakes compressed yeast) or 15 g (1/2 oz) dried yeast (3 teaspoons active dry yeast) with 250 ml (8 fl oz, 1 cup) lukewarm milk. Put 500 g (18 oz., 4 ½ cups) plain (all purpose) flour into a mixing bowl and add 65 g (2 ½ oz 1/3 cup) caster (superfine) sugar and 7 g (¼ oz. 1/3 cup) caster (superfine) sugar and 7 g (¼ oz 1 ½ teaspoons) salt. Make a well in the flour mixture and pour the mixture of milk and yeast into the centre. Mix quickly with the fingertips and as soon as the liquid is completely absorbed by the flour cover the dough with a cloth and leave it to stand for 30-60 minutes, depending on the room temperature.

Toll out the dough into a rectangle and dot with butter. Fold into three and repeat rolling, dotting with butter and folding twice more using 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) softened butter. Allow the dough to stand for 30 minutes.

Then roll it out to a rectangle about 45 x 15 cm (18 x 6 in) and cut it into triangles. Roll up the triangles, starting at the base and working towards the top. Place the croissants on a baking sheet, curving them into crescents. Allow them to rise further in a draught-free place for 15-45 minutes, depending on the room temperature. Brush with beaten egg yolk and bake in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425 °F, gas 7) for about 10 minutes.

Viennese croissants

Blend 15 g (1/2 oz) fresh yeast (1 cake compressed yeast) or 7 g (1/4 oz) dried yeast (1 1/2 teaspoons active dry yeast) with 1 tablespoon tepid water. Dissolve 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) caster (superfine) sugar and pinch of salt in a 1tablespoon milk. Heat 225 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter with mixture of 5 tablespoon water and 5 5tablespoons milk. Put 250 g (9 oz. 2 1/4 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour into a large bowl, make a well, and add the sugar / salt/ milk mixture followed by the mixture of butter, water and milk. Finally add the diluted yeast. Mix all these ingredients together thoroughly to obtain a smooth paste. Leave the dough in a warm place for 1 hour so that it doubles in volume.

Spread out the dough on a floured dish and cool in the refrigerator for 30 minutes. Then roll out the dough into a thin rectangle on a floured surface. Cut 75 g (3 oz. 6 tablespoons) butter into small pieces and distribute them over two- thirds of the rectangle. Fold it into three, starting with the unbuttered third. Roll the dough out a second time, cover and replace in the refrigerator for 1 hour. Repeat the operation again using a further 75g (3 oz. 6 tablespoons) butter and finish by rolling out the dough into a square of about 20 cm (8 in). Cover and refrigerate again for a further 30 minutes.

Then roll it out into a very thin rectangle measuring 30 x 60 cm (12 x 24 in) Cut the rectangle into two lengthways, and cut each half into 6 triangles. Roll up each triangle from base to top. Arrange the croissants on a buttered baking sheet, allowing plenty of space between them. Leave them to stand for 1 hour. Brush the croissants with beaten egg and bake for 3 minutes in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F, gas 9) Lower the temperature to 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) and bake for about a further 12 minutes. Watch them carefully during the last few minutes to ensure they do not overcook.

Savoury Croissant

Cheese croissants

Split some baked croissants on one side. Butter the inside and fill with thin slices of Gruyere or Emmental cheese. Sprinkle with pepper and heat through in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F, gas 9). Serve immediately. The butter and cheese may be replaced by a well-reduced bechamel sauce containing cheese.

Shrimp Croissants

Use 6 croissants baked without sugar. Make 200 ml (7 fl oz. 3/4 cup) well reduced prawn sauce (see shrimps and prawns) Split the croissants on one side and fill them generously with the sauce. Heat through in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F, gas 9) and serve very hot.

Sweet Croissants

Pound together in a mortar 300 g (11 oz. 2 3/4 cups) whole shelled almonds and 150 g (5 oz. 2/3 cup) vanilla-flavoured sugar, gradually moistening with sufficient egg white to obtain a paste that can be rolled in the hand. Add 2 tablespoons flour to the paste and divide it into pieces about the size of a walnut. Roll each piece with the hands into the shape of a cigar with slightly pointed ends (flour your palms if necessary) Dip each cigar in beaten egg, roll in some flaked (slivered) almonds and shape into small croissants. Arrange them on sheets of greaseproof (wax) paper on baking sheets. Glaze with egg yolk and cook for about 12 minutes in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6) until they are golden brown. As soon as they are cooked, brush them with sweetened milk.

CROQUEMBOUCHE A decorative cone shaped preparation built up of small items of patisserie or confectionery and glazed with a caramel syrup to make it crisp. The croquembouche is usually placed on a base of nougat. It is built around a conical mould, also called a croquembouche, which is removed through the base when the small pieces are securely fixed to each other by the solidified caramel. It is traditionally served in France at buffets, weddings and first communication meals.

The traditional croquembouche is made of little chou buns, sometimes filled with some kind of cream and dipped in sugar cooked to the crack stage. Croquembouches are also made with crystallized (candied) or sugar coated fruits, brandy snaps, marzipan sweets (almond paste candies) meringue, or nougat, sugar flowers or spun caramel.

RECIPE

Chestnut croquembouche

(from Carames recipe) Take 60 choice roasted chestnuts, peel them carefully and remove any traces of burning. Glaze by dipping them in sugar cooked to the crack stage, one by one, and place them on a smooth round mould, 18 cm (7 in) in diameter and 13 cm (5 in) deep. This croquembouche must be assembled at the last minute before serving because the moisture in the chestnuts tends to soften the sugar and make it lose both its consistency and its gloss.

RECIPE

Croque-monsieur a la brandade

Light coat with oil 2 slices of bread from which the crusts have been removed. Spread brandade of salt cod on one of the slices, cover with slices of tomato, then place the second slice of bread on top. Brown on a grid in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F gas 9) or under a grill (broiler).

CROQUET A dry petit four in the shape of a small stick generally made of almonds, sugar and egg white, Croquets are very often regional specialities. The best known are the croquets of Berry, Sologne, and Perigord, the golden croquets of Sens, the lace like croquets of Nivernais, the croquets of Barsur-Aube and Bordeaux (made with unskinned almonds) and the croquets of Vinsobres and Valence (made with whole almonds).

CROQUETTE A small savoury or sweet preparation. Savoury croquettes, made with a saupicon of fish, meat, poultry, ham, mushroom or calves sweet breads, are served hot as an hors d'oeuvre or as a garnish (especially potato croquettes) sweet croquettes are made with rice chestnuts or semolina.

The basic mixture is bound with a fairly thick sauce, white, supreme, veloute, curry, tomato or cheese bechamel for savoury croquettes, confectioner's custard for sweet croquette. Croquettes are shaped into corks, sticks, balls or rectangles. They are usually coated with breadcrumbs, plunged into very hot oil and fried until they are crisp and golden. They are arranged in the shape of a pyramid, turban or crown on a dish lined with a dolly or napkin, and savoury croquettes are sprinkled with fried parsley. Croquettes are always served with a sauce related to the main ingredient of the mixture. The most common are fish croquettes and croquette potatoes, served with sauteed or grilled meat.

Sweet croquettes may also be made with very thick confectioner's custard, cut into diamond shapes or rectangles, which are coated with breadcrumbs and fried.

RECIPES

Savoury Croquettes

Preparation of Croquette mixture

Mix 500 g (18 oz. 4 ½ cups) of the main ingredient of the croquettes (cooked poultry, game, veal, lamb offal) minced (ground) or cut into very small dice, with 250 g (9 oz. 3 cups) cooked diced mushrooms and possibly 75 g (3 oz. 1 cup) diced. Moisten with 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) Madeira, place in a covered pan and heat gently. Then add 400 ml (14 fl. oz. 1 ¾ cups) well reduced veloute sauce, thickened with 3 egg yolks. Stir the mixture well, over the heat, then spread evenly on a buttered baking sheet and dab the surface with butter to prevent it from forming a crust. Leave to cool completely before making the croquettes.

Divide the cold mixture into portions of 50-75 g (2-3 oz) Roll these out on a floured flat surface and shape them into corks, balls, eggs or rectangles. Dip them in a mixture of egg and oil beaten together and then cover them completely with the breadcrumbs.

Place the croquettes in a frying basket, plunge into oil heated to 175-180 °C (347-356 °F), and deep fry until they are crisp and golden. Drain on paper towels and arrange on a napkin in a pyramid or turban shape. Garnish with parsley and serve with an appropriate sauce.

When the croquettes are served as a small entrée, they are often accompanied by a garnish of fresh vegetables coated in butter or a puree of vegetables. The croquettes themselves, if they are made very small, may be used as a garnish for large roasts, joints, poultry, game or fish.

Beef croquettes

Cut some boiled beef and some lean ham into very small dice. Make a well-reduced bechamel sauce with 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) butter, 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, 500 ml (17 fl. oz, 2 cups) milk, grated nutmeg, and salt and pepper, beat in 1 egg yolk. Bind the salpicon with the sauce and leave to cool. Finish according to the basic method and serve with a well seasoned tomato sauce.

The bechamel may be replaced by rice, using two thirds salpicon to one third rice cooked in meat stock.

Cheese croquettes (1)

Make a bechamel sauce with 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) butter, 50 (2 oz. ½ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, 400 ml (14 fl. oz. 1 ¾ cups) milk a little grated nutmeg, salt and pepper. Add to the boiling bechamel 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) double (heavy) cream and 125 g (4 ½ oz. 1 cup) grated cheese (Gruyere, Emmental or Edam). Stir until the cheese is melted and adjust the seasoning. Leave to cool. Finish the preparation as in the basic recipe.

Cheese cheese croquettes (2)

Beat together 3 whole eggs and 2 yolks. Boil 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) milk. Pour into a saucepan 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) sifted flour and 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) rice flour. Add the beaten eggs and mix well. Dilute with the boiled milk and season with salt and pepper, grated nutmeg and a dash of cayenne. Bring to the boil and cook for 5 minutes, stirring all the time. Add 125 g (4 ½ oz. 1 cup) grated cheese (Gruyere, Emmental or Edam) and stir until melted. Leave to cool and finish the preparation as in the basic recipe.

Viennese croquettes

Make a salpicon of equal quantities of lamb's sweetbreads poached in court-bouillon, lean ham, mushrooms, which have been cooked slowly in butter and chopped onions softened in butter., add just enough veloute sauce, reduced and seasoned with paprika, to bind everything together well. Finish the croquettes according to the basic method, moulding them into disc shapes. Serve with round slices of fried onion and a paprika flavoured tomato sauce.

Mussel croquettes

Prepare a salpicon of mussels a la mariniere and thinly sliced mushrooms which have been cooked slowly in butter. Add half of its volume of well reduced bechamel sauce to which some filtered juice from the mussels has been added. Finish the croquettes according to the basic method. Serve with a white wine sauce.

Potato croquettes

Peel and quarter 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb) floury potatoes and cook in salted boiling water until they are quite tender (at least 20 minutes). Drain the potatoes and dry them out over a low heat. Press through a sieve or blend them to a puree, add about 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) butter and gradually work in 4 beaten egg yolks with a fork. Spread the puree in a buttered dish and leave to cool completely.

Work the puree into a ball, using floured hands, then roll the ball into a long narrow cylinder, cut it into sections about 6 cm (2 ½ in) long. Round these sections slightly. Roll them in flour, coat with a mixture of 2 eggs lightly beaten with 1 tablespoon oil, and cover with breadcrumbs. Deep fry the croquettes in oil heated to 180 °C (356 °F) for about 3 minutes, until they turn golden. Drain on paper towels and serve very hot with roast or grilled (broiled) meat.

Rice croquettes

Mix together 500 g (18 oz. 3 cups) rice cooked au gras with 125 g (4 ½ oz, 1 cup) grated Parmesan cheese. Bind with a beaten egg and check the seasoning. Mould into cork shapes and finish according to the basic method. Serve with a well seasoned tomato sauce.

Rice croquettes a l ancienne

(from Careme's recipe) Cook 175 g (6 oz, 2/3 cup) short grain rice in good stock. Mix it with 1 tablespoon grated Parmesan cheese and a little nutmeg. Divide into 10 portions, make hollows in each and fill them with a salpicon of game or fowl combined with reduced veloute sauce. Close up the balls, roll in finely grated Parmesan, and finally in the palm of the hand to make the croquettes completely round. Dip in egg and coat with breadcrumbs mixed with finely grated parmesan cheese, and deep fry. Garnish with fried parsley.

Sweet Croquettes

Apricot Croquettes

Cook 500 g (18 oz) apricots in syrup, drain, dry and cut into large dice. Add 400 ml (14 fl oz. 1 ¾ cups) very thick confectioner's custard. Flavour the mixture with rum and leave to cool completely. Divide into portions of 50-65 g (2-2 ½ oz.) Mould each portion into a small ball, flatten slightly and roll in flour, beaten egg and fresh breadcrumbs. Deep fry in oil heated to 175-180 °C (347-356 °F) and serve with hot apricot sauce.

Chestnut croquettes

Dip some chestnuts in boiling water and peel them. Cook them in a light syrup-500 g (18 oz. 2 ¼ cups) granulated sugar per 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) water flavoured with vanilla. Press the chestnuts through a sieve to obtain a puree and thicken it with egg yolks and butter – 5 egg yolks and 50 g (2 oz. 4 tablespoons) butter per 500 g (18 oz 2 ¼ cups) puree. Spread the mixture on a buttered baking sheet and leave to cool completely. Cut into rectangles of about 50 g (2 oz) cover with egg and breadcrumbs and deep fry in oil heated to 180 °C (356 °F). Serve the croquettes very hot with a fruit sauce flavoured with Cognac or Armagnac.

Instead of chestnuts, 500 g (18 oz. 4 ½ cups) sieved marrons glaces may be used, blended with 400 ml (14 fl oz, 1 ¾ cups) confectioner's custard flavoured with rum. Cognac or Armagnac.

Rice croquettes

Prepare some rice in milk using 125 g (4 ½ oz, 2/3 cup) rice, after cooking, add 5-6 egg yolks (or 3 whole eggs beaten as for an omelette). Leave to cool completely, then divide into portions of about 50 g (2 oz.) Mould them into cork shapes, coat with egg and breadcrumbs, and deep-fry in oil heated to 180 °C(356 °F) until golden. Drain on paper towels. Serve with a hot fruit sauce flavoured with Grand Marnier.

CROTTIN DE CHAVIGNOL A French goat's milk cheese made in Sancerre. Containing at least 45% butter-fat, it has a soft centre and a natural crust, mottled with a white, blue or brown mould. Crottin can be eaten when it has ripened for three months until dry, when it is crumbly, with a piquant flavour, and gives off a fairly strong smell, it is also eaten fresh, when it is milder and white. Originally, only very mature cheeses, with a strong smell and almost very mature cheese, with a strong smell and almost black colour, were entitled to be called Grottin. Grottin comes in the form of a small flattened ball, weighing about 50 g (2 oz) A distinction is made between farm Crottin, which is enjoyed with a full bodied wine, and dairy Crottin, slightly more insipid and rarely matured, which may be used for souffles and salads. In Berru. Crottin was traditionally prepared by placing it under the grill for a few minutes, sometimes coated with breadcrumbs, and then serving it hot accompanied by a green salad of endives or dandelions.

RECIPE

Roasted crottins de Chavignol on a salad with walnuts of Correze

Arrange 6 well matured crottins de Chavignol on a baking sheet and put them in a preheated oven at 240 °C (475 °F gas 9) they must lose their first fat. Fry 6 slices of pain de compagne in butter until golden. Place the little cheeses on top and serve with a green salad including 65 g (2 ½ oz, ½ cup) chopped green walnuts (or use pickled walnuts). Seasoned with vinaigrette.

CROUPION The rear end of the body of birds, consisting of the last two dorsal vertebrae and bearing the tail feathers. Called the parson's nose in Britain, it is a very tasty part, particularly from chickens and turkeys.

In ducks and geese, the sebaceous glands situated on either side of the parson's nose must be removed before cooking as they can give the meat an unpleasant taste.

CROUSTADE A preparation consisting of a case of lining pastry, puff pastry, hollowed out bread, duchess potato mixture, semolina or rice, which is fried or heated in the oven and filled with a salpicon, ragout, vegetables or a puree, bound with a suitable reduced sauce. Croustades, which were originally made in the south of France are eaten as hot hors d'oeuvre, but they are also used in certain garnishes for large scale cookery (filled with kidneys, vegetables or crayfish tails).

RECIPES

Bread croustades

Cut some thick stale bread into slices 5-6 cm (2-2 1/2 in) thick, remove the crusts and trim to the desired shape. On the top, make a circular incision with the tip of a knife to a depth of 4-5 cm (1 ½ -2 in) to mark the lid. Deep fry the croustades in oil heated 175-180 °C (347-256 °F) until they are golden. Drain. Take off the lid and remove all the crumb from the inside. Line the croustades with a thin layer of forcemeat (according to the filling). Leave for 5-6 minutes at the front of a hot oven with the door open. Fill with the chosen mixture. All the fillings recommended for timbales and vol-au-vent are suitable for bread croustades. These croustades may also be made using round bread rolls.

Duchess potato croustades

Spread the duchess potato mixture in a 4-5 cm (1 ½ -2 in) thick layer on an oiled baking sheet and leave to cool completely. Use a smooth round cutter to cut into shapes 7.5 cm (3 in) in diameter. Coat these croustades with egg and breadcrumbs. To mark the lid, make a circular incision in the top 1 cm (½ in) from the edge and 3-4 cm (1 ¼ -1 ½ in) deep. Deep fry in oil heated to 180 °C (356 °F) until golden. Drain and dry on paper towels. Remove the lid and hollow out the inside, leaving only a base and a wall, about 1 cm (½ in) thick. Fill the croustades according to the instructions given in the recipe.

Puff pastry croustades

Sprinkle the worktop with flour and roll out puff pastry to a thickness of about 1-2 cm (½ -¾ in). Using a pastry (cookie) cutter, cut rounds 7.5-10 cm (3-4 in) in diameter. With a smaller cutter, make a circle centred on the first, with a diameter 2 cm (¾ in) smaller, taking care not to cut right through the pastry, this smaller circle will form the lid of the croustades. Glaze with egg yolk and place in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F, gas 8). As soon as the crust has risen well and turned golden, take the croustades out of the oven. Leave until lukewarm, then take off the lid and, with a spoon, remove the soft white paste which is inside. Leave the croustades to cool completely.

Alternatively, roll the pastry to a thickness of only 5 mm (¼ in) and cut half of it into circles 7.5-10 cm (3-4 in) in diameter, and the rest into rings of the same external diameter and 1 cm (½ in) wide. Brush the base of the rings with beaten egg and place them on the circles, glaze the whole with beaten egg and cook.

CROUTE A pastry case or slice of bread used to hold savoury or sweet preparation. Pastry croutes (puff or shortcrust) are cooked blind and then filled, they include timbales, vol-au-vent and bouchees.

Croutes served as hot hors d'oeuvre are round or square slices of bread from which the crusts have been removed, fried in butter until they are a golden colour and topped with various preparations (ham, mushrooms, anchovies or seafood) they are sometimes coated with a little thick sauce and cooked au gratin.

Croutes served as hot desserts are stale slices of savarin, brioche or milk bread, dried in the oven and spread with poached or crystallized (candied) fruits moistened with syrup, sprinkled with shredded almonds or coated with jam, and often arranged in a border or crown shape.

RECIPES

Savoury Croutes

Preparation

Cut some round pieces of bread, 4-5 cm (1 ½ -2 in) in diameter and 2 cm (¾ in) thick, from a stale loaf. Use a round cure with a diameter smaller than that of the croutes to press lightly on each croute to mark the lid. Fry the croutes in butter or oil. When they are golden, drain and remove the central circles for lids, then hollow out. Fill according to the recipe instructions. Instead of frying the croutes, they can be brushed with butter and browned in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425 °F, gas 7)

Fruit croutes

Cut a stale savarin into slices 1 cm (1/2 in) thick. Place these slices on a baking sheet, dust them with fine sugar and glaze them in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F, gas 8). Reassemble the savarin on a large round dish, alternating the croutes with slices of canned pineapple. Place around this crown, alternately, quarters of pears and apples, cooked in vanilla-flavoured syrup and well drained. Fill the inside of the crown with a salpicon of various fruits cooked in syrup and well drained. Fill the inside of the crown with a salpicon of various fruits cooked in syrup and drained. Decorate the top with glace cherries, angelica lozenges, quarters of crystallized (candied) apricots, small golden and green preserved oranges and halved almonds. Warm the crown in a preheated oven at 150 °C (300 °F, gas 2).

When ready to serve, coat it with apricot sauce flavoured with rum or kirsch, and serve more of this sauce separately. Croutes containing other types of fruit cooked in syrup (apricot, peach, pear, plum, nectarine) are prepared in the same way.

Turban of coutes a la Beauvilliers

Cut from a stale brioche 12 rectangular slices, 6 cm (2 1/2 in) long and slightly wider than a banana. Arrange these slices on a baking sheet, dust with caster (superfine) sugar and glaze in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F, gas 8). Peel 6 bananas and cut them in half lengthways. Lay these banana halves on a buttered baking sheet, sprinkle them with caster sugar and cook them for 5 minutes in the preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F, gas 8).

Make a turban shape on a round ovenproof dish, alternating the bananas and the slices of brioche. Cook some semolina in sweetened vanilla flavoured milk, bind with egg yolks, and add a salpicon of crystallized (candied) fruit, macerated in a fruit liqueur. Fill the centre of the turban with this mixture. Sprinkle the whole preparation with finely crumbled macaroons, moisten with melted butter crumbled macaroons, moisten with melted butter and brown in the preheated oven. Just before serving surround the turban with a thin ribbon of apricot sauce flavoured with rum or with a fruit liqueur.

CROUTES FOR SOUP Thick slices of French bread which have been partly hollowed out or cut in two lengthways and dried in the oven. Croutes are served with all kinds of soups, usually separately, either plain, garnished or filled.

Croutes a Fancienne are stuffed with stockpot vegetables and cooked au gratin. Croutes au pot are moistened with the stock pot fat and browned in the oven. The name consomme crofile au pot is sometimes given to the stockpot broth garnished with vegetables cut into small pieces, grated Gruyere cheese and round slices of flute, hollowed out and grilled or baked.

In the Middle Ages, the thin slices of bread soaked in stock, wine or milk, which were served with gruels or liquid stews, were called soupes. Later, the name croute was given to lightly browned slices of bread served after the soup, these were coated with puree, garnished with crayfish or asparagus tips, and moistened with partridge gravy or cooked au gratin using Parmesan cheese.

RECIPES

Croutes for consomme

Divide a French loaf (flute or ficelle) into slice 5 cm (2 in) long. Cut each slice in half lengthways and remove the soft part. Dry out the croutes in a cool oven and arrange them in a dish. Alternatively the slices can be brushed with melted butter or olive oil and baked in the oven until golden. Serve separately with the broth from a pot-au-feu or a consomme.

Stuffed croutes a l'ancienne

Cut a French loaf (flute) into slices 4 cm (1 ½ in) long. Remove three-quarters of the soft part and dry the crusts in a cool oven. Fill them with vegetables from the stockpot, which have been chopped or pressed through a sieve. Arrange them in a dish, sprinkle with grated cheese, moisten with melted butter and brown them in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F, gas 8) or under the grill (broiler). These croutes may also be prepared with very small round rolls, hollowed out, dried, filled and cooked au gratin.

CROUTON A small piece of bread which is toasted, lightly browned in butter, fried in oil or simply dried in the oven. Diced croutons are used to garnish certain preparations (soups, green salads, are included in composite garnishes. Cut into hearts, diamonds, crescents, triangles, circles or stars, they are used as a complementary garnish for dishes in sauces or puree and to decorate the border of the serving dish. Croutons spread with a gratin forcement are used as a base for some types of game and poultry. Large crouton supports are used to raise large hot or cold items for buffets so that added garnishes do not mask the food. They are not intended to be eaten.

RECIPES

Crouton omelette

Bear some eggs for an omelette, add some small diced croutons which have been fried in butter and cook the omellette. Serve the omelette with a ribbon of well reduced spiced tomato sauce poured around it and sprinkle with chopped herbs.

Croutons flavoured with thyme

Peel the cloves of half a head of garlic and remove the green part from each cloves. Place in a blender with 100 g (4 oz, ½ cup) slightly salted butter, ½ teaspoon flat-leaf parsley, ½ teaspoon powdered thyme, ½ teaspoon thyme leaves, ½ teaspoon oregano, ½ teaspoon marjoram, 1 small can anchovies with the oil, and ½ teaspoon freshly ground pepepr. Cut a staltle baguette into diagonal slices. Coat generously with this mixture, and put under the grill (broiler) until crusty yet soft.

CROWN A method of arranging certain sweet or savoury dishes in the form of a ring. (using a ring mould), a border (for rice) or a crown (lamb cutlets arranged back to back). The centre of the arrangement is usually decorated or garnished. The terms turban or border are also used.

Brioche and bread en couronne are shaped in the form of a crown or ring.

CRUDITES Raw vegetables or fruits served as an into little sticks and accompanied by cold sauces. Crudites include carrots, celeria, cucumber, sweet peppers, red cabbage, celery, fennedl, fresh broad beans, cauliflower, tomatoes, mushrooms, radishes, small artichokes, quarters of grapefruit, orange and apple, round slices of banana sprinkled with lemon, slices or avocado and, although it is cooked, beetroot. The various items are often presented as an assortment, with several sauces. A plat of crudites may also include a hard boiled egg in mayonnise.

RECIPE

Basket of crudites

Choose some very fresh raw vegetables, little carrots, celery sticks, radish, cucumber, sweet peppers, very small artichokes known as poivrades, cauliflower, mushrooms, fennel.

Scrape the carrots and radishes, leaving the small green leaves on the radishes. Thoroughly remove the strings from the celery sticks, cut them into four. Peel the pepper (optional) cut open, take out the white membrane and seeds, and cut the flesh into thin strips. Peel the cucumber and cut into sticks. Pull the cauliflower apart into small florets. Wipe and slice the mushrooms. Clean the fennel bulb and cut it into thick slices. Just before serving break the stalks of the artichokes, cut them in four, remove the chokes and sprinkle the cut part with lemon juice.

Line a wickerwork basket with a napkin and arrange the vegetables in it, in bunches. If it is not to be served immediately, cover it with a cloth and put in a cool place. Serve accompanied by a mayonnaise with herbs, a tarragon vinaigrette, an anchovy sauce and a cream cheese sauce.

CRUMPET A small spongy yeast cake with holes on the top surface, cooked on a griddle in a special ring about 7.5 cm (3 in) in diameter. In England, crumpets are usually served at tea time, toasted and spread with plenty of butter.

RECIPE

Crumpets

In a bowl, mix 2 tablespoons tepid water, 25 g (1 oz) fresh yeast (2 cakes compressed yeast) and ½ teaspoon sugar until completely dissolved. Leave the bowl in a warm place until the mixture has doubled in volume. Put 150 g (5 oz. 1 ¼ cups) plain (all-purpose) flour and pinch of salt in a large mixture bowl. Make a well and pour 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoon) milk into the middle. Add 1 whole egg. Stir the batter with a spoon, add 1 tablespoon butter a really smooth batter is obtained. Cover the bowl with a napkin and put it in warm place, sheltered from draughts, for 1 hour or until the batter has doubled in volume.

Clarify 50 g (2 oz ¼ cup) butter and use to grease the bottom of a large heavy griddle or frying pan and also the insides of some 7.5 cm (3 in) rings. Place 3 or 4 rings on the griddle over a moderate heat. Drop 1 tablespoon batter into each ring it spreads immediately and fills the ring. When the crumpets begin to bubble, turn them over with a palette knife (spatula), then lightly brown the other side for 1-2 minutes. Place the crumpets on a dish and cover them with foil. Butter the rings and the griddle again and continue making crumpets until the batter is used up. Toast before serving.

CUCUMBER. The fruit of an annual climbing plant of the gourd family, which is generally eaten raw but it is also good cooked.

Originating in the foothills of the Himalayas, where it once grew wild, the cucumber has been cultivated in India for more than 3000 years. It was introduced into Egypt and carefully cultivated by the Hebrews in Galilee. Pliny recounts that the Romans and Greeks were very fond of cucumber. In France cucumber was eaten during the reign of Charlemagne, but it was La Quintine who organized its cultivation under glass, so that it could be served at Louis XIV's table as early as April. It is long and cylindrical in shape, with firm, watery, pale green flesh, which is crisp, cool and slightly bitter to the taste its fine green skin is shiny and usually smooth.

Varieties: There are several varieties of cucumber, classified in two types- those grown exclusively in greenhouses, known as Dutch, and those cultivated either in the open or under glass frames, known as ridge, they differ more in size, shape and shade of green than in taste.

Cucumber should be bought very fresh and firm, never wrinkled. It is often peeled, since its skin can be quite bitter. When served raw, it is sometimes salted and drained to extract excess water and intensify the flavour of the vegetable. Salting does make the flesh soft but careful salting and draining prevents, the liquor from the cucumber diluting the flavour of any seasoning or dressing tarragon dressing, cream or yogurt, for example.

Cucumber can also be eaten cooked, either baked in the oven, sauteed in butter or else cooked au gratin. Served in its own juice or in a sauce, it can accompany meat or fish. It can also be stuffed either raw or cooked. Cucumber is just as popular in northern and eastern European cookery as in Mediterranean countries.

RECIPES

Preparation of cucumbers

For hot dishes, peel the cucumbers, split in half lengthways and remove the seeds, cut the flesh into even sized chunks and then again into segments, plunge into boiling water for 2 minutes to blanch them, then drain.

For cold dishes, peel the cucumbers, split in half lengthways and remove the seeds, they can then either be kept intact for stuffing, cut into segments or else simply cut into semicircular slices or quarters, the flesh can also be cut into circular slices without splitting lengthways.

Cold Dishes

Cold cucumber soup

Cut a large cucumber into small pieces. Peel 12 small new onions and cut into quarters. Chop these vegetables in a food processor and put them into a blender with the same quantity of cottage cheese and some salt and pepper, the resultant puree should be well seasoned. Place in the refrigerator until ready to serve. Then dilute the puree with iced water to obtain the consistency of a fairly thick soup and sprinkle with chopped chives or parsley.

Cucumber salad

Cut the cucumber into semicircular slices. Add a well seasoned vinaigrette generously flavoured with herbs (parsley, chervil, chives) or coarsely chopped fresh mint leaves. This salad can be served as an hors d'oeuvre or to accompany cold white meat or fish.

Cucumber stuffed with crab

Split in half and hollow out 3 medium sized cucumber of regular shape. Sprinkle with fine salt and leave to sweat for about 1 hour. Mash 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) crabmeat (fresh or canned) and dice some fennel finely (enough for 3 tablespoons). Also dice very finely 150 g (5 oz.) cooked ham heel (rind). Make some mayonnaise with 1 egg yolk, 2 teaspoons mustard and 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) oil, add salt, pepper and 1 tablespoon each of wine vinegar and tomato ketchup. Mix together the mayonnaise, crabmeat, fennel and ham. Adjust the seasoning. Drain the cucumber halves thoroughly and fill with the stuffing. Keep in a cool place, when ready to serve, sprinkle the cucumbers with chopped herbs and arrange on lettuce leaves.

Instead of mayonnaise, double (heavy) cream flavoured with tomato ketchup, lemon juice and cayenne can be used, and shelled prawns can be substituted for the crabmeat.

Stuffed cucumber a la russe

Finely slice a cucumber and cut each slice into quarters. Cut 3 other cucumbers into boat shapes. Mash the contents of a can of tuna or salmon, roughly chop 6 small (pearl) onions and mix together the fish, onions, and quartered cucumber slices with 300 g (11 oz. 1 ½ cups) cottage cheese (well drained). Season with salt and pepper. Fill the cucumber boats with this mixture and put in a cool place. When ready to serve, sprinkle with 1 sieved hard boiled (hard cooked) egg and chopped herbs.

Hot Dishes

Buttered cucumber

Place blanched segments of cucumber in a saute pan with some butter allow 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) per 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) of cucumber, add salt, pepper, and 2 tablespoons water. Begin by boiling fast, then cover and simmer very gently for about 30 minutes. Just before serving, add a fresh piece of butter, stir, pour into a vegetable dish and sprinkle with chopped herbs. Buttered cucumber can be served with poultry and white fish.

Cucumber with cream

Cut the cucumber flesh into segments and blanch. Grease a saute pan, add the pieces of cucumber with some salt and pepper, cover and cook very gently for about 10 minutes, then add some heated double (heavy) cream allow 200 ml (7 fl oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) per 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) of cucumber flesh and continue cooking uncovered. The cucumber can also after salting and draining, be cooked au gratin or served with Mornay sauce.

CUISINE CLASSIQUE All the cookery techniques of traditional French cuisine which every chef should know and master. These are codified in the Guide culinaire by Auguste Escoffier, the result of important research in the course of which the complex cuisines of Antonin Carême, Jules Gouffé and Urbain François Dubois were simplified and refined. Cuisine classique also includes the inheritance of traditional regional recipes. Many chefs of the present have drawn heavily on this melting pot to create some of the greatest contemporary dishes.

CULINARY EXHIBITIONS Until 1914, there were two rival exhibitions in Paris, dating back to the beginning of the century, the Salon Culinaire and the Exposition Internationale d'Alimentation et d'Hygiène. Consisting mainly of demonstrations of very elaborate and decorative dishes, this type of exhibition is rarely held today. However, the food industry still organizes shows to demonstrate new materials, products and services.

CULTIVATEUR A clear soup made with vegetables and salted belly of pork (salt pork). It is the restaurant version of the classic vegetable and bacon soup. It is served with diced lean bacon, which may be placed on thin slices of bread.

RECIPE

Potage cultivateur

Cut 2-3 small carrots and 1 small turnip into large dice, prepare 6 tablespoons diced leeks (white part only) and 2 tablespoons diced onions. Season with salt and a pinch of sugar. Cook the prepared vegetable together in 50 g (2 oz. $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) butter in a covered pan. Moisten with 1.5 litres (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ pints 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) white consommé and cook for 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ hours. About 25 minutes before serving add 150 g (5 oz $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) sliced potatoes and 75 g (3 oz. $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) well blanched diced bacon.

The potatoes can be replaced by rice.

CUMBERLAND SAUCE A traditional English sweet sour sauce that is usually served cold with venison, braised ham, mutton, or roast or braised duckling. It is made with port, orange and lemon juice and zest, and redcurrant jelly.

RECIPE

Cumberland sauce

Remove the zest from an orange and a lemon and cut into fine strips, cook 1 generous tablespoon of the zest very gently in 200 ml (7 fl oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) port for about 20 minutes. Remove the zest and add to the port 2 tablespoons redcurrant jelly, then a pinch of cinnamon and a pinch of cayenne. Mix, bring to the boil, add the juice of the orange and lemon, then strain. Mix in the cooked strips of zest.

CUMIN An aromatic plant with small, elongated spindle shaped seeds that are used as a spice, either whole or ground. They have a piquant and slightly bitter taste combined with a warmth that is evident in their aroma. There are biblical references to its use in soup and bread, and the Romans used it to flavour sauces and grilled (broiled) fish and to preserve meat. It was often included in the recipes of the Middle Ages. Cumin is widely used in cooking. It is a classic flavouring for bread and is also used in certain preparations of cold meat and cheeses, such as Munster cheese. Cumin seeds are popular for rice dishes and ground cumin is essential in many Indian dishes.

CUP A drinking receptacle in various shapes, sizes and materials and provided with a handle. Cups are made of porcelain, faience, earthenware, glass, plastic or even metal. In former times, cups were made without a handle, or with two handles, or even with a lid, and they were not always accompanied by a saucer. In the 15th century, cups were used for both hot and cold drinks. Peasants drank from plain or engraved wooden cups. Before the French Revolution, the wine provided in cabarets was served in cups made of heavy faience. Decorative cups, usually made of hard stone mounted in gold or silver, were embellished with precious stones. From the 18th century onwards, faience and porcelain services became very widespread, but individual cups were also made, such as the trembleuse and the tasse à moustaches, with an inner lip that enabled men to drink from it without wetting their moustaches.

CUP A mixed drink usually with one ingredient used as a base and often prepared for several servings. Cups may be made by macerating fruit (such as peeled citrus fruits, cherries, pears, peaches or bananas) in liqueurs, spirits, wine or sometimes cider, beer, champagne or sparkling wines. Cups were enormously popular in the 19th century and, more recently for parties. Some cups may be ideal as thirst quenchers when based on wine diluted with fruit juice or lemonade. Pimms is perhaps the best known commercial cup.

RECIPES

Cider Cup

Mix together 1 glass of Calvados, 1 glass of Maraschino, 1 glass of Curacao and 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{3}$ cups) sweet cider. Add some ice cubes, slices of peeled orange and chilled soda water. Stir gently and decorate with thin slices of fruit.

Peach cup

Slice 500 g (18 oz) stoned (pitted) ripe peaches, add 150 g (5 oz. $\frac{2}{3}$ cup) caster (superfine) sugar and 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 3 cups) apple juice and leave to macerate for 1 hour. Then add 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) dry white wine and 3 tablespoons Curacao and place in the refrigerator. Add 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) chilled soda water just before serving.

Saint James's cup

Dissolve 200 g (7 oz, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) caster (superfine) sugar in 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) water. Add 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) Cognac, an equal quantity of rum, 1 glass of Curacao, 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) very strong cold tea and some crushed ice. Mix with 1 bottle of dry sparkling cider just before serving.

Sauternes cup

Mix together 1 glass of Curacao, 1 glass of Cognac, about 12 cherries in brandy, 1 bottle of Sauternes and a little chilled soda water. Add a few slices of lemon, cucumber peel and ice cubes.

CUPBEAKER An officer in charge of serving drinks to kings and princes under the French Ancient Regime. The position of cupbearer, which was instituted in France during Carolingian times, can be traced back to the Byzantine court. This was one of the most prestigious and lucrative posts concerned with serving the royal food and drink, but in practice the cupbearer himself only fulfilled this function at coronations.

CURACAO a liqueur based on sweet or bitter oranges (originally it was made from the dried peel of the bitter oranges from the island of Curacao, off the north coast of Venezuela). It is now made by many liqueur houses and often sold as triple see., it may be colourless, yellow or orange. Curacao is used in various cocktails and also for culinary purposes, notably for flavouring cakes, pastries, souffles, and above all, for making crepes Suzette. The best known form of this popular liqueur is the one evolved by Cointreau, one of the top-selling liqueurs of the world.

RECIPE

Curacao

(domestic recipe) Macerate 250 g (9 oz. 1 ½ cups) dried orange peel and the grated rind of 2 Seville (bitter) oranges in 3 litres (5 pints, 13 cups) alcohol in a large hermetically sealed jar for 1 month. Make a syrup with 1.25 litres (2 ¼ pints, 5 ½ cups) water and 2.5 kg (5 ½ lb 11 cups) granulated sugar. Strain the maceration, mix with the syrup, bottle and leave to mature. If liked, the liqueur may be coloured with a little caramel.

CURD Milk coagulated either by the action of rennet or by natural fermentation. Curdling is the first stage in the manufacture of cheese. In the French countryside, naturally cradled milk has always been a standard dessert, sometimes forming an essential part of the dinner. It may be eaten sweetened or mixed with fruit, or savoury and seasoned with herbs. The savoury dish is usually accompanied by boiled potatoes, particularly in Britany where it is called lait cuit (cooked milk) or marri, and in Lorraine where it is called matton or brocq. In Corsica, it is the custom to give a young bride on the threshold of her new home a bowl of goat's milk curdled with the stomach of a suckling kid.

CURRY The idea of curry as a dish flavoured with curry powder was a British invention or, more appropriately a misrepresentation of spiced Indian dishes. Originating from kari, meaning sauce and used to describe the spicy Indian sauces served with rice or other foods. Curry does not exist in traditional Indian cooking as a particular dish seasoned with a set mixture of spices. However, the name has been adopted by some Indian restaurants, often to describe a range of inferior dishes prepared by simmering different ingredients in a standard sauce. The sauce is often varied by increasing the quantity of chilli powder to produce milk medium or hot curries.

In Europe the mixtures were prepared to fixed formulas during the era of the East India Company and sold by the Dutch and British, the first were published at the beginning of the 18th century. Beauvilliers proposed one in 1814. In 1889, at the Universal Paris Exhibition, the composition of curry powder was set by decree 34 g (1.2 oz) tamarind, 44 g (1.5 oz) onion, 20 g (0.7 oz) coriander 5 g (0.17 oz) chilli pepper, 3 g (0.1 oz) turmeric, 2 g (0.08 oz) cumin 3 g (0.1 oz) fenugreek, 2 g (0.08 oz) pepper 2 g (0.08 oz) mustard.

A typical contemporary curry powder may include, for example, turmeric, coriander, cumin, pepper, cloves, cardamon, ginger, nutmeg, tamarind and chilli pepper. It may be further seasoned with fennel, caraway, ajowan seeds, dried basil, mustard seeds and cinamon.

In India the spices in kari vary according to the individual cook, the region caste and customs, as well, of course, as the main ingredient or dish which it is intended to complement. Even though a cook may use a flavouring mixture, traditionally it would be freshly prepared for each dish. In practice, mixtures such as garam masala may be made in larger quantities and stored in an airtight container.

Well balanced flavour. The seasoning of the dish does not begin and end with a mixture of ground spices fresh spices, such as ginger or chillies, and whole species, typically cardamoms, are often vital. Onion and garlic frequently feature and bay leaves, fenugreek leaves or curry leaves may be used. The ultimate flavour of the sauce or dish is also the result of careful preparation roasting the spices, frying the flavouring ingredients and adding spices at different stages during cooking. Many dishes are finished with a final dressing of spices cooked in butter or ghee or sprinkled with ground roasted spices. The important point that early curry recipes or spice mixtures missed is that a hot flavour is not necessarily a prerequisite. Warm flavours from mild spices, such as cinnamon, cloves and cardamom, and the refreshing eucalyptus citrus tones of cardamoms are often important. Finally, rarely are such dishes dominated by single overpowering flavour even fiery dishes laden with chillies should be carefully balanced, so that the flavour of the main ingredients and any other spices are clearly in evidence.

International curries. Although the typical European interpretation of a curry based on an inferior, lurid yellow curry powder may have tainted the image of dishes taking the name, in practice a wide variety of good quality international dishes have evolved. Curries feature in the cooking of many countries where Indian spice mixtures are used in combination with local ingredients and cooking styles. African and Southeast Asian curries are well known, especially those of Thailand, Malaysia and Indonesia. Rich in the use of coconut milk, lime and dried shrimps or shrimp paste, there are many delicious Oriental seafood curries and spiced noodle dishes.

Curry products. Commercial curry powders, pastes and sauces have improved and they are often associated with particular regional Indian origins or styles of cooking. Superior brands and carefully blended spices are available and these, along with high quality pastes or sauces, can be useful for seasoning savouries and dishes that are not intended to be authentic. However, inferior products still exist and cheap hot and bright yellow curry powders must be avoided.

Preparing curries or spiced dishes. Paying attention to technique is as important as the careful use of spices. Roasting spices before grinding them enhances their flavour and is recommended when they are to be added during the later stages of cooking or directly to a sauce. When roasting spices, take care not to overcook them or allow them to become too hot and burn as this will make them bitter. They are aromatic and just changing colour when ready.

When whole or ground unroasted spices are used, they should be cooked gently in a little butter, ghee or oil before the liquid is added. Spices are often cooked with onions, ginger and other ingredients fried in the first stages of cooking. Cooked spices and flavouring ingredients can be pureed to a paste and used as a marinade.

Marinating allows the spices to penetrate the main ingredients before cooking. The spices may be mixed with an oil or yogurt paste or they may be roasted and used as a dry rub. This is also a good method of helping to achieve tender results, especially when using citrus fruit juice and yogurt.

Long gentle cooking allows time for the spices to mingle and for the flavour of the dish to mature. Some spiced dishes benefit from being cooked in advance, cooled, chilled and thoroughly reheated before serving (particularly meat curries).

Warm spices may be added at the end of cooking, particularly cumin, coriander, cinnamon or nutmeg. These can be roasted and ground or whole spices can be cooked in a little butter and trickled over the dish this method is often used for dal or dishes of cooked pulses.

RECIPES

Curry Power

This is a useful general spice mixture and enough for seasoning 600-900 ml (1-1 ½ pints, 2 ½ -3 ¾ cups) sauce or a dish to yield 4-6 portions, depending on the ingredients. Place 1 cinnamon stick, 4 cloves, 4 green cardamoms, 2 tablespoons cumin seeds and 4 tablespoons coriander seeds in a small saucepan. Roast the spices gently, shaking the pan frequently, until they are just aromatic. Remove from the pan and cool, then grind to a powder in a spice grinder or pestle and mortar. Mix in 2 teaspoons ground fenugreek, ½ teaspoon ground turmeric and ½ teaspoon chilli powder.

Chicken curry

Draw skin and clean a medium sized chicken, then cut it into quarters and divide each quarter into 3-4 pieces (make sure the chicken bones are cut cleanly, without splintering). In a flameproof casserole containing lard (shortening) or butter, cook 2 medium onions. 100g (4 oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) ham and 2 peeled dessert (eating apples, all chopped and seasoned with crushed garlic, thyme, bay leaf, cinnamon, cardamom and powdered mace. Then add the chicken pieces and cook until they are firm, stirring them in the mixture without letting them get too cloured.

Add the prepared curry powder (above). Add 2 tomatoes, peeled, crushed and seeded, and mix well. Moistened with 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) coconut milk (or almond milk) Simmer with the lid on for about 35 minutes. Ten minutes before serving, add 150 ml ($\frac{1}{4}$ pint, $\frac{2}{3}$ cup) double (heavy) cream and the juice of 1 lemon. Continue to reduce the sauce until the desired consistency is achieved.

Arrange the chicken pieces in a dish and serve with rice prepared as follows: boil 250 g (9 oz. $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) rice for 15 minutes in salted water, stirring often, drain and wash several times in cold water. Empty on to a metal plate, wrap in a towel and dry in a preheated oven at 110 °C (225 °F, gas $\frac{1}{4}$) for 15 minutes.

Chicken curry can also be made using the recipe for lamb curry.

Lamb curry

Mix 1 tablespoon freshly grated root ginger (or 1 teaspoon ground ginger) a pinch of saffron, 3 tablespoons oil, a large pinch of cayenne, salt and pepper. In this mixture, roll 1.5 kg (3 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) neck or shoulder of lamb cut up into pieces, and leave to marinate for 1 hour. Peel and crush 3 large tomatoes. Brown the pieces of meat in a large saucepan containing 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) lard (shortening) then remove from the pan.

In the same fat, fry 4 large sliced onions until golden, then add the crushed tomatoes, the prepared curry powder (above) 3 finely chopped garlic cloves and a bouquet garni. Leave to brown for 5 minutes. Peel and grate an acid apple, add to the pan and stir for 2-3 minutes. Replace the meat in the pan, stir, add a small cup of coconut milk or semi skimmed milk, cover and leave to finish cooking gently for about 40 minutes. Adjust the seasoning.

Serve this curry very hot with boiled rice, cashew nuts, raisins, and pineapple and banana dice flavoured with lemon juice, all in separate dishes.

Monkfish curry a la creole

Cut about 1 kg (2 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb) monkfish into pieces, fry in oil until golden, then drain. In the same oil, fry 100g (4 oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) finely chopped onion until golden, then add 2 or 3 peeled crushed tomatoes, a pinch of saffron, 1 tablespoon freshly grated root ginger (or 1 teaspoon freshly grated root ginger (or 1 teaspoon ground ginger), 2 finely chopped garlic cloves, a bouquet garni, a piece of orange peel and 2 teaspoons of the prepared curry powder (above) Stir over a medium heat for 5-6 minutes, then add 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) hot water, cayenne, salt and pepper. Cover and leave to cook very gently for 30 minutes. Remove the bouquet garni and orange peel and serve with rice a la creole.

CUSSY, LOUIS, MARQUIS DE One of the wittiest gastronomes of the early 19th century . He held the post of prefect of the palace under Napoleon I. If his great friend Grimod de la Reyniere is to be believed, Cussy invented 366 different ways of preparing chicken a different dish for each day, even in a leap year.

In 1843 he published Les Classiques de la table, in which he devoted many pages to the history of gastronomy. He also wrote several articles. As principal steward of the emperor's household, he looked after the wardrobe, the furniture and the provisions of the court. When Louis XVIII succeeded Napoleon, it is said that at first he refused to have anything to do with Cussy, but that later, learning that he was the creator of strawberries a la Cussy, he gave him a post of responsibility.

Chefs have dedicated several recipes to him, including a garnish for meat or poultry consisting of artichoke hearts filled with mushroom puree, cooked au gratin, topped with cocks kidneys and fine slices of truffle, and coated with a port or Madeira sauce.

RECIPES

Potatoes a la Cussy

Cut off both ends of big yellow potatoes, and cut them with a special cutter (called a colonne) into cork-shaped chunks, about 2.5 cm (1 in) in diameter. Cut them into slices 5 mm (1/4 in) thick. Dry on a cloth to absorb all water. Put them into a big pan with 225 g (8 oz. 1 cup) hot clarified butter and cook gently so that they colour without sticking to the pan or drying up. In the meantime, slice 6-8 truffles, toss them in butter with 1 tablespoon Madeira and a walnut sized piece of chicken aspic. When the potatoes are cooked and have acquired a fine golden colour, remove them from the heat and add the truffles and the juice of half a lemon and serve piping hot.

Salpicon a la Cussy

Prepare a salpicon of braised calves sweetbreads truffles and mushrooms which have been cooked slowly in butter. Bind with concentrated Madeira sauce.

Turnovers a la Cussy

Fill circles of puff pastry with a forcemeat of creamed whiting or other white fish to which anchovy fillets (cut into small strips) and chopped truffles have been added. Fold the pastry over into turnovers. Place on a buttered baking sheet, brush with beaten egg, and bake in a preheated oven at 230 °C (450 °F, gas 8) until golden brown.

CUSTARD A hot or cold mixture, set or thickened with eggs or egg yolks. The term primarily refers to sweet mixtures of milk or cream with eggs. There are several basic types of sweet custard and numerous variations on them they also form the base for a wide range of desserts. There are two main types, pouring custards or custard sauces and baked or set custards.

Custard desserts Any of the custard sauces, including a sabayon, may be used as the base for frozen desserts, including ice creams or parfaits. They are often used as a base for chilled set creams mousses or souffles.

Many cooked desserts, hot or cold, rely on a baked custard. British bread and butter pudding is a good example the layers of buttered bread are soaked in a custard mixture before baking. More sophisticated desserts are made on the same principle, for example with sponge cake, enriched with alcohol. Baked custard fillings are also used for tarts.

Baked custards also feature in unusual puddings, such as fried custard, made by coating and frying chilled set custard, and delicately spiced Indian desserts prepared from sweet cake or bread soaked in saffron custard and baked. Bread soaked in custard and fried is also a classic peasant pudding.

Savoury custards. The same principle is also used for certain savoury mixtures. The typical filling for quiche is a good example, where cream and eggs are set on a base of savoury ingredients. Light fish custards or vegetable custards may be steamed or baked in individual dishes. Oriental cooking also includes savoury custards, based on eggs but without the cream or milk flavoured with finely cut savoury ingredients. A savoury dish of bread soaked in custard and baked, especially flavoured with cheese, makes a classic family supper, similarly, slices of bread soaked in beaten eggs and milk can be fried and served as a savory snack.

Making Custards Custards rely on lightly set egg for success, overheating the mixture or cooking it for too long will make the egg set completely and it will separate from the liquid, becoming curdled. Gently heating, usually over a bain marie or pan of hot (not boiling) water on the hob (stove top) or in a bain marie in the oven, is essential to avoid curdling. The perfect, smooth baked custard is strained and allowed to stand, then cooked, gently for just the right length of time, any slight bubbles or open texture indicate overcooking or too high a temperature.

For best results, the liquid should be heated and allowed to cool until warm or hand hot before it is added to the eggs. The eggs should be well beaten and the custard mixture strained through a fine sieve.

Crème patissiere is boiled because the flour prevents the egg yolks from curdling. A little cornflour can be added to custards to help stabilize them and reduce the risk of curdling.

Custard products Custard powder, invented by Alfred Bird in Birmingham, England in 1837, is a cornflour product with dried egg, colouring and flavouring. It does not resemble egg custard. Various products are produced based on this types of flavoured cornflour mixture.

RECIPES

Confectioner's Custard (Pastry

Cream Confectioner's custard (1)

In a thick based saucepan, place 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, 175 g (6 oz. ¾ cup) caster (superfine) sugar, a pinch of salt. 15 g (½ oz. 1 tablespoon) unsalted butter and 4 whole eggs. Work this mixture with a whisk. Infuse a vanilla pod (bean) in 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) milk, bring to the boil and add it to the mixture. Stir well, place the saucepan over the heat and boil for a few minutes, stirring all the time to prevent the custard from sticking to the bottom. Remove the vanilla pod, pour the custard into an earthenware dish and allow to cool, stirring from time to time.

Confectioner's custard (2)

Split a vanilla pod (bean), boil it in 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) milk, then remove it. Beat 3 egg yolks with 75 g (3 oz. 6 tablespoons) caster (superfine) sugar when mixture has turned white, add 40 g (1 ½ oz. 1/3 cup) cornflour (cornstarch) Then gradually add the boiling vanilla flavoured milk, whisking all the time. Put the mixture in a saucepan over a gentle heat and boil for 1 minute, whisking vigorously . Pour the custard into a deep bowl and leave to cool.

Chocolate confectioner's custard

Use 75 g –100 g (3-4 squares) cooking chocolate for 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) confectioner's custard. Cut the chocolate into small pieces, add them to the hot custard and stir with a wooden spoon until they have melted completely.

Coffee confectioner's custard

Stir 1 teaspoon coffee essence (coffee extract) or 1 tablespoon instant coffee into every 500 ml (17 oz. 2 cups) hot confectioner's custard.

Crème Anglaise

Crème anglaise

Blend 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, a pinch of salt and 8 egg yolks in a pan using a whisk. Boil 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) milk flavoured with vanilla or the zest of either a lemon or an orange. When the sugar egg yolk mixture forms ribbons, gradually add the warm (not boiling) milk. Mix well, keeping the pan on the heat and stirring continuously until the first signs of boiling. At this point the yolks are sufficiently cooked and the custard should cling to the spoon. Press the hot custard through a fine sieve or a silk strainer. Keep it hot in a bain marie if it is to accompany a hot dessert otherwise pour it into a basin, stir until it is completely cool and keep it in a cool place.

A simpler and lighter version of this can be made by reducing the number of egg yolks to 5-6 adding ½ teaspoon arrowroot, starch or cornflour (cornstarch) when mixing the eggs and sugar.

This gives a slightly thicker consistency and helps to prevent the custard from curdling if allowed to overheat.

Custard cream with liqueur

When the custard is completely cold add 1 tablespoon liqueur (Curacao, kirsch, Maraschino or rum, for example).

Custard flavoured with coffee or tea

Add coffee essence (extract) or instant coffee to the milk used for preparing the custard. Alternatively, tea can be infused in the milk, which is then strained.

Orange or lemon custard

For the quantities in the basic recipe, add the finely grated zest of 1 orange or lemon to the milk and infuse for 1 hour before making the custard. If required, shred the pared zest of 1 fruit very finely, boil until tender, and add to the warm custard.

Based Custards

Chocolate custard

Melt 100 g (4 oz. 4 squares) cooking (unsweetened) chocolate in a bain marie with 1 tablespoon milk when the mixture is quite smooth, add 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) milk, bring to the boil, then remove from the heat. Whisk 6 eggs with 100 g (4 oz ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar until pale and thick. Gradually add the chocolate flavoured milk, whisking it all the time. Strain the custard into 6 ramekins and cook in a bain marie in a preheated oven at 190 °C (375 °F, gas 5) for 25-30 minutes.

Take the moulds out of the bain marie, leave to cool and chill well.

Fried Custard

Fried custard fritters

Boil 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) milk with 1 tablespoon vanilla flavoured sugar. In a mixing bowl, beat 5 egg yolks with 100 g (4 oz ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar until the mixture is white. Beat in 75 g (3 oz. ¾ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour and gradually add the boiling milk, whisking it well. Pour the mixture into a saucepan, boil over a gentle heat for 3 minutes, stirring all the time, then remove from the heat and leave to cool until lukewarm. Spread the custard evenly over a buttered baking sheet to a thickness of 1.5 cm. (5/8 in) and leave it to cool completely. Cut it into rectangles, diamonds or circles, dip these in batter and plunge them into hot oil at a temperature of 170-180 °C (338-356 °F) Drain and dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

Fried custard with crystallized fruits

Macerate 100 g (4 oz. 2/3 cup) diced crystallized (candied) fruits in 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) Grand Marnier. Prepare some custard for frying as in the previous recipe and blend the fruit with it. Lightly oil a baking sheet and pour the custard on to it to form an even layer, 2 cm (3/4 in) thick, leave to cool before putting in the refrigerator for 2-3 hours. Then cut the custard into diamond shapes and coat with beaten egg and breadcrumbs. Fry in hot oil at a temperature of 175-180 °C (347-350 °F) until lightly browned, then drain on paper towels. Dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar and serve very hot.

CUSTARD APPLE The fruit of a tree that originated in Peru and is cultivated in many tropical countries. Similar fruits produced by related species include the soursop (or bullocks' heart) and the cinnamon apple. The custard apple is grown in the Near East, Central America and the south of Spain. It is the size of an orange, with a rough green skin, which turns blackish brown when the fruit is properly ripe. The flesh is white and juicy and has a sweet sour flavour with a rose like scent. The chilled fruit is cut in half, the black seeds are removed and it is usually eaten with a small spoon. It can also be used in sorbets and fruit salads.

CUSARD MARROW A species of climbing gourd which is eaten as a vegetable, it is called chayote in France, Christophine, or brionne in the West Indies and chouchoute in Madagascar and Polynesia. Originating from Mexico, where its young shoots are eaten like asparagus, the custard marrow is cultivated in tropical countries and in North Africa. It remains rough skin and several spines, and is as big as two fists, with deep longitudinal ribs. Its firm homogeneous white flesh is crisp. It does not have a very pronounced flavour, it has a light water content.

The custard marrow keeps for a long time. Before completely ripe, it may be consumed raw in salads, peeled, cored and finely sliced. It is especially common in Caribbean cookery. Not fully ripe until it starts to germinate, the gourd is peeled and pureed for making acras and very fine gratins. It is an essential ingredient in mange mele (ratatouille with streaky bacon and coconut milk) and accompanies spiced dishes such as kid colombo or pork curry. It may also be made into a soufflé.

RECIPE

Custard marrows ala martiniquaise

Press some boiled custard marrows in a cloth to extract the maximum amount of water and mix this pulp with bread soaked in milk. Brown some peeled and finely sliced spring onions (scallions) in butter, then blend with the mixture of bread and custard marrow. Season and spread out in a gratin dish, smoothing the top. Moisten with olive oil, sprinkle with fresh breadcrumbs and reheat in the oven.

CUTLET A shaped cutlet consists of boned minced (ground) meat, poultry or fish that is bound with sauce and shaped into a cutlet. It may then be dipped in egg and breadcrumbs, and fried in butter. Egg cutlets are made in a similar way. Hard boiled (hard-cooked) eggs are chopped, bound with a reduced béchamel sauce containing raw egg yolks, coated with breadcrumbs and fried. Mushrooms, ham or pickled tongue can be added. Shaped cutlets are served as a hot starter.

RECIPE

Shaped cutlets

Chop cooked poultry, game or meat into small dice or reduce to a very dry paste. Slowly and gradually add a thick béchamel sauce (with or without tomato puree) a thick Mornay sauce or an allemande sauce. The resulting mixture must have an even consistency. Add some chopped herbs (parsley tarragon, mint) Roll out the mixture evenly on a greased surface and allow it to cool completely. Divide the mixture into portions weighing about 75 g (3 oz.) Shape each portion into a cutlet, dip in beaten egg with a little added oil and coat with fresh breadcrumbs. Fry the cutlets in clarified butter. Serve garnished with vegetables and quarters of lemon.

CUTTLEFISH A mollusc related to the squid, which is about 30 cm (12 in) long and lives on weedy coated sea beds. Its body resembles a greyish oval bag with a mauve sheen and it has a fairly large head with ten irregular tentacles, two of which are very long. The bag is almost completely surrounded with fins and encloses a hard part the cuttlebone. The cuttlefish has several regional French nicknames margate, sepia, supion, Like the squid, the cuttlefish has an ink sac, which means that it can be cooked in its ink as it is in Spain. Cuttlefish are cooked like squid, but the flesh is quite tough and has to be beaten vigorously. The Romans were very fond of it and it is still eaten in Italy, Spain and south western France, especially stuffed or a l'Americaine.

CUVEE The contents of a wine vat (cuvée) and hence a blending of various vats or casks into a harmonious whole. The term is used particularly in Champagne, where the ingredients of the cuvée come from different wines of different vineyard plots, different grapes, and, for the non-vintage wines, of different years.

Terms associated with this word include tête de cuvée and première cuvée but the legality of their use depends on the region's laws.

CRYNIKI Also known as cierniki, pumpplings made with cottage cheese, served as a hot hors d'oeuvre with soured (sour) cream. Alternatively, they may be poached and served with melted butter or cooked in timbales with grated cheese and butter. Cryniki are of Polish origin, but also form part of the repertoire of Russian cuisine. The cheese is mixed with eggs and flour (seasoned with salt and pepper) until it forms a soft dough. Small triangles or discs, about 2 cm (3/4 in) thick, are cut out of this dough, floured, and then lightly browned in butter in a frying pan.

D

DAB limande Any of several related flatfish found in the North Sea, the English Channel and the Atlantic, north of the Bay of Biscay. There are several varieties of dab. The true (or European) dab is lozenge-shaped; its upper surface is brownish with orange-yellow spots. The false dab (or red dab) is a rather elongated oval in shape, brownish-grey on the upper surface and light sandy grey underneath. The lemon dab (or lemon sole) is rounder and has a superior flavour; it is reddish-brown with darker spot, and the gills are bordered with an orange line. The American dab is similar to the European species. Dab are 20-35 cm (8-14 in) long and weight 175-250 g (6-9 oz). However; 40% of their body weight is lost during cleaning and filleting. They are sold either whole or filleted, and are usually grilled (broiled) or baked.

DACQUOISE A traditional gâteau of southwestern France, also called palois (the Dacquoise are the inhabitants of Dax, the palois those of Pau). It consists of two or three layers of meringue mixed with almonds (or almonds and hazelnuts). This base, a variant of sucrée, is light and crisp and should be stored as for meringue. The layers are sandwiched together with whipped cream or French butter cream, variously flavoured. Fresh Fruit may be added to the filling, particularly strawberries. The top is usually dusted with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

RECIPE

Coffee dacquoise

Whisk 8 egg whites with a pinch of salt until they form stiff peaks. Then gradually add 200 g (7 oz, 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar and 2 teaspoons vanilla sugar, whisking continuously, and continue whisking until the meringue is firm and shiny. Gently fold in 150 g (5 oz, 1 ¼ cups) ground almonds and 75 g (3 oz, ¾ cup) chopped blanched hazelnuts. Butter three 20 cm (8 in) flan (pie) rings, place them on buttered baking sheets and divide the mixture between them. Cook in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) for about 20 minutes. When the meringue rounds are cooked, turn them out and allow to cool.

Prepare a coffee crème au beurre (see creams) for the filling using 250 g (9 oz, 1 cup) sugar cooked with 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) water, 8 egg yolks, 250 g (9 oz, 1 cup) butter and 1 tablespoon coffee essence (extract). Toast 100 g (4 oz, 1 cup) flaked almonds. Place the coffee cream in a piping (pastry) bag fitted with a fluted nozzle and sandwich the meringue rounds with thick layers of piped cream. Sprinkle the top with toasted almonds and dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

DEFINA The Sephardi version of Cholent. This Arab ragout of beef cooked with chick peas, potatoes and whole eggs cooked in their shells, layered with spices, can be traced back as far as the 2nd century AD, when it was cooked in pots sealed with a flour and water paste (lute) and taken to the public bakehouse for cooking. The word dafina, used in English, is taken from Moroccan Arabic (adafina in Soanish, (fina in French and Arabic).

DAIKON Also known as dai-co, mooli, Japanese radish or Satsuma radish. A type of white-skinned radish, widely cultivated as a vegetable in the Far East, for use raw, in cooked dishes or as a garnish. Its large fleshy root can grow up to 1 m (3 ft) in length and weight several kilograms. As well as being added to soups and braised dishes, finely grated or shredded white radish is a popular salad ingredient and it is used to make fresh relishes. It is also pickled in salt.

DAIQUIRI A rum cocktail named after a small village on the Cuban coast near Santiago, where, in the 19th century, the Americans supposedly landed after defeating the Spanish. Generally served in a frosted glass, fresh fruit, such as strawberries, may be added and the cocktail may be diluted with mineral water.

RECIPE

Daiquiri

To frost a glass, dip the rim in water and then in sugar, into a cocktail shaker put 1 measure of care sugar syrup, 2 of lemon 3 of the white rum and 1 tablespoon crushed ice. Shake for several seconds. Then pour into the glass.

DAL also dhal and various other seedlings. A Hindi word meaning leguminous and applied to split pulses as opposed to whole pulses. Known as grand vegetarian dishes are important in Indian, Pakistan and Singhalese cooking, and dale are a good source of vegetarian protein. The term is also applied so dishes of the cooked split pulses prepared to this or soup-like consistency.

There are many types dale, the names of which are subject to regional variations and different spelling Common types include channa dal, are lentis, toor dale are pigeon peas; uric dale are prepared from round black beans, and debut and is a superior dale prepared from the same small black beans but washed until white.

For dal, the dish, the split pulses are coked in water, often until reduced to a puree. Spices and other flavouring ingredients, such as onion, garlic or ginger, may be added. Before serving, the dal may be garnished with a flavouring mixture, including ingredients such as whole seeds, fresh or dried spices, garlic and/or onions cooked in oil or ghee. Herbs, such as curry leaves, fenugreek leaves or fresh coriander (cilantro) may also be added. Dal are also used to make kofta (little savoury balls) or they may be soaked and ground to a batter to make light pancakes or fritters known as dosas (often with rice). Dal are added to some vegetable or meat dishes to thicken them.

DAME BLANCHE Any of various desserts in which white pale colours predominate. The name applies particularly to vanilla ice cream used as a bombe filling or served with whipped cream and a chocolate sauce to provide contrast; fruit in syrup or alcohol may be added. Other kinds of dame blanche include a sponge cake filled with cream and crystallized (candied) fruits and completely covered with Italian meringue, a lemon ile flottante and an almond ice cream.

RECIPE

Coupes dame blanche

Prepare some Chantilly cream by mixing 200g (7 oz) double (heavy) cream with 2 tablespoons milk, 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) caster (superfine) sugar, a little vanilla sugar or essence (extract) to taste and a crushed ice cube; whip until the cream forms peaks. Chill. Melt 200g (7 oz. Squares) dark chocolate in a bain marie with 2 tablespoons milk. Add 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter and mix well; then add 3 tablespoons single (light) cream. Keep the sauce hot in the bain marie.

Take 6 individual sundae glasses and put 2 scoops of vanilla ice cream into each. Using a piping (pastry) bag fitted with a fluted nozzle, pipe a dome of Chan tilly cream into each glass. Serve the hot chocolate sauce separately in a sauceboat (gray boat).

Peaches dame blache

Macerate 4 slices pineapple in 1 tablespoon each of kirsch and Maraschino. Make a syrup using 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) water; 250 g (9 oz, 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar and half a vanilla pod (bean), split in two. Peel 2 large peaches and poach gently in the syrup for about 10 minutes, turning them frequently, then remove from the heat.

Prepare some Chantilly cream by whipping 150 ml (¼ pint, 2/2 cup) double (heavy) cream with 1 tablespoon milk, 1 tablespoon caster (superfine) sugar and a little vanilla sugar or essence (extract) to taste; chill. Drain the peaches, halve them and remove the stones (pits). Divide 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) vanilla ice cream between 4 sundae glasses, add a slice of pineapple and a peach half to each, and decorate with a ‘turban’ of Chantilly cream using a piping (pastry) bag fitted with a fluted nozzle. Serve immediately.

DAME-JEANNE The French name for a large glass or earthenware vessel holding up to 50 litres (11 gallons, 13 US gallons) liquid. Usually encased in basketwork, it was traditionally used to transport wines and spirits. In the Bordeaux region its capacity is about 2.5 litres (4 ¼ pints, 11 cups) – between a magnum and a double magnum. The close link between this region and England explains how dame-Jeanne was corrupted to demijohn in English.

DAMIER A gâteau made of rum-flavoured Genoese sponge cake filled with butter cream and covered with praline. The sides are coated with flaked almonds and the top is decorated in a chequerboard pattern.

RECIPE

Damier

Make a Genoese sponge cake using 40 g (1 ½ oz. 3 tablespoons) butter, 3 egg yolks 90 g (3 ½ oz. 7 tablespoons) caster (superfine) sugar, 90g (3 ½ oz, 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour and a pinch of salt. Allow the cake to rest in the tin (pan) for 24 hours.

Prepare a syrup by boiling 300g (11 oz. 1½ cups) caster sugar in 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) water, allow to cool and then add 3 tablespoons rum.

Prepare a butter cream (see creams using 3 egg yolks. 150 g 2/1 cup) butter, 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) caster superfine sugar, 2 tablespoons water and 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) ground praline. Gently melt 250 g (9oz. 9 squares) dark chocolate in a bowl over hot water. Prepare some royal icing (frosting) using 1 egg white and 75 g (3 oz. ½ cup) icing (confection) sugar. Toast some flaked almonds and coarsely chop them.

Cut the sponge into two equal rounds and sprinkle the run syrup over them. Spread half the butter cream over one of the rounds with a palette knife (spatula). Cover with the second round and decorate this with the remaining butter cream. Sprinkle the sides of the gâteau with flaked almonds. Using a piping (pastry) bag, pipe the royal icing over the butter cream to form a chequer board pattern of 3 cm (1 2/4 in) squares fill alternate squares with royal icing and the rest with the melted chocolate.

DAMPFNUDELN A sweet dessert, made in German and Alone. Consisting of rounds of leavened dough baked in the oven and served either with compote, fruits in syrup jam or vanilla cream, and dusted with sugar and cinnamon. Alternatively, it may be filled with compote of apricots in name and folded like a small turnover.

Originally, dampfnudeln was a savory dish the name means steamed noodles usually accompanied by green salad.

RECIPE

dampfnudeln

Prepare a starter dough by creaming 15 g (1/2 oz. 1 cake) fresh (compressed yeast in 200 ml (7 fl. oz. 1 cup) warm milk until dissolved (alternatively, sprinkle 1 ½ teaspoons dried (active dry) yeast over the milk and stir until dissolved) and leave in a warm place until frothy. Then mix into 125 g (4 ½ oz. 1 cup) strong plain (bread) flour. Leave this starter in a warm place until doubled in volume.

Now gradually work into the dough 100g (4 oz. ½ cup) melted butter, a pinch of salt, the grated zest of 1 lemon 5 egg yolks. 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar and 275 g (13 oz. 3 ¼ cups) strong plain flour, Roll out with a rolling pin and leave to rest for 5 minutes. Cut the dough into rounds and leave to in a warm place for 1 hour. Brush with melted butter, dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar and bake in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4), for about 15 minutes until lightly browned.

DAMSON Oval stone fruit similar to plan, but smaller, with blue-black skin and sharp fullflavoured flesh. Related to the failace; a small round plum either balck plum either black (black bullaces) or pale yellow- green (know as white bullaces). Originating from Eastern Europe and west Asia, the damson is named after Damascus, from where it was taken to Europe. Know as a bedge now fruit, damsons are also cultivated.

Neither damson nor bullaces are eaten raw, but are used in cooking. The tart, fruity flavor of damsons makes excellent preserves, particularly fruit butters and cheeses. These thick purses have high sugar content and the cheese boils down to give a slicing consistency when cold.

DANDELION a perennial flowering plant that grows wild in Europe. Pissenlit in Fench, the English name is derived from the alternative French name dent-hellion literally “lion” tooth, referring to its seated leaves); piscenlit is a reference to as supposed dietetic properties.

Dandelion leaves are usually eaten in salads but may be cooked like spinach. Wild dandelion leaves should be picked before the plant has flower (January-March), when they are small and sweet. In France cultivated varieties of dandelion are available from October to March; they have longer, more lender leaves but sometimes lack flavor in salads, dandelion are traditionally accompanied by diced bacon and garlic-flavored conditions (as in salade du groits of due. Literally donkey's snout salad; typical of Lyon), hard-boiled chard-cooked) eggs or walnuts.

RECIPE

dandelion and bacon salad

Thoroughly wash and dry 250 g (9 oz) dandelion leaves, dice 150 g (5 oz, ¾ cup) green or smoked streaky (slab) bacon and brown gently in a frying pan. In a salad bowl prepare some vinaigrette using 1 tablespoon white wine, 2 tablespoons oil, salt and pepper. Add the dandelion leaves and toss thoroughly. Pour 1 tablespoon white wine vinegar over the diced bacon and stir with a wooden spoon, scraping the bottom of the frying pan, pour the contents of the frying pan into the salad bowl. Quartered hard-boiled (hard-cooked) eggs may be added to the bowl before adding the bacon if wished.

DANICHEFF The name is used for three quite separate dishes a salad, an iced dessert and a gateau. The salad is a mixed one consisting of a julienne of cooked artichoke hearts, raw mushrooms, blanched celeriac, asparagus tips and thin slices of potato. The salad is dressed with mayonnaise and garnished with hard-boiled (hand-cooked) eggs, truffles (either sliced or in a julienne) and crayfish tails.

The name danticbeff is also given to a gateau and a praline parfait ice with coffee and rum. The origin of the name is unknown, but it seems to date from the beginning of the 20th century.

RECIPE

Danicheff gateau

Prepare a Genoese* sponge using 4 egg yolks, 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) butter, 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar and 125 g (4 ½ oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour; leave the cake to rest for 24 hours.

Boil 300 g (1) oz. 1 ½ cups) caster sugar with 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 ¼ cups) water in a saucepan, then allow to cool and add 2 ½ tablespoons kirsch. Prepare some confectioner's custard (see cream) using 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) milk, 2 egg yolks, 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) caster sugar, and 1-1 ½ tablespoons corn-flour (cornstarch). Also make an Italian meringues* using 4 egg whites, 200 g (7 oz. 1 cup) caster sugar, and 3 tablespoons water.

Cut the sponge cake into two equal rounds and spoon the sugar syrup over them. Place one of the rounds on a baking sheet and thickly spread with the confectioner's custard. Dice a large can of pineapple, sprinkle with kirsch, and place them on top of the confectioner's custard and cover with about 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) apricot jam. Place the other round of sponge cake on top and completely coat the surface of the cake, including the sides, with the Italian meringue paste, spreading it with a palette knife (spatula). Sprinkle with about 200 g (7 oz. 2 cup) flaked almonds and dust with icing (confectioner) sugar. Brown in a preheated oven at 200°C (400 °F, gas 6) for about 5 minutes. Allow cooling before transferring to a serving dish.

DANISH BLUE A Danish cow milk cheese, blue with a whitish and containing about 45% fat. It has strong and slightly piquant flavor and is sold, wrapped in foil, in rounds 20 cm (8 in) in diameter, 10-12 cm (4-5 in) thick and weighing 2.5-3 kg (5 ½-6 ½ lb).

DANISH PASTRY A sweet pastry, made from a rich yeasted dough rolled and folded with butter as for puff pastry. The pastry is cut and shaped to enclose a sweet filling. Shapes include combs (leammary) and pinwheels (standpatters). An almond paste or marzipan mixture is one of the classic fillings but various ingredients used, such as dried or fresh fruit, nuts, jams or preserves. The pastries are glazed or iced when cooked.

Often referred to simply as Danish, these pastries are popular with coffee or tea. In Denmark they are called brød (Danish bread) in Vietnam they are brown bapetheginet. Danish pastries are included in Vietnamese but not all Vietnamese are Danish pastries. The Danish dough and shapes of pastry differ from the Vietnamese dough which is not as light and airy due to a different rising method.

DANZIG GOLDWASSER A liqueur made from spirits in which enters fruit zest. Herbs and mace has been steeped. It is filtered and sweetened, and then tiny quantities of gold or silver leaf are added of Polish origin, it was especially popular in the 19th century and it is the classic flavoring for soufflé both cold.

DAO A large wine region in the north of Portugal where the best vineyards are in the hillsides 200-500 m (660-1640 ft) high, with a very fertile soil. Traditionally, the red wines were lean and very tannic, but with modern winemaking techniques and a change in the minimum aging laws, younger, fruit-driven wines of excellent quality are being produced.

DARBLAY A Parmentier (potato) soup mixed with a julienne of vegetables, thickened with egg yolks and cream, and garnished with chervil.

RECIPE

potage julienne Darblay

Prepare 1 litre (1 ½ pints, 4 ½ cups) pureed potatoes and dilute with about 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) consommé. Add 4 tablespoons julienne of vegetables which have been gently cooked in butter. Mix 3 egg yolks with 100 ml (4 fl. Oz. 7 tablespoons) double (heavy) cream and use this liaison to thicken the soup. Before serving, blend in about 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) butter and garnish the soup with chervil.

DARIOLE A small deep round mould with sloping sides, or the preparation cooked in such a mould. Dariole moulds are used to make small pastries, cheese flans, individual x bar, set custards or flans, small cakes, rice puddings and vegetable pastries. They are sometimes referred to as castle tins or moulds.

The original dariole, mentioned by itabelais, was a small puff pastry case filled with frangipane; its name is derived from an old Provencal word daurar (to brown turn golden), referring to its crust. It is still traditional fare in Reims, on the feast of St Remy, and also in Reavais, where the frangipane is flavoured with kirsch and dusted with sugar.

Dariole moulds are used to bake British madeleines, small cakes coated with jam and desiccated coconut, and topped with glaze (candied) cherries.

RECIPE

almond darioles

Lightly butter 6 dariole moulds and line them with puff pastry. Prepare some frangipane cream using 75 g (3 oz. 6 tablespoons) caster (superfine) sugar, 75 g (3 oz. ¼ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, 1 whole egg, 3 egg yolks, 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) milk, 6 crushed macarons. 1 tablespoon ground almonds and 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter. Allow to cool completely then fill the pastry-lined moulds with this mixture. Bake in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F. gas 7) for about 30 minutes. Remove the pastries from the moulds and dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar. Alternatively, the moulds may be filled simply with frangipane cream, without the puff pastry.

cheese darioles

Butter 6 dariole moulds. Bring 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) milk to the boil. In a mixing bowl, beat 2 whole eggs and 4 egg yolks; add 65 g (2 ½ oz. ½ cup) grated cheddar, salt, and pepper. Use which to blend in the boiled milk. Fill the buttered moulds with this mixture, place them in a bain marie and bring the water to the boil; then transfer to a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F gas 7) and cook for about 20 minutes. Remove the firm custards from the moulds on to a serving dish. Coat with a sauce made from very hot fondue of tomatoes to which mushroom duxelles or a light béchamel sauce has been added. Alternatively. Serve with a good tomato sauce. Serve immediately.

DARNE A thick transverse slice of a large raw fish, such as hake, salmon or tuna. The word comes from the Breton dam (meaning piece). A dable, on the other hand, is a thin slice or escalope of fish. That and is flounder is also gathered almonded fillets may also be sautéed.

DARPHIN A flat potato cake made of grated or judicate potato cooked in a frying pan, then in the oven. Until it is brown on both sides but soft in the center. Named after the chef who created the recipe, this dish is served with Madeira or Peregueras sauce to accompany fillet of beef and fried source of steak (filed amnotist. It may also be called pentillesant the pommes de terre (potato doormar')

RECIPE

Darphin potatoes

Peel (2 ½ lb) potatoes, rinse and soak in cold water for 1 hour: grate or cut into thin matchsticks and remove excess moisture with a cloth. Pour 250 ml (8 fl 1 cup) oil into a flan tin (pie pan) or dish and heat in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9). Melt 50 g (2 oz) butter in a frying pan, add half the potatoes and sauté them for 5 minutes. Then transfer them to the flan tin and press down. Repeat with the remaining potatoes. Sprinkle with a little extra oil and cook in the oven for about 20 minutes. Turn out the potato cake and serve very hot.

DARTOIS A hot pastry or hors d'oeuvre comprising two strips of puff pastry enclosing a savoury or sweet filling. It is said to have been named after the vaudeville artist Francois-Victor Dartois, who was very well known in France in the 19th century.

The fillings for savoury Dartois (also called sausselis) are the same as for allumenttes: anchovies, sardines, crayfish, chicken and truffled foie gras are most often used. Sweet Dartois are filled with confectioner's custard (pastry cream) which is sometimes flavoured with crystallized (candied) fruits, frangipane, jam or fruit purees. Frangipane Dartois is also called gateau a la Mamon, in honour of the composer Massenet, who was very fond of it.

Recipes

Savoury Dartois

Anchovy Dartois

Prepare some puff pastry and a fish forcemeat. Roll and cut the pastry into two rectangular strip of equal size and thickness. Add some anchovy butter to the forcemeat and spread one of the strips with it, leaving a border of 1 cm (½ in) all round the edge. Drain the oil from some anchovy fillets and arrange on top, cover with more fish forcemeat, then place the second pastry strip on top and seal the edges, cook and preheated oven at 220 C (425 f, gas 7) for 20 – 25 minutes.

Seafood Dartois

Prepare 400 g (14 oz.) pull pastry. Peach 8 scampi in a court-boullion for 5 minutes. Prepare 8 scallops and peach in a small casserole for 6-7 minutes with 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) white wine 150 ml (¾ pint, 2/2 cup) single (light) cream, 1 goodsized shallot (chopped), salt and pepper. Drain the scampi, shell the tails and cut into section. Drain the scallops, reserving the liquor, and elite. Add 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) shelled shrimps and gently heat all the seafood ingredients together in butter. Add some Calvados or mare brandy and set it alight. Pour the reserved cooking juices from the scallops over the mixture and chicken with 1 tablespoon beurre marie. Adjust the seasoning allow to cool completely and proceed as for anchovy Dartois, but using the seafood filling instead.

Sweet Dartois

apricot jam Dartois

Prepare 500 g (1 lb 2 oz.) pull pastry and chill for 1 hour. Then divide the pastry in half and roll each half into a rectangle 15 cm (6 in) wide, 25 cm (10 in) long and about 3 mm (1/2 in) thick.

Place one of the rectangles on a baking sheet and cover with about 400 g (14 oz. 1 ¼ cups) apricot jam. Cover with the second rectangle of pastry and bake in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F gas 7) for about 15 minutes. Dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar and return to the oven to caramelize for 5 minutes Serve warm.

frangipane Dartois

Prepare 500 g (1 lb 2 oz) puff pastry and chill for 1 hour. To make the frangipane, soften 100g (4 oz. ½ cup) butter with a wooden spatula. Blend 2 egg yolks in a mixing bowl with 125 g (4 ½ oz. 1 cup) ground almonds. 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar, a little vanilla essence (extract) and the softened butter. Cut the pastry into two rectangles 25 cm (10 in) long and 15 cm (6 in) wide. Complete as for apricot jam Dartois.

raspberry and apple Dartois

Prepare 500g (1 lb 2 oz.) puff pastry and chili for 1 hour. Peel 575 g (1 ¼ lb) cooking apples, cut into quarters. Core and slice finely, then toss in 2 tablespoon lemon juice. Puit the apples into a saucepan with 125 g (4 ½ oz. Cup) caster (superfine) sugar. 40 g (1 ½ oz. 3 tablespoons) butters and half a vanilla pod (bean) cut in two. Add 1 tablespoon water and cook over a low heat, stirring from time to time. When the apple are reduced to a puree, remove the vanilla pod and allow to cool.

Roll out the pastry to a rectangle 3 mm (½ in) thick, and cut it into twelve 10 cm it into twelve 10 cm (4 in) squares mix the stewed apples with 2 tablespoon raspberry jam and place a generous spoonful of the filling in the center of six of the pastry squares. Moisten the edges of each square with water and cover with one of the remaining squares. Pinch the edges to seal the pastry. Complete as for apricot jam Dartois.

DARTOIS Also a la of Artois, the name of various preparations, all dedicated to the Comte d Artois, future % of France. The Dartois garnish for large pieces of meat cnsists of glazed carrots and turnings braised celery hearts and highly fried potatoes, arranged in luppets around the meat. Dartois soap in a puree of white team with the adohigh of a high palience of vegetable in caron of lamb. Dartois the joint is surrounded by potato cases (shells) filled with petits pouts and served with Mediera sauce.

DASHI the Japanese name for stock. Stocks used in Japanese cookery are very light, made by soaking dried konbu seaweed and/or other ingredients in water. Dried cured bonito flakes may be used with the konzu. Niboshi, small dried fish. May be used instead of bonito flakes, depending on the type of dashi repaired. The ingredients may be soaked more than once; the first stock, known as schiban dashi, has the best flavour and it is used for fine or light soups and dishes. Niban dashi is the stock reading from the second soaking and this is used in soups or dishes with stronger or a wider variety of ingredients.

Dried Bonito and other ingredients for dashi are sold in sachets for adding to a stated quantity of water. Instant dashi powders or other types of convenience dashi are available.

DATE The fruit of the date palm. Brown and fleshy, about 1 cm long and growing in clusters, the date is rish in sugar. The Greeks, who called it dediclos because of its shape. Used it in sauces for fish in meat and included it in various cakes and pastries.

Thought to have originated at the pesuan Gulf, the date palm was the three of late for the haldeans what avle both the fruit and salt the sap, used its fibres for weaving and its nuts as fuel. Dates may be soft, with light tender flesh ideal for eating fresh;semi-dried with a good flavour and moderately weet, for selling as the popular dried date hand dates are very sweet, high fruit known as camel or locad dates. Dates are now cultivated throughout North Africa and Arabia, and in Pakistan the USA (California) and Australia. Only a few of the many varieties are exported, notably deglet noor (meaning date of the light). Native to Tunisia, but also grown in Algeria and the USA. This is golden brown, with a mild flavour and a light flesh which is slightly transparent. It is also known as deglet nour or ennour, or Muscat date. Others include the balauri (also hallaurt or balauy) a pale coloured date which is very sweet, and the lebaleseb, which has orange-brown skin and is very fragrant. The kbadraut date is similar to the balawl, but it is not too sweet, known as chadraunt in Israel, this variety is grown particularly in southern iraq. Medfool or medful dates are red, full flavoured and fleshy; they are grown in Egypt and California.

Dates are used fresh – they are frozen for export to prevent them from over-ripening, then thaved for sale as fresh produce. Semi-dried dates are whole, tender and succulent with a good flavour balancing their sweetness. Dried dates are firm, sickly and very sweet; they are available pressed into blocks or chopped and rolled in sugar as well as whole.

The sap of the date palm produces a wine; grayish and sweet, which ferments rapidly to become sparkling. This refreshing drink is also consumed in India, where dates are used to make spiced sauces, confectionery and cakes. Thibarine is a rich, sweet Tunisian date liqueur. In Iraq, date juice serves as a condiment for soaps and salads.

Dates are eaten as sweetness, other stuffed or iced (frosted). North African outside makes varied use of them, notably in tafines (rafodts), sweet couscous and curry – falvoured dishes, and even for stuffing fish (shad). Dates are also used in baking fritters, nougats and jam, and are crystallized (candied).

RECIPE

date fritters

Remove the stones (pits) from some dates and fill each one with very thick confectioner's custard (pastry cream) flavoured with kirsch or rum. Coat the dates in batter and deep fry them, then drain and dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

date nougat

Remove the stones (pits) from 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) dates. Toast 250 g (9 oz. 2 cups) blanched almonds in a frying pan, without fat. Prepare a syrup by boiling 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar with 4 tablespoons water until the temperature reaches 110°C (230°F). Remove from the heat stir in 250 g (9 oz ¼ cup) honey, then quickly mix in the dates, almonds 2 pinches of white pepper. 1 teaspoon ground ginger and the same quantity of tahini (sesame paste) or ground sesame seeds. Form the mixture into a sausage shape and slice into rounds Store in an airtight container.

Staffed dates

Prepare same almond paste as follows heat 150 g (5 oz. 2/3 cup) caster (superfine) sugar in a heavy based saucepan with 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) water and 1 tablespoon liquid glucose. When the temperature reaches soft ball 115°C (240°F), remove from the heat and add 75 g (3 oz. ¾ cup) ground almonds. Stir with a wooden spatula to obtain a granular texture. Allow to cool.

Remove the stones (pits) from about 30 dates, with our separating the two halves. When the paste is cold knead it in small quantities until supple and then form it into a large ball Hollow this out, and pour into the hollow a good tablespoon of kirsch and 3 drops green food coloring knead the paste again to spread the color evenly. With the palm of the hand, roll each slice into an olive shape; use one to fill each date. Serve the stuffed dates in individual paper lined cases. They may also be sprinkled with crystallized sugar.

DAUBE A method of dressing meat (beef, mutton turkey goose pheasant or pork. Chicken certain vegetables (bonitos mushroom. Palm hearts) and some fish (tuna) meat cooked and daubed this method and red wine stock will season with herbs: the name is thought to come from the Spanish dobar (to brace). The word daube alone generally means a joint of beef braised in wine, a popular dish in several southern provinces of France where it is served hot or cold.

RECIPES

daube of beef a la béarnaise

Cut 2 kg (4 ½ lb) top rump chuck beef into 5 cm (2 in) cubes, lard each cube crossways with a small piece of pork streaky (slab) bacon rolled in chopped parsley and garlic seasoned with crushed thyme and bay leaf. Marinate these beef cubes for at least 2 hours in a bottle red wine and 4 table-spoon brandy with 1 large sliced onion, 2 sliced carrots and a bouquet garni of parsley, thyme and bay leaves. Drain, reserving the marinade, pat the cubes of meat dry and roll them in flour. Brown the meat and vegetables separately.

Line the bottom of a flameproof casserole with slices of bayonne ham, then add alternate layer of the meat cubes and vegetables. Add the bouquet garni. 2-3 crushed garlic clove to the reserved marinade and a few spoonfuls of stock: then boil for 30 minutes. Strain and pour over the meat. Cover the Casserole and seal on the lid with a flour- and- water paste. Bring to the boil on the hob (stove top) then cook in a preheated oven at 120°F (gas ½) for 4-5 hours.

Serve the daube from the casserole after skimming off some of the fat. In Normandy this daube is served with a commel (manize) porridge, which is eaten cold and sliced as an alternative to bread.

Daube of beef à la provençale

Cut 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb) lean chick or silverside (bottom round) into 6 cm (2 ½ in) cubes. Lard each cube crossways with a piece of fat bacon roled in dhopped parsley and garlic. Put the meat into an earthenware dish or casserole with a calf's foot, if available, and cover with 600 ml (1 pint, 2 ½ cups) white wine mixed with 2 tablespoon brandy, salt and pepper. Marinate for (5 oz. 1 ½ cups) mushroom, 75 g (3 oz. ½ cup) chopped raw onion, 2 crushed tomatoes, 150 g (5 oz. 1 cup) diced and blanced thick streaky (slab) bacon and 100g (4 oz. 1 cup) balck olives.

Remove the fat from some bacon rinds. Blanch, wipe and use the rinds to line the bottom of an earthenware casserole just large enough to contain the meat and its garnishes. Add 2 sliced carrots then add alternating layers of meat cubes and the begetable and bacon mixture. In the center of the meat place a large bouquet gami consisting of pardried orange peel. Add the white wine mixture from the marinade plus an equal volume of beef stock so that it just covers the meat.

Cover the casserole, seal the lid with a flour-and-water paste, and cook in a preheated oven at 120°C (250°F gas ½) for 6 hours. Remove the bouquet garmi allow to cool, then skim off the fat. Serve the daube cold in slices, like a terrine, of hot (reheated in the oven).

Other recipes see goose, tung turkey.

DAUBIERE A braising pot of stoneware, earthenware or gahanized copper used for making daubes and othe braised dishes which require a long slow cooking time. Like ethe braisietre (braising pan), it was originally designed for cooking over charcoal, the dambiere has a lid with a raised edgfe for holding burning charcoal or boiling water.

DAUDET LEON Frensh writer and journalist (born Paris), 1867, died Saint-Remy – de – Provence, 1942) bounder, with Charles Mauras, of Eathon francatse, Daudet was an unashamed polemicis and one of the greatest gastenomes of his time. In Paris recuhe enclodes Paristan life though its restauratism and its chefs, from the best known to the humblest. At the pension laveus, he invented hauback (which he sasid wa dedicated to a Bulgarian general), comprising white haricot berans, saitered potatoes and eggs sar le plant. He was a regular customer at a Grille, a where and rubbed shoulders oer the beef hash and pickled pork. But he also patamized the Tour Argent, when, with his friend Bavinsky, he discussed such topics as the merits of an endive fedocory salad, lightly crushed in absinthe, to accompany foie gras, his description of Frederic cutting up canard au sand (duck cooked in its blood) is famous in fasronomic circle at Weber's house. He descreibid Marcel Proust, a doe-eyed young gentleman muffled up in an enomous overxant being served with grapes or pears.

A founder member of the Academic Goncourt, he organizaed the lunch at which the first Prix Goncourt was awarded. For this first lunch at the Grand Hotel and for savswqueent ones at Champeans, the Café de Paris and Droutant. Dank't compilot the menus and favoraties cooking as well as that of Beanjodis, the third mer of layout.

His famous galfments on his contemporaries reflect the accerbith of a committed journalist and his love of the good life; the eloxpuethere of Jauries was full like a Geuyene of which each hole is a metaphor. Renan was gracious with lust and sauce; Roland started to wringle like selfish wprinkled with lemon, as for Clemenceau, he was as appelizing as a cabbage soup in which the spoon of eloquence would stand up.

Persuaded that the best thereapy for all ills is good food, he waxed hyrical he et a chef who fully satisfied im, such as Madame Genot, his favourite restauteur of the Rue de la Bangué, who wa to fastron my what Beethoven is to music. Baudedame for pastry, and Rembrandt to painting.

Dauder's second wife was Marthe Alland, his cousin, who was responsible under the pseudonym of Pampille, for the gastronomic column in (Action française and edited les bons plants de France (1924).

DAUMONT, A LA Designating an opulent garnish dating from the time of the Restoration (and no doubt dedicated to the Duc d'Aumont). Designed particularly for large braised fish, such as shad, salmon or turbot it comprises fish quenelles, shrimps of white clade tails a tla shell or barquette, button mushroom and soft me, all coated with fresh butter and sautéed in butter. The dish is served with a normande sauce finished with crayfish butter.

Today, the name is given to simpler fish dishes, as well as to a dish of soft-boiled (soft-cooked) or poached eggs with crayfish and mushroom.

RECIPES

poached eggs a la Daumont cook some large mushroom caps in butter, drain and top each one with a spoonful of a salpicon of crayfish tails a la Nantua. Arrange a poached egg on each mushroom cap, coat with Nantua sauce and garnish with a slice of truffle.

sole filets a la Daumont

Prepare about 150 ml (1/4 pint, 1/2 cup) salpicon of crayfish tails a la Nantua. Fillet 2 large sole. Prepare 400g (14 oz. 2 cups) fine whiting forcemeat and add 50 g (2 oz. 1/4 cup) crayfish butter. Spread the sole filets with the stuffing and fold them over. Place them in a buttered gratin dish, add sufficient fish fumet to just cover them and poach gently. Gently cook 8 large mushroom caps in butter, drain and top each with the crayfish salpicon. Drain the sole filets and place one on each mushroom. Coat with normande sauce and serve very hot.

DAUPHIN a soft cow's milk cheese from Hainaut in France, with a brown rind and containing at least 50% fat. Excellent from September to May, Dauphin cheese is made from the same type of curds as Maroilles cheese but is highly seasoned with parsley, tarragon pepper and cloves. It can be shaped like a croissant, heart, shield or rod.

Created in the reign of Louis XIV, it owes its name to a royal edict that exempted carters from Maroilles from the penny tax payable to the Dauphin, which was levied at Cambrai on each wagon coming from Hainaut in Belgium.

DAUPHINE See opposite page.

DAUPHINE, A LA a method of preparing vegetables, such as celeriac (celery root) or aubergines (eggplants), in the same way as dauphine potatoes. If the puree obtained is too watery – as can happen with courgettes (zucchini) – it is dried off in the oven.

The name is also given to joints of meat or game garnished with dauphine potatoes.

DAUPHINE POTATOES Potatoes reduced to a puree, added to choux paste, shaped into balls and fried in very hot fat. They are used to accompany gilded (boiled) or most meat or game. The mixture may be enriched with grated cheese or Bayonne ham, especially for croquettes (see lorette).

RECIPE

Dauphine potatoes

Peel 1 kg (2 1/2 lb) floury potatoes, cut into quarters and cook in salted water until very soft. Drain thoroughly and mash to a puree. Prepare some choux* paste using 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) water, 125 g (4 1/2 oz. 1/2 cup) butter, 250 g (9 oz. 2 1/4 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, 7 eggs, a pinch of grated nutmeg, salt and pepper. Mix the dough with an equal volume of the potato puree. Heat some cooking oil to about 175°C (347°F) and drop the mixture into a spoonful at a time. When the potato balls are puffed up and golden, drain on paper towels, dust with fine salt and serve very hot.

DAUPHINOISE, A LA a method of preparing potatoes that is a specialty of the country of the four mountains' (Lans-en Veroes, -Lans, Autrains and Savenage). The potatoes are cut into tailons (pound slices) and arranged with single (light) cream in a gretin dish which has been lubricated with garlic and buttered. However, gratin dauphinois is often made by pouring a mixture of eggs, milk and cream over the potato slices and sprinkling the dish with grated cheese. Grain around, from the neighbouring region is made without milk. cream in eggs instead it consists of alternating layers of potato and grated beaufort cheese with knobs of butter. All covered with bouillon.

DEBARRASSER A French word meaning literally to clean away: used in cuisine to describe the transfer of food from the cooking vessel to a plate. Such as a cupboard or a marble slab. Where it can be cooled or kept for later use in chilling. Debarrasser we muse en place is to remove from the vicinity of the oven (stove) or work station the utensil that was employed in preparing a dish or meal.

DECANT: to transfer a liquid from one vessel to another after allowing suspended impurities to settle. in French. Decanter is used in a variety of contexts: melted butter is decanted after skimming as is deep frying fat and stock after use. The same word is even used for extracting meat from the stock or sauce in which it has been cooked; the cooking liquid is then strained thickened if temporary, and used to make a sauce in which the meat is given a final simmer.

Wine is decanted by transferring it carefully into a carafe so that any sediment that has formed in the but the during maturation is left behind. Decanting wine also prevents oxidation, which is often beneficial, in practice, only old red wines are fully oxidized, the better tannin and wild pigments they contain must remain in the bottle. Fully matured wines should be decanted just prior to serving they can be so fragile that exposure to the air may cause deterioration. Young concentrated wines with pronounced tannins may also benefit decanting as this gives the flavour an opportunity to open up.

DECOCTION The extraction of the conditions of a local by boiling in water for varying length of time. In this way meat, vegetable, mineral and animal extracts are made. This produce should not be confused with infusion, in which boiling water is poured over the substance but the boiling is not continued.

DECOUPOIR a small slightly criminal cutters of stainless steel or galvanized iron, that cuts decorative slices in the form of a star, foil heart, diamond spade or leaf, from soft foods such as truffles, tomatoes and jelly. It should not be confused with a pastry cookie cutter, used in patisserie.

DECUIRE A French term meaning to lower the cooking temperature of sugar syrup or jam by adding to it gradually, while stirring sufficient cold water to give it the correct consistency.

DEEP-FRYING A method of frying food by submerging it completely in fat. Common as a commercial means of cooking east food, it is also a traditional method of preparing fine ingredients when carried out by a skilled cook. Savoury and sweet items can be deep-fried from plain ingredients to delicate specialties and fritters, light doughnuts, crisp pastries and exotic fillers. Carried out in deep pans in the Western kitchen or in the curved hose of the Oriental wok, this is an international method.

The wok, stay be traditional for deep frying a few small items in a comparatively small amount of oil. But when cooking large items, such as fish fillets, or a large fruits of food out in small pieces, a deep pan is credetial prevent the lat oron holding over. The pan should be no more a third folled with cold lat as thos leved mes when ingredients are added and the fat buddles up and spoits.

Deep frying is carried out at a high temperature so that the food is sealed. Becomes crisp and browns quickly. If the fat is not hot enough, some is alwarded by the food and the result is gresy. Also, at too low a temperature the outside does not become crisp ot it too long to do so, forming a thick, often and greasy cruist.

1 Choice of fat 1 using the right type of fat is essencial for food results and safe coking. Fats melt, boil and from at children temperature. When over beated fats being decompose or intake dows and peture smoke – this is called the smoking point. The falvour of the fat as garlic. When gereah some fats will spontaneously makes it break down and smoke more easily, similarly, overcooked debris from deep-fried food also incourage the fat to break down. Ot only me overheated fats undertable for culinary use but they are not suitable for a healty diet and should not be consumed erergularty

Animal solt as land or meat dropping are conditional fats for deep- trying because they can be heated to ahigh temperature without burning. Many vegetable oils are also suitable and they are both more convenient and versatile as they do not taint the food in the same way as same meat dripping vegetable oils are also more appropriate for balanced eating.

Groundnut (peanut), soya, corn, sunflower and graperseed oils are suitable for deep-frying. Palm oil is suitable, but it is high in saturated fat and blended vegetable oils often contain a high proportion of palm oil. Olive breaks down and burns easily; although some foods are deep-fried in olive, oil, it is not generally considered sutiable for this.

2 Food for deep-frying Tender foods that cook quickly are suitable. The pieces should be small or thin so that they cook through before becoming too brown outside. Fish, chicken, small pieces of tender meat, vegetable, fruit, eggs and cheese can all be deep-fried. The method is also used for prepared mixtures, such as croquettes, rissoles, pastries and fritters.

Chicken and meat should be cut into fingers (goujons), thin slices (escalopes/scallops) or small cubes (as for Chines-style sweet- and sour pork) to ensure they are cooked through. Slightly larger portions of chicken, such as breast fillets, quarters or drumsticks, require the temperature to be regulated carefully to ensure that they cook right through.

Eggs set and become: crisp when deep-fried. Beaten eggs are an important ingredient for setting coatings in place. Whote eggs can be deep-fried from raw – they should be cracked into a cup and slid into the hot fat. Their high water content causes much spitting as it evaporates, then they rapidly set outside and puff up into crisp balls, with the yolks remaining soft in the center. They should only ever be deep-fried individually as they cook in seconds and require close attention.

3 Coatings for deep-frying Delicate foods or items that soften easily during cooking coated before all types of frying. This is particularly important for deep-frying. The coating should cook quickly to form a crust, preventing the food from absorbing fat and protecting the surface from overcooking. Delicate fish, light vegetables and fruit all have to be coated before dee-frying otherwise they overcook, disintegrate or fall apart.

The coating should also be strong enough to contain certain ingredients or mixtures, for example the coating on deep-fried cheese prevents the cheese from running and disintegrating. Similarly, when making light croquettes bound in a sauce, the coating sets quickly to retain the mixture, which is then soft and fluid when the croquettes cut open.

*Flour This is a simple coating for foods that are resilient and require the minimum of protection. It is used mainly for pan frying or shallow frying, which is not as trash a method ad deep-frying but it can be used for some deep-fried ingredient. Season the flour and the roll the prepared food it in. the food should be moist or slightly damp to encourage the flour to stick and it should be added to the hot fat immediately it is coated. Sometimes the food is moistened with milk before being floured.

* EGG AND BREADCRUMBS. This is a firmer coating affording more protection. Dry white bread crumbs are usually the best as they make a fine, crisp coating that turns golden brown during cooking. Ready-browned breadcrumbs tend to become too brown. Salt white breadcrumbs can be used for some foods but they tend to be slightly greasy as they absorb more fat. The food should be dusted with flour, then dipped in beaten egg and finally, coated in crumbs. The coating is repeated when a thick layer is to be put as example, when preparing choppeters from a well-chilled light sauce which is likely to run quickly. Similarly when making chicken Kiev. Where the fillets of chicken are folded around a pat of garlic butter that melts during cooking the coating must be thick and even to retain the garlic butter. Chilling food after coating in egg and breadcrumbs helps to set the coating and keep it in place during cooking.

* BATTER A heavy liquid coating that sets quickly and becomes brown and crisp when deep-fried. The batter may well be used for cooking to give a puffy coating. Flour, eggs and water or milk are typical ingredients, but a variety of mixtures can be used, including light beer or sparkling mineral water, to lighten the batter. A fairly thick flour and water mixture may be lightened with stiffly whisked egg white to give a batter with good coating properties. Becoming light, puffed and crisp during cooking. The food is usually dusted in flour before being dipped in batter and added straight to the fat. The thickness of the batter depends on the type of food, fine foods that cook very quickly are coated in fine light batter, a thicker batter be used for inner foods.

* PASTRIES Choux paste can be deep-fried very successfully, either as the main mixture for making fritters or as a batter type coating. Puff pastry can also be deep fried it rises well to become crisp and golden outside. It should be rolled fairly thinly and used to enclose simple ingredients that cook quickly. Filo pastry often used for deep-fried items, such as small pastries with savoury fillings of fish, vegetable cheese.

4 Temperatures for deep-frying These vary according to the food, ranging between from 180°C (350°F) to 200°C (400°F). Use a thermometer to check the temperature when heating the fat and during cooking to maintain the temperature as the ingredients are added also to prevent overheating during cooking. Another method of checking whether the fat is hot is to add a small, cube of day-old bread to the fat: the fat should bubble and the bread should rise to the surface, becoming brown about 30 seconds.

* 140-160°C (285-325°F) is suitable for larger items of foods that require time to become tender or cook through example include chicken and potato wedges.

* 160-175°C (325-347°F) is the most popular temperature, suitable for foods that cook quickly for example these coated in breadcrumbs and butters.

* 180°C (350°F) is a high temperature for small items, such as whitebait or fish goujons, start cook very quickly. This is also used for the second stage when double frying ingredients, for example to crisp and puff potato chips (French fries).

5 Successful frying. Deep-frying is an excellent cooking method, but one that suffers from poor implementation, particularly as a means of cooking inferior fast foods.

The food must be well prepared cut evenly so that it cooks at the same rate throughout or across a batch cooked together. An appropriate coating should be used. Foods that are not coated (such as potatoes) should be thoroughly dried before being added to the hot fat otherwise they spit and the splashing fat can be dangerous.

The choice of fat and temperature control is important. The fat should be heated to the right temperature before cooking and the food should be added in modest batches that do not lower the temperature too much. A thermometer should be used for checking temperature throughout cooking to prevent the fat from overheating.

The cooked food should be thoroughly drained in a frying basket or using draining spoon, then on paper towels before serving immediately.

The fat should be cooled and strained after use if it has overheated slightly, it should be discarded. Fat for deep-frying should not be used repeatedly: twice is usually enough, depending on the food and temperature.

DEEP FREEZING, COMMERCIAL A method of preserving food. For commercial preservation the food is subjected to rapid and intense freezing as low as 50°C (-58°F) so that the temperature at the center of the food is lower than -18°C (0°F) but the degree of crystallization is not such as to cause moisture loss at the time of defrosting. Packaging precedes or immediately follows deep-freezing. After this the temperature must be kept consistently low until the product is used (-18°C, 0°F).

It is very important to maintain the low temperature of deep-frozen products, and worth checking that they are best quality before buying them. Check the temperature of the freezer compartments (which should always have a thermometer, ensure the packaging is not torn or damaged; the products may be covered by a very thin layer of frost (caused by the freezing of the surrounding air), but they should not have trails of ice; chopped vegetables and individually frozen small products must sound like pebbles rattling in the packet. Display cabinets should not be overfilled to the top, since products above a certain level are no longer cool enough.

The foods should be taken home in insulated bags as quickly as possible; and stored in a freezer or in the 4-star compartment of a fridge-freezer, if these are not available, they may be stored for 24 hours only in a refrigerator or for 3 days in the ice-making compartment.

The rule which applies to the use of deep-frozen foods is never to refreeze a thawed product. Many frozen products are suitable for cooking directly from frozen: check the manufacturer's instructions carefully for cooking methods, times and temperatures. Other items have to be thawed before they can be cooked, either for best results or for reasons of food safety. Fish and meat are often better when thawed before cooking than when cooked from frozen; large portions of poultry and whole birds usually have to be thawed completely before cooking to ensure that they cook through completely. For example, although a frozen chicken may be simmered for several hours to make stock, with every confidence that it will be completely cooked throughout, to roast a bird from frozen would mean that the outside was overcooked before the meat in the thickest areas had properly thawed and cooked.

Thawing frozen food Follow the manufacturer's instructions for prepared products. As a general rule, when thawing plain ingredients, remove them from their wrapping and place in a clean, deep container to catch any drips. Cover the dish tightly and leave it in a cool room or the refrigerator, depending on the room temperature, size of the food and likely thawing time. When poultry or meat requires lengthy thawing the drips or liquid seeps from it should be drained regularly.

To thaw baked goods such as bread, unwrap and place them on a wire then cover with a clean tea towel leaving these, as pastries in their freezer bags can make them soggy. Refresh the texture of cooked breads or pastries by heating them briefly in a hot oven.

* Freezing food Home freezers are now highly efficient designed to reach low temperatures for freezing fresh food. The better appliances are well insulated and designed for the minimum loss of cold air when opened; with integral thermometers and alarms.

In the early days of home freezing the recommended preparation of fruit and vegetables was daunting. Research into the deterioration of food during freezing indicates that if the food is frozen rapidly to a low temperature properly packed and the low temperature maintained during storage. Reduction in quality is minimal. The technique of blanching vegetables before freezing does not significantly improve the quality of the produce.

Make sure that the freezer is on the fast-freeze setting well in advance. Use good quality freezer bags to prevent freezer burn and seal them well. Add food in modest batches that will freeze quickly. Always prepare the pressure ready for cooking and food ingredients that discolor such as applied in lemon. Open the produce or pack it in quantities that will be used in one go.

Always label the produce well especially prepared dishes as it is almost impossible them.

Cooking fowl first can be the best solution, providing dishes an advance for everyday meals, especially by making batches soups and sauces for pasta are practical and take up minimum freezer space. Meat casseroles, bangers or patties, croquettes, pasta bakes, filled pastries ready for baking and fried pancake are a few examples. Stewed fruit, compotes or purees have many excellent uses and they take up less space than bulky packages of apples, goosecherries or rhubarb and other fruits that fall and become watery when thawed if frozen raw.

It makes sense to freeze items used frequently and in quantity, such as breads and others that are ideal as a special treat, such as cakes. The freezer is also ideal for storing prepared ingredients ready for cooking or emergency supplies, stock butter (plain or flavoured). Bay leaves chopped fresh herbs ground roasted spices; prepared chilies; prepared fresh root ginger; fresh yeast (keeps well for up to 1 year); whipped double (heavy) cream, breadcrumbs; grated cheese for cooking; and knobs of beurre manié (it keeps for 2 months). See freezing.

- 1 Quality. As a preserving method, freezing is excellent for retaining nutrients as well as taste. Good quality purchased frozen vegetables are processed so quickly after harvesting that they have a better vitamins content than the slightly stale examples sometimes found on the supermarket shelves. Similarly, using the freezer for storing home-cooked dishes is a good way of having high-quality convenience foods. Batch cooking many savoury dishes and simple sweet mixtures, cakes or pastries requires barely more effort than making a standard portion – the batches do not have to be enormous to be practical, just a double or treble portion will provide two or three meals instead of one.

DEER. Remnants of temperature, including red deer (cervus in French), me deer (cheer in French), fallow deer (capreolus) in French and the white tail deer of North America. Other related species include reindeer, antelope, elk, moose and caribou all providing a source of meat, but they are not as important as the four main types. The meat is known as venison and its quality varies according to the type of deer, its age, sex and habitat. Traditionally game animals, deer are now hunted as demand for venison has increased.

Deer have been valued for their meat since prehistoric times and there is evidence of attempts to capture them in ancient Egypt, in the Middle Ages deer were the most highly prized game animals, reserved exclusively for the nobility in vast parks where they provided hunting sport as well as meat for rich tables.

They inspired some highly decorative culinary displays, in which the beast was virtually reconstructed lying on gigantic dishes. Deer meat was also used to land poultry. Both stag and hind were eaten roasted, stewed or jugged, deer-knuckle soup was a famous dish, in the 16th century, stag's antlers, cut into sections and fried, were considered fit for a king as were the men's drafts. Stag's horn was commonly sold by grocers when ground, it used to prepare jellies and sweets.

Deer retained its status as a luxury food until the latter part of the 20th century, when farming increased availability. More a method of controlling and encouraging the growth of herds than of domesticating and applying contemporary rearing methods deer farming has produced meat that is in demand for its healthy properties compared to intensively reared animals to common with other game, deer hunting is supported in seasons.

DEGLAZE. To boil small quantity of wine, stock or other liquid with the cooking juices and sediments left so the pan after roasting or sautéing in order to make a sauce or gently. The sediment may be cooked first. So that excess fat evaporates and the concentrated sediment caramelizes, and excess fat should be skimmed off. A small quantity of liquid is poured into the pan over a medium to high heat and the mixture is boiled, stirring continuously to dissolve all the pan juices. The liquor is boiled and reduced until the right consistency is achieved. This may be quite syrup-like in texture. Cooking is vital to ensure a mellow, rich flavour, evaporating alcohol and making the liquor less acidic. Deglazing is sometimes preceded by flaming the contents of the pan after sprinkling with spirits. When the liquid is well reduced. It may be seasoned and served. Alternatively, further liquid, such as stock, may be added and the sauce thickened. Rich sauces can be prepared by adding cream to the deglazing liquor or by whisking in knobs of butter. Finally, the seasoning is adjusted and the sauce may be strained or sieved before being served DEGORGER. A French term meaning to soak meat, poultry fish or offal cold water (with or without vinegar) to eliminate impurities and blood, particularly for white dishes or to dispel the muddy taste of river fish.

The term is also used for the process of sprinkling certain vegetables, particularly cucumber and cabbage, with salt to draw out excess water. The same method can be used to draw out bitter juices, traditionally a method for preparing aubergines (but modern cultivars no longer bitter, so the process is not necessary for most commercial varieties). It also applies to the preparation of snails.

DEGRAISSER. A French culinary term meaning to remove excess fat from an ingredient, dish or cooking vessel. Fat is removed from raw or cooked meat using a small butcher's knife; for hot bouillons, gravies or sauces, a small ladle or spoon is used to skim off the fat, and for cold liquids, where the fat has solidified a ladle should be used, or the liquid may be strained. Fat can be completely removed from hot clarified consommé by putting paper towels on the surface. It is necessary to remove excess fat from a cooking vessel before deglazing it.

DEJEUNER. The French word for lunch, the midday meal, as opposed to petit déjeuner (breakfast) and dinner. But according to its etymology (from the Latin disjeporture. Later disponere, to break one's fast), the word originally meant the first meal of the day, comprising essentially bread, soup and even wine before coffee, tea and chocolate appeared on the scene.

The introduction of the midday repast dates from the French Revolution. Until that time, the midday meal was called. But because the sessions of the constituent Assembly began at midday and finished about 6 p.m. dinner had to be eaten at the end of the afternoon. The deputies, being unable to go without food from breakfast until dinner, acquired the habit of eating at about 11 a.m. a second breakfast that was more substantial than the first. A certain Madame Hardy, who in 1804 ran a cafe on the Boulevard near the Tuileries, invented the déjeuner à la fourchette (lunch) offering her customers oysters, kidneys, sausages and other grills served on a sideboard. The development of cafés and dîners, then the birth of restaurants, turned déjeuner into an important social occasion.

Nowadays in France, lunch is eaten generally at about 12:30 p.m. it is often a quick and light meal, although in professional circles it has become more substantial as the business lunch. Certain events, such as the awarding of literary prizes, often take place at a special lunch. But even today, the Sunday lunch remains a symbol of family life, not so far removed from the type of lunch served in the 1850s, mentioned by Marguerite Yourcenar: Every Sunday, Reine presides over a meal to which all the family are invited. The tablecloth laid for this ceremony, hardly less sacred than High Mass, is resplendent with silverware and the soft gleam of old porcelain. Poultry quenelles are served at midday, the dessert and sweetmeats at about five o'clock. Between the sorbet and the saddle of lamb, it is understood that the guests have the right to take a turn about the garden or even, with a slight apology for taking pleasure in such a rustic amusement, a game of bowls. (Archives du Nord, Gallimard).

DELESSERT, BENJAMIN. French industrialist and financier born Layon 177 ½ died Paris, 1847). Having founded a sugar refinery in 1801 in the district of Pasay in Paris, in 1812 he perfected the process of sugar extraction from sugar beet. Napoleon visited the factory and saw the potential of this discovery, which could make it unnecessary to import cane sugar from the West Indies. He granted large funds to Delessert, earmarked a great deal of land in the north for sugar beet cultivation and, on Releaser's advice opened one of the first sugar schools' at Diurnal. Meanwhile. Detester plunged into political life and became one of the founders of savings banks in France.

DELICATESSEN A shop, or department in a store supermarket, selling high quality, luxury food and or specialist products. The word. Meaning delicacies, originated in Germany in the 18th century. Foods may be specific to one country. And which case regional specialities rarely available in general grocery departments are usually an important feature. International food specialities are more common, with canned, dried and preserved products, including unusual herbs and spices, complemented by cheeses, cooked meats, pates and other prepared items. A range of excellent marinated foods, salads, pastries and sauces or dips frequently feature in contemporary delicatessens. High-quality breads and cakes are often. Fine wines, liqueurs spirits, as well as confectionery may be on offer.

With the growth in popularity of delicatessen foods and a wide range of such outlets now open. It is important to distinguish between selling a range of prepared and slightly unusual foods and others providing true quality. Those running and working in a good establishment (or department) will have detailed knowledge of the products they sell, the suppliers and other foods of the same type. They will usually advise on the preparation, serving and accompaniments for their products. Many superior delicatessens often a hamper service or prepare culinary gifts to order.

DELICE OR DELICIEUX Fancy names given to various dessert, gateaux sweetmeats.

RECIPES

Apple delicious

Prepare and bake 675g (1 ½ lb) apple in baking sheet in preheated oven at 190°C (375 °F, gas 5). Reduce the pulp to a puree and allow to cool. Beat 5 egg yolks with 100g (4oz, ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar until the mixture becomes light and foamy. Whisk the 5 whites stiffly and fold a little at a time into the egg-sugar mixture alternately with the apple puree and 65g (2 ½ oz, ¾ cup) dried white breadcrumbs. Empty the mixture into a buttered and floured soufflé dish and cook in a preheated oven at 90°C (375°F, gas 5) for 40-50 minutes. Dust with sugar and serve very hot.

Delcieux surprise

Gently melt 125g (4 ½ oz, 4 ½ square) dark chocolate in a bowl over hot water. Add 1 tablespoon single (light) cream, 20g (¾ oz, 1 ½ tablespoons) butter, 1 tablespoon milk and the grated zest of an orange. Keep the sauce hot over the hot water. Cut a large brioche mouseline into 6 thick slices, put them in a dish and sprinkle with 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 table spoons) rum. Peel 3 pears, remove the seeds, slice and place on the broche slices. Whip 150 ml (1/4 pint, ½ cup) double (heavy) cream with 1 tablespoon very cold milk and slowly add 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) caster (superfine) sugar. Cover the broche and pears with a dome of the whipped cream and pour over the hot chocolate sauce. Serve immediately.

Lemon delice

Melt 100g (4 oz, ½ cup) butter in a bain marie. Measure 250 g (9 oz, 2 ¼ cups) self-raising flour into a mixing bowl, then add the melted butter, 4 eggs, 200g (7 oz, 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, the grated zest and juice of a lemon, and 100g (4 oz, ¾ cup) crystallized (candied) fruits cut into very small dice. Mix until evenly blended, then turn the mixture into a 25 cm (10 in) round loose bottomed cake tin (pan) and cook for 40 minutes in a preheated oven at 190°C (375°F, gas 5).

Meanwhile, prepare a French butter cream (see creams) using 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) caster sugar cooked to the thread stage (see sugar) in 3 tablespoon water, 4 egg yolks, 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) butter and the grated zest and juice of a lemon.

When the cake is cooked, turn out on to a wire rack, allow to cool and cut into three rounds. Cover two of the rounds with a thick layer of the lemon butter cream and sandwich together. Dust generously with icing (confectioner's) sugar and keep in a cool place (not the refrigerator) until ready to serve. (the layers may be sprinkled with lemon sugar syrup if liked).

Nut delices

Combine 125 g (4 ½ oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose flour with 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) softened butter, 1 egg yolk, 1 tablespoon water; 3 tablespoon caster (superline) sugar and a pinch of salt. When the dough is smooth, roll it into a ball and chill.

Cream 65 g (2 ½ oz. 5 tablespoons) butter; add 65 g (2 ½ oz. Cup) caster sugar and 1 egg. Then 65 g (2 ½ oz. ½ cup) ground almonds, and finally 25 g (1 oz. ¼ cup) fecula (potato flour); mix well. Roll out the chilled dough to a thickness of 3 mm (1/3 in). cut out 8 discs and line tartlet moulds with them. Prick the bottoms and cover with the almond cream. Cook in a preheated oven at 190°C (375°F, gas 5) for 15 minutes.

Meanwhile, prepare a French butter cream (see creams) using 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) sugar cooked to the thread stage (see sugar) in 3 tablespoons water; 4 egg yolks, 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) butter and 1 teaspoon coffee essence. Chop 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) fresh walnuts and mix with the cream. Allow the tartlets to cool, then turn out and top each with a dome of the walnut cream. Put in a cold place for 30 minutes.

Warm 250 g (9 oz) fondant icing (frosting) to about 32°C (90°F), flavors it with a few drops of coffee essence and add just enough water to make it spread easily. Dip the top of each tartlet into the fondant, smoothing it evenly over the cream with a palette knife (spatula). Place a fresh walnut on each delice and store in a cool place.

Strawberry delices*

Work together in a mixing bowl 125 g (4 ½ oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour with 1 egg. 50g (2 oz. ¼ cup) caster (superfine) sugar, a pinch of salt, 1 tablespoon water and 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) butter cut into small pieces. When the mixture is a smooth dough, out it in therefrigerator to chill.

Meanwhile, wash and hull 175 g (6 oz. 1 cup) strawberries and macerate in 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) icing (confectioner's) sugar for 1 hour.

Roll out the dough to a thickness of 3 mm (1/8 in). cut out 6 rounds and use them to line 6 buttered tarlet moulds; prick the bottom of each one with a fork and bake blind for about 10 minutes in a preheated oven at 190°C (375°F gas 5). Remove the paper and baking beans and cook for a further 3-5 minutes, until the pastry is cooked. Cool on a wire rack.

Sieve the macerated strawberries and gradually beat the puree into 125 g (4 ½ oz. Cup) unsalted butter; fill the tarlet cases with this mixture and top with 175 g (6 oz. 1 cup) strawberries. Decorate with springs of mint and serve with a sweetened redcurrant coulis.

DELTEIL JOSEPH French writer born Villar-enval, 1894 died Grabels, 19880. having figured in Parisian literary circles. Delited retired in 1930 to languendos, to house whose lacade bears the motto of Confuciou: like humbly; of Deltelf's work, la cuisine paleolithique (Robert Morel. 1964) features a selection of recipes for cuisine naturelle using unprocessed foods, such as bean soup, cassoulet, snails, grilled 9boiled) beef, poule an potand dandelion salad, as well as such aphorisms as Eat with the fingers drink with the nose and Food responds to our soul's dream as to our stomach's appetite. It also offers some judicions advice. Don't prick the mast, it will bleed. Ham 40 days in salt, 40 days hanging in 40 days eaten; and a quick guide to cooking times. Pork at walking pace, beef at a trot, games at a gallop.

DEMI-DEUIL Meaning literally half-mourning, this term describes dishes containing both black and white ingredients. In classic cuisine, the whitefoods (pouched poultry and eggs, sweetbreads in white stock, potato salad, shellfish) are encrusted with slices or strips of truffle and coated with supreme sauce.

Chicken demi-devil is one of the most renowned dishes of French cuisine, particularly the version given by more Failure the chicken is stuffed with truffle between skin and flesh, served with the vegetable ingredients of the cooking stock and coated with the strained cooking juices.

RECIPES

Chicken demi deuil

Poach a chicken in white wine on a serving dish and keep hot. Prepare 8 tartlets or croustades and fill them with a mixture of calves or lambs sweetbreads braised in white stock, and mushrooms gently cooked in butter – all mixed with supreme sauce. Garnish each tartlet with a slice of truffle heated in Madeira. Arrange the tartlets around the chicken and coat it with supreme sauce.

Demi-deuil salad

Boil 675g (1 ½ lb) potatoes until tender. Drain, cool, peel and slice the cooked potatoes. Cut 75 – 100g (3-4 oz.) truffles into thin strips. Make a sauce using 3 tablespoons single (light) cream, 1 teaspoon mustard salt, and pepper.

In a large salad bowl make a bed of lettuce seasoned with a little vinaigrette. Place the potatoes mixed with the sauce on it, then sprinkle with the strip of truffle.

Eggs demi-deuil

Prepare some individual puff pastry croustades. Fill each one with mushroom in cream sauce and top with a soft-boiled (soft-cooked) or poached egg. Coat with supreme sauce and garnish with a slice of truffle.

DEMIDOF A chicken dish dedicated to Prince Anatole Demidof, the husband of Napoleon's niece, Princess Mathilde. Demidof was one of the celebrated bons vivants of the second empire and an habitué of the Maison Dree, where this recipe was created. The name is also given to a dish of sautéed chicken.

RECIPES

Chicken Demidof

Stuff a large chicken with a mixture comprising one third quince stuffing and two-thirds & groth forcement. Prepare a very rich matignon vegetable fondue using 125 g (4 ½ oz.) carrots, 50g (2 oz.) celery, 25 g (1 oz) sliced onion, half a bay leaf, a sprig of thyme, a pinch of salt and a pinch of sugar. Soften the vegetables in butter, moisten with 100 ml (4 fl oz) 7 tablespoons Madeira and reduce until almost dry.

Brown the chicken in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7). Cover it with the vegetables, then wrap it in a pig's caul or bard it with streaky (streak) bacon or pork fat. Tile it up and braise it in a covered casserole, adding a small quantity of chicken stock, at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) for about 2 hours, or until the chicken is cooked through. Add more hot stock to the casserole occasionally to prevent it from drying up. Uncover the casserole to brown the chicken for the final 15-20 minutes cooking time.

Arrange the chicken on a serving dish and surround with artichoke hearts cooked in butter and topped with the vegetable fondue. Garnish each artichoke heart with an onion ring (covered in butter and deep-fried) and a slice of truffle. Deglaze the cooking vessel used for the chicken with Maderia and pour over the chicken.

Sautéed chicken Demidof

Remove the gablets from a chicken and out off the breast, wings and lega. Brown the remaining carcass and giblets in oil, dust with flour and brown again. Moisten with 150 ml (% pint, ½ cup) dry white wine and bouillon and cook gently for 30 minutes. Strain and reserve this cooking liquid.

Cut w carrots. 1 turnip, 2 celery sticks and 1 onion into thin julienne strips. Flour the chicken portions and brown them in a saucepan. Add the egetable julienne and the strained cooking liquid cover and cook gently for 30 minutes. Add a slice of smoked ham and a ciced stuffle. Cook for a further 15 minutes then deglaze with Madeira and demi-galze sauce.

DEMI-GLACE a rich brown sauce made by boiling and skimming capagsole store and adding white stock of castoffade. It usually has the addition of Madeira sherry or a similar wine.

RECIPE

Demi-glaze

Boil down to reduce by two-thirds a mixture of 500 ml (17 ft. oz. 2 cups) espagnole sauce and 750 ml (1 ¼ pints 3 ¼ cups) clear brown stock. Remove from the heat, add 3 tableshpoon Madeira and strain. A handful of sliced mushroom staks may be added during cooking.

DEMI-SEL. A soft French cheese made from pasteurized cow's milk. It has a mild flavour and contains 10-4% fat and less ham 2% added soft. It is sold in small squares wrapped in foil and is used as a cheese spread. It mau be flavoured with heris paprika or pepper. Demised was first made at the end of the 19th century and is a speciality of normality.

DENERVER. A French calintary term meaning to nature tende and membrances from on meat probably on game. It promises seve cooking and tender results and improces prectation.

DENIS. Born Lahama Denis. French and restaurateu (borneus, 1909) died 1981). He opened the restaurant clez Denis in paris and devoted himself performing inventive and luxurious derbes. A cultured man, motivated by his love of cooking, he replaced to certain chets who critiezed him for not having worked way up through the profession: I have eatern way through six inheritances in the great restaurants, so I know what good cuising is all about; He oersuaded himself that the graimets of his time were, like him, capable of spending lotunes on such dishes as supremes of Bresse chicken chaud froids of ortolan an cham herth and fresh turtles a lot serrleth: and on bottles of Chatecan-Latour 1945 Consequently. He was runned and forced to close his restaurant.

He publishe La cuisine de Deuis Claffort. 1975) in which londemental to inques, carots make of the trade and basic recipes are presented with simplicity, precision and good sense. His recipe for scallops is an follows. Sute the scallops quickly in clarified butter, without browng Moisten with fumet (use about 1 tablespoon for 6 scallops). Add a ew drops of absenthe or, failing this, of Permod, some pieces of very cold butter about 65 g (2 1.2 oz. 5 tablespoon for 6 scallops, herbs, salt and perper, keep moving the sanite pan and lorth oven a high heat. When the coking liquor boils, pour the entire contents of the pan on to the serving dish.

DENMARK

DENSITY. The mass of a substance per unit of volume; in practice, the weight of something divided by its volume. Density has units of grams per cubic centimeter.

The term density is sometimes used loosely (especially in cookery) to mean relative density, which is the mass of a given volume of substance divided by the mass of an equal volume of water; ideally the water should be at 4°C (39 2°F) but this is unimportant in cookery. Relative density is also called specific gravity. It is used in winemaking, brewing cider making; the fats industry (oil, margarine) and the dairy industry (fat content of milk). Sugar concentration – important in making sweets, paints and other presence – is now also expressed by relative density (rather than by degrees Baume). Relative density can be measured by a hydrometer – an instrument which floats in the liquid, the relative density being read directly from its graduated stem.

DENTEX dente, deenti. A Mediterranean fish of the sparidae family with long, sharp, sometimes hooked teeth and powerful jaws. The young fish are silvery grey and the adults are reddish-brown. Related to but much larger than the sea bream, up to 90 cm (36 in) long, it has firm, rather tasty flesh and is cooked in the same way as sea bream.

DENTS-DELOUP. Triangular croutons used for garnish, arranged as a border around the edge of a dish with the points to the outside (hence the name, which means wolves teeth). The dents-loup used to garnish hot dishes are triangles either cut from sandwich bread and fried in oil or butter or made from puff pastry and baked. Gold dishes are garnished with dents de loup cut out of strips of aspic;

The name is also used for certain kinds of crisp biscuits cooked. One variety, a specially of Alsace, is a long pointed biscuits flavoured with lemon and brandy. Another kind is crescent-shaped and flavored with cumin or aniseed.

DERBY. An English cheese made with cow's milk, containing about 45% fat. It is a firm pressed mild cheese which resembles Cheddar, but is slightly flakier and more moist. The cheese is traditionally wheel shaped 38 cm (15 in) diameter, 12 cm (5 in) high, and weighing about 14 kg (32lbs). Sage erby is marbled with green and is made by adding chopped sage leaves to the curd for additional colouring and flavouring. It was traditional to make this specially at Christmas and at harvest time. Commercially, Sage Derby is now produced using dried sage and spinach juice.

DERBY, A LA. A method of preparing chicken, created in the foods for Girois when he was chef at the hotel de Paris an Alonite Carlo. It was dedicated to a member of a distinguished British family with a predilection for French cuisine. Chicken a la Derby is stuffed with truffled rice and foie gras; truffles cooked in port and slices of sautéed foie gras provide the garnish, and the chicken is created with the cooking juices deglazed with port.

Derby soup is a cream of onion and curried rice soup, garnished with poached, quenelles of foie gras and chopped onion.

DEROBER. A French culinary term meaning to remove the skins of shelled broad (fava) beans. It also means to remove the skins of blanched tomatoes or almonds and unpeeled wiles potatoes

DERVAL. A garnish for veal timbales and of lamb, with anchovy quarters sautéed in butter.

DESALTING. The removal of salt from certain foods that have been preserved in brine. Desalting is carried out by cooking the food in cold still or running water at that the salt desolves gradually and forms a deposit on the bottom of the vessel. Salt and pepper to be made dishes before it is required changing the water several times. Traditional salted ham or gamon must be soaked for several hours before cooking. Lardons cut from streaky (salty) bacon may be desalted by blanching. As a general rule, the salt used for preservation should not be used for seasoning – it is better to desalt too much and season again later.

Drained canned or bottled anchovies may be desalted by soaking briefly in milk. Dry salted anchovies (sold packed in salt) are soaked in water.

DESAUGIERS, MARC ANTOINE. French song writer and poet (born Frejus, 1882; died Paris, 1927). The author of numerous drinking songs, he was secretary of Gaveau Modeme; a gastronomic and somewhat bacchanalian literary society. His philosophy may be summed up in this verse which he wrote in the form of an epitaph;

DESCAR. A garnish for large joints of meat consisting of potato croquettes and artichoke hearts cooked gently in butter and stuffed with diced breast of chicken. The garnish was created in honour of the due des Cars, the royal household in the reign of Louis XVII of France. He was a celebrated gourmet who unfortunately, died of indigestion

DES ESSARTS (born Denis Dechanet) French actor (born Langre, 1737; died Baresges, 1803). He practiced as a lawyer before throwing in his lot with the theatre. He specialized in playing financiers and peasants, roles in which he was well served by an extraordinary stoutness, due to an insatiable appetite and a legendary gluttony. His contemporaries bore witness to his joviality and his proven lyricism for anything concerning good living, as shown in his aphorism (Good cuisine fattens a clear conscience), or his culinary judgments, such as the one on the leg of lamb which, according to him, should be mortified (bung) as a bar caught in the act, golden as a young German girl, and bloody as a Garibbean. He died of apoplexy in a spa where he was taking the waters.

DESSERT. The last course of a meal. The word comes from desservir (to remove that which has been served) and consequently means everything offered to guest after the previous dishes and corresponding serving utensils have been cleared away.

In former times at great banquets dessert, which was the fifth course of the meal, was often presented in magnificent style. Large set pieces fashioned in pastry, described often and in great detail by Caumont, whose accounts are accompanied by splendid illustrations, were placed on the table at the beginning of the meal. These owed more to architecture than to the art of cooking, and had a purely decorative function. Just before the sweet course, a multitude of desserts were elegantly arranged on the table with the set pieces, for every ceremonial table was laid in accordance with a detailed plan. The tables had to harmonize with gold plate crystal, magnificent baskets of fruit and the tall candelabra a dazzling spectacle. It was not until about 1850 that the word dessert took on its present meaning.

In ancient times, meals generally ended with fresh or dried fruit, milk or cheese dishes, or honey. In France in the Middle Ages, the main sweet dishes when served between courses considered of jellies, flans, blanemanges tarts, compotes, rievules. Fondes (fancy pastry), echaudis (poached pastry waffle and various other small cakes). The dessert proper consisted of the issue, a glass of hippocras served with oublies (wafers, followed by boulebons) (dragees with spice and crystallized fruit).

In the 17th century, desserts had become more elaborate and were decorated with flowers. They included marzipan, nougat, pyramids of fruit, dry and liquid preserves, biscuits (cookies), creams, sugar sweets (candies), sweet almonds sugar and orange-flower water, green walnuts, pistachios and marrons glacés. At the end of the century, ice creams made their appearance, and at the same time patisserie became extremely diversified with different basic mixtures, such as puff pastry, sponge, choux pastry and meringue.

In the 20th century, dessert in France evolved to include cheese and fresh fruit as well as sweet dishes. However, the term is usually taken to mean the sweet course of the meal, whether it is served before or after the cheese course. The contemporary dessert may include one of a wider range of dishes, from elaborate gateaus and pastries to simple fruit salads. It is still usual to serve two or three sweet dishes at a dinner party, especially when one may be a light fruit recipe and another a rich concoction, but the dessert course is no longer the wildly extravagant affair it once was. Instead of elaborate centerpieces, individual presentation is a popular alternative, born of restaurant style food trends.

2 Pudding or dessert. Whereas has long been regarded as a special or superior sweet course. Pudding was traditionally the homely, everyday alternative. Although this is still true to some extent, pudding tends to refer to traditional, hot or hearty sweets while dessert is cool or lighter, or more elaborate. Very simple, everyday sweet dishes may be referred to as a sweet.

3 Regional and foreign specialties. Apart from the creations of the Parisian master pastry cooks, the desserts of the provinces provide a good example of the diversity of French cuisine. Bouting-aman from Brittany, poirat from Berry, boutdelot from Normandy, electruskas from Alsace, cremets from Angers, pogue from Romans, pthiviers and falugnarde from the Auverne, clafouths from Limousin, in addition to brioches, wattles, puncaked and various fritters, not forgetting the thirteen desserts from Provencem traditionally served at Christmas.

In Great Britain, Germany, Austria and Belgium, where good-quality butter, cream, milk, eggs and chocolate are also abundant, there is a wide selection of desserts and pausverie. In the Mediterranean countires, the Far East and south America, sweetmeats and fruits clearly predominate. In eastern Europe, cooked fruits, brioches and spiced biscuits (cookies) are served at the end of the meal, while in China and Japan, dessert does not exist! Ice Creams and pies are particularly popular in the United States, together with fruit and pancakes.

4 The choice of a suitable dessert. When choosing a dessert, the previous courses must be considered to cristine a well-traditional menu. The choice depends largely on the continent of the menu . hwere or not a cheese course is provided and also are the weapon of the year.

To terms of dishes served the dessert does but have for the scien while it is quite acceptable to in lude cooks of didlenes countries and cooking styles in one meal. It is important that they complement early other in all aspects. Sympathetic flavours are salt light cooking net slighting mixture go well asfter full spicy must courses. When fruit features largely in the savory courses a charge is welcome in the dessert. In avoid dashing styles, it is best moderate distinetly different types of dishes paying down their characteristics to encourage contrateous largely than dishes.

A light dessert is suitable for mounding off a substantial wicih or Lady Heavy meal. When planning a rich. Filling or elaborate dessert, the main cuise should be high and not over filling in cooke that the finale of the meal will be enjoyed. Texture important steps level are good following moved courses, to serve soup forst, followed by a casserole and then a crremy dessert would be a mistake.

Finally colour and appearance are important these dishes must look attractive. The dessert should being a meal to a glorious end. Not allow it to die a said death. Where more than one dessert is served, they should countered with and complement each other as well as the nest of the meal. Many restaurant other a a ground dessert droplay or a sweet trolley, bearing a whole range of desserts from which the dinner may choice. They type of display of dessert original in Italy, where it was introudec to encourage the young moment and girls to stay at table during family gadthuring.

DESSERTTE. The French term for the food that is left over after a meal in some instances, it may be used as a basis for another meal. The simplest type of desserte consists of slices of various cold meats with ghetkirts or pickles. Cesserte may be used to prepare certain cold dishes, such as mixed or meat salads, canapés and morses or but dishes such as shepherd various shuttling coopettes boundies pilaf and risotto. Under the Ancien the member of the meal honored in change food did scale indesete with oursale and restaurant in certain Fench restaurant such food (part from a few means)beberages for the water.

A desserte is also a small sideboard on which the dishes are stacked after their removal from the table

DETAILLER. A French term meaning to cut up various vegetables cut up in the way can be used for preparing a juiceless especially the pieces cut into a special shape or thickness escalopes escaloppe medallions and greustadon.

DETENDRE. A French culinary term meaning to soften a paste or a mixture by adding appropriate substance, such as beaten eggs, milk or stock.

DETREMPE. The French culinary term for a paste made with flour and water in the first sugar of making pastry, before the addition of butter, eggs and milk. It is best to let the detrempe rest in a cool place for about 10 minutes before adding the remaining ingredients. (a Detrempe is rarely used on its own, except as a butting paste.)

To detremper a paste or dough is to allow the flour to absorb all the necessary water, kneading it with the fingertips without working it too much.

DEVILLED. In French a la diable. The name given to dishes with a piquant or but marinade, spice mixture or sauce, usually based on mustard. Both tarragon sauce, cayenne pepper and paprika are other typical meanings. They may be combined with the food – for example, devilled crab is seasoned and may be finished by grilling or broiling or used in an accompanying sauce. Marinades are popular particularly for chicken and meat, or a dry rub may be used to impart a typical devilled flavour. Grilling is the usual cooking method, but pan frying, broiling or baking are also used.

Food may be dipped in egg and coated with breadcrumb before cooking and served with a piquant devilled sauce. These dishes are very popular traditional English cookery. Devilled chicken or pigeon, for example, is prepared by slitting the bird down along its back, spreading it out flat, seasoning it and then grilling it. It is served with a devilled sauce.

The essential characteristic of any devilled food is the presence of a slight heat of flavour distinguishing it from a more complex spiced mixture or very fiery flavour.

RECIPES

Devilled beef

Cut some cold boiled beef into fairly thick slices. Coat each slice with mustard, sprinkle with oil or melted butter, coat with fresh breadcrumbs and grill (broil) under a low heat until each side is golden brown. Serve with devilled sauce.

Devilled herrings

Scale, wash and dry the herrings, then slice them along the back and sides. Season and coat with mustard, sprinkle with French white breadcrumbs and oil, and cook slowly under the grill (broiler). Serve with mustard sauce, vinegar sauce or devilled sauce.

Devilled meat dishes

In England this is a way of using pieces of leftover poultry or game or the remains of a joint to make a tasty meal. Mix together the following: 1-tablespoon English mustard, 1-tablespoon mustard with herbs, 2-tablespoon olive oil, 2 egg yolks, 1-teaspoon each of Worcestershire sauce, salt and anchovy paste, and a pinch of cayenne pepper. Curry powder or paste, tomato puree (paste) or a concentrated onion puree may be added if desired. Coat the meat with this mixture and grill (broil) under a medium heat until brown. Serve piping hot with a good gravy.

Devilled oysters

Poach, drain and remove the beards of the oysters. Thread the oysters on small kebab skewers, coat with melted butter seasoned with a little cayenne pepper and dip them in fresh white breadcrumbs. Grill (broil) under a low heat and serve with devilled sauce.

Devilled sauce (1)

(English recipr) Add 1 tablespoon chopped shallots to 150 ml (1/4 cup) red white vinegar and reduce by half. Then add 250 ml (8ft. oz. 1 cup) espagnole sauce and 2 tablespoon tomato puree (paste). Cook for 5 minutes just before serving add 1 tablespoon. Worcestershire sauce. 1 tablespoon Harvey sauce or spiced vinegar and a dash of cayenne pepper. Strain the sauce. This sauce is generally served with grilled (broiled) meat.

Devilled sauce (2)

Mix 150 ml (¼ pint, 1.2 cup) dry white wine with 1 tablespoon vinegar, then add 1 tablespoon finely chopped shallots, a soprig thyme, a small piece of pepper. Reduce the sauce by two-thirds, then add 200 ml (7 fl. Oz. 1/4 cup) demi-glace and boil for 2 – 3 minutes. Strain through a sieve. Just before serving add 1 teaspoon chopped parsley and check the seasoning adding a little cayenne pepper if liked. Alternatively, omit straining the sauce and add 1 tablespoon butter or beuree manie.

Devilled tongue.

Cut braised or poached cold ox (beef) or calf's tongue crossways into fairly thick slices or cut sheeps tongues in half lengthways. Spread with mustard dip melted butter and French breadcrumbs and grill (broil) gently until both sides are brown. Serve with devilled sauce.

DIABLE. A cooking put comprising of two potatoes earthwuaware pan. One of which other as a lot. It is has halfway through cooking the double is turned upside-down. The drill from Charters resembles a small sound casserole. Each pan has a flat beetroot, chestnuts and onions, without adding ascertain vegetables, such as potatoes, ginned for cooking.

The double washed and tighly finting led. The mose lends the . sometimes the inner mixtures a nabbed with a close of garlic. It was originally meant to be used when cooking on hot charoal but may also be used in an ordinary oven. If placed directly on an electric hotplate or a gas ring, it is advisable to start off the cooking very slowly over a gentic heat; otherwise, a heat diffuser should be placed under the hase.

DIABLE, A LA see devilled

DIABLOTIN. A very thin, small round slice of bread (cometimes first coated with reduced bechamed sauce) sprinkled with grated cheese and browned in the oven. Disavlotins are usually seved with soup, such as Roxjuctio, they can be served as cocktail snacks.

Formely the name dialotin was used for a small fritter made of a deep fried thick sauce. It is also the name of a small spoon used to measure spices for cocktails.

RECIPES

Cheese diablotins

Cut a ficelle (long thin French loaf) into slices 5 mm (¼ in) thick. Butter them and coat with grated cheese (Comte, emmental or Beaufort, which melt, or Parmessa, which doesn't. a thin slice of Cruyers or Edam may be used instead Brown the slices quickly and serve with soup.

Diablotins with walnuts and Roquefort Cheese

Cut a long French loaf into slices about 5 mm (1/4 in) thick. Mix some butter with an equal quality of Roquefort cheese and add some coarsely chopped green walnuts, allowing 1 tablespoon per 75 g (3 oz. ½ cup) of the mixture. Spread the mixture on the slices of bread and quickly heat in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F gas 9).

DIABOLO. A refreshing non-alcoholic drink made with lemonade and fruit syrup. The most common diabeholos are those made with mint and grenadine.

DIANE, A LA. The description a la Diane is given to certain game dishes that are dedicated to the goddess Diana (the huntress). Joints of venison a la Diana are sautéed and coated with sauce diane a highly peppered sauce with cream and truffles. They are served with chestnut puree and cendous spread with game forcemeat. The same may also be given to a game puree used to garnish either soft boiled (soft-cooked) eggs on croûtes with salmis sauce or mushroom barquettes with sauce chasseur. This puree can also form the basis of a cream soup, flavored with port. Quails a la theme are simonies in stock and tomato flavoured demi-glace; then garnished with queveilles and braised lettuce.

DIEPPOISE. A LA. A method preparing fish named after the port of Dieppe, which is famous for the excellence of the sole fished there. Sole whiting or brill a la dieppoise are cooked in white wine; garnished with masses of mushrooms and often mushrooms and masked with a white wine sauce made with the cooking of the fish and main sets. This method is also suitable for cooking piece and even an entree. Dipodies garnish consists of mussels prawns (shrimps) and mushroom cooked in white wine and is used for bouchees bonpaters salads and a seck made sauce.

Mackerel and heating marinated in white wine are considered to be a speciality of dieppoise, they are also called a la dieppoise. (see marinate dieppoise).

RECIPE

Brill a la dieppoise

Prepare 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) fish fumet. Clean 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) mussels and cook them a la mariniere reserving the cooking stock. Make a white roux with 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter and 25 g (1 oz. ¼ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour and gradually add the fish fumet together with 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) strained cooking stock from the mussels. Add 1 tablespoon coarsely chopped mushrooms and a bouquet garni. Check the seasoning and boil gently for 20-25 minutes to reduce. Shell the mussels and keep them hot in the remainder of their cooking stock, taking care not to over-boil them.

Season a brill weighing about 800 g (1 ¼ lb) with salt and place in a buttered flameproof dish. Pour over 150 ml (¼ pint, 1.2 cup) white wine. Bring to the boil, uncovered then cook in a preheated oven at 220°C (475°F, gas 7) for 15-18 minutes basting the fish.

Frequently Mix 2 egg yolks with a little of the partially cooked mushroom sauce. Add 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) peeled prawns (shelled shrimp) and the cooking liquor from the fish to the remaining mushroom sauce. Mix well, heat, add the hot drained mussels then the egg yolk mixture and coat the brill with this sauce. This recipe may also be used for fresh cod.

Scallops au gratin a la dieppoise

Poach the white flesh of 16 scallops very gently for 4 minutes in 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) fish fumet mixed with 200 ml (7 fl oz. ¼ cup) dry white wine. Cook 1 kg (¼ lb) small mussels a la mariniere. Prepare a sauce from a roux, the mussel cooking liquor and the fish fumet as described in the previous recipe. Add 1 tablespoon chopped mushroom stalks and a bouquet garni to the sauce, check the seasoning and cook gently for 20 – 25 minutes.

Keep the scallops hot in a covered lightly buttered gratin dish over a saucepan of hot water. Shell the mussels and keep hot in the rest of their cooking liquor, without boiling. Add 75 g (3 oz. ½ cup) peeled prawns (shelled shrimp). When the sauce is cooked strain it and add the strained mussels and prawns. Dilute 1 egg with a little of the sauce and whisk it in. coat the scallion with the sauce, scatter with very fine fresh breadcrumbs, sprinkle with melted butter and broil quickly in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F gas 7) or under the grill (boiler).

Additional recipe See smelt.

DIETETICS. The study of everything concerned with diet and all that relates to the therapeutic use of food. The importance of having a sensible balanced diet to maintain good health has been amply proved. The science of dietetics is particularly relevant in the planning of diets for those with special needs such as diabetics.

DIETICIAN. A specialist in the study and regulation of food intake and food preparation (diabetics, who has had scientific and paramedical training. Dietitians may work in hospitals supervising and dealing with all aspects of the patient's diet, in various educational establishments or with health authorities advising on and supervising the formulation of menus and various dietary aspects of health and also in the food industry. A dietitian may also be called upon to carry out investigations, to give private consultations and to prepare information for the mass media.

DIGESTIVE. The French name for a liqueur or spirit that may be taken after a meal, more for the pleasure of drinking it than for any medicinal action. Digestives are served plain or with ice.

DIJONNAISE, A LA. The description à la dijonnaise as given to various dishes prepared with a dressing of Dijon, particularly mustard savory dishes or dark sauces (for sweet dishes). Dijon dressing is a mustard-flavored mayonnaise type sauce served with cold meats.

RECIPE

Dijonnaise sauce

Pound together 4 hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolks and 4 tablespoons Dijon mustard. Season with salt and pepper. Work in 500 ml (17 fl oz. Up to 2 cups) oil and lemon juice, as a mayonnaise.

Sweet omelette à la dijonnaise

Beat 8 eggs together then add 5-6 finely crushed macaroons, 2 tablespoons single (light) or double (heavy) cream, and 1 tablespoon caster (superfine) sugar. Make 2 flat omelettes. Mix about 300 ml (½ pint, 1¼ cups) thick confectioner's custard (pastry cream) with 1 tablespoon ground almonds and 2 tablespoons blackcurrant jelly. Cover one of the omelettes with the mixture and place the second omelette on top. Cover completely with a meringue made with 3 or 4 egg whites. Dust with 1 tablespoon icing (confectioner's sugar and glaze in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°C gas 9). Serve surrounded with a border of blackcurrant jelly.

DILL. An aromatic umbelliferous plant originating in the East and introduced into Europe in ancient times. It is commonly called false anise or bastard fennel but in fact it has an excellent and distinct, yet delicate flavor of its own. The French name aneth comes from the Greek anemethon (fennel) and in Roman times it was symbol of vitality.

Dill leaves are used culinarily in North Africa (in the preparation of the meat) the former Soviet Union and particularly in Scandinavia, where they are used in the preparation of salmon and crayfish. Dill has a particular affinity with fish and seafood, eggs, creamy dishes and delicate vegetables. It is also used to make aromatic vinegar and a flavoring for various pickles including gherkins.

DIM SUM. A Cantonese specialty, consisting of a collection of steamed and deep-fried snacks usually served from mid-morning right the afternoon. Traditionally served in tea houses dim sum are now offered in many restaurants during the day. Some restaurant specialize in these snacks. Dim sum includes a wide variety of dishes such as spring rolls, steamed dumplings filled with meat or shrimp, steamed pork wrapped in noodle dough and fluffy white wheat buns stuffed with sweet meat. Small portions of spicy spareribs may be offered.

The dim sum may be ordered in one go or a few at a time until diners are satisfied steamed food are served straight from the bamboo steamers, brought to tables stacked and covered to keep their contents hot DINNER. The main meal of the day. This is the normally eaten in the evening or in the middle of the day (instead of luncheon) in finance before Revolution dinner way eaten in the morning or at midday. It is generally thought that the French word dinner is derived from the Latin disjunare (to break the fast), as is dejeuner, the French word for lunch. This is because the word was originally used for the morning meal that was eaten after Mass, first at 7 a.m. and later at 9 or 10 a.m. it consisted of bacon, eggs and fish and was one of the two main meals of the day, the other being supper (take at about 5 p.m.) however, other theories concerning its origin have also been put forward dinner might have been derived from decium bont (the tenth hour, to o'clock), or from the words of the blessing dignare dominum, or from the Greek word defination the meal called after sunset).

The hour of eating dinner became progressively later when the daily time of Mass was observe less straightly and in time, the habit of serving a light meal on using developed. This meal the dejeuner, later became the peted dejeumet breakfast) Dinner was at midday at the reigns of Louis XIII and Louis XIV, and Furetiere describes the meal thus. Midday is the normal time for dinner. When one wants to go and we people, it is advisable to do so between eleven o'clock and midday, certainly not later, for then one. Would be preventing them from taking their meal

In the 18th century, dinner was moved on to 2 p.m. but supper often remained the principal meal of the day. Finally, at the time of the Revolution dinner was eaten at the end of the afternoon, lunch was taken at midday, and supper was served (in the towns) when there was a soiree. In the country there was less change and supper continued to be the main meal for a considerable period of time.

Today, dinner usually takes place at about 7 p.m. earlier in Scandinavian countries, later in Mediterranean countries. It may be a formal occasion for receiving guests. Alexandre Duman defined dinner as the principal act of the day that can only be carried out in a worthy manner by people of wit and humour; for it is not sufficient just to eat at dinner. One has to talk with a calm and discreet gaiety. The conversation must sparkle like the rubies in the entremets wines, it must be delightfully suave with the sweetmeats of the dessert, and become very profound with the coffee. According to the chef Denis, the composition of a formal dinner must be varied and abundant, and hot dishes must alternate with cold ones. For a big occasion, he recommends consommé, followed by a cold entrée, a large hot roast, vegetables sweet dessert, patisserie and fruit. This prescription is now simplified to consommé, fish served in a sauce, roast meat and garnish, and patisserie. Some gastronomes advise against serving cheese at dinner.

In family households the main meal of the day varies according to the working patterns of the adults and whether they have children. Whether the evening meal consists of dinner or supper is very much a matter of lifestyle. Where both adults work, dinner is likely to be an evening meal and lunch a light snack. Children at home may well be served a main meal in the middle of the day, and the whole family may have dinner at this time on a Sunday Although few people live close enough to their place of work and have someone at home to prepare dinner during the day, in retired households the main meal may be eaten instead of lunch. It is also worth remembering that the major social changes of the 20th century greatly influenced eating patterns. Meals are no longer subject to rigid definition, eating patterns vary between weekdays and weekends, and individual or family choices dominate.

DIOT. A small vegetable and pork sausage made in Savory. Diots may be dried like saucissons, fresh diots are browned in land (shortening) with sliced onions, then gently simmered in a little white wine.

DIPLOMATE, A LA. The description a la diplomate is given to dishes that include truffles and lobster, thus evoking the idea of luxury and refinement. Diplomat sauce, also called ride sauce, is made with lobster butter, truffles and lobster flesh and accompanies dedicate fish, such as John Dory (St. peter's fish), sole and turbot.

RECIPE

Diplomat omelette

Prepare a salpicon with 7 tablespoons diced lobster flesh cooked in court bouillon and 1 tablespoon diced truffles. Mix 3 tablespoon béchamel sauce (or thick cream sauce) with 1 tablespoon lobster butter flavoured with brandy. Add the salpicon. Make 2 flat omelettes (each containing 3 eggs). Cover one of the omelettes with the lobster and truffle mixture and place second omelette on top. Mix 200 ml (7 fl. Oz. ¼ cup) thin béchamel sauce, 3 tablespoon double (heavy) cream and 40 g (1 ½ oz. ¼ cup) mixed red Gruyere and Parmesan cheese. Add 1 tablespoon 1 lobster butter. Cover the top of the second omelete with this sauce, sprinkle lightly with grated cheese, them with a little melted butter, and brown quickly, either in a preheated oven at 240°C (465°F, gas 9) or under the grill (broiler).

Diplomat sauce

Add 2 tablespoon truffle parings or chopped mushroom stalks to 200 ml (7 fl oz. ¼ cup) fish fumet and reduce by half. Make 75 g (3 oz.) white roux and add 750 ml (1 ¼ pints, 3 ¼ cups) fish stock (use the cooking liquid of the fish specified in the recipe). Strain the reduced fumer and add it, together with 200 ml (7 fl. Oz ¼ cup) double (heavy) cream, to the sauce. Reduce again by half. Add 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) lobster butter, 4 tablespoons double cream, 1 tablespoon brandy and a pinch of cayenne pepper. Strain if the sauce is served separately, add to it 1 tablespoon diced lobster flesh (cooked in a court bouillon) and 1 tablespoon diced truffles.

Sole diplomat

Remove the skin from a good sized sole, slit its flesh along the backbone and free the top fillets, working outwards from the center. Cut the backbone at the head and tail and remove it completely. Prepare 125 g (4 ½ oz, ½ cup) whiting forcemeat a la crème, adding 1 tablespoon diced truffles. Insert the forcement underneath the top fillets. Gently poach the sole in a fish fumet but do not cover. Drain remove the small lateral bones, arrange on the serving dish and surround with diced lobster flesh. Keep hot. Use the cooking liquid to make some diplomat sauce and coat the fish with it.

DIPLOMAT PUDDING a cold dessert prepared in a mould by one of two different methods. The more common version consists of sponge fingers (ladyfingers) soaked in syrup flavoured with rum or kirsch, layered with crystallized (candled) fruits, apricot jam and a cooked egg custard or a Bavarian cream. After chilling and setting the pudding is unmoulded and coated with fruit sauce or custard cream.

In the second version, the sponge fingers are replaced by layers of brioche. The pudding is soaked with a custard mixture and baked in a bain marie. It is them chilled and unmoulded.

Individual diplomat are barquettes filled with a cream containing crystallized fruits, glazed with apricot jam, covered with fondant icing (frosting) and decorated with a crystallized cherry.

Bombe diplomate is made with ice cream and crystallized fruits (see bombe glacee)

RECIPE

Baked diplomat pudding*

Coarsely chop 100 g (4 oz.) crystallized (candied) fruits. Put in a bowl with 75 g (3 oz. ½ cup) raising and add 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) rum. Leave to macerate for 1 hour. Sloce a loaf of brioche. Remove the ccrusts, butter and lightly toast the slices until golden. Butter a 1.5 litre (2 ¼ pint, 6 ½ cups) charlotte mould and sprinkle with king (confectioner's) sugar. Line the bottom with brioche slices and cover with a layer of the drained macerated fruit, reserving the rum. Fill the mould in this with alternate layers of bread and fruit.

Beast 200 g (7 oz. 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) milk and 1 teaspoon vanilla sugar with 6 eggs the rum in which the fruit was macerated. Gradually pour this mixture into the mould, slowing the brioche to soak up the liquid. Cook for 1 hour in a bain marie in a preheated oven at 150°C (300°F, gas 2) making sure the liquid in the bain marie does not come to the boil. Allow to cool completely. Remove from the mould and serve with crystallized fruit.

Diplomat pudding

Make a syrup with 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) water and 100g (4 oz. ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar. Bring to the boil and add 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) crystallized (candied) fruits and soak in 3 tablespoons rum.

Make a Bavarian cream: soak 15g (½ oz, 1 table spoon) gelatin in 3 tablespoon cold water. Boil 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) milk with half a vanilla pod (bean). Beat 4 large egg yolks with 125 g (4 ½ oz, ½ cup) caster sugar until mixture is light and creamy, then add the boiling milk a little at a time, stirring with a wooden spatula. Pour the mixture into a saucepan and cook over a low heat, stirring continuously, until the custard cream is just thick enough to coat the spoon. Stir the gelatine into the custard cream, then press through a sieve. Leave to cool. Whip 200 ml (7 fl. Oz, ¾ cup) double (heavy cream until stiff with 1 tablespoon very cold milk and fold into the cold custard.

Strain the rum from the crystallized fruit and add it to the reserved syrup. Use the rum-flavoured syrup to soak 200 g (7 oz) sponge fingers (lady-fingers). Put some of the crystallized fruit in the bottom of the greased mould, cover with a layer of the Bavarian cream, and then with a layer of sponge fingers sprinkled with sultanas and crystallized fruit. Coat with a little apricot jam. Continue to fill the mould with layers of Bavarian cream, sponge fingers, stulatanas, crystallized fruits and apricot jam. Chill for at least 2 hours.

Heat some apricot jam until melted and add to it 3 tablespoons rum. Unmould the diplomat pudding, on to a dish and coat it with the apricot sauce on, if preferred, with a little thin custard.

Diplomat pudding with prunes

Place 200 g (7 oz. L 1/4 cups) dried prunes in a small bowl and add just enough weak tea to cover them. Cover and leave to soak for 24 hours. Place the tea and the prunes in a saucepan, add 4 tablespoons caser (superfine) sugar, bring to the boil and cook ently for 15 minutes. Put 2 egg yolks in another saucepan together with 3 tablespoons caster sugar. L tablespoon vanilla sugar and 1 tablespoon cornflour (cornstarch). Slowly add 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) cold milk and stir over a low heat until the mixture boils and the custard thickens. Set aside to cool.

Drain and stone (pit) the prunes, reserve the cooking liquid and add to it 1 liquor glass of rum of kirsch. Soak 28 sponge fingers (ladyfingers) in this syrup. Cover the bottom of a greased charlotte mould with some of the soaked sponge fingers, ensuring that the rounded surface of each finger is in contact with the mould. Place successive layers of custard cream, prunes and sponge fingers in the mould, finishing with sponge fingers. Chill thoroughly and turn the pudding out just before serving. Serve with a thin rum or kirsch-flavoured custard cream.

Individual diplomats with crystallized fruit

Make a short pastry with 125 g (4 1/2 oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, a pinch of salt, 3 tablespoons) softened butter. Roll the dough into a ball; wrap and chill.

Mix 75 g (3 oz. 6 tablespoons) softened butter with 75 g (3 oz. 6 tablespoons) caster sugar, 1 egg and 75 g (3 oz. 6 tablespoons) caster sugar, 1 egg and 75 g (3 oz. 3/4 cup) ground almonds. Roll 50 g (2 oz, 1/3 cup) sultanas (golden raisins) and 50 g (2 oz, 1/3 cup) diced crystallized (candied) fruits in 3 tablespoons plain flour. Stir the fruit into the almond mixture, then add 3 tablespoons light rum and mix well.

Roll out the pastry until it is about 3 mm (1/2 in.) thick, then cut out about 10 oval shapes with a pastry (cookie) cutter. Butter some barquette moulds and line them with the pastry shapes, leaving an excess of about 3 mm (1/8 in) thick, then cut out about 10 oval shapes with a pastry(cookie) cutter. Butter some barquette moulds and line them with the pastry shapes, leaving an excess of about 3 mm (1/8 in) around the edges. Fill with the fruit-almond mixture and bake in a pre-heated oven at 200°C (400°F gas 6) for 30 minutes. Remove the moulds from the oven and cool. Turn the barquettes out of the moulds and glaze with apricot jam that has been melted over a low heat.

Heat 100 g (4 oz.) fondant icing (frosting) very gently so that it melts, and use to coat the diplomats. Decorate each diplomat with a glaze (candied) cherry and keep in a cool place.

DIPPING PIN. A small confectionery utensil consisting of a stainless steel rod with a wooden handle and a spiral, a ring, or a two or three-pronged fork at the end. The pin for ring is used for plunging a sweet in sugar fondant or melted chocolate to coat it or to dipping a petit four or a sugar coated fruit in boiling sugar to glaze it.

DISTILLATION. The process of boiling a liquid and cooling and collecting the vapour, so as to separate components of the liquid mixture. It is the basic process used in making strong alcoholic spirits, either from wine or from other fermented material such as grain or potatoes. It depends on the fact that different substances boil at different temperatures; alcohol, in particular, boils more easily than water, so the vapour from, for instance, boiling wine will contain more alcohol than the original wine. Distillation, then, is a method of increasing the alcohol content-over and above that possible by normal fermentation. The distilled liquor also contains other substances from the original mixture, to give flavour. In many distillation processes, a second distillation for rectification is used. This is sometimes followed by the addition of aromatic substances – for example. Cognac is matured in oak barrels; gin is flavoured with juniper berries. Usually, the process is carried out in an alembic-a large copper vessel with a long neck in which the vapour condenses and from which the distillate drips. (The word “distillatio” comes from the Latin distillare – to allow drop by drop.).

DIVAN-LE PELETIER. A brasserie situated in the Rue Le Peletier in Paris, founded in 1837 and called the Café du Divan. At that time, the Opera was situated nearby in the same street and so the café was frequented by writers and actors, Balzac and Gavarni rubbed shoulders with Alfred de Musset (who went there to drink beer laced with absinthe), Meissonier, Daumier and Henri Monnier. Besides the beer the clientele enjoyed the brasserie’s sweet liqueurs, which were sold under such picturesque names as “Parfait Amour”, “Crinoline”, Alma, “Sebastopol”, “Lique”, “Imperiale”, and “Le Retour de Banni”. The establishment closed in 1859.

DODINE. A dish of boned, stuffed and braised poultry (particularly duck) or meat, similar to a ballotine. In medieval cookery the term dodine was used for a classic sauce for which Taillevent gives three recipes; white dodine (milk boiled with ginger, egg yolks and suar), red dodine (toasts soaked in red wine, pressed through a sieve and boiled with fried onions, bacon, cinnamon, nutmeg, cloves, sugar and salt, and erjuice dodine (egg yolks, ver-juice, crushed chicken livers, ginger, parsley and bouillon). These sauces were placed under roasting poultry, so that the fat and meat juices ran into the sauce and were thus blended in. Dodines were used to accompany duck, teal, plover and capons. The dish was served with roast potatoes.

Nowadays, the names duck à la dodine or 'guinea fowl en dodine' are still given to certain haute cuisine dishes in which the bird is roasted and carved, the legs and sliced breast meat are set aside, and the carcass is browned with carrots and onions for mushrooms), wine, spices and the cooking juices. The sauce is then sieved and the uncooked chopped liver of the bird is added, together with fresh cream. The sauce is poured over the joints before serving. Dodine of duck is a well-known speciality in Aquitaine, Burgundy (served with Chambertin wine), the Morvan and Touraine.

RECIPE

Dodine of duck

Bone a duck without damaging the skin, keeping the breast meat intact as far as possible. Remove all the fresh from the skin. Cut the breast meat into thin slices (arguilletes) and marinate them for 24 hours in 2 tablespoons brandy, a pinch of ground fennel seeds, salt and pepper. Chop the remaining flesh and mix it with 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) chopped fat bacon, 250 g (9 oz, 1 cup) chopped veal, 250 g (9 oz. 3 cups) chopped button mushrooms, 50 g (2 oz, ½ cups) ground almonds and a chopped small bunch of parsley. Work 2 tablespoons truffle parings (or diced truffles), 1 egg salt and pepper into the mixture. Cook a knob of the mixture in a sauce pan and taste it, then adjust the seasoning if necessary.

Spread out the skin of the duck and cover it with half of the stuffing. Arrange the slices of breast on top and cover with a remaining stuffing. Fold the skin towards the center at the neck and the tail, roll and tie up the dodine. Either wipe a soaked pig's caul and tie it around the dodine or tie the dodine in shape with string. Pork fat or streaky (slab) bacon may be used to bard the dodine. Braise the dodine in a little white wine in a pre-heated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4), basting it several times. Cook for 1 1/2-1 ¾ hours, until the juices that run out when it is pricked are clear.

If the dodine is to be served hot, cut the thread and remove any parts of the caul that have not melted. Skim the fat from the cooking juices and add 2 tablespoons port and a few tablespoons of stock. Reduce by half. Cut the dodine into slices, garnish with watercress and serve with the sauce.

If the dodine is to be served cold, allow it to cool completely before cutting the thread. Serve with a green or mixed salad.

DOGFISH. Fish of the Seiurbinidae family, called dogfish because its small round fins at four corners make it look like a dog running underwater. Appreciated in Mediterranean countries as a cheaper alternative to swordfish, the larger spotted dogfish is known as cazon in Spain. Called buss in Australia and Britain, where until the late 1970s it was known as rock salmon (the term was outlawed as misrepresentative). The large spotted dogfish, up to 120cm (48 in) long, is also known as nurse-hound; the lesser-spotted, up to 75 cm (30 in), and regarded as better tasting, is also known as rough hound.

DOLICHOS. A genus of pulses of which several varieties are cultivated in warm and tropical regions. The most common is the mongetter dolicho, which is widely cultivated in China and Louisiana (United States) and is also grown in the south of France (where it is known as bunnette) and in Italy. It is similar to a haricot (navy) bean, but the seeds are smaller. The young pods may be cooked and eaten like French (green) beans. The asparagus bean has very long pods – up to 1 metre (3 feet) – and its beans vary in colour. The lablab dolicho for bonavist bean is cultivated in Africa and the West Indies.

DOLMA. A stuffed vine leaf. A popular Turkish and Greek dish, the main form of which comprises a vine leaf stuffed with cooked rice and/or minced (ground) lamb, rolled into a cylinder and braised in a little stock with olive oil and lemon juice added. Dolmas (or dolmades) are served warm or cold as hors d'oeuvres. They may also be made with cabbage or fig leaves, or even with the leaves of the hazel tree. In Turkey, they are traditionally cooked in sheep-tail fat.

Recipe

YALANCI DOLMAS

Choose large sound wine leaves. Blanch for a maximum of 2 minutes, cool under running water and wipe dry. For about 50 dolmas, half-cook 125 g (4 1/2 oz, 2/3 cup) long-grain or pilaf rice in meat stock. Peel and coarsely chop 400 g (14 oz) onions and cook gently in olive oil until soft but not brown. Mince (grind) 250 g (9 oz, 1 cup) mutton or lamb and gently brown it. Finally chop 1 tablespoon mint. Mix all these ingredients together. Place a small ball of stuffing on each vine leaf, fold up the tip and base of the leaf, roll into a cylinder and tie with kitchen thread.

Oil a sauce pan and place the dolmas in it, packing them closely together. Sprinkle with 4 tablespoons olive oil, the juice of 2 lemons and about 175 ml (6 fl oz, 3/4 cup) stock flavoured with 1 tablespoon coriander (cilantro) seeds. Cover and simmer gently for about 30 minutes. Allow the dolmas to cool completely before removing the thread.

DOMYOJI AGE. A Japanese dish of prawns (shrimp) coated with dried rice and deep-fried, served with sliced green (bell) pepper, aubergine (eggplant) and lemon. It is a classic example of the type of dish that combines contrasting textures, colours and flavours much favored in Japanese cookery.

DONKEY. A mammal used essentially as a draught or pack animal: its meat is only a subsidiary edible product. In some oriental countries young donkey meat is very popular, as it was in France at the time of the Renaissance. Now a day, the meat of large donkeys (the Poitou breed) is put into the same class as horsemeat. In the south of France, where donkeys are smaller, their meat, which is lighter and has a stronger flavour, is used mainly in such products as the Arles sausage. Asses' milk, which has a composition similar to human milk, was used for a long time to feed nursing babies, it was also considered to have restorative properties. In the Balkans it is made into cream cheese.

This is what Alexandre Dumas says of the donkey in his grand dictionnaire de cuisine. Tastes change. We have recently seen the horse on the verge of replacing the ox, which would be quite just, since the ox had replaced the donkey. Maecenas was the first in Roman times to make use of the flesh of the domestic donkey....Monsieur Isonard of Malta reports that, as a result of the blockade of the island of Malta by the English and the Neapolitans, the inhabitants were reduced to eating all the horses, dogs, cats, donkeys and rats. "This circumstance", he says, "led to the discovery that donkey meat was very good, so much so, in fact, that gourmets in the city of Valetta preferred it to the best beef and even veal. Particularly boiled, roast, or braised, its flavour is exquisite. The meat is blackish and the fat verging on yellow. However, the donkey must only be three or four years old and must be fat."

DORIA. The name of various classic dishes, probably dedicated to a member of the famous Gernoese Doria family who was an habitué of the Café Anglais in Paris in the 19th century. These dishes evoke the image of Italy, either by combining the colours of the Italian flag (green white and red) or by including Predomonitese white truffles.

RECIPE

Bombe Doria

Coat a bombe mould with pistachio ice cream. Macerate some pieces of marrons glacés in Curacao, then add them to a vanilla-flavoured bombe mixture. Fill the mould with this mixture and place in the refrigerator to set.

Doria salad

Dress shreddedceleriac (celery root) with remoulade sauce and pile it in a deep salad bowl. Cover with thin slices of white truffle. Surround with a border of cooked green asparagus tips and thin strips of cooked beetroots (red beet) that has been seasoned with vinaigrette. Sprinkle with sieved hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolk and chipped parsley.

Sautéed chicken Doria

Brown a small chicken in 1 tablespoon oil and 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter in a flameproof casserole. Add salt and pepper, cover the casserole and continue cooking over a low heat for 30 minutes. Brown 675 g (1 1/2 lb. 6 cups) peeled chopped cucumber in butter in a separate pan and add to the chicken. Cook for a further 20-30 minutes, or until brown and tender. Remove the chicken, drain and carve. Arrange the slices on the serving dish surrounded by the cucumber. Keep hot. Make a sauce by deglazing the casserole with the juice of a lemon and pour it over the chicken and cucumber.

DORMOUSE. A small rodent that nests in the branches of trees and feeds on nuts, berries and seeds. In ancient times it was considered to be a delicacy, but is no longer eaten. The Romans were so fond of dormice that they bred them in special containers made of muds with holes through which the animals were fed with chestnuts, acorns and nuts. When the dormice had been fattened up, they were either stewed or roasted and then coated with a sauce made from honey and poppyseeds. As late as the 17th century, it was still possible to find dormouse pie in France.

DOSA. Indian pancake made from a batter of rice and/or dal. The uncooked rice and dal are washed, soaked and ground or processed to a puree with enough water to make a batter. The batter may be flavoured with chillies, ginger or other ingredients before being cooked on a greased griddle. The pancakes may be thick or thin, served plain or with a filling. Dosas are usually grouped with Indian breads and served as snacks, for example for breakfast, or instead of bread to scoop up a main dish.

DOUGH. The name given to a moistened mixture of ingredients that is firm enough to handle. A dough is usually brought together with the fingers or hand into a ball or solid lumps and it may be kneaded until smooth. The consistency of the dough depends on type, ranging from dry and crumbly or firm to soft and sticky. A dough is never soft enough to be beaten (when it would be a mixture or batter.)

Wheat flour and water are basic dough ingredients but other cereals and liquids may be used. Salt is often added for flavour and sugar for sweetening. Fat (lard, butter, shortening or oil) and eggs enrich dough milk or other liquids may be used instead of water to bind the ingredients. Raising agents, such as yeast or baking powder, may be used to make the dough rise during baking.

5 TYPES OF DOUGH. Yeasted bread dough is the most common mixture to take the name. Made from flour, salt and water, with yeast as a raising agent, this type of dough may have a small proportion of fat added. This type of dough has a comparatively high moisture content and is kneaded until smooth and elastic. Flour with a high protein content is used as it becomes stretchy when kneaded, which is important for trapping the gas produced by the fermenting yeast to make the dough rise. Although the dough is smooth and easy to handle, if it is allowed to rest for too long in the hand, it tends to become sticky (Dusting with flour prevents this.)

Doughs made with self-raising flour or using baking powder or similar raising agents are softer in texture. They may include more liquid or fat and are kneaded briefly or pressed into shape. Examples, include Irish soda bread and British scones.

The mixture for pastry is also referred to as dough. These vary according to the type of pastry, but a typical short pastry has a high proportion of fat with a small amount of water. Plain (all-purpose) flour is used without a raising agent. The result is a firm, crumbly dough. It should not be sticky from the moisture content but may be so from the fat it contains. When cooked, the dough is very light and crumbly (short), with a slight crispness to its texture. The more fat used, the shorter (more crumbly) the result; when slightly more water is used, the dough will become crisp but too much water and heavy handling will result in a tough, heavy and close, not crumbly, texture.

Biscuit (cookie) doughs are similar to pastry, but usually richer with more fat or added egg, plus flavouring ingredients.

Pasta dough differs from yeast and pastry dough. A typical Italian pasta dough is moistened with eggs, a little oil and sometimes with a little water to give a firm, not short or soft dough. It does not contain a raising agent and, although more stretchy than a short pastry dough, it is not elastic in the same way as yeast dough.

Examples of other mixtures usually referred to as dough during preparation include almond paste or marzipan and sugarpaste or roll-out icing.

DOUGHNUT. A traditional patisseries of Quebec prepared from leavened dough (flour, eggs, milk and butter), often made in the shaped of a ring, and deep-fried. It is eaten hot or at room temperature, plain or sprinkled with caster (superfine) sugar. The soufflet doughnut or croquignole is made from choux pastry. The French item beigne also describes the doughnut topped with sugar icing (frosting), made commercially, which is a fast-food item in North America.

Recipe

Doughnuts

Mix 15 g (½ oz, 1 cake) fresh (compressed) yeast with 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) warm milk. (Alternatively, use ½ teaspoons dried yeast.) Put 500 g. (18 oz. 4 1/2 cups) strong white (bread) flour, 100-125 g (4 ¼ oz, ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar, a generous pinch of salt and ½ teaspoon grated nutmeg into a large bowl. Make a well in the center and mix a beaten egg with the dry ingredients as thoroughly as possible. Add 2 more eggs, one at a time. Work 65 g (2 ½ oz, 5 tablespoons) melted butter into the mixture, then add the warm yeast mixture. Knead the dough until it becomes elastic. Leave to rise until doubled in size.

Roll out the dough on a floured surface to a thickness of about 1 cm (1/2 in) and cut it into rounds with a pastry (cookie) cutter 6 cm (2 ½ in) in diameter. Fry the doughnuts in hot fat – at least 185 °C (365 °F)-until they swell up and become golden brown. Drain on paper towels, dust with caster (superfine) sugar and serve very hot with maple syrup or a cranberry compote.

DOUGH TROUGH. A large wooden trough used in the past for kneading dough or for keeping bread. A regional name for this trough is la mate.

DOUILLON. A speciality of Normandy, consisting, of an apple or pear wrapped in a pastry case and baked in the oven.

Recipe

Douillons

Mix 500 g (18 oz, 4 ½ cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, 350 g (12 oz, 1 ½ cups) softened butter, 2 eggs, 3 tablespoons milk, 1 ½ tablespoons caster (superfine) sugar and 1 teaspoon salt to make a smooth dough. Roll it into a ball and place in the refrigerator while cooking the pears.

Peel 8 small pears, remove the cores and place a knob of butter in the center of each.

Cook in a preheated oven at 190°C (375°F, gas 5) for 10 minutes. Remove and allow them to get completely cold. (Do not turn the oven off.)

Roll out the pastry to a thickness of about 3 mm (1/8 in) and cut it into 8 squares of equal size. Place a well-drained pear in the center of each square and fold the corners upwards, stretching the pastry a little. Seal the sides and the top by pinching with damp fingers. Draw the lines on the pastry with the point of a knife. Glaze the douillons with an egg yolk beaten in 2 tablespoons milk and bake in the oven for 25-30 minutes. Serve hot, warm, or cold, with crème fraîche.

DOUM PALM. An African palm tree with edible fruits. Palm wine is made from the sap of this tree. Alexandre Dumas writes in his Grand Dictionnaire de cuisine. The coum palm produces a refreshing fruit, in which I was able to detect the taste of gingerbread. A lady in Cairo....once offered me a cool sorbet of doum fruit.'

DOURO River with its source in Spain, where it crosses several wine regions, before continuing its course through Portugal, where the demarcated Douro valley is the birthplace of port wine and is gaining a reputation for excellent table wines. Port is produced in the three regions of Cima (Higher) Cargo, Baixo (Lower) Cargo and the Upper Douro.

DOVE. Tourterell. A bird similar and related to the pigeon, but smaller, There are several varieties, including the rock dove and ring dove (see pigeon), the turtledove, the collared dove, the palm dove, and the rufous turtledove. The latter four species are hunted in France, though they are of minor gastronomic interest. Plump young doves were formerly considered to make a delicious meal. In the 16th century, doves, together with curfews, wood pigeons, squabs and egrets, were more highly prized by some than beef, veal and pork. In Arab cookery, doves cooked in a cocotte with artichoke hearts nutmeg and raisins are a choice dish.

DRAGEE An item of confectionery consisting of an almond with a hard coating of sugar. The coating may be white or coloured, and hazelnuts, pistachio nuts, nougat, almond paste, chocolate or liqueur may also be used as centers for these sweets (candies).

Honey coated almonds were popular sweethearts with the ancient Greeks and Romans, and the name dragee' was mentioned for the time in 1220 in the archives of the town of Verdun. At that time, the apothecaries (with whom confectioners were still confused) coated certain spices – aniseed, cardamom and fennel with honey. These épices de chambre were considered to be medicinal spices, eaten to sweeten the breath or as an aid to digestion. When cane sugar was introduced into Europe, dragees as we now know them appeared-sugar-coated almonds, pumpkin seeds or cucumber seeds. In 1660, Colbert noted that Verdun was the center of trade in dragees, and it remains famous for their production to the present day. Dragees are traditionally given at christenings, first communions and weddings. The obus De Verdun is a chocolate novelty fitted with a fuse which, when lighted, explodes to release dragees and small party novelties.

Before 1850, dragees were hand-made by crafts-men. The almonds were suspended in rotating vats of sugar syrup so that they would be evenly coated. In that year, however, the first mechanical turbine was invented, and the process is now carried out mechanically by spraying sugar syrup on the kernels under pressure and drying them to warm air.

6 The range of dragees. The sugar-coating process is the same for every type of filling. The most popular varieties of almonds are the flat Italian avolas and the slightly rounded Spanish plametas. The almonds are put into the turbine, dipped three times in a mixture of gum Arabic and sugar, dried and coated with a concentrated sugar syrup. They are then blanched in a sugar syrup with added starch, smoothed and coloured if required.

Chocolate, nougat, fondant icing thrusting, almond paste or liqueur fillings are moulded before being coated with sugar. Specialities include olives de Provence, different types of catholoux and galets, and ants de Flarigny. Perles d'argent are made by coating a sugar center with a gelatine-based solution, then with pure silver.

Soft dragees (also called dragees a fruit or dragees Julienne) are shaped like beans or peas and their centers consist of clear or opaque boiled sugar coated with a dilute glucose solution and then with icing (confectioner's sugar).

DRAGON FRUIT See pitahaya.

DRAIN. To pour a liquid off a solid with the primary intention of saving the solid. For example, water is drained from raw foodstuffs that have been washed or from foods that have been cooked or blanched in water. A colander or sieve is used for the purpose, if the cooking liquid is required the colander should be placed over a bowl. Alternatively, a pan may be covered with a lid, leaving a small gap for the liquid to be poured off – this is a useful method for potatoes.

Small items can be lifted from cooking water (or fat) on a draining spoon and held over the pan until excess liquid has dripped off. Spinach can be squeezed with the hands or excess water can be pressed out with the back of a spoon. Bread soaked in milk (used to make a stuffing) can also be squeezed by hand. Foods that have been deep-fried are also drained to remove the excess oil or fat.

DRAMBUIE. A Scotch whisky-based liqueur, which can be drunk at any time. Its formula is the property of the Mackinnon family, who keep it a secret. The origin of the name apparently comes from the Gaelic expression an dram buidheach (the liqueur that satisfies'). Drambuie, little known in the continental Europe, is popular in the United States.

DRESSER. A French culinary term with several different meanings. In cooking, it means to arrange attractively on the serving dish all the items that comprise a particular preparation, including the principal ingredient, the garnish, the sauce and any decorations. In patisseries dresser means to roll out pastry for lining a mould or flan tin (pie pan), or to force dough through a piping (pastry) bag.

In restaurants, dressage takes place as soon as the dishes are a point (ready to be served). Garnishes must always be kept in perfect condition for use. For example, sprigs of parsley and bunches of water-cress are kept in fresh water, maitre d'hotel butter is kept cold in water with ice cubes' mushrooms are sprinkled with lemon juice; and flavoured butters are shaped into rolls, wrapped in foil and stored in the refrigerator.

The items used in dressage include serving dishes, radish dishes, hors-d'oeuvre dishes (divided into sections), sundae glasses, timbale dishes, copper platters for serving game, vegetable dishes, sauceboats (gravy boats), salad dishes, soup tureens, terrine dishes, fruit dishes and toast racks. Fonds de plat and bords de plat were used at one time. The former were either round or oval pieces of wood that were placed on the bottom of a plate to form a raised base for cold dishes. They were usually covered with silver paper. Bords de plat were wide-rimmed decorative dishes made of solid silver or silver plate on which the garnishes were arranged around the principal item.

Certain dishes require a particular style of dressage, for example, oysters and other seafood are served on a large plate covered with crushed ice. Certain items call for specific utensils, such as special plates and tongs for snails or asparagus cradles.

7 Methods of dressage. The items of food may be presented in various ways. Game and poultry are often served on slices of fried bread. Potatoes are often used in various ways for dressage-borders, duches potatoes, nests of potato straws, little piles of noisette potatoes. Artichoke hearts, tomatoes and mushrooms are also used in this way.

The plates and dishes for dressage must be kept at the correct temperature for the food they are to hold (for example, sundae glasses must be ice-cold).

The present tendency in French restaurants is for service a Passiette in which the individual portion is placed directly on the plate, coated with sauce and garnished with vegetables.

DRESSING FISH, POULTRY AND GAME

The preparation of fish, poultry and game birds for cooking.

8 DRESSING FISH. The fish must be necessarily trimmed, sealed gutted (cleaned) and washed (some of this may be carried out by the fishmonger). The dressing will vary depending on the type of fish (flat, round, small or large) and on the way it is to be served. For example, if a whole sole fillet is not trimmed, but the skin is removed completely).

9 DRESSING POULTRY and Game birds. The bird must first be plucked carefully picked over and singed. Poultry is then drawn, usually trussed, and often larded, but the preparation will vary according to the type of bird. Feathered game is not always completely guffed; trussing or trying, and sometimes landing, complete the dressing. All the above operations apply to birds that are to be cooked whole. When they are to be cut into portions, the giblets, white meat and breasts are removed, and it is, therefore, only necessary to pluck, singe and draw the bird.

DRIED VINE FRUITS. Currants, sultanas (golden raisings) and raisins. These dried fruits are all produced by exposing ripe grapes to hot dry air so that the moisture is drawn out. This leaves the flesh and skin so concentrated that the activities of enzymes and the growth of moulds and bacteria are inhibited. It takes 1.8 kg (1 lb) grapes to produce 450 g (1 lb.) currants, sultanas or raisins.

For all types of dried vine fruit, the grapes are dried naturally in the sun or artificially by hot air. The dried fruit is sorted and graded, the seeds and stalks are removed, and the fruit is then usually spin-washed, dried and a light coating of preservative applied before it is finally packed.

1 CURRENTS Produced mainly in Greece, the quality varies with the type of grape used and the soil conditions. Traditionally, the finest are Vostizza but excellent fruit is produced in the Zante Gulf and also grown in Australia, California and South Africa, but the limited production is usually for domestic consumption.

2 SULTANAS (GOLDEN RAISINS). These come from grapes that are green when fresh but darken in colour when dried. Light-coloured fruit is generally obtained by drying in the shade, and darker fruit by sun-drying. In both cases drying is natural, using the hot dry harvest weather. Many countries in the northern hemisphere produce sultanas – Greece, France, Turkey, Iran, Afghanistan, China, the United States and Mexico. In the Southern hemisphere the producers are Australia, South Africa and Chile.

3 SEEDLESS RAISINS. Produced in the United States, Mexico and South Africa, they are obtained from the Thompson sultana grape and are green when harvested. They are sun-dried, the action of the sun caramelizing the sugars and causing the fruit to darken to a purplish-brown colour. A red raising grape is produced in Afghanistan, after drying, it is essentially of the same appearance as the other.

4 STONED (PITTED) Raisins. These come from large red grapes that are generally used as wine and table grapes, although some are sun-dried. To extract the seeds, the fruit is steamed to soften it, then put through special machinery that squeezes the seeds out. The skin is then sealed by a light coating to prevent the fruit is steamed to soften it, then put through special machinery that squeezes the seeds out. The skin is then sealed by a light coating to prevent the fruit from sugaring. Australia, SouthAfrica and Spain are the main producers.

Dried vine fruits are widely used in all areas of cookery. They are used in savoury or sweet recipes, rawo cooked, including salads, casseroles and stuffings for meat or poultry. They are added to rice dishes and cooked with some vegetales. Dried vine fruits are also essential in many chutneys and pickles.

In sweet cookery, they contribute sweetness and a rich flavour to compotes, sauces, salads and baked desserts or puddings. In baking they are essential for a wide variety of cakes and pastries; and they bring character to many sweet breads.

Recipe

Raisin tart

Soak 500 g (18 oz, 3 cups) raising in brandy. Beat 8 whole eggs lightly, then whip them together with 1 litre (1 1/4 pints, 4 1/3 cups) double (heavy) cream, 350 g (12 oz, 1 1/2 cups) caster (superfine) sugar and 2 teaspoons vanilla sugar or a few drops of vanilla essence (extract). Line a flan tin (pie pan) at least 28 cm (11 in) in diameter with 450 g (1 lb) puff pastry. Pour the cream into the pastry case, add the raisins and bake in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) for at least 30 minutes.

DRINK. The simplest and most natural drink, and the only one essential for the survival of all living organisms, is water. The average consumption of liquid in a temperate climate is 1 litre (1 3/4 pints, 4 1/3 cups) per day, but needs to vary according to the climate and the diet. For example, meat and salted spiced or sweetened dishes all increase the thirst. Human kind has used its intelligence to vary the flavour of drinks, which may be sweet aromatic fermented or spirit-based.

Water-based drinks, which may be still or sparkling hot or cold, include lemonades sodas and syrups, broths, infusions, tea, coffee, chocolate and chovory. Drinks of vegetable origin may or may not be alcoholic, for example; fruit and vegetable juices, wine, cider, beer and perry. Such drinks can be transformed by distillation into brandy, liqueurs and spirits. These different liquids have given rise to countless variations-coctails, liqueurs, apertitifs, punches and grogs. Milk from animals is really a liquid food, but may also be used to prepare drinks such as milk shakes and kefir.

Drinking habits vary considerably depending on the customs of a country and the latitude. As a general rule, Orientals and Russians do not drink with their meals, but take tea at the end of a meal. Tea is the most widely consumed drink in the world after water.

In France, mineral water, beer and wine are the drinks that traditionally accompany meals. Family and social life also offer numerous other occasions to consume drinks for pleasure.

1 Drinking establishments. These considerably predate restaurants, they include pubs and taverns, bars, milk bars, and tea rooms. Such establishments may even vary from region to region in the same country; in France, for example, there are the bouchons of Lyon, the estaminets of the north and the guinguettes (pleasure gardens) and bistros of Paris.

The code of drinking establishments classifies drinks into five groups non-alcoholic drinks (water, fruit juice, lemonade), fermented non-distilled drinks, (wine, beer, cider), wine-based aperitifs and red fruit liqueurs, juices and spirits obtained by distillation, and all other alcoholic drinks.

In former times, most drinks were either produced in the home or by local makers-home-made beers and liqueurs, orgeat, mulled wine. Today, drinks are produced commercially and the market has grown considerably particularly for the sale of fruit juices. Drinks are sold in various packagings (bottles and cans) and in variety of forms (concentrated, powdered, frozen).

DRIPPING PAN. A metal pan to catch juices or melted fat from a roasting joint, poultry or any meat or when grilling broiling) food. The French word, lechefite, has been used since the end of the 12th century before this the pan was called a belle botte. In former times these receptacles were made of wrought iron and were fitted with a long handle, so that they would be slipped under meat being roasted in huge fire places. They were also made of silver.

DROIT DE BANWIN. The monopoly on the sale of new wine reserved the landlords of their own land during a set period (generally 60 days before the opening of the selling season.) In some areas feudal right, dating back to the time of Charlemagne, began at Easter and ended at Whitsun, seven weeks later.

DROUANT. A restaurant opened in Paris in 1880 by an Alsatian. Charles Drouant, on the corner of Place Gallon and Rue Saint-Augustin. Specializing in seafood, it attracted a clientele of writers and journalists, such as Jean Ajalbert, Leon Daudet, Octave Mirbeau and the Rosny brothers, Drouant expanded his business and his fame spread, thanks to his cellar (particularly white vintages). In October 1914 the restaurant really found a place in literary history, when the Academie Goncourt decided to hold its lunches, there. There are numerous gourmets among the Goncourt academicians, particularly Leon Daudet, who introduced the serving of blanc, de blancs. Edmond de Goncourts will stipulated that the meal must cost 20 francs per person, and the academicians still pay that modest sum. Here are a few menus for Goncourt lunches, which are traditionally served in the Louis XVI salon on the second floor, at a round table with a damask tablecloth.

2 1933 (prize winner: Andre Malraux for La Condition humaine); oysters, pike boulangere, roast turkey with thinly sliced roast potatoes cep mushrooms with thinly sliced roast potatoes, cep mushrooms is let bordelaise, cheeses praline ice and fruit.

3 1954 (prize winner: Simone de Beauvoir for les Mandarins) oysters, grilled tubot, bresse chicken with champagne, cheeses, liqueur soufflé and fruit.

4 1981 (prize winner: Lucien Bodard for Anne marie); beluga caviar, foie gras in port apie, lobster drouant, haunch of venison Saint-Hubert, chestnut cream, cheeses, iced hazelnut soubble with migmaradises (small biscuits or cakes).

DRUMSTICK. The lower leg of a fowl or game bird, consisting of the bone, meat and a thin layer of fat, giving it the shape of a pestle (hence the French name pilon, which means pestle). It is fleshier and juicier than the white meat, but inferior to the thigh.

DRYING. One of the oldest methods of preserving food. Drying slows down the proliferation and activity of the bacteria that cause spoilage and decay, but it considerably alters the appearance of food, due to the loss of meat in the same way to make pemmican. Pastram and various salted meats are dried quite heavily, and may subsequently be smoked. The process of drying in the open air and wind is applied to fish (generally salted fish) in Scandinavia, Senegal and India. The drying of fruits and vegetables has been widely practiced since time immemorial-in Greece (for grapes), in Turkey (for apricots), in Iran and Spain (for tomatoes), in Hungary (for peppers), and in most other countries for spears, sliced apples, plums, whole cherries and grapes. Vegetables are usually dried flat on trestles in the sun, the drying often being completed in the oven.

With the success of freezing and its characteristics for retaining the food value of ingredients, drying is no longer an essential means of preserving food for times when it may be out of season or expensive. However, it is an important method of preparing specific ingredients such as dried beans and pulses, and dried fruit, as well as a wide-variety of specialist food products, many of which were originally dried for local and domestic preservation. Sun dried tomatoes and peppers are good examples, available seasoned or reconstituted in a marinade. Drying is still the method used to preserve wild mushrooms.

Drying is often supplemented or preceded by smoking, salting, fumigation (dried vegetables) or spraying with sulphur dioxide (dried fruit).

1 Modern commercial drying. In industry, the selection of the drying process depends mainly on the texture and size of the foodstuff, but factors such as ease of transport and convenience in use must also be considered. For modern industrial methods of drying, which eliminate a very large proportion of water, the term dehydration is used. Dehydration is carried out in the food industry for several reasons, to preserve the product for a considerable period of time; to reduce the weight and usually the volume of the product, thus making it easier to transport and store; and to reduce the preparation time (as with instant coffee and dried soups).

The concentration of a product involves partial dehydration by evaporation, filtration or centrifugation. Certain products (such as milk, soups, meat extracts, vegetable concentrates and fruit juices) retain between a third and half of their natural water content and always remain in a liquid form.

Dessication or dehydration in the sense of the word, is achieved by different processes.

- 10 DRINKING ON TRAYS. Solid foods are cut into small pieces and constantly moved forward in an oven or tunnel through which a current of hot dry air is directed in the opposite direction. The moisture is gradually absorbed.
- 11 DRYING ON DRUMS. Soft foods (purees, baby foods, soups) are spread in a thin layer on the outside wall of a rotating drum that is heated from the inside. Special knives scrape off the dry film, which is subsequently reduced to a powder or to flakes.
- 12 ATOMIZATION. Liquids such as milk or coffee) are atomized to form a fine spray. The tiny particles in the vapour are dehydrated with a current of hot air and collected in powder form.

Products subject to discussion no more than on average. (0/0 of their original water content, and will keep for very long periods and hermetically sealed containers see also freeze drying

RECIPES

Drying apples and pears

Peel and core some cooking apples. Cut them into slices 1 cm (½ in) thick and put into water containing lemon juice or 2 teaspoons citric acid per 1 litre (1 ¼ pints. 4 ½ cups) water. Drain and place flat, without overlapping on a wooden trestle in the sun. leave the fruit (bringing it in at night) for 2-3 days, if necessary finish off the drying in the oven on its coolest setting. The apple rights should be flexible but must contain no more water.

Pears (sound ones only) may be dried whole and unpeeled in the sun. Finish off in the oven as for apples. When cooled, fruit may be flattened between boards.

In countries where the weather is not so clement, the fruit may be dried in the oven or suspended from the ceiling, threaded on string

Drying herbs

Gather the herbs just before they flower (avoid picking them after it has been raining). Wash, then shake off the water. Roll up small leaved herbs (thyme, rosemary and savory) in muslin (cheese cloth) loosely, without squashing them together, then hang them up in a warm place. Herbs with large leaves (bay, mint, sage, parsley and basil) can be dried in bunches, tied together by the stalks and hung upside down. Alternatively the leaves may be removed and wrapped in muslin. When the herbs are dried, leave them whole or crush them with a rolling pin. Keep them in sealed jars in a dark dry place. Drying in a microwave gives perfect results.

Drying vegetables

Using a needle, thread some young sound French (green) beans on to thick thread. Ensure that they are not too tightly packed together tying a knot occasionally to separate them. Dip in boiling salted water use 2 teaspoons salt per 1 litre (1 ¼ pints, 4 ½ cups) water – drain them, and hang them in a fairly shady for 3-4 days, bringing them inside at night (or suspend from the ceiling).

Mushrooms can be dried in the same way, once the earthy part of the stalk has been cut off. Small green chili peppers, which become dark red when dried, can be threaded through the stalk, as can baby onions, garlic bulbs and shallots. Store green beans, peppers and mushrooms out of the light in sealed jars. Dehydrate before use by soaking for 12 hours in tepid water.

DRYING OFF. Eliminating excess water from cooked food by heating it over a low heat. It is necessary to dry off potatoes before mashing with milk and butter. Tossing them rapidly in a saucepan before coating may evaporate the excess moisture absorbed by vegetables during cooking with butter.

In France, the term dessecher is used particularly for the initial cooking of choux paste. The mixture of water, butter and flour is worked vigorously over a high heat with a wooden spatula until the paste detaches itself from the walls of the pan and forms a ball. Thus, excess water evaporates before the eggs are added and the choux is baked.

Drying off is not synonymous with reducing, which refers only to the process of boiling down certain liquids so that they are reduced in volume.

DU BARRY. The name given several dishes that contain cauliflower. A Du Barry garnish for joints of meat consists of chateau potatoes and small florets of blanched cauliflower coated with moray sauce, sprinkled with grated cheese browned under the grill and arranged in a lot serviette. These dishes were dedicated to the Comtesse du Barry, the favourite of Louis XV.

Recipes

Croutes Du Barry

Prepare some individual croutes and top with cauliflower florets cooked gently in butter. Coat with Mornay sauce, sprinkle with grated cheese and brown in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F. gas 9).

Du Barry salad

Steam some very small white cauliflower florets for about 4 minutes in a pressure cooker or about 12 minutes in an ordinary saucepan. Drain and cool completely, and heap them in a salad bowl. Garnish with radishes and small sprigs of watercress. Pour some well-seasoned vinaigrette with added lemon over the salad and sprinkle with chopped herbs. Toss the salad just before serving.

Du Barry soup

Cook a cauliflower in salted water, then press it through a sieve (or puree in a blender). Mix with it a quarter of its weight of potato puree, then add enough consommé or milk to obtain a creamy consistency. Finally, add some single (light) cream—about 150 ml (¼ pint, ¾ cup) for 5 portions. Adjust the seasoning, and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Battuer may also be added.

DUBLEY. A garnish for large joints of meat, consisting of grilled (broiled) mushrooms and duchess potato crouslades surrounded by a border of mushroom puree.

DUBOIS, URBAIN FRANCOIS. French chef, born in Nice. Dubois began his career in Paris with Tortoni, then moved to the Rocher de Caneale, and later to the Café Anglais. Most of his life, however, was spent abroad in Russia as chef to Prince Odott, and in Germany he was joint chef of Walhelm I with Paule Bernard, who had been in the service of Napoleon III.

Dubois produced a large collection of written work but is remembered mainly for his Cuisine de la cuisine (written in collaboration with Emile Bernard). His other publications include La Cuisine de la cuisine (1870), Le Code de la cuisine (1876), La Nouvelle Cuisine bourgeoise pour la ville et pour la campagne (1878), Le Grand livre des pâtisseries et des confiseurs (the major work for pastrycooks and confectioners, 1883), La Cuisine d'aujourd'hui (1889) and Le Pâtisseries d'aujourd'hui (1894).

DUCHESS. A sweet or savoury preparation of choux pastry that may be served as an entire, a garnish or a dessert (like profiteroles). Savoury duchesses are filled with a mousseline or a salpicon. Duchesses for dessert are filled with vanilla-flavoured confectioner's custard (pastry cream) or whipped cream, dusted with icing (confectioner's) sugar, and scattered with chopped pistachio nuts, flaked almonds or dusted with cocoa.

Duchesses are also petits fours consisting of meringue shells or circles of langue-de-chat biscuit (cookie) mixture, stuck together in pairs with flavoured butter cream.

Duchesse is also the name of a variety of winter pear, and of certain desserts that include pears.

Recipe

Duchesse petits fours

Grease 3 baking sheets and dust with flour. Mix together 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) ground almonds, 100 g (4 oz ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar, and 40 g (1½ oz, 3 tablespoons) butter and add to the mixture. Put the mixture into a piping (pastry) bag and pipe small rounds on to the baking sheets. Cook in a preheated oven at 190°C (375°F, gas 5) for 7-8 minutes, remove from the oven and carefully lift off the rounds of meringue with a palette knife (spatula). Mix 200 g (7 oz. 1 cup) ground praline with 225 g (8 oz. 1 cup) crème au beurre (see creams) and use to sandwich the duchesses together. Store in a cool place.

DUCHESS, A LA The description a la duchesse is given in French cuisine to various dishes garnished, surrounded or served with duchess potatoes. In patisseries, the name applies to certain preparations containing almonds.

Recipes

Amandines a la duchesse

Make a dough with 150 g (5 oz. 1½ cup), plain (all purpose) flour, 75 g (3 oz, 6 tablespoons) softened butter, 3 tablespoons caster (superfine) sugar, a pinch of salt, 1 egg yolk and 4 teaspoons water. Roll it into a ball and place in the refrigerator. Beat 100 g (4 oz, ½ cup) butter until soft and mix into it 100 g (4 oz, ½ cup) caster sugar. Add 2 eggs, one at a time, and beat the mixture. Stir in 100 g (4 oz, 1 cup) ground almonds, then 50 g (2 oz, ½ cup) cornflour (cornstarch), and mix well. Add 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) kirsch.

Roll out the chilled dough to a thickness of about 3 mm (1/8 in) and cut out 8 rounds with a pastry (cookie) cutter. Use these to line 8 buttered tartlet moulds and prick the bottom of each one with a fork. Put a few cooked redcurrants into each of the tartlets and cover with the almond mixture. Bake in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 20 minutes. Allow the amandines to cool completely before turning them out of the moulds. Warm 100 g (4 oz, 1/3 cup) redcurrant jelly and use to glaze the amandines. Decorate the tops with redcurrants and keep in a cool place.

Peaches a la duchesse

Make a dough with 150 g (5 oz, 1½ cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, a pinch of salt, 3 tablespoons caster (superfine) sugar, 75 g (3 oz. 6 tablespoons) softened butter. 1 tablespoon water and 1 egg yolk. Roll into a ball and place in the refrigerator. Dice 8 slices canned pineapple and macerate them in kirsch. Put 50 g (2 oz, ½ cup), flaked almonds on to a baking sheet, moisten with water, dust with sugar and bake in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6), until golden brown, turning often.

Roll out the chilled dough to a thickness of about 3 mm (1/8 in) and cut out 8 circles with a pastry (cookie) cutter. Use to line 8 tartlet moulds prick the bottom of each one with a fork, place a piece of greaseproof (wax) paper in each and fill with baking beans. Cook for 5 minutes in the oven, remove the paper and baking beans, and cook for a further 7 minutes. Cool and then turn out of the moulds.

Prepare a zabaglione by whisking 100 g (4 oz, ½ cup) caster sugar and 3 egg yolks in a bain marie until the mixture is warm and frothy. Add 3 tablespoons of both kirsch and Marschino, whisking until the mixture has thickened. Soften 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) vanilla ice cream by crushing it with a wooden spatula. Add the diced pineapple. Place some of the ice-cream mixture in the bottom of each tartlet, put a canned peach half on each, and coat with the zabaglione. Sprinkle with flaked almonds and chill briefly.

The peaches may be replaced by pears.

Poached eggs a la duchesse

Spread some cold duchess potato mixture on a buttered dish and cut out circles about 7 cm (2 ¼ in) in diameter. Bake in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) until golden brown and arrange a poached egg on each. Coat with béchamel sauce. Mornay sauce, tomato sauce, cream sauce or any other suitable sauce.

DUCHESS POTATOES. Potatoes pureed with butter and egg yolk, piped into decorative shapes and baked duchess potatoes are served with roast meat or they may be used as a garnish. The mixture is also used to make croquettes. Berny potatoes (mixed with chopped truffles, coated with flaked almonds, shaped into rounds and fried) and Saint-Florentine potatoes (mixed with chopped ham, coated with fine uncooked vermicelli, shaped into small corks and fried).

Recipes

Duchess potato mixture

Cut 500 g (18 oz) peeled potatoes into thick slices or quarters. Boil them briskly in salted water. Drain, put in a warm oven for a few moments to evaporate excess moisture, and press through a sieve. Put the puree into a saucepan and dry off for a few moments on the hob (stovetop), turning with a wooden spoon. Add 50 g (2 oz, ¼ cup) butter and season with salt, pepper and a little grated nutmeg. Mix in 1 egg and 2 yolks.

This mixture is easier to pipe while hot; it may be piped for borders or into swirls on a greased baking sheet to be served as duchess potatoes proper. Brush the cooled swirls of potato with beaten egg and brown them in a hot oven.

Alternatively, spread the puree on a buttered baking sheet, leave until cold and shape as indicated in the recipe.

Fried duchess potatoes

Heat some oil for deep-frying to about 180°C (350°F). Put some cooled duchess potato mixture in a piping (pastry) bag with a plain nozzle about 2 cm (¾ in) in diameter and pipe the mixture into the hot oil, cutting it off into about 4 cm (1 ½ in) lengths. Cook until golden brown, drain on paper towels and serve very hot.

Instead of piping the mixture, it may be spread out on a buttered baking sheet, cooled and cut into even-sized rectangles. These can be rolled into cylinders and then deep-fried.

DUCK A web-footed bird that was domesticated in China over 2000 years ago. In France, the most common breeds are the Nantes duck and the Barbary duck. The mulard duck, produced by crossing these two breeds, is reared mainly in south-western France for the production of foie gras since the 1970s and is highly esteemed by gourmets. Whatever the breed, duck should be consumed within three days of killing.

- 1 Aylesbury British breed originally from the town of the same name, this is a white chick with light, tender flesh.
- 2 Barbary Duck French breed. Raised in the wild; firmer and leaner flesh with a slightly musky flavour.
- 3 Gressingham. A British wild-domestic crossbreed between the mallard and a domestic duck.
- 4 Long Island Descending from the Peking duck, this is the popular American duck.
- 5 Long Island Descending from the Peking duck, this is the popular American duck.
- 6 Nantes Duck (or Challans duck-after the name of the marshland where it is raised in a semi-wild state). Smaller but latter, with fine, delicately flavoured flesh.
- 7 Norfolk British duck from the country of the same name, a primary area for rearing poultry.
- 8 Peking Duck. A small white duck crossed with the Aylesbury in Britain and the bird from which the long Island duck has developed in America. Originally bred only in the Imperial palace in China before being taken to America. Very fine, with delicate flesh.
- 9 Rouen Duck. The excellent Rouen duck, in particular the Duclain (named after a village in Normandy), is mainly sold locally. Very fine flesh, tinged with red, with a special flavour due to the fact that the bird is smothered, not bled, so that the blood remains in the muscles.

Modern breeding methods have made duck leaner and more widely available in large supermarkets, as whole birds or in portions and prepared breast fillets. In French cookery, the term canard applies to birds two to four months old, Cameton (duckling) is used for younger birds and in grande cuisine. The female duck (cane) is smaller but plumper than the drake, it is preferred for roasts because its meat is leaner and tastier. A female duckling is called a canette.

Duck's eggs which have a greenish white shell and weigh 75-125 g (3-4/2 oz), are very popular in the far East. However, because they often carry salmonella bacteria, duck's eggs should only be eaten cooked.

Cooking methods. Very tender birds roast on a spit; tender birds; roast in the oven (for both these methods, the cooked meat should be pale pink); less tender birds braise or roast (stuffed), and garnish with onions, turnips, olives and acid fruits; very large birds; use for pates; balotines and cassoulets.

Choose for preference a fairly young bird with a flexible beak; the piston flesh as well as the skin should be supple and the breast plump. When a duckling is killed too young, the breastbone is still soft and the flesh is not developed sufficiently. The current tendency in restaurants is to use ducklings, although some preparations can only be successfully made with more mature birds. The cold dishes using duck are the same as those made with roasting chicken.

Pressed duck. Created at the beginning of the 19th century by a restaurateur from Rouen called Mechenet, the recipe for pressed duck owed much of its immediate success to the duke of Cahretres, who commended it highly in Paris. When the renowned cook Frederic took over the restaurant La Tour d'Argent, he began numbering all the pressed ducks that he served, intending to make the dish the speciality of his restaurant. By the end of 1996, a million had been served. No 328 was served to Edward VIII, then Prince of Wales, in 1890. No. 33.642 was provided for Theodore Roosevelt and No. 253.652 for Charlie Chaplain.

Leon Daudet, in Paris vecu, describes the cook at work. You ought to have seen Fredric with his monocle, his graying whiskers, his calm demeanour, carving his plump quack quack trussed and already flamed throwing it into the pan, preparing the sauce, salting and peppering like Claude Monet's paintings, with the seriousness of a judge and the precision of a mathematician, and opening up, with a sure hand, in advance, every perspective of taste.'

Pressed duck is prepared in front of the customer. Thin slices of breast (atiguillettes) are cut from the bird and placed in a dish of well-reduced red wine standing on a hotplate. The rest of the duck, except for the legs, which are served grilled (broiled), is pressed in a special screw press. The juice obtained is flavoured with Cognac, thickened with butter and poured over the arguillettes, which finish cooking in the sauce.

Wild duck. There are many breeds of wild duck. The most common species include the mallard (colvert) also the largest and with exquisite flesh. The male has green and grey plumage with a touch of brown and white. The female is brown. Practically sedentary from October to March, the mallard migrates south only in very cold weather. Teal (sarcelle) is another popular duck of which there are several types.

Other wild ducks that are well known in gastronomy include the shoveler duck (souchet), which has a spatulate beak, the gadwall (chapeau), which is grey and white with a brown border on the wings (in eastern France), the baldpate (stiffleur), which is a smaller, coastal species, and the pintail (pilet), which is less highly regarded. The sheldrake (tadorne) and the pintail (pilet), which is less highly regarded. The sheldrake (tadorner) and the merganser (barle) are now protected species.

Generally speaking, only the legs and fillets of wild ducks are eaten (this is why one bird is required for every two servings). These game birds are not hung, but used fresh: young tender birds are roasted on a spit or in the oven' older birds are prepared as a salmis or fricassée. Dishes made using domestic duck are also applicable to wild duck.

The shooting of wild duck is subject to regulation in the same way as other game. In Britain, mallard and teal are in season from September to January and best in November and December.

Recipes

Amiens duck pate

Preparing the pastry spread 500 g (1 lb. 2 oz, 4 1/2 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour out on a board or work surface, make a well in the center and put in 1 teaspoon table salt. Break an egg into the well and mix with the salt, then add 1 tablespoon olive oil. Soften 125 g (4 1/2 oz, 1/2 cup) lard (shortening) by kneading if necessary, then mix it with the liquid part in the center of the flour. Then blend the flour and lard, without moistening at all. When the pastry is well blended, spread it out and sprinkle with about 1 1/2 tablespoons cold water. Roll the pastry together into one lump and leave to rest in a cool place for at least 2 hours before use. (This pastry has the advantage of rising very little during cooking).

- 1 Preparing the duck. To make this pate, use only young ducklings, which can be cooked very quickly. Pluck, draw and singe the bird, carefully removing any innards that may remain. Cut off the wing tips just below the first joint from the shoulder. Cut off the feet at the joint. Season the inside and outside with spiced salt. Cut up a side of streaky (slab) bacon and fry over a low heat in a little cooking fat. Remove it and brown the duck in the fat over a low heat, turning it so that it browns all over. Drain the duck on a dish and leave to cool before making the pate.
- 2 Preparing the forcemeat. A gratin forcemeat is always used for this pate. The ingredients may vary, depending on what is available, and may include veal or poultry liver, in addition to the liver from the duck. Melt 150 g (5 oz, 2/3 cup) finely chopped fat over a low heat and use it to brown 500 g (1 lb 2 oz) veal or poultry liver, which has been suitably trimmed and coarsely diced. When the liver is well browned, add 1 chopped onion and 2 chopped shallots, and season with 1 tablespoon spiced salt, some chopped thyme and bay leaves. Cover and leave for a few minutes on a low heat. Remove and allow to cool, then pound the mixture in a mortar and pass through a fine sieve.
- 3 Making the pate Divide the pastry into two equal portions and roll one half into an oval about 1 cm (1/2 in.) thick so it is a little longer and wider than the duck. Place this pastry in the center of a metal baking sheet or ovenproof pie dish that has been lightly moistened with a little cold water. Next, spread a quarter of the forcemeat in the middle of the pastry and lay the duck, on its back, on top: season the duck with more spiced salt and a little cayenne pepper. Completely cover the duck with the remaining forcemeat. Roll out the remaining pastry in an oval shape and place over the duck, sealing it well at the edges. Crimp up the sides, garnish the top with some pieces of pastry cut into fancy shapes and make an opening in the center for the steam to escape. Finally, glaze the pastry with beaten egg. Bake the pate in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) for 1 1/4- 1 1/2 hours, depending on the size.

Braised duck

Singe and truss a duck weighing about 2 kg (4 1/2 lb.) Put it into an ovenproof braising pan lined with fresh bacon rind and containing a carrot and a medium-sized onion cut into rounds and tossed in butter. Add a bouquet garni, season and cook, covered, for 15 minutes, browning the duck on all sides. Moisture with 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) white wine, reduce and add 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 1/4 cups) chicken stock. Boil, then transfer to a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7), and cook, covered, for about 1 hour. Drain the duck, untruss it, arrange on a serving dish and surround with fresh garden peas. Sprinkle with a few spoonfuls of the braising juices, reduced and strained, and serve the remainder in a sauceboat (gravy boat.)

The same method is used for duck à l'alsacienne, which is surrounded with braised sauerkraut and a garnish of streaky (slab) bacon and Strasburg sausages; duck à la chipolata, which is garnished with braised chestnuts, small glazed onions, lean rashers (slices) of blanched bacon and chipolata sausages cooked in butter; and duck with olives, in which uses green olives, stoned (pitted) and blanched.

Braised Rouen duck

Rouen duck may be braised, although this is an unusual way of cooking it. It may be prepared a la bigarade (see Seville orange), with cherries – use a stoned (pitted) morello cherries and dilute the pan juices with Madeira: with champagne-dilute the pan juices with 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 1/4 cups) dry champagne and, if liked, a few tablespoons of thickened veal stock; or au chambertin-finish off the cooling with 25 g (4 1/2 oz) blanched and fried larding bacon and mushroom caps tossed in butter.

Cold duck pate

This is made using a boned duck, stuffed with d grotin forcemeat to which foie gras and truffles have been added, either en pantin (see pate pantin), like cold lark pate, or in a mould, like cold timbale of woodcock.

Duck a pagenaise

Singe a duck weighing about 2 kg (4 1/2 lb). Season the inside with salt and pepper, stuff with a dozen or so stoned (pitted) prunes soaked in Armagnac and sew up. Brown the duck in a pan containing 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter, sprinkle with a glass of Armagnac and set alight. Cover the pan and cook for about 40 minutes. Meanwhile, poach the grated zest of half an orange for 5 minutes in half a bottle of Bordeaux wine, together with 2 cloves, a little grated nutmeg, 5 or 6 crushed peppercorns, a sprig of thyme and a bay leaf. In a saucepan, brown 10 g (4 oz, 1/2 cup) very small lardoons of smoked bacon, 2 tablespoons diced carrot. L tablespoon diced celery and a large chopped onion, adding a knob of butter if required. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon flour, then add the orange-flavoured wine, having strained it. Season with salt and pepper, stir well and cook slowly for 20 minutes. Drain the duck and keep it hot. Pour the wine sauce into the juices from the duck and add a small glass of armagnac and about 20 stoned (pitted) prunes. Reheat the sauce. Garnish the duck with prunes and cover with the sauce.

Duck a l orange Lasserre

Prepare a Nantes duck weighing about 2 kg (4 1/2 lb.), brown it in butter, then cook gently for 45 minutes. Sprinkle with 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) Grand Marnier and leave to cook for a further 5 minutes. Remove the duck from the pan and keep hot. Strain the liquor and pour it into a saucepan, adding 1 tablespoon each vinegar and caster (superfine) sugar, the juice of 3 oranges and 100 ml (4 fl. Oz, 7 tablespoons) each of mandarin and apricot liqueur to make the sauce. Peel 6 oranges down to the flesh, cut them into slices, removing all fibres and seeds, and place them in a frying pan with a few spoonfuls of the sauce. Heat without boiling. Now carve the duck, arrange it on a hot dish and surround with slices of orange. Cover with some of the sauce and serve the remainder in a saceboat (gravy boat).

Duck supremes with truffles

This is made with the breast fillets (supremes) of a Rouen duck. Roast the duck in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for about 30 minutes, so it is still slightly pink. Cut the fillets into large slices and arrange them in a timbale mould together with thick slices of truffle which have been tossed in butter. Keep hot. Roughly chop the remaining carcass and trimmings moisten with Madeira, port of sherry, and reduce. Add a few tablespoons of reduced demi-glace and boil for a few seconds, then strain. Return to the boil, then add 1 tablespoon flamed brandy and 2 tablespoons butter. Pour the sauce over the fillets.

Duck with crystallized turnips and cider

Make a stock with the roast giblets from a 2 kg (4 1/2 lb) duck, 1 sliced onion and 1 sliced carrot. Add 1 litre (1 1/4 pints, 4 1/3 cups) cider, 1 apple and 2 large turnips, peeled and cut into pieces.

When the liquid has reduced to half its original volume, add 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/2 cups) clear stock and cook gently for 20 minutes. Pour the liquid through a strainer. Roast the duck in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6), lying on each leg for 10 minutes and on its back for 5 minutes. Remove from the oven and allow to rest. In a sauté pan, heat 50 g (2 oz. 1/4 cup) butter, add a pinch of sugar and 24 small turnips and fry until golden. Put the duck in a cast-iron casserole with the turnips and stock and simmer for 10 minutes. Thicken the sauce with 50 g (2 oz, 1/4 cup) butter and add 1 bunch of coriander (chopped), and a dash of cider.

Duck with peas

Cut 200 g (7 oz) larding bacon into large dice, and blanch. Brown these, together with 12 small onions, in butter in a casserole. Remove the onions and diced bacon from the pan and replace with a trussed Nantes duck. Brown the duck on all sides and then drain, retaining the juices. Dilute the pan juices with 100 ml (4 fl. Oz 7 tablespoons) dry white wine and 250 ml (8 fl oz, 1 cup) veal or chicken stock and put the duck into this liquor. Add 1 litre (1 1/4 pints, 4 1/2 cups) shelled fresh garden peas, the onions, the bacon and a bouquet garni. Season and add 2 tablespoons sugar. Simmer gently with the lid on for 35-40 minutes. Drain the duck and arrange on a serving dish, surrounding it with the peas. Reduce the pan juices, and pour over the duck. Arrange a lettuce, shredded into a chiffonnade or cut into quarters, on the peas. Alternatively, cook the duck in the same way but leave it slightly underdone. Add 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/2 cups) fresh garden peas cooked à la française and simmer gently for a few minutes.

Jelled fillets of Rooster duck à l'orange

Cook a 2 kg (4 1/2 lb) duck for about 35 minutes in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F gas 9) so that it remains slightly pink. Remove the legs and cut the breast fillets diagonally into slices, leaving them attached at the base. Coat the breast fillets with a brown chaud-froid sauce à l'orange. Glazed with an aspic and chill.

Prepare a mousse using the flesh off the legs, adding diced truffles. Fill tiny dome-shaped moulds (or a parfait mould) with the mousse and place in the refrigerator to set.

From a loaf, cut croutons to the size of the moulds and butter them, then toast or fry until crisp and golden. Cool. Turn the set mousses out on to the croutons. Arrange the fillets of duck on plates, taking care to keep the tops of the slices neatly closed together. Pour a few spoonfuls of half-set aspic on to the plates and arrange some orange segments as a garnish. Garnish the duck fillets with shreds of pared orange zest and add a mouse-topped crouton to each plate. Chill before serving.

Mallard with green peppercorns

Select a mallard duck weighing about 1.4 kg. (3 lb.) Season the inside and outside with salt and pepper and place in a roasting pan. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons oil and cook for 30 minutes in a preheated oven at 200°C (475°F, gas 9) so that it remains slightly pink. Remove the legs and cut the breast fillets diagonally into slices, leaving them attached at the base. Coat the breast fillets with a brown chaud-froid sauce à l'orange. Glaze with an aspic and chill.

Prepare a mousse using the flesh off the legs, adding diced truffles. Fill tiny dome-shaped moulds (or a parfait mould) with the mousse and place in the refrigerator to set.

From a loaf, cut croutons to the size of the moulds and butter them, then toast or fry until crisp and golden. Cool. Turn the set mousses out on to the croutons. Arrange the fillets of duck on plates, taking care to keep the tops of the slices neatly closed together. Pour a few spoonfuls of half-set aspic on to the plates and arrange some orange segments as a garnish. Garnish the duck fillets with shreds of pared orange zest and add a mousse-topped crouton to each plate. Chill before serving.

Mallard with green peppercorns

Select a mallard duck weighing about 1.4 kg. (3 lb). Season the inside and outside with salt and pepper and place in a roasting pan. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons oil and cook for 30 minutes in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6). Then cover the dish with foil to keep the duck hot. Peel 2 good-sized Granny Smith apples, cut them into halves, and remove the seeds and cores. Cook in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) for about 10 minutes. For the sauce, pour 5 tablespoons white wine and 1 tablespoon Armagnac into a saucepan, and reduce by about two-thirds. Add the juice from a can of green peppercorns and 4 tablespoons stock (duck or other poultry). Reduce again for 2-3 minutes. Add 200 ml (7 fl. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) single (light) cream, lightly season with salt and cook until the sauce achieves a uniform consistency. Check the seasoning and at the last moment add 4 teaspoons port and 1 1/2 tablespoons green peppercorns. Cut off the breast fillets of the duck and arrange on a serving dish. Cover with the sauce and garnish with the apple, cut into quarter.

Roast duck

Season the duck with salt and pepper both inside and out, truss and roast in the oven or on a spit. A duckling weighing about 1.25 kg (2 $\frac{3}{4}$ lb) should be cooked in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) for 35 minutes, or for 40-45 minutes on a spit.

Roast duck with peaches

Roast the duck. Meanwhile, peel some medium-sized peaches and poach them whole in a light syrup. When the duck is roasted, drain it and keep it hot. Dilute the pan juices with a little peach syrup and reduce to the consistency of a sauce. Add the peaches to the sauce to flavour them, heat them through and arrange them around the duck. Serve the sauce in a sauceboat (gravy boat).

Roast duck with maple syrup

Peel 2 Williams (Barlett) pears, cut in half lengthways and remove the cores. In a frying pan, combine 50 g (2 oz. $\frac{1}{4}$ cup) caster (superfine) sugar with 250 ml (8 fl. Oz. $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) dry white wine and the juice of 2 lemons and 2 oranges. Bring to the boil. Add the pears, 250 ml (8 fl. Oz., $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) pure maple syrup and a pinch of ground allspice. Simmer, until the pears have softened, then remove them from the liquor and put aside in a warm place. Reserve the maple syrup liquor.

Meanwhile, wash 2 ducks. Prick the skin of the breasts with a fork and season. Place in an ovenproof dish and roast in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 15 minutes. Peel and chop 2 carrots, 2 onions, 3 celery sticks, 1 salsify and 2 garlic cloves. Add to the ducks with 2 cloves, 2 bay leaves and 1 bunch of thyme, chopped. Reduce the oven temperature to 150°C (300°F, gas 2). Skim the excess fat from the dish and baste the ducks every 10 minutes with the reserved maple syrup mixture. As soon as the vegetables begin to turn slightly brown, pour in 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) chicken stock. Continue the cooking process (1 1/2 hours in all), basting regularly with the juices in the hours in all, basting regularly with the juices in the dish. When the ducks are cooked, remove them from the dish and put aside in a warm place. Remove as much fat as possible from the liquid in the dish, leaving the duck juices. Put the vegetables and juice in a smaller saucepan and heat. Add 1 tablespoon tomato puree (paste) and cook for 2-3 minutes. Add a further 500 ml (17 fl. Oz. 2 cups) chicken stock and any remaining maple syrup mixture. Simmer for 15 minutes and strain. Bone the ducks. Place the pieces of duck on a serving dish and garnish with slices of pears, arranged in a fanshape. Pour the cooking juices over the pieces of duck.

Rouen duck en chemise

Remove the breastbone from a Rouen duck. Prepare a stuffing by frying 1 heaped tablespoon chopped onion with 125 g (4 1/2 oz, $\frac{2}{3}$ cup) diced bacon, without browning the onion. Add an entire duck's liver and 2 or 3 additional duck or chicken livers cut into thin fillets, salt and pepper, a pinch of allspice and some chopped parsley. Cook all the ingredients in butter, cool, and blend in a food processor. Stuff the duck with this mixture, truss and roast in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) for 8-12 minutes. Leave to cool.

To follow the traditional method, place the duck, head downwards, in a large pork bladder that has been soaked in cold water. Tie the opening with string and poach in clear braising liquid, on a serving dish.

Alternatively the duck can be cooked wrapped in a piece of muslin (cheesecloth) or a white table napkin with both ends tied, like a galantine. It is then served unwrapped, surrounded with orange quarters. Serve rouennaise sauce separately.

Rouen duck in port

Cook a trussed Rouen duck in butter for 30-40 minutes, so that the flesh remaining slightly pink. Drain the duck and arrange it on a long dish. Prepare the sauce as follows: dilute the pan juices with 250 ml (8 fl. Oz. 1 cup) port, add 250 ml (8 fl oz, 1 cup) thickened brown veal stock, boil for a few moments, add some butter and strain. Pour a few spoonfuls of the sauce over the duck and serve the rest separately in a sauceboat (gravy boat). The boat can be replaced by Basting regularly with the juices in the dish. When the ducks are cooked, remove them from the dish and put aside in a warm place. Remove as much fat as possible from the liquid in the dish leaving the duck juices. Put the vegetables and juice in a smaller saucepan and heat. Add 1 tablespoon tomato puree (paste) and cook for 2-3 minutes. Add a further 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) chicken stock and any remaining maple syrup mixture. Simmer for 15 minutes and strain. Bone the ducks. Place the pieces of duck on a serving dish and garnish with slices of pears, arranged in a fan shape. Pour the cooking juices over the pieces of duck.

Rouen duck en chemise

Remove the breastbone from a Rouen duck. Prepare a stuffing by frying 1 heaped tablespoon chopped onion with 125 g (4 1/2 oz, 2/3 cup) diced bacon, without browning the onion. Add an entire duck's liver and 2 or 3 additional duck or chicken livers cut into thin fillets, salt and pepper, a pinch of allspice and some chopped parsley. Cook all the ingredients in butter, cool, and blend in a food processor. Stuff the duck with this mixture, truss and roast in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) for 8-12 minutes. Leave to cool.

To follow the traditional method, place the duck, head downwards, in a large pork bladder that has been soaked in cold water. Tie the opening with string and poach in clear braising stock for 45 minutes. Arrange the duck, still in the bladder, on a serving dish.

Alternatively the duck can be cooked wrapped in a piece of muslin (cheesecloth) or a white table napkin with both ends tied, like a galantine. It is then served unwrapped, surrounded with orange quarters. Serve rouennaise sauce separately.

Rouen duck in port

Cook a trussed Rouen duck in butter for 30-40 minutes so that the flesh remains slightly pink. Drain the duck and arrange it on a long dish. Prepare the sauce as follows: dilute the pan juices with 250 ml (8 fl. Oz. 1 cup) port, add 250 ml (8 fl. Oz, 1 cup) thickened brown veal stock, boil for a few moments, add some butter and strain. Pour a few spoonfuls of the sauce over the duck and serve the rest separately in a sauceboat (gravy boat). The port can be replaced by Banyuls, Frotignan, Madeira, sweet sherry or any other dessert wine.

Rouen duck (or duckling) soufflé

This very stylish dish is made with 2 birds, the larger to be served and the smaller to make the forcemeat. Roast a trussed Rouen duck in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 10-15 minutes; the meat should still be very rare. Remove the breast fillets, which should be kept for the final garnish, and remove the breastbone, so that the carcass forms a hollow case. Season the inside with salt, pepper and spices, and sprinkle with a spoonful of brandy. Fill the carcass with a forcemeat made from the raw meat of the smaller duck, boned and prepared as for mousseline forcemeat, 150 g (5 oz.) raw foie gras and the livers of the 2 ducks used. Stuff the carcass so it is re-formed into its original shape. Cover the duck with buttered greaseproof (wax) paper and tie it so that it will hold the forcemeat during cooking. Place the stuffed duck on a baking sheet, coat with melted butter and roast in a preheated oven at 150°C (400°F, gas 6) for 10-15 minutes; the meat should still be very rare. Remove the breast fillets, which should be kept for the final garnish, and remove the breastbone, so that the carcass forms a hollow case. Season the inside with salt, pepper and spices, and sprinkle with a spoonful of brandy. Fill the carcass with a forcemeat, 150 g (5 oz) raw foie gras and the livers of the 2 ducks used. Stuff the carcass so it is re-formed into its original shape. Cover the duck with buttered greaseproof (wax) paper and tie it so that it will hold the forcemeat during cooking. Place the stuffed duck on a baking sheet, coat with melted butter and roast in a preheated oven at 150°C (300°F, gas 2) for 30-35 minutes. Remove the greaseproof paper and arrange the duck on a serving dish.

Make some tartlet cases from short pastry (basic pie dough), bake blind, heap with a salpicon of truffles and mushrooms bound with concentrated Madeira sauce, and cover each with a slice of duck breast filets and a thick slice of truffle heated in butter. Arrange the tartlets around the duck. Serve with rouennaise sauce or Perigueux sauce.

Instead of being used to fill the tartlets, the duck fillets can be cut into thin slices and embedded in the mousselines. The former are made in large charlotte moulds and the latter in small individual moulds. They are poached in a bain marie in the oven. The forcemeat can also be used for duck soufflé en timbale; put it in buttered soufflé timbale moulds and bake as for other soufflés.

Wild duck a la tyrolenne

Stew some cooking apples, adding a little cinnamon and mace to form a hot apple puree. Stuff a wild duck with this puree, tie securely and place the duck on spit for roasting. Boil 2 tablespoons red wine vinegar together with a small knob of butter (about the size of a walnut), 1/2 teaspoon caster (superfine) sugar and a few grains of coarsely ground pepper. Baste the duck constantly with this preparation while it is cooking on the spit, placing a small pan beneath to catch the juices. Cooking should take about 30-35 minutes. When finished, take the duck off the spit, untruss and arrange on a dish. Strain the collected juices into a saucepan and heat, adding 1/2 teaspoons redcurrant jelly. Finally, pour this sauce over the duck.

Wild duck a la Walter Scott

Draw, singe and truss a wild duck. Cook in a pre-heated oven at 200°C (425°F, gas 7). Meanwhile, fry the duck's liver in butter, mash and mix it with 20 g (3/4 oz) foie gras. Fry 2 croutons in clarified butter and spread them with the liver paste. Core 2 apples, stud each with 4 cloves and cook as for apples bonne femme. Dilute some Dundee marmalade with 2 tablespoons whisky and heat gently. When the duck is cooked, arrange it on a serving dish. Remove the cloves from the apples and place the latter on the croutons, then pour the marmalade into the holes in the apples. Arrange the croutons around the duck. Serve the juice in a saucboat (gravy boat), without skimming off the fat.

Wild duck a la Chambertin

Roast the duck for 18-20 minutes in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) or fry over a brisk heat, so that the flesh stays slightly pink. Arrange on a serving dish and cover with Chambertin sauce to which the pan juices have been added. Garnish with mushrooms and, if liked, with strips of truffle.

Duglere, Adolphe. French chef born Bordeaux, 1805; died Paris, 1880). A pupil of Carême, he became head of the kitchens of the Rothschild family and later managed the restaurant Les Prères Provençaux. In 1866 he became head chef at the Café Anglais, with which his name is always associated. He is described as a taciturn artist who revelled in contemplative isolation; and his culinary creations made the Café Anglais one of the most famous restaurants in Paris during the Second Empire. His creations included potage Germiny, Anna potatoes, sole and sea bream à la Duglere and soufflé à l'Anglaise. It was Duglere who drew up the menu for the historic dinner of the "Three Emperors". Among the illustrious guests who attended were Alexander, the Russian emperor, his son the future Alexander III, Wilhelm I of Prussia (the German Emperor) and Bismarck. The dinner, it is said, cost 100 francs a head.

Recipes

Bass à la Duglere

Butter a shallow flameproof dish. Peel and chop 1 large onion, 1-2 shallots, a small bunch of parsley, a garlic clove and, if liked (it is not traditional), 150 g (5 oz. L 2/3 cups) button mushrooms. Skin, seed and chop 4 tomatoes. Spread all these ingredients on the bottom of the dish, then add a sprig of thyme and half a bay leaf. Scale a 1 kg (2 1/4 lb) bass and cut into sections. Arrange these sections in the dish, dot with knobs of butter, moisten with 200 ml (7 fl. Oz, 3/4 cup) dry white wine and cover with foil. Bring to the boil, then transfer to a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) and cook for 12-15 minutes. Drain the pieces of bass and arrange on a serving dish in the original shape of the fish.

Remove the thyme and bay leaf from the oven dish and add 2 tablespoons velouté made with fish stock. Reduce by one-third, then add 50 g (2 oz. L/4 cup) butter. (The velouté and butter may be replaced by 1 tablespoon beurre manié.) Pour the sauce over the fish and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Sea bream and brill may be prepared and served in the same way.

Sole à la Duglere

Skin and clean a sole weighing about 500 g (18 oz) and prepare the ingredients as for bass à la Duglere, but halving the quantities. Cook in the same way but reduce the cooking time in the oven to 7 minutes. Drain the sole and keep it hot reduce the cooking liquid and thicken it with butter and velouté sauce made with fish stock.

DUMAINE, ALEXANDRE. French chef (born Digoin, 1895; died Digoin, 1974) At the age of 12 he became an apprentice at a hotel in Paray-le-Monial, and gradually worked his way up in the profession, eventually becoming grande toque (head chef) in such famous establishments as the Carton (in Vichy, then in Cannes), the Café de Paris and the Hotel Louvois in Paris, and the Oasis Hotel at Biskra. In 1932 he opened a restaurant at Saulieu, which, with the help of his wife, Jeanne, became a gastronomic shrine. The Hotel de la Côte-d'Or was with Point à Vienne and Pic à Valence, one of the three outstanding centers of provincial cuisine in France from 1930 to 1950. After retiring in 1964, Dumaine collaborated with Henry Cloy Jouve in producing Ma cuisine, a book of recipes and various reminiscences, from which the following recipes for braised beef and a coffee and chocolate gâteau are taken.

RECIPES

Braised beef

Brown a joint of beef in a large pan. Remove the joint and brown a large mirepoix of carrots and onions in the fat from the meat. Brown some small pieces of bone from a joint of veal and some chicken ones in butter. Put into a braising pan with the skimmed mirepoix, the point of beef, a blanched pig's foot and some crushed tomatoes. Season with salt and pepper, add 250 ml (8 fl. Oz. L cup) white wine and boil gently until all the liquid has evaporated. Then add a bouquet garni and sufficient red wine and stock (1 part wine to 2 parts stock) to cover three-quarters of the beef. Cover and cook gently for 3 hours, turning the meat occasionally.

Gateau le prelat

Prepare 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/2 cups) strong, lightly sweetened coffee, flavoured with white rum. Allow to cool. Beat together 2 whole eggs and 6 egg yolks, add 300 g (11 oz. L 1/2 cups) sugar boiled to the thread stage and whisk until cold. Blend in 300 g (11 oz, 2 cups) melted butter (semisweet) chocolate pieces, some grated orange zest and 750 ml (1 1/4 pints, 3 1/4 cups) lightly whipped double (heavy) cream. Mix well.

Cover the bottom of a buttered rectangular mould with sponge fingers (ladyfingers) soaked in a little of the cold coffee. Cover with some of the chocolate mixture. Top with another layer of soaked sponge fingers and continue layering until the mould is full, finishing with a layer of sponge fingers. Place in the refrigerator with a layer of sponge fingers. Place it for 24 hours before turning out of the mould. Melt 450 g (1 lb) dark chocolate and mix with 150 g (5 oz, 2/3 cup) butter and 2 tablespoons light oil. Coat the gateau with this mixture.

DUMAS, ALEXANDRE

FRENCH AUTHOR (BORN Villers-Cotterest, 1802) died Dieppe, 1870. In 1869 Dumas, best known as the author of The Three Musketeers and other historical romances, accepted an assignment from a young publisher, Alphonse Lemerre, to write a Grand Dictionnaire de Cuisine. To find the peace and quiet necessary to compile such a monumental work (1152 pages). Dumas retired to Roscoff (Finisterre) with his cook Marie. The work was completed in March 1870, a few weeks before his death, and was published in 1872. It is not considered to be a very reliable work from a strictly culinary point of view, in spite of the friendly collaboration of Joseph Vuillemot, a pupil of Carême, who published a revised and abridged version in 1882. But in spite of its errors, its gaps and its trenchant opinions, the work is written in an alert and amusing style and full of anecdotes.

Dumas was a great habitué of Parisian restaurants, he had his own private room at the Maison Doree, and attended the "Brixio dinners" at Brevant-Vachette, the Rocher de Cancale, the Jockey club where his protégé Jules Gouffe presided, and the Restaurant de France in the Place de la Madeleine. Here his friend Vuillemot gave a famous dinner in his honour which included lobster à la Porthos, 'fillet of beef Monte Cristo,' salad, à la Dumas' and gorenflot (rumsoaked sponge cake).

Dumas made it a point of honour to dress the salad himself. "I place in a salad bowl one hard broiled egg yolk for every two persons. I pound it in oil to make a paste, I then add chervil, crushed thyme, crushed anchovies, chopped gherkins, the chopped whites of the hard-boiled eggs, salt and pepper. I mix it all with a good vinegar, then I put the salad into the salad bowl. Then I call a servant and ask him to toss the salad. When he has finished, I scatter a pinch of paprika over it. It remains only to be served. Another famous Dumas salad was made with truffles 'peeled with a silver knife' and seasoned, according to the mood of the host, with champagne, a liqueur or almond milk.

DUMPLING

A ball of dough, originally saoury and served as an accompaniment to meat or as a dessert. Sweet versions are also prepared.

A simple satisfying food, dumplings were boiled and served to extend small amounts of meat. Originally made by shaping small portions from a hunch of bread dough before specific mixtures were developed using flour, cereals, pulses, stale bread, potatoes or cheese, sometimes with raising agent added or enriched with fat in the form of suet, were developed. Local ingredients and methods are used across Europe to make a variety of large or small dumplings.

plain or flavoured with herbs, vegetables, spices or other ingredients.

Germany (particularly Bavaria) and Austria in particular are known for excellent examples, along with Czechoslovakia, Poland and Hungary. Fresh or dry bread; mashed or grated raw potatoes, soft cheese; or semolina are just as likely to be used as flour and the dumplings may be bite-sized or large enough for slicing into portions. The tradition in Czechoslovakian kitchens was to shape the bread-based dumpling mixture into a long, thick sausage on clean napkins and suspend it over simmering water or broth. Instead of a knife, the dumpling was traditionally sliced with string, rather like cutting through a cheese with a wire. Spinach, herbs, caraway or bacon may be added for flavour and the dough enriched with butter or eggs. Finely chopped liver flavours leberknodel served Austrian-style in light broth or as a main dish in Germany.

Dumplings are closely related to pasta. Italian gnocchi are good examples of small dumplings usually grouped with pasta and the spätzle of Germany and Austria, made from batter simmered until set in finger noodles, also hover between the two descriptions. Polish plain or filled dumplings are also very similar to gnocchi or filled pasta.

In Britain dumplings were originally made with either a bread or suet dough and served with boiled beef and carrots and pease pudding. Suet dough became more widely used, with regional variations on the basic dough developing. Some doughs were unleavened, others used local cereals such as oats. As well as being served with boiled meat, dumplings are traditional with soups and stews. Sweet versions are also prepared, no longer as simple accompaniments but as dishes in their own right. An apple dumpling (an apple encased in pastry) is made with suet crust and boiled or with shortcrust pastry and baked. Large fruit dumplings are not the only sweet option—they may be yeasted and cooked in milk; filled with small whole fruit (plums or cherries) or jam and simmered in water).

In the United States, dumplings can accompany roast and boiled meat dishes. Made with flour, baking powder, egg and milk, they are shaped into walnut-sized balls and simmered very gently in vegetable soups, stews and beef and poultry consommés. They may also contain cornmeal, potatoe puree, grated cheese or breadcrumbs. Sweet-pastry dumplings sometimes made with a yeast dough are poached in fruit juice and served with compotes, fruit purees, melted butter or cream. They are sometimes stuffed with fruit.

The name dumpling is also used for Oriental specialties, such as the small filled dumplings of Chinese cookery, related more closely to pasta than to European style dumplings. Dunand.

The surname of two Swiss cooks, father and son, also spelt Dunan and Dunant. The father was in charge of the kitchens of the Prince of Conde. His son inherited the post and, in 1793, followed the prince into exile. He returned to France 12 years later and entered the service of Napoleon I. Chicken Marengo is attributed to him even though the French victory over the Austrians took place in 1800, and Dunand remained in the service of the Prince of Conde until 1805. On the other hand, it is known that Napoleon greatly enjoyed his crepinettes.

On the fall of the Empire, Dunand went into the service of the Duc of Berry, but resumed his post with the emperor during the Hundred days.

DUNDEE CAKE.

A Scottish fruit cake. This is a light cake, not as dark as the classic British Christmas or wedding cake, but rich with butter and still containing sufficient dried fruit to keep well for 2-3 months. Flavoured with ground almonds and candied peel, the cake's defining feature is a slightly domed top studded with neat concentric circles of whole blanched almonds. The almonds are arranged on the uncooked cake to become a rich golden brown when baked. Dundee cake is thought to have originated in the 19th century, in the city of the same name, where it was made by Keller, the company known for orange marmalade. The leftover orange peel from the marmalade was used up in the cakes, the manufacture of which provided work when seasonal Seville oranges were not available and marmalade was out of production. The commercial cakes were glazed with an orange syrup while still warm. Later versions of the cake were sold in decorative tins and were popular alternatives to Christmas cake.

Dundee cake

Cream 225 g (8 oz. L cup) butter with 225 g (8 oz 1 1/4 cup) caster (superfine) sugar and the grated zest of 1 orange until pale and soft. Sift 225 g (8 oz, 2 cups) self-raising flour with 100 g (4 oz, 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour. Beat 4 eggs with 1-2 drops oil of bitter almonds. Stir the eggs into thebutter mixture, adding the occasional spoonful of the sifted flours to prevent the mixture from curding. Mix 225 g (8 oz 1 1/2 cups) each of raisins and sultanas (white raisins) with 100 g (4 oz., 3/4 cup) chopped mixed candied orange, lemon and citrus peel. Add 100 g (4 oz. Lcup)chopped blanched almonds, 100 g (4 oz, 1 cup) ground almonds and a spoonful of themeasured flours, then mix well. Fold the remaining flour into the cake mixture, then stir in the fruit and almond mixture.

Line and grease a 20 cm (8 in) round deep cake tin (pan) and turn the mixture into it. Spread the mixture out evenly. Cover the top with whole blanched almonds, starting with a circle around the edge and working in towards the middle. Press the nuts lightly into the mixture placing them close together as they separate slightly when the cake rises during baking. Bake in a preheated oven at 160°C (325°F, gas 3) for about 4 hours. Cover the top of the cake loosely with foil, if necessary to prevent the nuts from becoming too dark. Insert a clean metal skewer into the middle of the cake to check if it is cooked; if it has sticky mixture on it, the cake is not ready, continue baking for 15 minutes before testing again.

Leave the cake to cool in the tin (pan) for 30 minutes, then turn it out on to a wire rack and leave to cool completely. Wrap the cake in grease-proof (wax) paper and place in an airtight container, then leave to mature for 2-4 weeks before serving.

DUNDEE MARMALADE

British preserve made from butter Seville oranges by Keller a company in Dundee, Scotland, Mrs. Keller first created the sharp-sweet preserve and ice cream. Her son set up the company and sold the preserve in its characteristic white pots. By the mid to late 19th century, the company was making 1.5 million jars of marmalade annually.

DURAD

A Parisian restaurant that was situated in the place de la Madeleine. In the 1800s according to a legend, it was considered to be the third wonder in the art of good living rather the café riche and the cake handy. It was frequented by writers and politicians, notably Baudelaire, Anatole France and Emile Zola who wrote Le Faccus there. The chef Vortion created monroy sauce in this restaurant.

DURAND CHARLES

FRENCH CHEF BORN ALES, L700 DIED NIMS, L850. called the Caramelle of Provincial cooking, he was chef to the bishops of Alexanes and Montpellier before opening restaurants on Alexanes and Nimes, C180. Above all, he was responsible for popularizing French regional cuisine at a time when it was practically unknown elsewhere. Le Cuisinier (1803) is a collection of authentic provincial recipes that enabled brandade dish of salt cod and other specialties of the south to be enjoyed in Paris.

DURIAN

A tree that is widely cultivated in Southeast Asia, especially in Northern and the Philippines for its fruit. Durian fruits are round or oval up to 20 cm (8 in) with a hard greenish rind covered with large thorns. The flesh is whitish or coffee coloured with a creamy texture and a strong, unpleasant and distinctive smell that becomes nauseating when the fruit is overripe. The flesh contains large seeds that are edible when cooked baked or roasted, when they may be eaten with rice.

The fruit is ready to eat when the skin begins to crack and is usually eaten raw either as an hors d'oeuvre or as a dessert. Its flavour is complex and contradictory to those unfamiliar with a mixture of sweet. Fruity characteristics with it a mixture of sweet, with savoury tones almost cheese like but sometimes compared to garlic or cooked onion because of the alternaste. It may also be eaten as a compote with sugar and fresh cream, and in Java, it is made into a fruit jelly with coconut milk. Durian is also used to flavour confectionery, such as little boiled sweets candies in which its flavour is evident, but less intense. The large shiny seeds may be prepared in the same way as chestnuts.

DUROC

A dish dedicated to General Dutoc, a soldier at the time of the Empire. It consists of small joints of meat or sautéed poultry garnished with new potatoes browned in butter, covered with crushed tomatoes and coated with chasseur sauce.

DURUM WHEAT

A type of hard wheat with a high gluten content valued particularly for making semolina and pasta.

DUSE.

A garnish named in honour of the great Italian actress, Eleonora Duse. It consists of fresh green beans cooked in butter, with seeded steamed tomatoes and parmentier potatoes. It accompanies large joints of meat. The name is also given to poached stuffed fillets of sole arranged in a ring with rice coated with Mornay sauce and glazed. The center is filled with a salpicon of shrimps bound with a white wine sauce and sprinkled with chopped truffles.

DUTCH CHEESES.

The best known Dutch cheeses are Edam and Gouda. Cheeses made in the Netherlands always carry a government control stamp which gives the name of the cheese, the fat content in the dry matter, the country of origin expressed as Holland the number indicating where, on what date, and from which curd batch the cheese was made, and the code of the relevant government control station. They are made only from pasteurized milk.

DUTCH OVEN.

A large, heavy cooking pot with a close fitting lid, authentically made of cast iron and hung over an open fire. Thought to be of 16th century Pennsylvania Dutch origin, the pot was used for stewing and braising, however, other types of dishes, such as breads, were also cooked in it. The term has also been applied to a variety of other utensils used for cooking over an open fire, including a type of plate or rack fitted to the front of a fire grate and on which to stand cooking pans or dishes. In modern terms, it is sometimes used for glazed pots for cooking in the oven or on top of the stove.

DUVAL, PIERRE-LOUIS.

French butcher (born Montlbery, 1811, died Paris, 1870). He supplied the Tuileries kitchens and opened several retail butcher's shops in Paris. In 1860 he had the idea of creating a number of small restaurants serving a single dish-boiled beef and consommé – at a fixed price. The first bouillon, in the Rue de Montesquieu, was soon followed by a dozen others.

His son Alexandre successfully developed the chain of restaurants and made an immense fortune. A well-known figure of Parisian life, nicknamed Godefroi de Bouillon, by humorists of the time, he composed a Marche de petites honnes in honour of his waitresses who all wore a colf of white tulle and, for the frist time, replaced the traditional gargons in restaurants.

DUXELLES.

A basic preparation of chopped mushrooms, onions and shallots sautéed in butter. Duxelloes is used as a stuffing or garnish, as a complementary ingredient of a sauce, and in the preparation of various dishes called a la duxelles. The derivation of the word is disputed some claim that duxelles was created at Uzel, a small town in the Gotesco-Nord, while others attribute it to la Varenne, chef of the Marquis d'uxelles.

Recipe

Preparation

Clean and trim 250 g (9 oz, 3 cups) button mushrooms and chop them finely, together with 1 onion and 1 large shallot. Melt a large knob of butter in a frying pan and add the chopped vegetables, salt and pepper and a little grated nutmeg (unless the duxelles is to accompany fish). Cook over a brisk heat until the vegetables are brown and the water from the mushrooms has evaporated, if the duxelles is for use as a garnish, add 1 tablespoon cream.

Duxelles sauce

Prepare 4 tablespoons mushroom duxelles. Add 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) white wine and reduce until almost completely dry. Add 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) demi-glaced sauce and 100 ml (4 fl. Oz. 7 tablespoons) sieved tomatosauce. Boil (4 fl. Oz. 7 tablespoons) sieved tomato sauce. Boil for 2-3 minutes, pour into a sauceboat (gravy boat), and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Alternatively, the duxelles may be moistened with 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) consommé and 100 ml (4 fl. Oz 7 tablespoons) sieved tomato sauced and thickened with 1 tablespoon beurre manie.

Eggs en cocttee a la duxelles

Prepare 4 tablespoons mushroom duxelles. Butter 6 ramekin dishes and divide the duxelles between them. Break an egg into each ramekin, then add to each a spoonful of single (light) cream, salt and pepper. Cover with foil and cook the eggs in a bain marie on the hob (stovestop) for about 4 minutes. Timing from when the water in the bain marie begins to boil

Omelette a la duxelles

Prepare 4 tablespoons mushroom duxelles with cream added. Make an omelette with 8 eggs and fill it with the duxelles. Stud the omeltte with small fried crutons and serve with duxelles sauce.

Sautéed veal chosp a la duxelles

Prepare 4 tablespoons mushroom duxelles. Saute 4 veal chops in butter. When the chops are almost cooked, add the duxelles to the pan and complete the cooking over a low heat. Drain the chops and arrange on a serving dish; keep hot. Add 100 ml (4 fl. Oz. 7 tablespoons) double (heavy) cream and half a glass of white wine or 2 tablespoons Madeira to the duxelles in the pan and reduce until the mixture thickens. Coat the chops with this sauce and serve very hot.

E

EAR A piece of offal, usually from pigs or calves, used in cooking or in the preparation of brawn (head cheese) and various other forms of charcuterie. It can be boiled, fried, sautéed, braised, stuffed, made into a gratin, or grilled (broiled), and is an ingredient of great number of tasty recipes.

RECIPES

Calves Ears

Calves ears braised a la mirepoix

Clean the insides of 4 calves ears thoroughly and blanch them for 8 minutes, refresh them, then drain, scrape and dry them. Put into a casserole and cover with 200 ml (7 fl oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) vegetable mirepoix, add a bouquet garni, salt, pepper and 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) white wine. Reduce the liquid completely, then pour in 300 ml ($\frac{1}{2}$ pint, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ cups) brown veal stock, cover the dish, and cook in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350 °F, gas 4) for 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ hours. Drain the ears. Remove the skin which covers the inside and the outside of the thin part of the ears, pull this part down and trim it. Arrange the ears, pull this part down and trim it. Arrange the ears in a round serving dish, possibly on slices of bread fried in butter. Skim the fat from the braising liquid and sprinkle over the ears.

Stuffed calves ears du Bugey

Blanch, refresh, then carefully clean 1 calf's ear per guest. Rub the ears with lemon and sew each one into the shape of a cornet. Put them into a pan with 1.5 litres (2 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) well-flavoured beef stock, 1 litre (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) dry white wine, a bouquet garni, 1 sliced onion, 2 sliced celery sticks and 3 sliced carrots. Add plenty of salt and pepper and cook gently for about 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ hours. Drain the ears and put them aside, covered with a damp cloth.

Dice 1 calf's sweetbread that has been braised in white wine, 1 chicken wing and 1 fresh truffle. Fry 100 g (4 oz. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) coarsely chopped wild mushrooms in butter, add salt and pepper. When they are half-cooked, add the truffle, the sweetbread and the chicken meat, continue to cook over a low heat. Add 200 ml (7 fl oz $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) slightly soured cream, then take the pan off the heat and add 2 egg yolks. Blend everything well and leave to cool.

Spoon the cold mixture into the ear "cornets". Dip the ears in flour, then beaten egg, then breadcrumbs, and fry in butter, without allowing them to brown. Drain, arrange on a serving dish and sprinkle with fried curly parsley.

Pigs' Ears

Boiled pigs' ears

Single 4 pigs' ears and clean the insides thoroughly; cook them in boiling salted water using 1 teaspoon salt per 1 litre (1- $\frac{3}{4}$ pints, 4- $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) water with 2 carrots, 1 onion studded with 2 cloves, and a bouquet garni. Simmer for about 50 minutes, then drain.

Boiled pigs' ears can be used in several ways. They can be chopped, dipped in fresh breadcrumbs and grilled (broiled), to be served with mustard or horseradish sauce and mashed potatoes or puree or celeriac (celery root). Pigs' ears a la lyonnaise are cut into large strips and sautéed in butter with sliced onion. They can also be served cold with vinaigrette, or browned in the oven with a white sauce.

Braised pigs' ears

Single 4 pigs' ears and clean the insides thoroughly. Blanch them for 5 minutes in boiling water, drain them and cut them in half lengthways. Grease a flameproof casserole, cover the bottom with pieces of pork rind, add 1 sliced onion and 1 sliced carrot, and arrange the pieces of ear on top in a flat layer; put a bouquet Garni in the middle

Cover the casserole and cook over a medium heat for 10 minutes, then add 20 ml (7 fl. Oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) white wine and reduce until syrupy. Add 400 ml (14 fl. Oz, 1- $\frac{3}{4}$ cups) thickened veal juices or stock and cook, covered, in a preheated oven at 180 °C (350°F gas 4) for 50 minutes. Drain the ears and arrange them on a serving dish. Garnish with braised celery hearts or steamed cauliflower. Pour over the strained and reduced braising liquid.

Stuffed and Fried pigs' ears

Braise the ears whole. Meanwhile, make a chicken forcemeat and some Villierol sauce. Allow the ears to cool, then slit them and stuff with the chicken forcemeat. Dip them into the Villierol sauce and leave for 30 minutes. Roll the ears in egg, then breadcrumbs, and fry them in very hot oil. Drain, arrange on the serving dish and serve with tomato sauce.

EASTER

The major Christian festival, which celebrates the resurrection of Jesus Christ. It was associated in the early days of Christianity with the Jewish feast of Passover, commemorating the passing over or sparing of the Israelites in Egypt, when God smote the firstborn of the Egyptians (the French word for Easter is derived from the Greek Paskba and the Hebrew Pesab, meaning 'passage'). Passover is celebrated for a week at the beginning of spring (from the 14th to the 21st of the month of Nisan), during which no alcohol or leavened food is consumed, the feast begins with a formal meal of a roasted lamb, sacrificed according to the kosher method.

Easter Day, fixed at the Council of Nicaea in AD 325 to fall on the first Sunday after the full moon following the spring equinox, can occur between 22 March and 22 April. It corresponds to the height of the period of the renewal of life after winter and, as Easter also follows the abstinence of Lent, numerous culinary traditions mark this festival.

In all countries, eggs are the symbol of Easter, in France, the custom of offering painted or decorated hard boiled (hard cooked)

Eggs goes back to the 15th century, when it was particularly common in Alsace. The paschal omellette, sometimes made with eggs laid on Good Friday, is usually enriched with bacon or sausage to emphasize the end of the period of abstinence.

The omellette is traditionally followed by a dish of meat, generally roebuck or lamb but also pork (grilled sucking pig at Metz, ham sprinkled with chopped parsley in the Cote d'Or). In Charente Poitou, Touraine, Berry and Bresse, the Easter Sunday menu includes pie filled with a mixture of chopped meats and hard boiled eggs. Little noodles in vinaigrette (totelots) are typical in Lorraine, fritters Rousseilon, and large thick pancakes (pachades) in Auvergne. A variety of special cakes and pastries are prepared for Easter, pognes and pompes in Provence, Savoy and the area around Lyon; alise pacaude in the Vendee; cavagnants in Menton (shaped like baskets and containing eggs dyed red) cacavelli (crowns topped with eggs) in Corsica; alleluias in Castelnaudary; pagnoties in Forez; gingerbreads in the shape of horses in Touraine; darioles in Reims; flones in the Aveyron region; and soupe dorce in Savoy (called soupe rousse in the Creuse), which is a kind of French toast (pain perdu).

Russian cookery includes several traditional cakes for Easter Day, such as kulich and pashka. In Germany the Easter cake is the Ostertorte, a type of sponge cake filled with mocha-flavoured butter cream and decorated with chocolate eggs.

The British simnel cake is now traditional at Easter although originally it was a cake made to celebrate Mothering Sunday.

EAU-DE-VIE

A French term meaning ‘water of life’

From the Latin aqua vitae. It is nowadays generally applied to brandy (not necessarily Cognac or Armagne) and also to the alcohols blancs (white alcohols) – spirits distilled from fruits or herbs and kept in glass (not wood) without any sweetening. The various marches are known as eaux-de-vie-de-vin, as they are distilled from wine. Distillates from each other basics, such as Scotch whisky, vodka, gin, Schnapps and so on, are not strictly speaking eau-de-vie, although the Gaelic for Scotch whisky – usque beatba – means ‘water of life’.

ECAILLER

A French culinary term meaning to open shellfish. An ecaillier is the person employed to open the oyster in a restaurant having its own oyster bed. Ecaillers are also traders specializing in the sale of shellfish and seafoods.

The verb ecailler also means to scale fish.

ECARLATE

A L. The French term describing traditional pickled pork or beef, especially ox (beef) tongue. Saltpetre (potassium nitrate) was used with salt to pickle meat; it coloured the meat bright red, hence the name, meaning ‘scarlet’. This was further enhanced by rubbing red food colouring (liquid carmine) over the cured meat before it was hung in storage. The traditional recipe is given below; saltpeter is not used in modern commercial curing and is not readily available. Meat can be pickled at home without saltpeter or using nitrites available to the food industry, but it does not have the traditional keeping qualities. The method should be used for the flavour it yields rather than as a means as a long term preservation.

Pickled tongue is served hot with vegetables or cold as an hors d’oeuvre. It is also an ingredient of dishes described as a Pecarlade, which are served with some kind

Of red sauce, such as tomato, and it is often used as a garnish (cut into cockcombs). Beef can also be pickled cooked, pressed and used in the same way.

Fromage à l’ecarlade, a specialty of classical cookery is a type of butter made with crayfish (and therefore reddish) a recipe is given by the chef Menon in La Science du maitre d’hotel cuisinier (1749)

RECIPES

Traditional pickled ox tongue

Soak a trimmed ox (beef) tongue in cold water for 24 hours, then drain and wipe it. Prick lightly all over, rubbing the surface with salt mixed with saltpeter. Put the tongue in a stoneware container. Prepare a brine by adding 2.25 kg (5 lb. 6-1/4 cups) coarse salt, 150 g (5 oz) 300 g (11 oz 1-3/4 cups) brown sugar, a spring of thyme, a bay leaf, 12 juniper berries and 12 peppercorns to 5 litres (9 pints, 5-1/2 quarts) water. Boil for a few minutes, then leave it to become cold. Cover the tongue with this brine, place a wooden board with a weight on top over it, and leave it so steep in a cool place for 6 days in summer, or 8 days in winter.

Drain the tongue and soak it for a few hours in fresh water to draw out the salt, then cook in water without any seasonings or condiments for 2-1/2 – 3 hours, depending on its size. Drain the tongue, then strip the skin off completely while still hot. Cover it with buttered paper to prevent blackening and leave it to cool. Wrap the tongue in very thin piece of fat bacon, tie it up and wrap in muslin (cheesecloth), tying it at each end. Poach the tongue in a large quantity of simmering water for about 10 minutes. Drain immediately, remove the muslin and brush the tongue with red food colouring. Hang it up and leave to cool. Prepared in this way, the tongue will keep for several weeks in a cool dry place.

Canapes a l'ecarlate

Cut some thin slices of bread into rounds or rectangles and spread them with a little softened butter mixed with paprika, cayenne pepper and a little Worcestershire sauce. Place a slice of pickled tongue on each round and garnish with a thin line of the same butter.

ECHAUDE

A small light crisp biscuit (cracker) very popular in France up to the 19th century. It was made from a mixture of water and flour (to which an egg and some butter was added, poached in boiling water (hence its name, which means scalded), and then drained and dried in the oven. Formerly, during lent the egg was omitted and the butter replaced with oil.

Echaudes are mentioned for the first time in charter dated 1202, under the name of panes qui discumar eschaudati (bread known as scalded'). In the 13th century they were scalloped later they were round, triangular or heart-shaped. They used to be sold in the street, like waters. In his Grand Dictionnaire de cuisine. Alexander Dumas describes them as a sort of unsweetened cake which is made for the birds and for children rather for adults. The Parisian pastrycook Favart, who brought them back into fashion at the beginning of the 18th century, in the Rue de la Verreine, was thought for a long time to have invented them.

The echaude remain a traditional biscuit in several provinces, particularly in Aveyron (aniseedflavoured) and in the west of France along with the craquelins). It can also be made with a raising (heavening) agent.

ECHEZEAUX

A region in the Cote de Nuits, Burgundy , where 11 vineyards entitled to the AOC make fine red wine, labeled according to their specifications; one of them is a grand cru, the highest rating in Burgundy. Very few of the wines are sold just as "Echezeaux" , as many Vosne-Romanee people have difficulty pronouncing the name.

ECLADE

Also known as eglade. A traditional prepared mussels which is typical saintongue on the atlantic coast of France particularly of La Tremblade. The mussels are scraped and cleaned and then arranged on the fumee, a thick plank of hard olive wood, which is sometimes covered with a layer of clay so that the mussels will stay in place. The plank and mussels are then covered with a layer of dry pine needles, which are set alight. When the needles, which are set alight. When the needles have been reduced to ashes, the mussels are ready. They are eaten every hot and plain , with country bread and butter.

ECCLAIR

A small log shaped bun of choux pastry, filled with cream and coated with chocolate fondant icing (frosting).The paste is piped on to a "baking sheet and cooked until crisp and hollow.

After baking, the esclair is split lengthways and filled with whipped cream or confectioner's custard (pastry cream), plain or flavoured with coffee or chocolate . The top is iced with chocolate fondant icing or melted chocolate. Eclairs can also be filled with chestnut puree or a filling made from fruits preserved in syrup.

RECIPES

Chocolate e'clairs

Prepare some choux* paste with 125 g (4-1.2 oz. 1 cup) plain (all purpose) flour, 65 g (2-1/2 oz table spoons) butter, a large pinch of salt, 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) water and 4 eggs. Using a piping (pastry) bag with smooth nozzle, 2 cm (3/4 in) in diameter, pipe thick fingers of dough, 6 – 7.5 cm. (2-1/2 – 3 in.) in long, on to a baking sheet, well spaced apart so that they will be able to rise without sticking together. Beat an egg yolk with a little milk and use to glaze the éclairs. Bake the éclairs in the preheated oven at 190°C (375°F; gas 5) until pale golden in color. This will take 20 minutes at the most. The inside must still be soft. Leave the éclairs to must still be soft. Leave the éclairs to cool completely then split them down one side.

Make a confectioner's custard (see custard) with 50 g (2 oz. 1/2 cup) plain flour, 1 whole egg, 2 egg yolks and 50 g (2 oz, 1/4 cup) caster (superfine) sugar. Add 1 tablespoon cocoa (unsweetened cocoa) to the cream mixture. Leave to cool completely, then put into a piping bag and use to fill the eclairs. Heat 200 g (7 oz. 1 cup) fondant icing (frosting) over a low heat, add 50 g (2 oz. 2 squares) melted dark chocolate, and mix well. Coat the top of the eclairs and leave to cool.

Coffee eclairs

Use the same process as for chocolate eclairs, but flavour the cream filling with 2 teaspoons instant coffee dissolved in 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) milk brought to the boil with 40 g (1 1/2 oz. 3 tablespoons) unsalted butter. Add coffee essence (extract) drop by drop to taste, to the icing (frosting)

ECOLE DE SALERNE A collection of the health precepts of an Italian school of medicine that was highly regarded in the Middle Ages as a dietetic and therapeutic recipe manual. Translated from Latin into French in about 1500, and edited and enlarged several times, these precepts were rewritten in the form of little verses, easy to remember in the form of little verses, easy to remember, for example.

Fennel seeds when soaked in wine
Revitalize a heart that love makes pine,
And reawaken the old man's flame,
The salutary usage of the seed, you know,
From liver and lung doth banish pain,
And quells the wind that in the gut doth blow.

ECOSSAISE, A L A French term primarily used to describe a soup inspired by Scottish cookery (Scotch broth). This is a clear soup made with diced boiled mutton, pearl barley and a vegetable mixture. This mixture is also used to make ecossaise sauce, served with white offal (variety meat) eggs or poached fish and poultry. The name is also used for various dishes, particularly egg dishes containing salmon.

RECIPES

Ecossaise sauce

Gently braise in butter 4 tablespoons vegetable brunoise and some French (green) beans cut up into very small dice. Prepare 200 ml (7 fl. oz. 3/4 cup) cream sauce and put through a strainer. Add the vegetable mixture.

Soft boiled (or poached) eggs a l ecossaise

Prepare 4 tablespoons salmon puree by mixing some finely crumbled poached salmon with the same quantity of thick white sauce. Heat up this puree and use it to fill 4 warmed puff pastry croustades. Arrange a soft-boiled (soft-cooked) or poached egg in each case, and cover with shrimp sauce. Each egg may be garnished with a slice of truffle.

ECOT A French term meaning each diner's share in a meal paid for communally. The word, which comes from the Old French skot (contribution) is hardly used at all now, except in the expression payer son ecot (to pay one's share).

ECUELLE A small round rimless bowl for individual portions of food. Wooden, earthenware or tin ecuelles are among the most ancient of table utensils. In the Middle Ages, one bowl was sometimes used by two people. Nowadays, ecuelles are usually made of earthenware or pottery, and are generally only used to serve thick vegetable soups or rustic dishes.

ECUYER TRANCHANT An officer in charge of cutting the meats and serving at the king's table under the Ancient Regime. The post was sometimes shared, the ecuyer tranchant doing the cutting and the grand ecuyer tranchant when he officiated for the queen. The ecuyer tranchant was the nobleman, who had the right to display representations of a knife and fork with fleur de lis on the handles under his heraldic arms. The post itself gradually became honorary, but remained highly lucrative owing to the privileges attached to it.

EDAMS

A Dutch cow's milk cheese, containing 30 – 40 % fat, in the shape of a large ball with a red low or red waxed coating. The semi-hard pressed cheese is firm but elastic, free of holes, and light yellow to yellow ochre in colour, depending on its degree of maturity. Edam is described as young after two or three months in a dry cellar, when it has a sweet nutty flavour, after six months it is semi-matured, with a stronger flavour, at the end of a year maturing it is described as matured and has a slight bite. Edam is also known in mainland Europe as tete de mort or tete de Maure (dead man's head or Moor's head), Manbollen and Katzenkopf, due to its characteristic head-like shape. Measuring about 13 cm (5 in) in diameter, it weighs between 1.5 and 17 kg (3-1/4-3-3/4 lb). A baby Edam is also available, weighing 1 kg (2-1/4 lbs), and a triple Edam, weighing 6.5 kg (14-1/2 lb).

Edam is made all over the Netherlands, and even in France and Belgium, but authentic Edam, from the small port in the northern Netherlands, is protected by a label of origin. It is usually served after a meal, often with pale ale, but it is also used a good deal in cookery. Young or semi-matured cheese is suitable for sandwiches, pâtisseries, canapés, croque monsieurs and mix salads; matured cheese is used in gratins, soufflés and tarts. Lastly, it is used in a traditional dish called Keshy Yena from Curacao, the main island in the Netherlands Antilles.

RECIPE

Keshy Yena

Using a young Edam, cut a round slice from the top and hollow out the inside of the cheese with a knife, leaving the walls 1 cm (1/2 in) thick. Cut the hollowed out cheese into small cubes, mix with a cook ragout made of diced or chopped pork or beef, then add some stoned (pitted) olives, tomatoes cut into small segments and sliced onions. Fill the Edam ball with this mixture replace the round slice at the top and hold it in place with cocktail sticks (toothpicks). Bake in a preheated oven at 160 °C (325°F gas 3) for 1 hour.

Diced or chopped pork or beef, then add some stoned (pitted) olives, tomatoes cut into small segments and sliced onions. Fill the Edam ball with this mixture replace the round slice at the top and hold it in place with cocktail sticks (toothpicks). Bake in a preheated oven at 160 °C (325°F gas 3) for 1 hour.

EDELPILZ

A German cow's milk cheese with a 55% fat content. A blue veined pale yellow cheese with a natural crust, it has a sweet flavour with a slight tang. Made in the Bavarian Alps, Edelpilz is sold in a round, a loaf or individual portions, wrapped in silver paper. Its name means literally noble mushroom.

EDELZWICKER

A white Alsace wine made from a blend of certain permitted noble grapes. A pleasant drink, it goes well with various Alsatian recipes.

EDWARD VII

While still the Prince of Wales, the future king of England was a notable personality in fashionable Paris at the end of the 19th century. He was an habitué of the great restaurants (Voisin, Café Hardy, Paillard) and sumptuous dishes were dedicated to him. For example, turbot prince de Gulle is a dish of poached turbot garnished with oysters and fixed mussels and coated with a champagne sauce seasoned with curry spices and enriched with grayfish butter.

When he became king, he continued to receive the honours of haute cuisine. Barbue Edouard VII is brill poached in white wine, garnished with duchess potato rosettes and served with an oyster mousseline sauce. Poularde Edouard VII is chicken stuffed with foie gras, rice and truffles, coated with a curry sauce containing diced red (bell) pepper and served with cucumbers in cream. In oeufs Edouard VII, softboiled (soft cooked) or poached eggs are arranged, with slices of pickled tongue, on a truffle risotto and garnished with slices of troffle. Edouard VII itself is a small boat-shaped cake filled with rhubarb and topped with green icing (frosting) arranged, with slices of pickled tongue, on a truffle risotto and garnished with slices of troffle. Edouard VII itself is a small boat-shaped cake filled with rhubarb and topped with green icing (frosting).

EEL

A snakelike fish with a smooth slippery skin. Eels mature in fresh water where they are fished and migrate to the Sargasso Sea to breed. The larvae are carried by the ocean currents over a period of two or three years to the coasts of Europe. When they enter the estuaries, they are transparent and have grown to a length of 6 – 9 cm (2-1/2- 3-1/2 in). These are the glass eels or elvers, which make a popular fried dish in Nantes, La Rochelle, Bordeaux and the Basque country. Those larvae that survive grow larger and the skin becomes pigmented. The yellow eel has a brown back, becoming greenish, with a yellowish underbelly that later becomes silvery white. It is at this time, when it starts to travel back to the Sargasso Sea, that the eel, now described as 'silvered' or 'descending' is most prized. The male measures about 50 cm (20 in) and the female 1 m (40 in). Eels are sold alived. They are killed skinned at the last moment as the flesh deteriorates rapidly; and the raw blood is poisonous if it enters a cut – for example, on one's finger. Eels are very fatty fish, but tasty.

Eels were popular with the Romans and widely eaten during the Middle Ages. Taillevents Viandier gives a whole range of recipes for preparing eel dishes in broth, in galantine, in tarts or pates, as Lent flan, with garlic or mustard, roasted, salted, dusted with spices, or as a roulade. Today, eels appear in numerous French regional recipes (catigot, matelote, bouillette, ani vert, a la flamande), However, classic haute cuisine dishes (ballottine, pate), or even more simple ones (ala tartare, a la poulete), are less often prepared than they used to be.

Jellied eels are famous in Britain, served cold in the jellied stock dish in Scandinavia and in northern Germany. The skin should be shiny and almost black, and it is served as an hors d'oeuvre, with rye bread and lemon.

Eels are particularly popular in Japan, especially opened and skewered, then grilled as

As part of one-pot meal prepared at the table. Eel is farmed in Japan (as well as other countries including Italy, to a lesser extent)

RECIPE

Preparation

To kill an eel, seize it with a cloth bang its head violently against a hard surface. To skin it, put a noose around the base of the head and hang it up. Slit the skin in a circle just beneath the noose. Pull away a small portion of the skin, turn it back, take hold of it with a cloth, and pull it down hard. Clean the eel by making a small incision in its belly. Cut off and discard the head and the end of the tail. Wash and wipe and dry. Alternatively, when the eel has been killed, it can be cut into sections and grilled (broiled) for a short time. The skin will puff up and can then be removed. The method has the advantage of removing excess fat from the eel, particularly if it is large.

Devilled eel

Cook an eel weighing about 800 g (1-3/4 lb.) in a court boullion of white wine and let it cool in the liquor. Drain and wipe the eel, then smear it with mustard, brush with melted butter and grill (broil) slowly. Arrange the eel on a round dish and garnish with gherkins (sweet dill pickles) if desired. Serve with a devilled sauce.

Cel a la bonne femme

Soften 4 large tablespoon chopped onion in butter and place in a sauté pan. Put slices of a medium size eel weighing about 800 g (1-3/4 lb) on top of the onion layer. Add salt and pepper, a bouquet garni and 300 ml (1/2 pint., 1-1/4 cups) white wine. Cover and poach slowly for 25 minutes. Drain the slices of eel and arrange them on croutons of sandwich bread fried in butter. Garnish with large diced potatoes sautéed in butter. Coat the eel with the liquor from the pan, after reducing it by half and thickening it with 1 Table spoon beurre manie.

eel a la provencale

Cook 2 tablespoons chopped onion gently in a large pan with a little oil. Cut a medium-sized eel into even-sized slices, add to the pan, and cook until they have softened. Season with salt and pepper, and add 4 peeled, seeded chopped tomatoes, a bouquet garni and a crushed garlic clove.

Moisten with 100 ml (4 fl oz 7 tablespoon s) dry white wine, cover the pan, and cook slowly for 25-30 minutes. About 10 minutes before serving, add 12 black olives. Arrange on a dish and sprinkle with parsley.

Eel au vert

Skin and prepare 1.5 kg (3 1/4 lb) small eels and cut each one into 4 sections in a sauté pan in 150 g (5 oz, 2/3 cup) butter until they have stiffened. Add 100 g (4 oz, 11/2 cups) each of chopped spinach and sorrel leaves, reduces the heat, and continue cooking until the vegetables are soft. Add 325 ml (11 fl oz, 1 1/3 cups) dry white wine, a bouquet garni, 2 tablespoon chopped parsley and 1 tablespoon each of chopped sage and tarragon. Season well and simmer for 10 minutes. Brown 6 slices of stale sandwich bread in butter. When eels are cooked, add 2 or 3 egg yolks mixed with 2 table spoons lemon slices of fried bread and coat with the sauce. Eels au vert may also be served cold without the bread.

Eels brochettes a Panglaise

Cut a boned eel into even size pieces and marinate them for an hour in a mixture of oil, lemon juice, pepper, salt and chopped parsley. Drain the eel pieces, roll in flour and coat with fresh breadcrumbs. Thread the eels on to skewers, separating the pieces with small slices of fat bacon. Grill (broil) under a low heat until the flesh separates easily from the bone. Arrange on a long dish, garnished with parsley and surrounded with half slices of lemon,

Eel pie

Bone an eel, cut the fillets into 5 – 6 cm (2-2-1/2 in.) slices and blanch them in salted water. Drain and cool the eel slices. Hard boil (hard cook) and slice some eggs. Season the fish and eggs with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg, and sprinkle them with chopped parsley. Layer the eel and egg slices in a deep, preferably oval, dish. Add sufficient white wine to just cover the fish and dot with small knobs of butter. Cover with a layer of puff pastry, making a hole for the steam to escape. Brush with, beaten egg and score the top. Bake in a preheated oven at 200° C (400° F, gas 6) for 30 minutes, then reduced the temperature to 180° C (350° C, gas 4) and cook for a further 1 hour just before serving, pour a few tablespoons of demi-glace sauce (made with fish stock) into the hole at the top of the pie. The pie may also be eaten cold.

Eel pie aux fines herbes (a la menagere)

Bone an eel and cut the fillets into slices. Flatten each slice and season with salt, pepper, and spices to taste. Arrange in a deep dish and moisten with a few tablespoons of dry white wine, a little Cognac and a few drops of oil. Leave to marinate for 2 hours in a cool place. Drain and wipe the slices and reserve the marinade over the fish. Leave until completely cold.

Line a shallow oval pie dish with shortcrusts pastry (basic pie dough) and spread the base and sides with a layer of pike forcement containing chopped parsley. Fill the pie with alternating layers of the flattened eel slices and the pike forcement. Moisten each layer with a little of the marinade. Finish with a 2 cm. (1/4 in) layer of forcemeat and sprinkle with melted butter. Cover with a layer of pastry (dough) and trim the top with leaves cut from the pastry trimmings. Make a hole in the top for the steam to escape and brush the pastry.

With beaten egg. Bake in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F), gas 4) for 1 –3/4 – 2 hours.

Remove the pie from the dish and place it on a long serving dish. Pour a few tablespoons of dem glace sauce, made with fish stock, through the hole in the top of the pie. Anchovy fillets may also be included with the eel slices, or some anchovy butter or dry duxelles may be added to the pike forcemeat. If the pie is served cold, pour enough fish jelly into the hole in the top of the pie to fill the gaps left by the cooking

With beaten egg. Bake in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F), gas 4) for 1 –3/4 – 2 hours.

With beaten egg. Bake in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F), gas 4) for 1 –3/4 – 2 hours.

Remove the pie from the dish and place it on a long serving dish. Pour a few tablespoons of dem glace sauce, made with fish stock, through the hole in the top of the pie. Anchovy fillets may also be included with the eel slices, or some anchovy butter or dry duxelles may be added to the pike forcemeat. If the pie is served cold, pour enough fish jelly into the hole in the top of the pie to fill the gaps left by the cooking process. Leave for 12 hours until completely cold.

Roulade of eel a l'angevine

Prepare a 1.5 kg (3-1/4 lb) eel as for balottine, and stuff with a pike forcement to which a salpicon of mushrooms and truffles has been added. Reshape the eel and wrap it in thin slices of bacon. Tie it up in the form of a ring. Slice a large onion and a carrot and soften in butter in a sauce pan. Spread the vegetables evenly in the pan and place the eel on top, with a large bouquet garni, a leek and a spring of savory in the center. Add just enough medium dry white wine, such as Anjou, to cover the eel. Bring to the boil, skim, then cover and simmer slowly for 35 minutes. Prepare 24 small mushrooms caps, keeping the stalks, and toss in butter. Drain the eel (reserving the Liquor) remove the bacon slices, and put into another sauce pan with the mushroom. Keep hot.

To prepare the sauce, strain the cooking liquor and make a white roux with 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) flour. Moisten with the strained juices and add the mushroom stalks. Reduce the sauce over a high heat and add 350 ml (12 fl. Oz. 1-1½ cups) single (light) cream. When the sauce has reached the correct consistency, take it off the boil and add 100 g (4 oz. 1/3 cup) crayfish butter. Coat the rolled up eel with the sauce.

EFFILER

A French culinary term meaning to prepare green beans for cooking by breaking off the ends with the fingers, as close as possible to the tip and removing the strings, if any. When applied in almonds and pistachio nuts effiler means to cut into the thin slices lengthways, either with a knife or with a special instrument. The word is also used for slicing chicken or duck breast.

Some chefs use the term effiloche, particularly for cutting leeks into fine shreds.

EGG

The round or oval reproductive body laid by the female of many animals, containing the developing embryo and its food reserves and protected by a shell or skin. Although the eggs of many birds, fish and even reptiles can be used as food, the word 'egg' unqualified applies exclusively to hen's eggs. All other types of egg offered for sale must be labeled appropriate quails eggs, duck eggs, plover's eggs. There are also exotic rarities such as crocodile or ostrich eggs.

The average weight of a hen's egg is 50 g (2 oz.). The shell makes up about 12% of the total weight of the egg and is made of a calcareous porous, substance which is pervious to air, water and smells. It is lined with a delicate pellucid membrane which separates itself from the shell at the larger end of the egg to form the air chamber.

The yolk of the egg (30% of the total weight) is an opaque soft substance which congeals in heat. The yolk is composed of albumins, fats containing vitamins, lecithins, nucleus, cholesterol and mineral substances including a ferruginous pigment called haematogen, which gives it colour. It contains the germ (visible in fertilized egg- this does not mean the egg is inedible), the remaining proteins, and all the fats (especially lecithin), together with iron, sulphur and vitamins A,B,D and E.

Varieties and qualities Contrary to popular opinion, brown egg is neither better nor more "natural" than a white one; it is, in fact, usually smaller and less well-filled. However, it is easier to examine for freshness against a bright light because the shell is thinner and less opaque. The colour of the yolk (deep or pale yellow) has no bearing on the quality of the egg, and any blood spots that may be found in the white. Fresh eggs should be used in 1 month and stored unwashed, with the pointed end down, in their box in the refrigerator. Washing an egg makes the shell permeable to smells. A raw egg yolk will keep for 24 hours and a raw egg white from 6 to 12 hours. A dessert containing raw eggs, such as a mousse, should be eaten within 24 hours. Fresh eggs can be poured into suitable containers.

Freshness of eggs A fresh egg is heavy and should feel well-filled. An egg loses a tiny fraction of its weight every day by evaporation of water through the porous shell. It is easy to test the freshness of an egg by plunging it into salted water containing 125g (4 ½ oz, 1/3 cup) salt per 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) water. An egg up to 3 days old will sink at once to the bottom; an egg 3-6 days old will float halfway up the water; if it is bad, it floats horizontally on top of the water. Another method is to break an egg on the plate. If the yolk is compact and positioned in the center, the egg is fresh. If the egg is 1 week old, the yolk is not the center, and in an egg that is 2-3 weeks old. The yolk has a tendency to spread. The freshness of an egg can also be tested by holding it up to the light- a very small air chamber indicates a very fresh egg.

Uses Eggs are among the most versatile ingredients used in cooking. They are of prime importance in many branches of food industry, especially those concerned with making pasta, ices, biscuits (cookies) and cakes. In the kitchen have innumerable uses, such as liaisons, egg and bread crumb coating, glazing pastry, preparing emulsified sauces and forcemeats. They are an ingredients in many basic dough and batters.

Eggs can be cooked in a great variety of ways and serve with all sort of garnishes. According to James de Coquet, "There is not a celebrity, a marshal, a composer, or an opera singer who has not given his name to a method include poaching, boiling, frying and baking; eggs can be scrambled or made into omelettes. They can be served plain or with an incredible array of garnishing ingredients, sauces or other accompaniments.

The nutritive value and versatility of eggs ensured that they became part of the human diet all over the world from the earliest times; they were frequently associated with rites and traditions.

Enormous numbers of eggs were eaten in the Middle Ages and, as in ancient Rome, the diner crushed the shell in his plate to prevent evil spirits from hiding there. Eggs were forbidden during Lent because of their "richness" and it was traditional in France to search for and collect eggs on Maundy Thursday and Good Friday and have prolific consumption over Eastertide. The French word for the yolk at that time was moyeu, meaning center or hub, and some people believe that the word "mayonnaise" is derived from it. The French word for the white aubun (now blanc).

Recipes

Eggs en Cocotte

Break the eggs into small buttered cocottes or ramekins and cook in a bain in a preheated oven at 200° C (400° F, gas 6) for 6-8 minutes.

Eggs en cocotte with cream

Put a layer of chicken quenelle forcement into each into each ramekin. Break 1 egg on top and place a knob of butter on the yolk. Cook in a bain marie in a preheated oven. When cooked, add salt and pepper. The eggs may also be sprinkled with a little grated Parmesan cheese and moistened with melted butter before cooking.

Eggs en cocotte with tarragon

Cook the eggs in bain marie in a preheated oven and pour some reduced tarragon-flavoured veal gravy around each yolk. Garnish with blanched drained tarragon leaves arranged in the form of a star, if wished, chopped tarragon can be sprinkled in the bottom of the buttered ramekins and the veal gravy can be replaced with reduced tarragon flavoured cream.

Eggs in a Mould

This dish from the grande cuisine is rarely made nowadays but is very simple to prepare. Break the eggs into buttered dariole moulds and sprinkle with some types of chopped flavouring (parsley, ham, truffle). Cook in a bain marie in a preheated oven at 200° C (400° F, gas 6) and turn out on to a crousade, fried bread or an artichoke heart. Coat with sauce and serve.

Eggs in a mould Bizer

Butter the dariole moulds and line them with a mixture of minced (ground) pickled tongue and diced truffle. Break the eggs into the moulds and cook them in a bain marie in a preheated oven. Unmould them on to braised artichoke hearts. Cover with Perigueux sauce and garnish with a slice of truffle.

Fresh eggs should be used in 1 month and stored unwashed, with the pointed end down, in their box in the refrigerator. Washing an egg makes the shell permeable to smells. A raw egg yolk will keep for 24 hours and a raw egg white from 6 to 12 hours. A dessert containing raw eggs, such as a mousse, should be eaten within 24 hours. Fresh eggs can be poured into suitable containers.

Freshness of eggs A fresh egg is heavy and should feel well-filled. An egg loses a tiny fraction of its weight every day by evaporation of water through the porous shell. It is easy to test the freshness of an egg by plunging it into salted water containing 125g (4 ½ oz, 1/3 cup) salt per 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) water. An egg up to 3 days old will sink at once to the bottom; an egg 3-6 days old will float halfway up the water; if it is bad, it floats horizontally on top of the water. Another method is to break an egg on the plate. If the yolk is compact and positioned in the center, the egg is fresh. If the egg is 1 week old, the yolk is not the center, and in an egg that is 2-3 weeks old. The yolk has a tendency to spread. The freshness of an egg can also be tested by holding it up to the light- a very small air chamber indicates a very fresh egg.

Uses Eggs are among the most versatile ingredients used in cooking. They are of prime importance in many branches of food industry, especially those concerned with making pasta, ices, biscuits (cookies) and cakes. In the kitchen have innumerable uses, such as liaisons, egg and bread crumb coating, glazing pastry, preparing emulsified sauces and forcemeats. They are an ingredients in many basic dough and batters.

Eggs can be cooked in a great variety of ways and serve with all sort of garnishes. According to James de Coquet, "There is not a celebrity, a marshal, a composer, or an opera singer who has not given his name to a method include poaching, boiling, frying and baking; eggs can be scrambled or made into omelettes. They can be served plain or with an incredible array of garnishing ingredients, sauces or other accompaniments.

The nutritive value and versatility of eggs ensured that they became part of the human diet all over the world from the earliest times; they were frequently associated with rites and traditions.

Enormous numbers of eggs were eaten in the Middle Ages and, as in ancient Rome, the diner crushed the shell in his plate to prevent evil spirits from hiding there. Eggs were forbidden during Lent because of their "richness" and it was traditional in France to search for and collect eggs on Maundy Thursday and Good Friday and have prolific consumption over Eastertide. The French word for the yolk at that time was moyeu, meaning center or hub, and some people believe that the word "mayonnaise" is derived from it. The French word for the white aubun (now blanc).

Recipes

Eggs en Cocotte

Break the eggs into small buttered cocottes or ramekins and cook in a bain in a preheated oven at 200° C (400° F, gas 6) for 6-8 minutes.

Eggs en cocotte with cream

Put a layer of chicken quenelle forcement into each into each ramekin. Break 1 egg on top and place a knob of butter on the yolk. Cook in a bain marie in a preheated oven. When cooked, add salt and pepper. The eggs may also be sprinkled with a little gratd. Parmesan cheese and moistened with melted butter before cooking.

Eggs en cocotic with tarragon

Cook the eggs in bain marie in a preheated oven and pour some reduced tarragon-flavoured veal gravy around each yolk. Garnish with blanched drained tarragon leaves arranged in the form of a star, if wished, chopped tarragon can be sprinkled in the bottom of the buttered ramekins and the veal gravy can be replaced with reduced tarragon flavoured cream.

Eggs in a Mould

This dish from the grande cuisine is rarely made nowadays but is very simple to prepare .Break the eggs into buttered dariole moulds and sprinkle with some types of chopped flavouring (parsley, ham, truffle). Cook in a bain marie in a preheated oven at 200° C (400° F, gas 6) and turn out on to a crousade , fried bread or an artichoke heart. Coat with sauce and serve.

Eggs in a mould Bizer

Butter the dariole moulds and line them with a mixture of minced (ground) pickled tongue and dicked truffle. Break the eggs into the mouths and cook them in a bain marie in a preheated oven. Unmould them on to braised artichoke hearts.Cover with Perigueux sauce and garnish with a slice of truffle.

Eggs sur le Plat or Shirred Eggs

Eggs sur le plat are cooked in individual dishes in a preheated oven at 160° C(325° F, gas 3) . The size of the cooking dish is important as the yolks do not cook as well when the whites have too much room to spread out. Some cooks recommend separating the whites from the yolks, cooking the white first until they begin to set, and then placing a yolk in the center of each white. It is advisable to put salt on the white only as it will show up as white specks of the yolk.

Eggs au miroir

Eggs aur miroir are also baked in the oven but at a far higher temperature , so that the yolks when cooked are shiny. Melt a knob of butter in a small flameproof eggs dish. When it begins to sizzle , break 2 eggs on to a plate and slide them into the dish. Sprinkle with a pinch of salt and top with soft butter. Cook in a preheated oven at 240° C (475° F, gas 9)until the white has set. Serve very hot while the yolks are still shiny. Alternatively, the eggs can be cooked on the hob (stove top), basting them constantly with the hot butter in the cooking dish.

Eggs sur le plat a al chaville

Cook a salpicon of mushrooms in butter and put a tablespoon into individual egg dishes. Break the eggs on top and cook them in a preheated oven. Garnish with 1 tablespoon tomato sauce flavoured with chopped tarragon.

Eggs sur le plat a Pagenaise

Line some individual eggs dishes with 1 tablesppon chopped onion that has been sauced in goose fat.Break an egg into each dish and cook in a preheated oven. When they are cooked, add a little , chopped garlic and parsley. Garnish with coarsely chopped sautéed subergines (eggplants) . Alternatively, the eggs can be cooked in a single large dish.

Eggs sur le plat a Pantboisc

Roll 4 spoonsfuls of whitebait in flour and sauce them in olive oil. When they are brown, add 1 tablespoon on the bottom of individual egg dishes. Break the eggs into the dishes and cook in a preheated oven.

To serve, garnish with a ragout of sweet (bell) peppers, a foreintale and a saffron-flavoured rice au gras. Four tomatao sauce round the eggs.

Eggs sur le plat archduke

Soften some chopped onion in butter, season with paprika and use it to line individual dishes. Break the eggs on top and cook in a preheated oven. Garnish with cooked diced truffles. Surround with supreme sauce seaoned with a little paprika.

Eggs sur le plat Jockey club

Cook the eggs in a large buttered dish. Trim them with a pastry (cookie) cutter, leaving only a narrow border of white around each yolk. Toast some slices of bread and spread them with pureed foie gras. Place an egg on each slice and arrange them in a circle on round dish . Fill the center of the dish with sliced calves' kidneys sautéed in Madeira. Tope each egg with a slice truffle.

Eggs sur le plat Louis Oliver

Cook a slice(about 40 g 1-1/2 oz) of fresh foie gras in a little butter in a large egg dish until heated through. Season with salt and a pinch of cayenne pepper. Add a little more butter and, when very hot bvreak 2 eggs into the dish, one on either side of the foie gras. Coat the latter with a little very hot chicken veloute sauce and cook for 2 minutes over a high heat . Surround the eggs with Perigueux sauce and serve immediately.

Eggs suc le plat Montrouge

Butter individual egg, dishes and pipe a border of mushroom duxelles in each . Break the eggs into the dishes, surround the yolks with a ribbon of double (heavy) cream and bake in a preheated oven.

Eggs sur le plat with bacon

Heat a little butter in a frying pan and lightly fry some thin rashers (slices) of bacon. Break the eggs on to the bacon and cook, basting them with the fat that runs from the bacon. Alternatively, line small individual dishes with thin strips of lightly browned bacon. Break an egg into dish, pour bacon fat over them and bake in a preheated oven.

Fried Eggs

Break each egg into a cup, season with salt and pour into a frying pan containing hot oil, butter, goose fat or lard. Immdiately draw the white neatly around the yolk and baste with hot fat until the white is set. Drain well. To deep dry,

Add the egg to hot fat and fold the white over the yolk. Turn after cooking for a few seconds. As soon as it is lightly browned , remove and drain. The white should be crisp and the yolk soft.

Fried eggs a la bayonnaise

Deep fry some small round slices of bread, then place a slice of friend Bayonne ham cut to the same shape on each one. Fry the eggs in oil and place one on each slice of bread. Garnish with sautéed mushrooms (preferably caps.)

Fried eggs a la Catalane

Fry halved, seeded tomatoes and aubergine (eggplant), cut into rounds, separately in olive oil. Add salt and pepper, a little crushed garlic and chopped parsley. Spread the vegetables over a dish. Fry the eggs and slide them on the vegetables.

Hard boiled Eggs

Cook the eggs in their shells in boiling water for 10-12 minutes, then plunge them into cold water for 7-9 minutes to cool them before shelling. The white and the yolk should be completely set. The eggs must not be allowed to boil for longer because the white becomes rubbery and the yolk crumbles.

Hard boiled egg cutlets

Dice the whites and yolk of a hard boiled (hard cooked) eggs and blend them with 4 tablespoons thick béchamel sauce to which 2 raw egg yolks have been added. Chill thoroughly.

Divide the mixture into 50 g (2 oz) portions and shape them into cutlets. Dip in eggs and breadcrumbs and deep fry at 175 °C (347 °F) or shallow fry in butter. Arrange them on a dish, and put a paper frill on the narrow end of each cutlet. Sprinkle with fried curly parsley. Serve with tomato sauce and a garnish of green vegetables blended with butter or cream, or with a vegetable macedoine, tomato fondue or risotto.

The recipe may be varied by adding a little diced mushroom, truffle, lean ham or tongue to the egg mixture.

Hard boiled eggs a la macedoine

Cook and shell the eggs. Cut off the larger ends and finely dice them. Remove the yolks Carefully without damaging the whites. Make some mayonnaise and blend half of it with a well drained chilled macedoine of vegetables, using 1 tablespoon mayonnaise and blend half of it with a well drained chilled macedoine of vegetables, using 1 tablespoon to 5 tablespoons macedoine. Colour the remaining mayonnaise with a little tomato puree (paste) and blend with the mashed yolks and the finely diced egg white. Fill the eggs whites with this mixture, shaping the top into a dome. Line a dish with the macedoine, smooth the surface and press the eggs into it so that they stand upright. Garnish with the remaining tomato mayonnaise.

Hard-boiled eggs Elisabeth

Cut the ends off some hard boiled (hard cooked) eggs so that they look like little barrels. Extract the yolks taking care not to break the whites. Press the yolks taking care not to break the whites. Press the yolks through a fine sieve and mix with an equal quantity of fairly thick artichoke puree with a little chopped truffle added. Season with salt and pepper. Fill the eggs with this stuffing, rounding the top into a dome shape. Arrange the eggs in a gratin dish, placing each one on an artichoke heart which has been cooked gently in butter. Cover with Mornay sauce, sprinkle with grated cheese and moisten with melted butter. Brown the eggs in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425 °F, gas 7).

Hard boiled eggs in breadcrumbs

Take a good handful of young sorrel, remove the stalks, wash and dry the leaves, and shred them finely. Cook slowly in a saucepan with 40 g (1-1/2 oz. 3 tablespoons) butter until all the moisture has evaporated. Add 1 tablespoon flour, cook for 5 minutes over a gentle heat, and allow it to cool. Gradually add 400 ml (14 fl oz. 1-3/4 cups) boiling milk, stirring constantly with a wooden spoon. Add salt and pepper and simmer for 15 minutes. Press the mixture through a fine sieve. Return to the pan and bring to the boil. Remove from the heat and add 2 tablespoons cream. Adjust the seasoning. Hard boil (hard cook) 4 eggs, arrange them in a hot dish and pour the mixture over them.

Poached Eggs

Break the eggs into a cup and then slip it quickly into gently boiling water with 1 tablespoon vinegar added per 1 litre (1-3/4 pints, 4-1/3 cups). Cook for 3–5 minutes with the water barely simmering, depending on how firmly the yolk needs to be. If the egg is very fresh, it will not spread out in the water and the white will coagulate instantly. When cooked, remove with a spoon, refresh in cold water, drain on a cloth and trim. The eggs should be poached one by one so that they do not merge together in the water they can be kept warm in water at 70°C (158°F).

Poached eggs almagiva

Cook 4 artichoke hearts in salted water, drain them and braise them in butter. Spread a knob of foie gras over each and top with a poached egg. Coat them with Mornay sauce and glaze in a preheated oven each and top with poached egg. Coat them with Mornay sauce and glaze in a pre-heated oven at 230°C (450°F, gas 8). When the eggs are browned, sprinkle with finely chopped fresh truffles and serve immediately.

Scramble eggs with cep mushrooms

Slice some cep mushrooms, season with salt and pepper, and sauté them in butter or oil with a little garlic. Make the scrambled eggs and add the ceps. Place in a serving dish with a generous tablespoon of fried ceps in the center. Sprinkle with fried croutons.

Other varieties of mushrooms may be used, chanterelles, blewits, horn of plenty, or cultivated button mushrooms.

Scramble eggs with chicken livers

Make the scrambled eggs and pile them into a heated dish. Garnish with sliced chicken livers, sautéed in butter and blended with demi-glace sauce. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Scrambled eggs with shrimps

Add some peeled (shelled) shrimps or prawns heated in butter to the scrambled eggs. Arrange them in a heated dish and garnish with peeled shrimps that have either been tossed in butter or blended with shrimp sauce. Surround with croutons fried in butter and a ribbon of shrimp sauce.

This recipe can be varied by using crayfish tails and Nantua sauce.

Scrambled eggs with smoked salmon

Cut some smoked salmon into thin strips, allowing 25 g (1 oz) per 2 eggs. Pile the scrambled eggs into a hot dish or into a warm puff pastry case. Garnish with the smoked salmon and some croutons fried in butter.

Soft boiled Eggs

There are three methods of preparing these 1) plunge the eggs into boiling water and cook for 3 minutes 2) plunge them into boiling water; boil for 1 minute, remove the pan from the heat, and leave them to stand for 3 minutes before taking them out of the hot water; 3) put the eggs into a saucepan with cold water, heat and remove the eggs as soon as the water boils. Whichever method is chosen, ensure that the eggs are at room temperature before cooking them. The precise cooking time depends on personal preference those suggested in these methods give whites that are softly set and runny yolks. Increase the time slightly for firmly set whites and slightly set yolks.

When several eggs are to be boiled at once, they can be cooked together in a special egg holder.

All the following recipes given for soft boiled (soft cooked) eggs can also be used for poached eggs.

Soft boiled eggs Aladdin

Prepare some saffron flavoured rice au gras. Peel and dice some sweet peppers and fry them in oil together with some chopped onion. Spread the rice over the bottom of a hot dish and arrange the peppers in the center. Place the cooked eggs in a circle round the peppers. Cover with tomato sauce seasoned with a pinch.

Soft boiled eggs Amelie

Prepare some cream sauce and some roasts cooked in cream. Make some croustades with puff pastry. Prepare a fine mirepoix of vegetables cooked slowly in butter and deglaze the pan with a little Madeira. Reheat the croustades, fill them with the mirepoix, and place a soft boiled (soft cooked) egg in each. Coat the eggs with the cream sauce and garnish with the morels

Soft –boiled eggs beranger

Make a shortcrust pastry (basic pie dough) flan case and bake it blind in a preheated oven at 200 °C (400 °F, gas 6). Line it with a fairly thick onion puree. Arrange the cooked eggs on top and coat them with Mornay Sauce, sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter and brown quickly in a pre-heated oven.

Soft boiled eggs Berlioz

Make some oval croustades with duchess potato mixture and brown them lightly in a preheated oven. Fill them with a salpicon of truffles and mushrooms blended with a very reduced Madeira sauce and place a cooked egg on each. Coat very light with supreme sauce.

Garnish the center of each croustade with a cockscomb fried to Villeroi, if desired.

Soft boiled eggs bonvalet

Hollow out some rounds of bread and fry them in butter until golden. Place the cooked eggs in the hollows and coat them with veloute sauce. Surround with a ring of very thick, tomato flavoured béarnaise sauce and garnish each egg with a slice of truffle that has been heated through in butter.

Soft boiled eggs chenier

Make some saffron flavoured pilaf rice and shape it into small round cakes in individual ramekins. Place a cooked egg on

Of each one and surround with slices of fried aubergine (eggplant). Coat with tomato sauce.

Egg Cup

A small wooden, metal or china cup designed as a holder for boiled eggs and placed on a saucer or plate. Sets of two, four or six egg cups are often presented together on a tray.

Called oviere in France in the Middle Ages, coquetiers (or coquetieres) in the 16th century were little tables with a cover and several cavities where the eggs were placed. The egg stands often incorporated a salt cellar. Today a cocuetiere is an egg holder used for boiling several eggs at the same time.

EGG CUSTARD

The name often given to a baked sweet custard, a dessert made by pouring sweetened hot milk on to a beaten egg lightly sweetened with caster (superfine) sugar. The milk is usually flavoured with vanilla. The custard is cooked in one large dish or individual moulds in bain marie in the oven. The same, or a similar, mixture may be cooked in a part baked pastry case (pie shell) to make custard tart.

RECIPE

Egg custard

Boil 1 litre (1-3/4 pints, 4-1/3 cups) milk 125 g (4-1/3 oz. , 1/2 cup) caster (superfine) sugar and a vanilla pod (bean). Beat 4 eggs lightly in a deep bowl. Gradually pour the boiling milk over the eggs, stirring constantly. Strain into an ovenproof dish or into ramekins and cook in a bain marie in a preheated oven at 160°C (325 °F gas 3) for about 40 minutes. Serve cold.

EGGNOG

A nourishing drink served either hot or cold. To make it, beat an egg yolk with a tablespoon of sugar. Add a glass of hot milk and lace with rum or brandy.

Proper Montagne gave a recipe for beer eggnog (lait de poule a la biere), a German specialty that they call Biersuppe. It is actually more like a substantial soup.

RECIPE

Eggnog with beer

Boil 2 litres (3 1/2 pints, 9 cups) pale ale with 500 g (18 oz. 2-1/4 cups) sugar, a pinch of salt, a little grated lemon zest and a pinch of ground cinnamon. Add 8 egg yolks beaten with 1 tablespoon cold milk, strain and chill. Soak 125 g (4-1/4 oz. 2/3 cup) each of raisins and currants in 500 ml (17 fl. Oz. 2 cups) warm water until plump. Drain well and add to the eggnog. Add a bowl of wholemeal, (wholewheat) croutons, just before serving.

EGG SAUCE

A hot English sauce made of diced hard boiled (hard cooked) eggs and butter, most often served with poached fish.

Scotch egg sauce is a béchamel sauce containing sieved hard boiled egg yolks and white cut into small strips. It is served with similar dishes.

RECIPE

Egg sauce

Boil 2 eggs for 10 minutes, then remove their shells and dice them. While still hot, add diced egg to 125 g (4-1/2oz 1/2 cup) melted butter, season with salt and pepper, and flavour with lemon juice . Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

EGG THREADS

Eggs poached in such a way that they form long threads, used to garnish consommé or soup . the raw eggs are lightly beaten and poured through a fine strainer into the boiling consommé.

The fine threads of eggs dropping through the strainer set instantly in the boiling liquid. They can be cooked in boiling water . They can be cooked in boiling water, drained, and added to thicker soups, such as vegetable soup, cream of watercress soup or cream of sorrel soup.

EGG TIMER

A Small gadget consisting of two transparent bulbs linked by a very narrow opening . The upper bulb contains sand or some other powdery material , which runs into the lower bulb in a given length of time. Many egg timers are designed so that the time taken for the sand to run through is 3 minutes , the average cooking time for a soft boiled (soft cooked) egg. Some are graded . From 3 to 5 minutes to suit varying tastes.

EGYPTIENNE , A L'

Describing various dishes using rice, aubergines (eggplants) or tomatoes, together or separately, Aubergines a Pegyptinne are stuffed with mixture of chopped aubergine pulp and onions and served with fried tomatoes. A garnish a Pegyptienne is made of fried aubergine rounds, rice pilaf and tomato fondue. The term also describes a mixed salad of rice with chicken livers, hams, mushrooms, artichoke hearts, peas, pulped tomatoes and red (bell) peppers. Fried eggs a Pegyptenne are served with tomato halves filled with saffron rice, and potage a l;egyptienne is a cream of rice soup made with leeks and onions softened in butter , sieved and then finished with milk.

RECIPE

Chicken medallions a Pegyptienne

Remove the breast from a raw chicken and trim and flatten them into round or oval medallions. Cut some large aubergines (eggplants) into rounds about 1 cm. (1/2 in) thick and sprinkle with lemon juice. Prepare some rice pilaf . Fry the chicken medallions and aubergine rounds separately in olive oil then arrange them alternatively round a serving dish. Fill the center of dish with rice pilaf . Deglaze the pan in which the chicken was cooked with white wine , add this juice to a thick and well seasoned tomato fondue, and serve separately in a sauceboat (gravy boat).

ELDER

A common European tree or shrub with aromatic flowers that are prepared as fritters. And used to flavour syrup or cordials, jams, vinegars and wine. Elderflower champagne , is a traditionally . British non-alcoholic , but sparkling , summertime drink . The young shoots ensure the best flavour and long life. These processes enable the biological and physio-chemical development of the wine to be controlled and are carried out in tanks, vats or more especially in small oak casks, which allow very slow aeration; they take a varying length of time from a few months in the case of Beaujolais and Muscadet to 1-2 years for Burgundy and Bordeaux, and at least 6 years for vins faunes.

EMBALLER

A French culinary term meaning to wrap up an article that is to be poached or stewed in stock (a large fish, stuffed cabbage, a balloine, any dish cooked in a caul). The food is wrapped in a pig's caul or a piece of muslin (cheesecloth) or linen, to hold it together while cooking in French charcuterie, emballer means to fill the moulds with a mixture to be cooked such as pate and galantines.

EMBOSSER

To put a piece of meat or stuffing in a net, skin or mould so as to give it its final form before cooking. The technique allows draining steaming, drying or smoking to be carried out without too much distortion or loss of weight.

EMINCES

A dish consisting of thin slices of left over meat, (roast, braised or boiled) placed in an ovenproof dish, covered with a sauce, and gently heated in the oven. (An emince is a thin slice of meat). Eminces are most often made with beef, lamb or mutton, sometimes with game (venison) and less frequently with pork, poultry or veal as white meats are always other when reheated.

Beef eminces are prepared with Madeira sauce and mushrooms, bordelaise sauce and slices of bone marrow, or with chasseur, lyonnaise, piquante, Robert, tomato (well reduced and highly seasoned). Or Italian sauce, they are accompanied by sautéed potatoes, green vegetables tossed in butter or cream, braised vegetables, purees, pasta or risotto. Venison eminces are covered with poivrade, grand veneur or chasseur sauce and serve with chesnut puree and redcurrant jelly. The sauce for mutton eminces are mushroom, tomato, paprika or Indian the accompanying vegetables are rice and courgette. Pork eminces are made with piquante. Robert or charcuterie sauce and served with a potato or split pea puree. Veal or poultry eminces are covered with tomato, royal or supreme sauce, the accompanying vegetables are the same as for beef eminces.

By extension, the word emince is also used for various other dishes made of items sliced thinly before cooking. In veal emince, for example, thin slices of veal cut from the noix (the fleshy upper part of the leg) are quickly fried and then covered with stock, gravy or sometimes cream; the dish is served with fried mushrooms.

RECIPE

Beef eminces with bordelaise sauce

Make some bordelaise sauce. Poach some slices of beef bone marrow in stock. Arrange thin slices of boiled beef on a lightly buttered ovenproof dish and garnish with the hot slices of bone marrow. Generally coat with bordelaise sauce and heat through gently in the oven.

Beef eminces with mushrooms

Arrange some thin slices of boiled beef in a long ovenproof dish. Prepare some Madeira sauce. Trim and slice some mushrooms on the meat and cover generously with hot Madeira sauce, heat through gently in the oven.

Veal or chicken eminces a blanc

Lightly butter an ovenproof dish. Cut some poached or boiled veal or chicken into thin slices. These slices can then be treated as for beef eminces with mushrooms, or they can be coated with tomato, Breton, royal or supreme sauce.

EMMENTAL

A Swiss unpasteurized cow's milk cheese containing 45% fat, named after the Emme valley in the canton of Bern, where it was first made. It is a hard, ivory coloured cheese with a good many holes and a golden yellow to brown rind. Emmental is matured for 6 – 12 months in a color edges, 80 –85 cm (31-34 in) in diameter, 22 cm (8 1/4 inch) thick, and weighing 80 – 100 kg. (176-220 lbs) . The edge of the cheese bears the word Switzerland stamped in red .

The cheese was introduced into Haute –Savoie in the middle of the 19th by German Swiss immigrants , and a Savoy Emmental, made in the cheese dairies of Savoy , is a similar in appearance and flavour to the Swiss , is very similar in appearance and flavour to the Swiss cheese. It is marketed in wheel shapes. 70 –100 cm (27-1/2 –39 in) in diameter, 13-25 cm (5-10 in) thick and weighing 60-130 kg (132-286 lbs) Swiss and Savoy Emmmentals are used for the table.

Another type of French Emmental (also spelled Emmental) produced in the flatter regions of France, such as Franche-Comte and Burgundy, it is matured for 2 months in a warm cellar and resembles Gruyere, with large holes. It is used for cooking (especially grated). A similar cheese is made in the United States , known as American lace.

RECIPE

Croque-Emmental

Place a slice of ham on a slice of Emmental or Gruyere (cut to half the size of the ham slice), fold over and secure with a cocktail stick (toothpick). Coat with flour, then dip in batter and fry in hot oil . Put a fried egg on each croque-Emmental and serve very hot.

EMPANADA

A pie or pasty filled with meat or fish, popular all over Spain and in parts of South America. The Classic empanada comes from Galicia and is made with chicken, onions and peppers . It can also be made with seafood, sardines, eel or lamprey. Formerly made with bread dough, empanada is now usually made with flaky pastry and often eaten cold. It is also prepared in the form of small individual pies.

In Chile and Argentina, empanada are small pastries with scalloped edges. They are filled with a mixture of minced (ground) meat, raisins, olives and onions, spiced with pepper, paprika and cumin. They are served as a hot hors d'oeuvre or snack with wine.

RECIPE

Empanada

Cut 500 g (18oz) lean beef into small cubes and cook gently a little oil with 100 g (4 oz, 2/3 cup) chopped onions, ½ needed and diced sweet (bell) green pepper and leaf pimiento (ignara), 1 teaspoon ground cumin and 1 crushed garlic clove. When the meat is cooked, add 2 tablespoons raisins, previously soaked, and 1 chopped hard boiled (hard cooked eggs). Put a layer of this mixture on a piece of pastry and make little pasties. Bake in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) for 30 minutes and serve Very hot.

EMPEROR FISH

Fish of the Beryciform family, which lives at great depths in the eastern Atlantic, from Ireland to Spain and in the Pacific around New Zealand. It is about 60 cm (2 ft) long, and is identified by its red colour and by its dorsal fin being longer than its anal fin. Sold as fillets, its excellent flesh is similar to that of monkfish, and it is cooled in the same way.

EMULSION

A preparation obtained by dispersing one kind of liquid (in the form of tiny droplets) in another liquid, with which it does not mix. An emulsion consisting of fatty substance, such as oil or butter, dispersed in vinegar, water or lemon juice will only remain smooth and stable if it is bound with an emulsifier, usually egg yolk. This preparation is the basis of emulsified sauces, such as hollandaise, mousseline and their derivatives. Milk is a natural emulsion consisting of globules of cream suspended in a watery solution containing protein (which acts as an emulsifier).

EN-CAS

The French term of a light meal, usually cold, eaten between main meals (the word literally means in case of hunger in this context). In the old chateaux, an en-cas de nuit, consisting of cheese, fruit and cold meats was arranged on a pedestal table for the refreshment of travelers returning home late at night. At Versailles the king's en-cas de nuit consisted of three loaves, two bottles of wine and a carafe of water. Wishing to publicize his support for Moliere, Louis XIV invited him to share his snack, in order to teach a lesson to the courtiers who refused to allow the famous dramatist to sit at their table.

ENCHAUD

A speciality from Perigord consisting of a piece of bone pork fillet (tenderloin) rolled up, tied with string and cooked in the oven in a casserole. It can also be stuffed. Cold enchaud is particularly delicious.

RECIPE

Enchaud

Take a piece of pork fillet (tenderloin) weighing about 1.5 kg (3-1/4 lb), and keep the bone. Spread out the fillet on the work surface. Season with salt and pepper, sprinkle lightly with crushed thyme and insert small pieces of garlic. Roll up the meat tightly, tie it up with a string and keep it cool.

The next day, heat 2 tablespoons lard (shortening) in a flameproof casserole and brown the enchaud of all sides. Add a small glass of warm water, a sprig of thyme and the pork bone. Season with salt and pepper. Cover and seal the lid with a flour and water paste. Cook and seal the lid with a flour and water paste. Cook in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) for about 2 hours. When the enchaud is cooked, drain it and keep it hot on the serving dish. Remove the bone and the thyme from the casserole and skim as much fat as possible from the cooking juices; add 4 tablespoons stock and reduce. Serve the enchaud with the sauce, accompanied by potatoes sautéed with garlic.

The garlic can be replaced by small sticks of truffle. In this case, the pork is stuffed with about 400 g (14 oz, 1-1/4 cups) well-seasoned fine forcemeat, to which 1 teaspoon brandy and some truffle peel have been added. Roll up and cook the enchaud as in the previous method and serve cold, with a salad dressed with walnut oil.

Clean the endive, rinse it and dry it as thoroughly as possible. Season with a sizzling-hot bacon strips over the top. Tiny fried garlic-flavoured croutons are usually added. Serve immediately.

Stewed Endive

Prepare the endive as for braising, and place it in a saucepan with 50 g (2 oz 1/4 cup) butter for each 450g (1 lb) endive. Season, add 500-600 ml (17-20 fl oz, 2-2 1/4 cups) water, cover and cook in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) for 1 1/2 hours. When cooked, the endive may be tossed in butter, reduce cream or béchamel sauce just before serving.

ENTRECOTE (RIB STEAK) a piece of prime quality beef, which should be cut from between two ribs hence the name. However, it is usually cut from the boned set of ribs. Marbled and tender, entrecote steak should be grilled (broiled) or fried. Steaks cut from the lower ribs are prepared in the same way but tend to be fatter. Ideally, the steak should be about 2 cm (¾ in) thick, flat and well trimmed, with just a thin margin of fat, which is cut at intervals to prevent it curling up during cooking.

The following is an interesting account of a method of barbecuing entrecote over vine shoots.

Letter to gourmets, gourmands, gastronomes, and gluttons,

Grilled Fried It doesn't matter, The only essential thing is that it should be properly sealed. Season well and brown until it is slightly charred outside but bright red inside. In passing, let us make a recommendation to the profane, do not scorn the end of the entrecote steak, the crusty part. It is delicious. The entrecote steak has a penchant for shallots, which is where the famous entrecote maitre de chai comes from.

RECIPES

Fried entrecote

Season the steak with salt and pepper. Melt some butter in a frying pan. When it bubbles, add the steak and brown both sides over a high heat. Then drain, arrange on the serving dish, and garnish with a knob of butter (plain butter, maitre d'hotel butter or marchand de vin butter) Alternatively, serve with a red wine sauce or sprinkle with the cooking butter plus a few drops of lemon juice and some chopped parsley.

Fried entrecote a la bourguignonne

Fry a 400-500 g (14-18 oz) steak in butter, drain and keep hot on the serving dish. Pour 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) each of red wine and demiglace into the frying pan and heat until reduced, then coat the steak with this sauce.

The demi-glace can be replaced by the same amount of well-reduced consomme bound with 1 teaspoon beurre manie.

Fried entrecote a la fermiere

Prepare about 450 g (1 lb) vegetable ondule. Fry a 450 g (1 lb) steak in butter, place in a serving dish and keep hot. Surround with the vegetable fondue. Deglaze the pan with 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) white wine and the same amount of beef consomme, reduce and bind with 1 teaspoon beurre manie. Pour this sauce over the steak.

Fried entrecote a la hongroise

Season a 450 g (1 lb) steak, then fry it in butter. When it is three-quarters cooked, add 1 tablespoon chopped onion. Drain the steak place it on a serving dish and keep hot. Finish cooking the onions, add a little paprika and adjust the seasoning. Deglaze the frying pan with 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) white wine and the same amount of veloute. Reheat and pour over the steak. Serve with boiled potatoes.

Fried entrecote a la lyonnaise

Thinly slice 2 large onions and fry them gently in butter. Fry a 450 g (1 lb) steak in butter, when three-quarters cooked, add the onions. When cooked, drain the steak and onion, place in a serving dish and keep hot. Deglaze the frying pan with 2 tablespoons vinegar and 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) demi-glace. Reduce, stir in 1 tablespoon chopped parsley and pour over the steak. (The demi-glace can be replaced with reduced consomme bound with 1 teaspoon beurre manie).

Fried entrecote with mushrooms

Fry a 450 g (1 lb) steak in butter. When three quarters cooked, add 8-10 mushroom caps to the frying pan. Place the steak in a serving dish and keep hot. Finish cooking the mushrooms, then arrange them around the steak. Deglaze the frying pan with 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) each of white wine and demi-glace, and reduce. Sieve, add 1 tablespoon fresh butter, stir and pour the sauce over the steak.

Instead of demi-glace, the same quantity of well reduced consomme bound with 1 teaspoon beurre manie can be used.

Grilled entrecote

Lightly brush the steak with oil or melted butter, season with salt and pepper and cook over very hot wood charcoal or grill (broil) in a vertical grill, under the grill (broiler) of the cooker (stove) or over an iron grill. The surface of the steak must be sealed so that the juices will not escape. (Some cooks advise against seasoning with salt before cooking because this draws out the blood.) Serve with chateau potatoes, bunches of cress and bearnaise sauce (separately), if liked.

Grilled entrecote ala bordelaise

In the authentic recipe, the steak is simply grilled (broiled) over vine-shoot embers, seasoned, then served with a knob of butter. However, in certain gastronomic circles, the steak is grilled, garnished with slices of beef bone marrow poached in stock and sprinkled with chopped parsley. It is served with bordelaise sauce.

ENTRE-DEUX-MERS An AOC white wine from the Bordeaux region. Some red wine is also produced from Merlot and Cabernet Sauvignon grapes and is sold as Bordeaux AOC. The production area is between two rivers, the Garonne and Dordogne, hence a name which means between two seas. White wines sold as Entre-Deux-Mers AOC are dry, crisp and fruity and are made mainly from Sauvignon Blanc, Semillon, Muscadelle and Ugni Blanc grapes. They provide a good accompaniment to most fish and shellfish dishes, including the oysters that are a speciality of the Gironde region.

ENTRÉE Today, the entrée is usually the main course of a meal, but in a full French menu, it is the third course, following the hors d'oeuvre (or soup) and the fish, course and preceding the roast. At a grand dinner, the entrée is either a hot dish in a sauce or a cold dish. Mixed entrees are composite dishes, such as croustades and timbales. When more than one entrée is served, they must be clearly differentiated. Distinctions were formerly made between entrees volantes de boucherie (meat entrees) entrees d'abats (offal entrees) and entrees diverses (various entrees).

With the trend towards simplification and reduction in the number of courses, modern menus usually centre on a main dish, preceded by a starter and followed by a salad, cheese and dessert. In the Middle Ages, entrees included such items as crystallized (candied) melon peel, oyster tarts, andouillettes, forcemeats and cheese ramekins. Today (when present) they include fish, shellfish, caviar, foie gras, fish terrine, pasta dishes (such as gnocchi, macaroni, spaghetti and ravioli), quenelles, savoury pastries (such as quiches, patties, timbales, tarts and vol-au-vent) egg dishes (including souffles) and even vegetable dishes (artichokes and asparagus) In theory cold charcuterie, fish in marinades or oil, raw vegetables, mixed salads, melon and radishes are considered to be hors d'oeuvre.

ENTREMETS The sweet course, which in France is always served after the cheese (the word is also used to mean a specific dessert), Formerly, all the dishes served after the roast, including vegetables and sweets, were called entremets (the word literally means between dishes) In the royal households of the Middle Ages, the entremets were a real show piece, being accompanied by music, juggling and dancing. In restaurants, the word still embraces the vegetable dishes (which in large establishments are the responsibility of the entremetier), as well as the entremets de cuisine (souffles, savoury pancakes and fritters, pastries, croquettes and omelettes) and the desserts. The latter are subdivided into three categories.

HOT ENTREMETS. Fritters, pancakes, flamed fruits, sweet omelettes and souffles.

COLD ENTREMETS Bavarian creams, blancmanges, charlottes, compotes, pastries, creams, chilled fruits, meringues, puddings, rice or semolina desserts and moulds, often with fruit.

ICE ENTREMETS fruit ice creams, sorbets, iced cups, frosted fruits, ice cream, cakes, bombes, mousses, parfaits, souffles and vacherins.

From the Middle Ages to the 19th century. Taillevent proposed the following as entremets frumenty, broth, oyster stew, rice pudding, fish jelly, stuffed poultry, almond milk with figs. All these dishes were served throughout the meal, alternating with the roasts and fish dishes, and mixing sweet and savoury. Certain spectacular entremets, such as swan in its skin and all its feathers, were purely decorative showpieces, presented with great pomp and musical accompaniment.

EPEE DE BOIS a Parisian taven that was situated in the Rue Quancampoix, is a 16th the tavern became the meeting place of dancing masters and violin master, who later established the Academie de Danse, which formed the nucleus of the paris Opera in 1719, financier called law set up his bank in the same street, and the taven served as a meeting palce for speculators and money lenders. It is said that the tavern was frequency lenders. It is said that the tavern was frequented by Abbe Prevoust who probably wrote a large part of Manon Lescaul there.

EPIGRAMME A dish consisting of two cuts of lamb, both cooked dry. These two pieces are a slice of breast and a cutlet or chop, dipped in egg and breadcrumbs and grilled or fried.

Phleas Gibert explain the origins of the term epigramme as follows. It was towards the middle of the 18th century. One day a young marquise overheard one of her guests at table remark that when he was dining the previous evening with the Connie de Vaudreuil he was charmingly received and, furthermore, had a feast of excellent epigram. The marquise, through pretty and elegant, was somewhat ignorant of the meaning of words, she later summoned Michellet, her chef. Michelet, she said to him shall require a dish of epigrammes.

The chef withdrew, pondering the problem. He looked up old recipes, but found no reference to anything of the kind. None of his colleagues had ever heard of the dish. But no French master chef is ever at a loss. Since he could discover nothing about the dish, he set about inventing one. Next day, inspiration came and he created a most delicate dish.

At dinner, the guests fell into ecstasies over the dish put before them and after complimenting the lady of the house, desired to know its name. The chef was called. With perfect composure he replied, Epigrammes of lamb a la Michele

Everyone laughed. The marguise was triumphant, though she could not understand the amusement of her guest. From that moment, the culinary repertori of France was enriched by a name still used to this day.

But whereas this name was originally used for slices of breast of lamb dipped in breadcrumbs, fried in butter, and arranged in a circle round a blaquette of lamb, by the end of the 18th century it had been completely transformed into what it is today, cutlets as well as slices of breast, dipped in egg and breadcrumbs and fried in butter or grilled.

RECIPE

Epigrammes

Braise a breast of lamb, or poach it in a small quantity of light stock. Drain and bone the meat, and cool it in a press. Cut it into equal portions and coat with egg and breadcrumbs. Coat the same number of lamb cutlets with egg and breadcrumbs. The cutlets and breast portions should then be grilled (broiled) or fried in butter and oil, and arranged in a round dish. Garnish the cutlet bones with paper frills, then put a few spoonfuls of reduced and sieved braising stock around the epigrammes. Garnish with glazed vegetables carrots, turnips and baby onions mushrooms, tomatoes fried in oil, or subergine (eggplant) fritters, arranged in the centre of the dish.

ESAU The name of this biblical character, who sold his birthright to his brother Jacob for a mess of pottage, is given to a thickened soup made from lentil puree and white stock or consommé. This also serves as a basis for other soups, such as Conti. Soft boiled or poached eggs Esau are arranged on lentil puree, garnished with heart shaped croutons, and coated with concentrated veal stock with butter added. Alternatively, the eggs are arranged in a croustade of crustless bread, fried, hollowed out and filled with lentil puree, the whole is covered with concentrated veal stock with butter added.

ESCABECHE A spicy cold marinade intended for preserving cooked foods and originating in Spain. It is used chiefly for small cooked fish (sardines, mackerel, smelt, whiting red mullet) The fish are headed (hence the name from cabeza, head) then fried or lightly browned, they are then marinated for 24 hours in a cooked and spiced marinade. The fish then keep for up to a week in a refrigerator.

The preparation has spread throughout the Mediterranean region, it is called escabèche in North Africa, escabechio or scanvece in Italy and escabeche in Belgium. In Berry a similar preparation of fried gudgeon is called a la cascadeche. Escabeche is also used for poultry and game birds. In Spain partridge is fried quickly in oil with garlic, then drained and marinated in its cooking juices with spices and served cold. In Chile, chicken in escabeche is prepared in the same way and served cold with lemon and onions.

RECIPE

Fish in escabeche

Gut some small fish (smelt, sand eels, weavers) and remove the heads, clean, wash and wipe the fish. Dip in flour and fry in olive oil until golden. Drain and arrange in an earthenware dish. Slice an onion and a carrot thinly. Heat the oil used for cooking the fish until it begins to smoke, then fry the onion and carrot and 5-6 unpeeled garlic cloves for a few moments. Remove from the heat and add 150 ml (1/4 cup) water. Add a bouquet garni containing plenty of thyme and season with salt, pepper, a pinch of cayenne pepper, and a few coriander seeds. Cook for about 15 minutes, then pour the boiling marinade over the fish and leave to marinate for at least 24 hours. Serve as an hors d'oeuvre.

ESCALOPE (SCALLOP) A thin slice of white meat. The word comes from the Old French eschalope (nutshell) probably because the slice tends to curl up during cooking (it is sometimes snapped on one side to prevent the flesh from shrinking) If taken from the fillet, veal escalopes are usually tender and lean, escalopes from lower down the leg are fatter and more sinewy. Italian scaloppine (small scalloped) prepared as saltimbocca or piccata, are breast or wing may be prepared in the same ways as veal.

RECIPES

Escalopes à la mandelle

Flatten some escalopes (scallops) sprinkle them with salt and pepper and sauté in clarified butter until golden. Then flame in Cognac, using 1 tablespoon.Cognac for 4 escalopes.Cover each with a thin slice of Gruyere or Cornte cheese and sprinkle with a few dried breadcrumbs. Moisten with melted butter and brown in a preheated oven at 240 oC (475 oF, gas 9) Prepare 250 g (9 oz, 3 cups) mushrooms and sauté them in the butter in which the escalopes were cooked.Add 2 tablespoons tomato puree (paste and 250 ml (8 ft oz, 1 cup) reduced consommé, cook for about 5 minutes.Adjust the seasoning and serve this sauce with the escalopes.

Escalopes a l anversoise

Cut some round slices of bread, 1 cm (½ in) thick, and fry them in butter. Lightly fry some very small new potatoes in butter, and prepare some hope shoots in cream,. Flatten some round escalopes (scallops) sprinkle with salt and pepper, and sauté them in a frying pan containing clarified butter.Drain and arrange while hot on the fried bread slices.Add to the frying pan a little white wine or beer and some very concentrated consommé. Reduce to a sauce and pour over the escalopes.Serve piping hot with the potatoes and the hop shoots.

Escalopes casimir

Slowly cook in butter as many artichoke hearts as there are escaloeps (scallops) Stew 4 tablespoons julienne of carrots in butter and separately, a little julienne of truffles.Cut some escalopes from the fillet, flatten them, season with salt, pepper and paprika, then sauté in clarified butter, halfway through cooking, and 1 tablespoon chopped onion. Arrange the artichoke hearts in the serving dish, place an escalope on each one and garnish with the julienne of carrots. Add some cream to the pan juices from the escaloeps and reduce. Coat the escalopes with this sauce and garnish with the julienne of truffles.

Escalopes with attbergines and courgettes

Slice, without peeling, 2 mediuym sized courgette (zucchini) and a choice aubergine (eggplant) Saute them in seasoned olive oil in a frying pan. Cut 4 escalopes (scallops) flatten them, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and sauté in clarified butter.Arrange them in a serving dish,. Garnish with the aubergit e and courgettes, and keep hot. Add to the pan juices 5 tablespoons white wine and 2-3 tablespoons meat juices, reduce by half. Add a small chopped garlic clove and reduce further. Pour the sauce over the escalopes and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

ESCALOPER A French culinary term meaning to carve thin slices (escaloeps) of meat, such as veal or poultry, large, fish filets, lobster or a certain vegetables, such as mushroom caps or artichoke hearts.

ESCARGOT AUX RAISINS. Swiss brioche made with a sausage of dough rolled up like a snail, spread with confectioner's custard (pastry cream) and raisins, and sometimes flavoured with kirsch. It is then iced with a white fondant (frosting)

ESCAROLE A vegetable, also called Batavia, similar to curly endive (chicory) but with broader leaves (which are fairly curly and very crisp. It usually has a heart of while leaves edged with yellow.

\ Escarole is generally eaten raw, in a green salad, (often with seasoning flavoured with mustard or shallots) possibly with tomatoes or scalded French (green), possibly with tomatoes or scalded French (green) beans, or in a winter salad with nuts and raisins. It can also be cooked like spinach.

ESPAGNOLE, AL;A The name of several preparations inspired by Spanish cuisine. The main ingredients are tomatoes, sweet (bell) peppers onions and garlic, usually fried in oil. The garnish a espagnole, used for small sautéed or lightly braised items, consist of tomatoes, stuffed with tomato flavoured rice, braised sweet peppers, small braised onions and Madeira sauce. Mayonnaise a espagnole contains chopped ham, mustard, a dash of garlic and red pepper.

There are a considerable number of ways to cook eggs a espagnole Soft boiled or poached eggs are arranged on cooked tomatoes with a salpicon of sweet peppers coated with tomato sauce and garnished with fried onion rings. Bakes eggs are arranged on a bed of finely sliced onions an garnished with tomato sauce fried diced pepper, halves of tomato and fried onion rings, they are served with a tomato sauce to which a salpicon of sweet peppers has been added. Scrambled eggs are garnished with diced tomatoes and pepper and served with fried onion rings.

RECIPES

Calfs liver a espagnole

Season slices of calf's liver with salt and peper. Coat with flour and sauté them in oil. Arrange the liver slices on tomatoes that have been softened in olive oil and seasoned with garlic. Garnish with fried onion rings and fried curly parsley.

Poached eggs a l espagnole

Coat some onion rings in flour and fry them in oil. Prepare a salpicon of slowly cooked sweet (bell) peppers in a tomato sauce flavoured with a dash of cayenne pepper. Cut the ends off some tomatoes and cook the tomatoes in oil. Garnish each tomato with a little of the salpicon and top with a poached egg. Place the onion rings in the centre of a serving dish,. Arrange the tomatoes and eggs around them, and coat the eggs with tomato sauce.

Ragour of sweet peppers a I espagnole

Seed and peel 6 sweet (bell) peppers, and cut them into large strips. Fry 100 g (4 oz. 2/3 cup) finely sliced onions in some olive oil in a shallow frying pan. Add the strips of pepper, some salt, pink pepper, and a large crushed garlic clove. Stir in 1 tablespoon and 2 tablespoons tomato puree (paste). Cook very gently, covered, for 35 minutes. Adjust the seasoning. Serve in a vegetable dish sprinded with chopped parsley.

Soft boiled eggs a I espagnole

Coat some soft boiled (soft cooked) eggs with meat aspic to which a little tomato puree (paste) has been added. Garnish each egg with a blanched onion ring with a pinch of chopped parley in the centre. This should stick to the half set jelly. Spread a mixture of mustard and butter on some round slices of toast and place in egg on each slice. Hollow out some very small tomatoes and marinate them in a mixture of oil, vinegar, salt and pepper. Fill them with diced green (bell) peppers seasoned with vinaigrette and place them around the eggs.

Spanish omelette

Dice some sweet (bell) peppers and cook them slowly in olive oil. Cut some tomato pulp into cubes, add a little garlic and some chopped parsley, and fry briskly in butter. Beat some eggs and add some of the sweet peppers and tomato pulp (1 large tablespoon of each vegetable for 6 eggs). Season with salt and pepper. Make an omelette, roll it up and serve with a highly seasoned tomato sauce.

ESPAGNOLE SAUCE A brown sauce, which is used as a basis for a large number of derivative brown sauces, such as Robert, genevoise, bordelaise, berycy. Madeira and Perigueux. It is made with a brown stock to which a brown roux and mirepoix are added, followed by a tomato puree. Cooking takes several hours and the sauce needs to be skimmed, stirred and strained when a particular stage in the cooking is reached. The meat stock may be replaced by a fish stock, depending on the requirements of the particular recipe. Careme's recipe is considered to be the classic method of preparing an espagnole sauce. Nowadays, a shoulder of veal is used instead of a noix, and partridge is not used in the stock.

RECIPES

Espagnole sauce (1)

(From Caremes' recipe) put 2 slices of Bayonne ham into a deep saucepan. Place a noix of veal and 2 partridges on top. Add enough stock to cover the veal only. Reduce the liquid rapidly, then lower the heat until the stock is reduced to a coating on the bottom of the pan. Remove it from the heat. Prick the noix of veal with the point of a knife so that its juice mingle with the stock. Put the saucepan back over a low heat for about 20 minutes. Watch the liquid as it gradually turns darker.

To simplify this operation, scrape off a little of the essence with the point of a knife. Roll it between the fingers. If it is not ready, it will make the fingers stick together.

Remove the saucepan from the heat and set it aside for 15 minutes for the essence to cool. Fill the saucepan with clear soup or stock and heat very slowly.

Strain through cloth into a bowl, stirring from time to time with a wooden spoon so that no skin forms on the surface, as easily happens when the sauce is exposed to the air.

ESROM A semi-hard Danish cow's-milk cheese made in flat rectangular shapes and sold wrapped in foil. The pale yellow paste is supple with irregular small holes. The flavour is quite rich and aromatic and the mature cheese is quite spicy. It is served on open sandwiches.

ESSAI The ceremony of tasting the king's food and drink at the French royal courts. The cups used for tasting were also called essals.

The fear of poisoning in the Middle Ages gave rise to a complicated ceremonial attending the sovereign's meals. In France, this was minutely regulated by court etiquette, which continued with slight modifications until the Revolution, to be revived under the Empire.

The knife, fork, spoon, salt cellar, spices and napkin were locked in the cadenas, or nef. The maitre d hotel rubbed all the cutlery and the dishes with balls of breadcrumbs which he made sure were eaten by the squares of the pantry, who previously, had subjected the servants who had handed them the dishes to the same ordeal.

The same ceremonial took place for the queen. By special favour, Louis XIV bestowed the same prerogative upon the daupine.

ESSENCE (EXTRACT) A concentrated aromatic liquid used either to enhance the flavour of certain culinary preparations or to flavour certain foods that have little or no flavour of their own. They are plant extracts obtained by distillation or infusion and include lemon oil, rose oil and essence of oranges, cinnamon and vanilla. Natural essences are obtained by three methods by extracting the essential oil of a fruit or a spice (lemon, bitter almond, orange, rose, cinnamon) by reducing an infusion or a cooking liquid (mushroom, tarragon, chervil, tomato, game carcass, fish trimmings) or by infusing or marinating items in either wine or vinegar (truffles, onions, garlic, anchovy).

Essence sold commercially sometimes contain artificial flavourings and colourings.

ESSENTIAL OIL An oily substance which has a strong flavour and is extracted from the flowers, fruit, leaves, seeds, resin or roots of certain plants. Essential oils are used principally in the perfume industry and in aromatherapy but they are also used to flavour food. Examples are citrus oils, almond oil and peppermint oil.

ESTAMINENT Until the 18th century in France, an estaminet was a café where people could drink beer and wine, and were permitted to smoke. Today, the term is rare and often pejorative, being used in northern France and Belgium to designate a bistro or, more specifically, the room in a café reserved for smokers. It derives from a word of Germanic origin meaning column (the ceilings of tavern rooms were supported by wooden columns)

ESTOFINADO A local name in Provence for salt cod a la provencale (it is also called stoficado, estoficado and stocaficado) The word is a Provençal transcription of stockfish. In Marseille and Saint Tropez, the dish is a well seasoned ragout of salt cod cooked with tomatoes, onions, garlic, olive oil and various spices.

Under the name stoficado, it is also a speciality of Aveyron, especially at Villefranche-de-Rouergue and Decazeville, the cod is poached and mixed with potatoes. The mixture is then mashed with very hot walnut oil, butter, garlic, parsley, beaten raw eggs and cream.

There have been a number of theories to explain why salt cod has been so popular for such a long time in Provençal cookery. One suggestion is that recipes were brought back from the Netherlands and Scandinavia by southern French soldiers. Another seemingly more probable theory is that salt cod was introduced by northern European merchants travelling to the Italian cities. Its presence in the Rouergue could also be associated with the fact that it was introduced into the area when there was a constant trade in iron ore between the mines of Auvergne and the fishing port of Bordeaux.

RECIPE

Estofinado

Soak a stockfish in water for several hours, changing the water frequently to remove the salt. Scrape the skin carefully to remove the scales and cut the flesh into 5 cm (2 in) pieces. Fry 1 or 2 chopped onions lightly in 1 tablespoon oil in a large flameproof earthenware casserole. Then add 3 tomatoes, peeled seeded and chopped. Cook over a low heat for 4-5 minutes, stirring with a wooden spoon. Add 2-3 garlic cloves, peeled and chopped, a bouquet garni consisting of celery, parsley, basil, bay leaf and thyme, carefully tied together, and a pinch of cayenne pepper. Crushed anchovy or grated nutmeg could also be used to season if wished

Ragour of sweet peppers a l'espagnole

Seed and peel 6 sweet (bell) peppers, and cut them into large strips. Fry 100 g (4 oz. 2/3 cup) finely sliced onions in some olive oil in a shallow frying pan. Add the strips of pepper, some salt, pink pepper, and a large crushed garlic clove. Stir in 1 tablespoon and 2 tablespoons tomato puree (paste). Cook very gently, covered, for 35 minutes. Adjust the seasoning. Serve in a vegetable dish sprinkled with chopped parsley.

Soft boiled eggs a l'espagnole

Coat some soft boiled (soft cooked) eggs with meat aspic to which a little tomato puree (paste) has been added. Garnish each egg with a blanched onion ring with a pinch of chopped parsley in the centre. This should stick to the half set jelly. Spread a mixture of mustard and butter on some round slices of toast and place in egg on each slice. Hollow out some very small tomatoes and marinate them in a mixture of oil, vinegar, salt and pepper. Fill them with diced green (bell) peppers seasoned with vinaigrette and place them around the eggs.

Spanish omelette

Dice some sweet (bell) peppers and cook them slowly in olive oil. Cut some tomato pulp into cubes, add a little garlic and some chopped parsley, and fry briskly in butter. Beat some eggs and add some of the sweet peppers and tomato pulp (1 large tablespoon of each vegetable for 6 eggs). Season with salt and pepper. Make an omelette, roll it up and serve with a highly seasoned tomato sauce.

ESPAGNOLE SAUCE A brown sauce, which is used as a basis for a large number of derivative brown sauces, such as Robert, genevoise, bordelaise, bery. Madeira and Perigueux. It is made with a brown stock to which a brown roux and mirepoix are added, followed by a tomato puree. Cooking takes several hours and the sauce needs to be skimmed, stirred and strained when a particular stage in the cooking is reached. The meat stock may be replaced by a fish stock, depending on the requirements of the particular recipe. Careme

Ragour of sweet peppers a I espagnole

Seed and peel 6 sweet (bell) peppers, and cut them into large strips. Fry 100 g (4 oz. 2/3 cup) finely sliced onions in some olive oil in a shallow frying pan. Add the strips of pepper, some salt, pink pepper, and a large crushed garlic clove. Stir in 1 tablespoon and 2 tablespoons tomato puree (paste). Cook very gently, covered, for 35 minutes. Adjust the seasoning. Serve in a vegetable dish sprinkled with chopped parsley.

Soft boiled eggs a I espagnole

Coat some soft boiled (soft cooked) eggs with meat aspic to which a little tomato puree (paste) has been added. Garnish each egg with a blanched onion ring with a pinch of chopped parsley in the centre. This should stick to the half set jelly. Spread a mixture of mustard and butter on some round slices of toast and place in egg on each slice. Hollow out some very small tomatoes and marinate them in a mixture of oil, vinegar, salt and pepper. Fill them with diced green (bell) peppers seasoned with vinaigrette and place them around the eggs.

Spanish omelette

Dice some sweet (bell) peppers and cook them slowly in olive oil. Cut some tomato pulp into cubes, add a little garlic and some chopped parsley, and fry briskly in butter. Beat some eggs and add some of the sweet peppers and tomato pulp (1 large tablespoon of each vegetable for 6 eggs). Season with salt and pepper. Make an omelette, roll it up and serve with a highly seasoned tomato sauce.

ESPAGNOLE SAUCE A brown sauce, which is used as a basis for a large number of derivative brown sauces, such as Robert, genevoise, bordelaise, bery. Madeira and Perigueux. It is made with a brown stock to which a brown roux and mirepoix are added, followed by a tomato puree. Cooking takes several hours and the sauce needs to be skimmed, stirred and strained when a particular stage in the cooking is reached. The meat stock may be replaced by a fish stock, depending on the requirements of the particular recipe. Careme's recipe is considered to be the classic method of preparing an espagnole sauce. Nowadays, a shoulder of veal is used instead of a noix, and partridge is not used in the stock.

RECIPES

Espagnole sauce (1)

(From Careme's recipe) put 2 slices of Bayonne ham into a deep saucepan. Place a noix of veal and 2 partridges on top. Add enough stock to cover the veal only. Reduce the liquid rapidly, then lower the heat until the stock is reduced to a coating on the bottom of the pan. Remove it from the heat. Prick the noix of veal with the point of a knife so that its juice mingle with the stock. Put the saucepan back over a low heat for about 20 minutes. Watch the liquid as it gradually turns darker.

To simplify this operation, scrape off a little of the essence with the point of a knife. Roll it between the fingers. If it is not ready, it will make the fingers stick together.

Remove the saucepan from the heat and set it aside for 15 minutes for the essence to cool. Fill the saucepan with clear soup or stock and heat very slowly.

Strain through cloth into a bowl, stirring from time to time with a wooden spoon so that no skin forms on the surface, as easily happens when the sauce is exposed to the air.

ESROM A semi-hard Danish cow's-milk cheese made in flat rectangular shapes and sold wrapped in foil. The pale yellow paste is supple with irregular small holes. The flavour is quite rich and aromatic and the mature cheese is quite spicy. It is served on open sandwiches.

ESSAI The ceremony of tasting the king's food and drink at the French royal courts. The cups used for tasting were also called essals.

The fear of poisoning in the Middle Ages gave rise to a complicated ceremonial attending the sovereign's meals. In France, this was minutely regulated by court etiquette, which continued with slight modifications until the Revolution, to be revived under the Empire.

The knife, fork, spoon, salt cellar, spices and napkin were locked in the cadenas, or nef. The maitre d hotel rubbed all the cutlery and the dishes with balls of breadcrumbs which he made sure were eaten by the squares of the pantry, who previously, had subjected the servants who had handed them the dishes to the same ordeal.

The same ceremonial took place for the queen. By special favour, Louis XIV bestowed the same prerogative upon the daupine.

ESSENCE (EXTRACT) A concentrated aromatic liquid used either to enhance the flavour of certain culinary preparations or to flavour certain foods that have little or no flavour of their own. They are plant extracts obtained by distillation or infusion and include lemon oil, rose oil and essence of oranges, cinnamon and vanilla. Natural essences are obtained by three methods by extracting the essential oil of a fruit or a spice (lemon, bitter almond, orange, rose, cinnamon) by reducing an infusion or a cooking liquid (mushroom, tarragon, chervil, tomato, game carcass, fish trimmings) or by infusing or marinating items in either wine or vinegar (truffles, onions, garlic, anchovy).

Essence sold commercially sometimes contain artificial flavourings and colourings.

ESSENTIAL OIL An oily substance which has a strong flavour and is extracted from the flowers, fruit, leaves, seeds, resin or roots of certain plants. Essential oils are used principally in the perfume industry and in aromatherapy but they are also used to flavour food. Examples are citrus oils, almond oil and peppermint oil.

ESTAMINENT Until the 18th century in France, an estaminet was a café where people could drink beer and wine, and were permitted to smoke. Today, the term is rare and often pejorative, being used in northern France and Belgium to designate a bistro or, more specifically, the room in a café reserved for smokers. It derives from a word of Germanic origin meaning column (the ceilings of tavern rooms were supported by wooden columns)

ESTOFINADO A local name in Provence for salt cod a la provencale (it is also called stoficado, estoficado and stocaficado) The word is a Provencal transcription of stockfish. In Marseille and Saint Tropez, the dish is a well seasoned ragout of salt cod cooked with tomatoes, onions, garlic, olive oil and various spices.

Under the name stoficado, it is also a speciality of Aveyron, especially at Villefranche-de-Rouergue and Decazeville, the cod is poached and mixed with potatoes. The mixture is then mashed with very hot walnut oil, butter, garlic, parsley, beaten raw eggs and cream.

There have been a number of theories to explain why salt cod has been so popular for such a long time in Provençal cookery. One suggestion is that recipes were brought back from the Netherlands and Scandinavia by southern French soldiers. Another seemingly more probable theory is that salt cod was introduced by northern European merchants travelling to the Italian cities. Its presence in the Rouergue could also be associated with the fact that it was introduced into the area when there was a constant trade in iron ore between the mines of Auvergne and the fishing port of Bordeaux.

RECIPE

Estofinado

Soak a stockfish in water for several hours, changing the water frequently to remove the salt. Scrape the skin carefully to remove the scales and cut the flesh into 5 cm (2 in) pieces. Fry 1 or 2 chopped onions lightly in 1 tablespoon oil in a large flameproof earthenware casserole. Then add 3 tomatoes, peeled seeded and chopped. Cook over a low heat for 4-5 minutes, stirring with a wooden spoon. Add 2-3 garlic cloves, peeled and chopped, a bouquet garni consisting of celery, parsley, basil, bay leaf and thyme, carefully tied together, and a pinch of cayenne pepper. Crushed anchovy or grated nutmeg could also be used to season if wished. Place the pieces of fish in a larger pan and add 100 ml (4 fl oz, 7 tablespoons) white wine, the tomato mixture and enough water to cover the fish. Cook for 30 minutes over a low heat. Cut 4-6 potatoes into thick slices and add to the pan (one potato per person). Add a generous dash of Cognac, and 8 olives per person 5 minutes before the end of the cooking time. Remove the bouquet garni and serve.

ESTOUFFADE A dish whose ingredients are slow.

meals. In France, this was minutely regulated by court etiquette, which continued with slight modifications until the Revolution, to be revived under the Empire.

The knife, fork, spoon, salt cellar, spices and napkin were locked in the cadenas, or nef. The maitre d hotel rubbed all the cutlery and the dishes with balls of breadcrumbs which he made sure were eaten by the squares of the pantry, who previously, had subjected the servants who had handed them the dishes to the same ordeal.

The same ceremonial took place for the queen. By special favour, Louis XIV bestowed the same prerogative upon the daupine.

ESSENCE (EXTRACT) A concentrated aromatic liquid used either to enhance the flavour of certain culinary preparations or to flavour certain foods that have little or no flavour of their own. They are plant extracts obtained by distillation or infusion and include lemon oil, rose oil and essence of oranges, cinnamon and vanilla. Natural essences are obtained by three methods by extracting the essential oil of a fruit or a spice (lemon, bitter almond, orange, rose, cinnamon) by reducing an infusion or a cooking liquid (mushroom, tarragon, chervil, tomato, game carcass, fish trimmings) or by infusing or marinating items in either wine or vinegar (truffles, onions, garlic, anchovy).

Essence sold commercially sometimes contain artificial flavourings and colourings.

ESSENTIAL OIL An oily substance which has a strong flavour and is extracted from the flowers, fruit, leaves, seeds, resin or roots of certain plants. Essential oils are used principally in the perfume industry and in aromatherapy but they are also used to flavour food. Examples are citrus oils, almond oil and peppermint oil.

ESTAMINENT Until the 18th century in France, an estaminet was a café where people could drink beer and wine, and were permitted to smoke. Today, the term is rare and often pejorative, being used in northern France and Belgium to designate a bistro or, more specifically, the room in a café reserved for smokers. It derives from a word of Germanic origin meaning column (the ceilings of tavern rooms were supported by wooden columns)

ESTOFINADO A local name in Provence for salt cod a la provencale (it is also called stoficado, estoficado and stocaficado) The word is a Provençal transcription of stockfish. In Marseille and Saint Tropez, the dish is a well seasoned ragout of salt cod cooked with tomatoes, onions, garlic, olive oil and various spices.

Under the name stoficado, it is also a speciality of Aveyron, especially at Villefranche-de-Rouergue and Decazeville, the cod is poached and mixed with potatoes. The mixture is then mashed with very hot walnut oil, butter, garlic, parsley, beaten raw eggs and cream.

There have been a number of theories to explain why salt cod has been so popular for such a long time in Provençal cookery. One suggestion is that recipes were brought back from the Netherlands and Scandinavia by southern French soldiers. Another seemingly more probable theory is that salt cod was introduced by northern European merchants travelling to the Italian cities. Its presence in the Rouergue could also be associated with the fact that it was introduced into the area when there was a constant trade in iron ore between the mines of Auvergne and the fishing port of Bordeaux.

RECIPE

Estofinado

Soak a stockfish in water for several hours, changing the water frequently to remove the salt. Scrape the skin carefully to remove the scales and cut the flesh into 5 cm (2 in) pieces. Fry 1 or 2 chopped onions lightly in 1 tablespoon oil in a large flameproof earthenware casserole. Then add 3 tomatoes, peeled seeded and chopped. Cook over a low heat for 4-5 minutes, stirring with a wooden spoon. Add 2-3 garlic cloves, peeled and chopped, a bouquet garni consisting of celery, parsley, basil, bay leaf and thyme, carefully tied together, and a pinch of cayenne pepper. Crushed anchovy or grated nutmeg could also be used to season if wished. Place the pieces of fish in a larger pan and add 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) white wine, the tomato mixture and enough water to cover the fish. Cook for 30 minutes over a low heat. Cut 4-6 potatoes into thick slices and add to the pan (one potato per person) Add a generous dash of Cognac, and 8 olives per person 5 minutes before the end of the cooking time. Remove the bouquet garni and serve.

ESTOUFFADE A dish whose ingredients are slowly stewed. The word comes from the Italian stufato (a daube) and is applied most often to beef in wine sauce, with carrots and small onions.

In traditional cookery, estouffade is also a clear brown stock used to dilute brown sauces and moisten ragouts and braised dishes.

RECIPE

Estouffade of beef

Dice and blanch 300 g (11 oz. 15 slices) lean bacon. Brown the bacon in butter in a flameproof casserole, drain and set aside. Cut 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb) beef, half chuck steak, half rib, into cubes of about 100 g (4 oz) and brown in the same pan. Cut 3 onions into quarters, add them to the beef and brown. Season with salt, pepper, thyme, a bay leaf and a crushed garlic clove. Then stir in 2 tablespoons flour and add 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 ½ cups) red wine with an equal quantity of stock. Add a bouquet garni and bring to the boil. Cover and cook in a preheated oven at 160 oC (325oF, gas 3) for 2 ½-3 hours.

Drain the ragout in a sieve placed over an earthenware dish. Place the pieces of beef and the strips of bacon in a pan and add 300 g (11 oz. 3 ½ cups) sauted sliced mushrooms. Skin the fat from the cooking liquid strain and reduce. Pour it over the meat and mushrooms and simmer gently, covered, for about 25 minutes. Serve in a deep dish.

RECIPE

Estouffat of haricot beans a l'occitane

Brown a diced carrot and a sliced onion in either goose fat or lard in a pan. Add 1.5 litres (2 ¾ pints, 6 ½ cups) water and a bouquet garni, bring to the boil and simmer for about 20 minutes. Add 1.5 litres (2 ¾ pints 6 ½ cups) fresh white haricot (navy) beans and cook until almost tender, then drain. Cut 250 g (9 oz.) slightly salted belly bacon, blanch and brown in goose fat or lard. Add to the pan 150 g (5 oz. ¾ cup) chopped onions, 2 large tomatoes (peeled and crushed) and 1 crushed garlic clove, and cook for a further 10 minutes. Then add the drained beans, cover the pan and gently simmer until cooking is completed.

If liked, 200 g (7 oz) rind from preserved pork may be added to the bean cooking liquid. When cooked, the rind is cut into squares and added to the beans in the serving dish.

EWE A female shew. The ewes of breeds reared for meat are allowed to breed for 4-6 years and are then fattened up for slaughter (In the past, ewes were allowed to breed for longer before being slaughtered, but consumers today prefer meat with a milder flavour) Ewe's meat provides most of the joints sold as mutton.

Ewe's milk contains more fat than cow's milk (8.5% as opposed to 4%) It is used for making cheese that is traditionally manufactured in dry mountainous areas. The most famous is Roquefort, but other regions produce notable cheeses, including Broccio and Niolo from Corsica, Oloron and Laruns from Bearn, and Esbareich and Ameguy from the Basque region. Cachat and Rocamadour also deserve a mention.

In Spain and Portugal, the best cheeses are made from ewe's milk., for example, Hecho, Villalon and Serra, in Italy, Pecorino, and Flore Sardo are good ewe's milk cheeses. Liptal is the Hungarian national cheese. In Greece, the Balkans and the Brandza are the most common cheeses. Fresh ewe's milk chese is served with sugar or fresh cream. It may also be used for making tarts or as filling for puff pastry turnovers.

EWER A tall vessel formerly used for serving water at table for washing the hands at the start and finish of a meal rather than for drinking. It had a base, spout and handle and a tray or bowl beneath it to catch the water poured over the hands. Ewers were made of gold or silver until the 18th century, materials used later included powder, glazed earthenware and marble.

EXCELSIOR A cow's milk cheese from Normandy with 72% fat content. The skin is white with brown markings and the ivory coloured paste is soft, fine and dense in texture, with a mellow, slightly nutty, flavour.

Created in 1890, Excelsior is the oldest of the double or triple cream cheeses (along with Fin-de siecle, Explorateur, Lucullus and Brillat Savarin).

EXCELSIOR A garnish for lamb tournedos and noisettes that consists of braised lettuce and pommes fondantes The term also refers to a method of preparing sole, which is rolled into paupiettes, poached and arranged in a crown around diced lobster a la Neuburg. The fish is then coated in normande sauce and garnished with slices of truffice and prawn tails.

EXPLORATEUR Triple cream (75% fat content) soft cheese from the lie de France made from enriched unpasteurized cow's milk. It is a cylinder 8 cm (3 ¼ in) in diameter and 6 cm 2 ½ in) tall. Invented after World War II, it has a firm, very creamy texture.

EXTRA An adjective printed on French labels to denote particular features of certain products when they are marketed. In France, extra eggs have a special label with white letters on a red background and this indicates to the customer that they are fresh and have been packed within three days of being laid. They retain this label for seven days. Extra fruit and vegetables have a red label and are of superior quality. An extra gras cheese has a fat content of between 45% and 60% (and is also labelled as crème) An extra sec champagne is fairly dry (really dry champagne is labelled brut).

EXTRACT See essence.

F

FABADA The bean stew of the Asturians, in Northern Spain, made with large flat beans that melt in the mouth, salt pork (or salt beef), perhaps also fresh pork, chorizos, and the wrinkled, smoked morcilla, the local black pudding (blood sausage). It takes its name from the fava (broad bean) but these have long been replaced by the finest large kidney beans in Spain de la granja; use butter or dried lima beans outside Spain. One of Spain's three great bean pots, along with cocideo and olla podrida.

FAGGOT British specialty, a type of sausage or meatball, similar to French crepinette. A ball of minced (ground) offal (variety meats) and pork including kidney and liver, mixed with breadcrumbs, onion and well flavoured with herbs. Traditionally wrapped in caul fat and fried or baked. Once popular way of serving faggots is with cooked dried peats for (with mushy peas) and onions gravy.

FAIENCE A type of white or patterned pottery widely used for tableware. The earthenware is covered with tin glaze (lead glaze made opaque by the addition of tin ashes) so that the colour of the earthenware is completely masked. The pottery takes its name from the Italian town of Faenza.

Very little known about the origins of faience pottery, but from the very earliest times a brilliant vitreous lead glaze, coloured by means of metallic oxides, was known to potters. It is to be seen in the hypogeum of Ancient Egypt, on its vases, funeral images and also on the glazed bricks which decorated the walls of Nineveh and Babylon. The ancient mosques of Asia Minor have preserved for us the magnificent craftsmanship of the Persians, who passed on their skill to the Arabs.

From the 13th century there were important centres for the manufacture of faience in Spain, at Malaga and in Majorca, which gave its name to the Italian majolica. Up to the 17th century the most famous factories were in Valencia. But it was mainly through the discovery of tin glaze by Luca della Robbia towards the middle of the 15th century, that the ceramic industry was able to develop, first at Faenza and then in other Italian towns, notably Urbino, Gubbio, Druta, Durante, Venice, Milan and Turin.

In France in the 16th century, faience pottery called Henri it faience was produced, the most important begin the very individual pieces made by Bearnard Palissy. During the same period Italian potters tried to introduce the faience industry into France. The Conradi, coming from Sayona, settled at Nevers. Early abortive attempts to produce faience in Rouen were made in the 16th century, but it was not until the 17th century that this city began to produce the beautiful specimens which remain once of the glories of the French faience industry. These were copied everywhere, both in France and other countries. Mousties, from the end of the 17th century, made famous faience pieces in the style of Tempesta, or copied from Berain and Benard Toro. At Strasbourg, in the 18th century, the Hannong Family created a style which was quickly adopted by the factories of Luneville and Niederwiller. In Pris, saint-cloud, Meudon, Lille and Marseille, there were also a large number of less important factories.

Outside France some of the finest work was produced at Delft in Holland, which was, for a long time; the most active centre of the faience industry in Europe.

Fine pottery, called day pottery, made its appearance towards the middle of the 18th century, and this industry was most fully developed in England, at Leeds and at Burslem in Staffordshire, where Josiah Wedgwood operated the first of his factories. In France; the is type of pottery was made especially at Poontaux-Choux, Paris, Luneville and Orleans.

With the advent of porcelain, Faience becomes less sought-after and less highly prized, but modern manufacturers have given it a new lease of life.

FAIRY-RING MUSHROOM A small mushroom with a pleasant smell that is fairly common in meadows. Its Latin name is Marasmins oreades and in France it is known as marasme d'orcade or faux mousseron. The stalk is tough and should be discarded, but the cap can be dried. The dried caps can be crushed and used as a condiment, or rehydrated by soaking in water and then added to meat dishes, sauces, omelettes and soups.

FAISSELLE A type basket with perforated sides used for draining cheese. The materials from which it is made varies, depending on the type of cheese and the region where it is manufactured. Faisselles may be square, cylindrical or heart-shaped and can be made of wood, earthenware, pottery, wicker or plastic. In France the word faisselle is also used for a table on which the apple residue is drained after the brewing of cider.

FALAFEL Spicy snack made from a puree of chick peas, rolled into small balls or shaped into patties and then fried in oil. Popular throughout the Middle East, especially in Israel, where they are traditionally eaten in pitna bread. They are sometimes made from other pulses, for example dried broad (fava) beans are used in Egypt where the patties are also known as ta'amia.

FALERMO An Italian wine harvested on the sunny slopes of the Messica mountains, in Campania, to the north of Naples. Three styles are produced: Bianco, a dry white made from Falanghina grapes, Rosso, from mainly Aglianico and Piediroso varieties, and Primitivo.

The Falermo of today is nothing like the highly prized Falermian wine of the ancient Romans, which rivalled the prestigious Greek wines. The poet Horace praised it in verse but deplored its high price --too expensive for him to drink it in the quantities that he would have liked! Pliny the Elder described three types red a light dry white, a fairly sweet yellow, and a dark red - all very highly regarded. He also divulged that Falernian was the only wine was also reputed to keep indefinitely, the Greek physician Galen was of the opinion that it was not good until it had matured for ten years and that it was at its best between 15 and 20 years old. Although it is not known which grape the ancient Felernian was made from, it supposed to have resembled the present day Lacrina Christi.

FALETTE A specialty of the Auvergne, particularly, Espalion. It is made with breast of mutton browned with carrots and onions, and cooked slowly in the oven for a long time, then sliced and served with harricot (navy) beans.

RECIPE

Falattes

Bone and season 2 breasts of mutton. Make a stuffing with 300 g (11 oz. 4 cups) chopped Swiss chard leaves, 200 g (7 oz. 2 ½ cups) spinach, 50 g (2 oz., 1 cup) fresh parsley, 2 garlic cloves and 1 large onion. Mix the ingredients with 100 g (4 oz. 4 slices) crustless bread soaked in milk and 100 g (4 oz, 2 cup) sausagemeat. Season with salt and pepper.

Flatten out the boned breasts on of some bacon rashers (slices). Spread the stuffing along the length of each breast and roll up, including the bacon, then tie. Brown the falettes in a flameproof casserole with 200 g (7 oz. 1 ½ cups) sliced onions and 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) sliced carrots. Degalze the casserole with some white wine and add a generous quantity of mutton stock. Add ½ garlic clove and bouquet garni, and cook, covered, in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) for 2 ½ hours.

Meanwhile, soak 500 g (1 lb 2 oz. 2 ½ hours. Cot (navy) beans in cold water for 2 hours. Drain and boil in fresh water for 10 minutes. drain and cool quickly by rinsing under the cold tap.

Sauté 100 g (4 oz. ¾ cup) sliced onion, 100 g (4 oz. ¾ cup) chopped auvegne ham and 100 g (4 oz. ¾ cup) chopped tomatoes in a large saucepan until salt. Add the beans, a bouquet garni and enough mutton stock to cover the beans generously. Bring to the boil, reduce the heat and cover the pan. then simmer gently for about 1 ½ hours.

Remove the falettes from the casserole and leave to cool briefly, then untie them, remove the bacon and cut them into slices. Strain and reduce the cooking liquid and pour it over the sliced falettes. Serve the beans separately.

FALLOWER DEER A small deer of temperate regions, The strong-tasting flesh of adult stags should be marinated in a tannin-rich wine; methods of preparation are as for roebuck. Females and fawns yield meat with a less pronounced flavour and may be roasted.

FANCHONNETTE Also known as fanchette. A little tart made with puff pastry filled with confectioner's custard (pastry filled with confectioner's custard (pastry cream), coated with meringue and decorated with tiny meringue balls. The larger version known as gateau fanchette.

Fanchonnette and fanchette are also the names of certain petits fours. One type consists of a boatshaped piece of nougat filled with hazenut flavoured confectioner's custard and covered with coffee-flavoured fondant icing (frosting). Another consists of a macaroons base with strawberry-flavoured butter cream and covered with pink fondant icing.

FAR BRETON A flan (tart) with prunes that may be eaten warm or cold. The French word far was originally used for a porridge made with durum wheat, ordinary wheat or buckwheat flour, with added salt or sugar and dried fruit. It was a popular dish throughout Britany. Traditionally, it was cooked in a linen bag, pocket or sleeve, hence its various dialect names, far such far pouch and far much. Slices of the flan may be served as a dessert or as an accompaniment to meat or vegetables.

RECIPE

Far breton

Soak 125 g (4 ½ oz. 1 cup) currants and 400 g (14 oz. 2 ¼ cups) stoned (pitted) overnight in warm weak tea, then drain them. Make a well in the centre of 250 g (9 oz. 2 ¼ cups) plain (all purpose) flour and mix in a large pinch of salt, 2 tablespoons sugar and 4 well-beaten eggs to make 1 batter. Thin the batter with 400 ml (14 fl. oz. 1 ¾ cups) milk and mix in the currants and prunes. Pour into a buttered tin (pan) and bake in a preheated oven at 20 °C (400 °F, gas 6) for about 1 hour, until the top is brown. Sprinkle with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

FARCI A specialty of Pengord consisting of forcemeat wrapped in cabbage leaves. It is traditionally cooked inside a boiling fowl in meat or vegetables stock. However, it is now more usually made by wrapping the stuffed cabbage leaves in muslin (cheesecloth) or securing with string and cooking directly in stock.

RECIPES

Farci

Crumble 350 g (12 oz. 12 slices) stale crustless bread and soak in fatty stock or in milk. Mix together 350 g (12 oz. 2 cups) fresh chopped ham or bacon, 2 chopped garlic cloves, 2 chopped shallots (or 1 chopped onion) and a bunch of chopped parsley, tarragon or other herbs. If liked, add some chopped chicken liver. Squeeze out the bread and mix it with the chopped ingredients. Seasoned with salt, pepper and a generous pinch of mixed spice and bind with 2 or 3 eggs yolks, mix well until smooth, and keep in a cool place.

Blanch some large cabbage leaves in boiling water for 5 minutes. Cool quickly under cold running water, pat them dry, and arrange them like flower petals on a flat surface. Shape the forcemeat into a ball, place it on the cabbage leaves and fold them over to wrap it up. Secure with string to keep the shape, or wrap the leaves in muslin (cheesecloth). And cook in vegetable or meat stock for about 1 ¾ hours. Remove the muslin or string. Cut the farci into slices and serve very hot with the stock or with a chicken, depending on the recipe. (Farce can also be served cold).

Small stuffed provencal vegetables

Trim the tops off 6 onions, 6 small aubergines (eggplants), 6 round courgettes (zucchini), 6 sweet (bell) peppers and 6 medium-sized tomatoes to reduce them to three-quarters of their original height, and cut the aubergines and peppers in half. Use a teaspoon to hollow out the vegetables and mix the pulp with the trimmings. Fry the pulp lightly in a little olive oil, then leave to cook. Cut 5 slices of bread into small dice and soak in 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) milk. Milk with vegetables pulp and add 400 g (14 oz) sausage meats. 5 garlic cloves, chopped, 75 g (3 oz. 1 ¼ cups) finely chopped parsley, 3 tablespoons chopped basil, 3 whole eggs (beaten), 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) grated. Parmesan cheese, salt and pepper. Stir the mixture until smooth with a wooden spatula.

Bring a saucepan of water to the boil and cook the onions lightly, followed by the courgettes, peppers and aubergines, cooked separately. Drain each batch on a cloth or paper towels.

Stuff all the vegetables with sausage meat mixture and arrange them in a roasting pan (tin), greased with olive oil.

Carefully remove the flowers of 6 courgettes finely and fry gently in 2 tablespoons olive oil for 5-8 minutes, stirring often. Remove from the heat and add 2 chopped basil leaves, 1 tablespoon finely chopped parsley and 1 finely chopped garlic clove. Leave to cool, then incorporate 1 tablespoon fresh breadcrumbs and half a beaten egg.

Fill the flowers with the sausage meat mixture, fold over the petals and place the flowers side by side in a second roasting pan (pin). Pour over mixture of 120 ml (4 ½ fl oz, ½ cup) boiling water, 1 chicken stock (bouillon) cube and 2 tablespoons olive oil. Cover with foil.

Cook both batches of vegetables in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 15-20 minutes. The stuffed vegetables and corrugate flowers may be eaten hot or cold.

FARCIDURE A speciality of Limousin of poached balls of forcemeat or chopped ingredients. In Gueret, where farcidure (or farce alure – literally ‘hard stuffing’) is particularly famous, the balls are made with buckwheat flour and a mixture of chopped green vegetables, such as sorrel, Swiss chard and cabbage. When made with wheat flour, they are known as poule sans as (‘boneless chicken’), contain chopped bacon and sorrel, and are deep-fried. If garnished with salt pork, they are boiled in cabbage soup. Farcidure with potatoes is made with a mixture of pureed potatoes, herbs, garlic, onions and rashers (slices) of bacon, to which beaten eggs are sometimes added. The balls are poached and then fried in lard or goose fat.

FAREE A speciality of Charentes, consisting of cabbage stuffed with bacon or sorrel and served with bacon and crustless breadless bread. It is cooked in the stock from a port-au-feu or a soup.

FARINACEOUS Containing flour, or a high, content of starch. The terms, lentils and broad (fava) beans.

FARINADE A Corsican gruel made from chestnut flour mixed with olive oil. When cooked, it is poured on to a floured cloth so that it forms a ball. It is then sliced and either served on its own, while still hot, or with fresh Broccio or goat’s milk. The slices may also be fried in oil.

FARINAGE The French term for any dish or dessert based on flour. Generally, it is used to describe pasta dishes served as a main course; as well as quenelles, knodel, knepfleis, floutes (quenelles made with mashed potatoes) and gnocchi, which are popular dishes in Italian, Austrian, German and Alsatian cookery. Farinages, also include dishes made with cornmeal (maize), such as polenta, gaudes and miques, and potato flour, such as gruels and panadas and also semolina. Puddings, pastries and crepes are not included.

FARINETTE A sweet savoury pancake made with beaten eggs and flour. There are several variations to be found in different parts of the Auvergne, where they are also known as omelette enfarinee (‘floured omelette’), pachade (in Aveyron) and farinade.

FAST To avoid eating food or abstain from certain foods. Fasting is associated with religion - Christians abstain from eating certain foods during lent; Muslims fast during Ramadan. Complete fasting or avoiding certain foods is practiced on certain days in religious calendars.

In the Roman Catholic Church fasting meant abstaining from eating meat and fat during Lent and on fast days. Originally only vegetables were allowed to be eaten on fast days with meats and all animal products (butter, fats, milk, and eggs) prescribed. Over the years the rules were relaxed, and gradually eggs, then fish and shellfish, were allowed to be eaten on fast days. However, the eating of butter necessitated the payment of extra offerings. When fish was permitted, wild duck and other waterfowl were also included. Brillat-Savarin tells the amusing story of a fasting cleric who enjoyed an omelette with tuna tongues and carp’s roe. The last restrictions were removed for Catholics in 1966 with the lifting of Friday fasting, but the tradition of serving fish on that day remains.

In cookery, dishes prepared au maigre (sauces, stuffings, salpicons), as opposed to those prepared au gras, do not include lard (shortening), bacon sausage meat or any other meat-based ingredients, especially pork. Butter, however, can be used.

FAT Lipid substances containing glycerol and fatty acids. Fats are solid at low temperatures; oils however, are liquid at room temperature, due to their higher contents of unsaturated fatty acids, and will solidify in the refrigerator. Fats and oils do not dissolve in or mix with water, but they may be emulsified with water.

There are two types of fats. Saturated fats (or saturates) and unsaturated fats (these include monounsaturated fats and polyunsaturated fats). Saturated fats are found in dairy products (butter, milk, cheese) and animal meats and fats (lard, pork, fat, suet). They are also in some vegetable fats, such as coconut oil and palm oil. Unsaturated fats are found in vegetable oils: monounsaturated in olive and peanut oils; polyunsaturated in corn, sunflower, rapeseed, rapeseed (canola) and soya oils. They are also found in oily fish, such as herring and mackerel.

- Fat in cooking Fats are used as a cooking medium for frying and roasting. They are also used to base food during grilling. Their role is far broader than, this including moistening ingredients and mixtures; forming the base for creamed cakes, giving pastries their inimitable textures; and acting as dressings or sauces. Fats make starches and dry ingredients taste more appealing. They also improve or enhance the flavour of many foods, either raw (for example when butter is eaten with bread) or cooked by giving a crisp finish, for example when frying.

Traditionally, of the animal fats, lard (shortening), obtained from pork fat, is most widely used for cooking in Europe. However, beef suet is also used sometimes, particularly in England. Sheep suet or sheep-tail fat is used especially in Oriental cookery. In France, goose fat which is highly esteemed by gastronomes, is specific to Gascony, Bearn and Languedoc, being used especially for confits. Calf fat is used in certain forcemeats. The use of some fats is limited to particular culinary traditions, smen in North Africa and ghee in India, for example.

In French cooking, recipes or dishes are described as au gras (literally, 'fat') when they contain meat products, and au maigre when they do not contain meat, being based on fish or vegetables. The introduction of vegetable oils has led to a significant reduction in the role of animal fats in cooking.

Vegetable fats are traditionally used for cooking in many African and Eastern Countries, usually taking the form of white waxy rectangular blocks. Their melting point is lower than that of animal fats but, like oils, they have high boiling points, which enables them to be used for frying food.

With greater awareness of the roles of different nutrients in the diet, and in particular concern about increased consumption of fat in the Western diet, vegetable oils are often used in place of animal fats in some traditional dishes. This applies particularly to everyday eating and to fats used for cooking, where olive oil and other vegetable oils have grown in popularity among those who traditionally relied on lard or butter. A broader range of fats are used by cooks who once used only butter and meat dripping for cooking, with one or two vegetable oils reserved solely for salad dressings.

FAUBONNE A thick soup made with a puree of white haricot (navy) beans, split peas or peas, mixed with a white stock or a consommé containing finely shredded vegetables (carrots, turnips, leeks, celery) and seasoned with parsley and chervil. Formerly, Foubonne soup was garnished with thin strips of roast or braised pheasant.

FAUCHON, AUGUSTE FELIX A famous French grocer (born 1856 died Paris). He arrived in Paris from Normandy in 1886 and opened a food store in the place de la Madeleine that dealt exclusively in the best French products, including groceries, poultry, charcuterie, cheese, biscuits (cookies), confectionery, wines and liqueurs. Auguste Fauchon did not stock exotic products, and sent customers requiring such items to his friend Hédiard. Between the two wars, he opened a salon de la pâtisserie and also started a catering service. After the death of its founder, the store began to stock specialties from all over the world, at the same time maintaining a selection of luxury French products.

FAUGERES. A spicy, robust red AOC wine produced in a Languedoc region mainly from Carignan, Syrah, Mourvedere and Grenache. Whites from Marsanne, Viognier, Roussane, Grenache blanc and Rolle are sold as Coteaux du Languedoc.

FAUX-FILET (TENDERLOIN) Also known as conref-filet. Part of the beef sirloin located on either side of the backbone above the loins. It is fattier and less tender than the filet but has more flavour; when boned and trimmed, it can be roasted or braised. Unlike fillet, it is not essential to bard the meat, unless it is to be braised. Slices of faux-filet can be grilled (broiled) or fried.

RECIPES

Faux-fillet braised à la bourgeoise

Marinate some lardons of bacon in brandy for about 30 minutes. Season with salt, pepper and ground all-spice. Insert the lardons into the faux-filet (tenderloin). Season and marinate the meat for 12 hours in red or white wine flavoured with thyme, bay leaf, chopped parsley and 1 crushed garlic clove. Drain the meat and brown it in either butter or oil. Fry 2 large sliced onions and 2 large diced carrots in butter, and brown a few crushed veal bones in the oven. Place the vegetables in the bottom of a braising pan and lay the faux-filet on top. Add the browned bones, 1 or 2 blanched boned calves' feet, the marinade, 2-3 tablespoons tomato puree (paste) and enough stock to just cover the meat. Then add a bouquet garni and season with salt and pepper. Cover, bring to the boil on the hob (stove top) and then transfer to a preheated oven at 150°C (300°F, gas 2) for about 2 ½ hours. Add some wedges of carrot and continue cooking for another hour. Prepare some small glazed onions. When the meat is cooked, drain it, and keep it warm in a deep dish. Skim the fat off the cooking liquid, boil to reduce and add a knob of softened butter. Dice the meat from the calves' feet and arrange it around the meat together with the carrots and small onions. Coat with the cooking liquid.

Roast faux-filet

Bone and trim the meat. Bard it on top and underneath, shape into a square and tie. Cook in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) so that the outside is sealed but the inside remains pink or rare, allowing 10 minutes per 450 g (1 lb). The meat can be untied and deboned to brown the outside thoroughly 5 minutes before the end of the cooking time. Season with salt and pepper.

FAVART A sumptuous garnish for poultry or calves' sweetbreads, dedicated to Charles Simon Favart, an 18th century playwright and director of the Opera-Comique. It is made of poultry quenelles with tarragon, and small tarts' filler with a salpicon of cep mushrooms and cream. The accompanying sauce is a chicken veloute flavoured with crayfish butter.

The name is also given to a preparation of soft-boiled (soft-cooked) or poached eggs, served in little tarts garnished with a salpicon of lamb sweetbreads, truffles and mushrooms in a veloutée sauce.

FAVORITE, A LA Describing various preparations created during the last century in honour of a popular Donizette opera, La Favorite (1840). Soup à la favorite is a cream soup of asparagus and lettuce garnished with asparagus tips. Asparagus tips also feature in a garnish for small sautéed joints, of meat (together with slices of foie gras topped with slivers of truffle, coated with the meat juices deglazed with Madeira and demi-glazed) and in a mixed salad. There is another garnish of the same name for large roasting joints, consisting of sautéed quartered artichoke hearts, celery hearts and chateau potatoes.

RECIPE

Salad a la favorite

Arrange in a salad dish, in separate heaps, asparagus tips, shelled crayfish and sliced white truffles. Season with oil, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Sprinkle with chopped celery and herbs.

FAVRE, JOSEPH Swiss-born chef (born Vex, 1849); died Paris, 1903). After his apprenticeship in Switzerland, Favre finished his studies in Paris, with Chevet, then worked in Germany, England and again in Paris, with Bignon. He is best known as a theoretician his Dictionnaire universel de cuisine et d'hygiène alimentaire (1st edition 1889-1891, 2nd edition 1902) contains not only a large number of recipes but also a very interesting history of cookery, in 1877 he founded the journal La Science culinaire in Geneva, and in 1893 he founded the first Academy of Cookery.

FEDORA A garnish for large roasting joints consisting of barquettes filled with asparagus tips, pieces of glazed carrot and turnip, quarters of orange and braised shelled chestnuts.

FEET AND TROTTERS The feet and trotters of slaughtered animals are classified as white offal (variety meat). Sheep's or lamb's trotters, which can be obtained from the butcher already blanched, must be boned, singed and the little tufts and hair between the cleavage in the hoof removed. They are first cooked in a court-bouillon, and can then be braised, grilled (broiled), fried, prepared à la poulette or used for a fricassee or a salad. They are also included in the Provençal speciality pieds et paquets, particularly popular around Marseilles.

Pig's trotters are also sold blanched and cleaned. A particularly savoury way of cooking them is à la Sainte-Menehould: they are parboiled, dipped in egg and breadcrumbs, then grilled (broiled and served with mustard or Sainte-Menehould sauce. They may also be boned and mixed with forcemeat, often with truffles. Pig's trotters may also be cooked in a flavoured stock, grilled, cooked en daube or braised.

Calves' feet are used primarily as a source of gelatine in a stock, but they may also be prepared separately after being boned, cleaned, blanched and then cooked in white stock. They can then be fried, curried, prepared à la poulette, or dipped in egg and breadcrumbs, grilled and served with devilled or tartare sauce. All the recipes for calf's head can be used for calves' feet.

RECIPES

Calves' feet

Cooking calves' feet

Calves' feet can be bought already blanched and partially boned (the long foot bones only). They are usually cooked in a white court-bouillon for about 2 hours. Like a calf's head. They can be served with a curry sauce and rice, for example.

Alternately, they can be left to cool under a press, brushed with melted butter and coated in breadcrumbs, grilled (broiled) and served with a tartare sauce.

Calves' feet à la Custine

Soak 2 pigs' caul (pieces of caul fat) in cold water and bring to the boil. Boil for 5 minutes, remove the calves' feet, drain and leave to cool. Add 4 tablespoons flour, 4 tablespoons oil, the juice of 2 lemons, 4 litres (9 pints, 4 quarts) cold water, some salt and the calves' feet. Bring to the boil and simmer gently about 2 hours (the feet must be very tender).

Mix 4 chopped shallots with 800 g (1 ¾ lb) chopped button mushrooms in geneva, and in 1893 he founded the first Academy of cookery.

FEDORA A garnish for large roasting joints, consisting of barquettes filled with asparagus tips pieces of glazed carrots and turnip, quarters of orange and braised shelled chestnuts.

FEET AND TROTTERS The feet and trotters of slaughtered animals are classified as white offal (variety meat). sheep's or lamb's trotters, which can be obtained from the butcher already blanched, must be boned, singed and the little tufts of hair between the cleavage in the hoof removed. They are first cooked in a court-bouillon, and can then be braised, grilled (broiled), fried. prepared a la poulette or used for a fricassee or a salad. They are also included in the provencal speciality pieds et paquets, particularly popular around Marseille.

Pig's trotters are also blanched and cleaned. A particular savoury way of cooking them is a la ainte-Menebould: they are parboiled, dipped in eggs and breadcrumbs, then grilled (broiled) and served with mustard or Sainte-Menehould sauce. They may also be boned and mixed with forcemeat, often with truffles. Pig's trotters may also be cooked in a flavoured stock, grilled, cooked en daube or braised.

Calves feet are used may also be prepared gelatine in stock, but they may also be prepared separately after begin boned, cleaned, blanched and then cooked in white stock. They can then be fried curried, prepared a la poulette, a dipped in egg and breadcrumbs grilled and served with devilled or tartare sauce. All the recipes for calf's head can be used for calve's feet.

RECIPES

Calves's Feet

Cooking calve's feet

Calves feet can be bought already blanched and partially boned (the long foot bones only). They are usually cooked in a white court-bouillon for about 2 hours like a calf's head. They can be served with a curry sauce and rice, for example.

Alternatively, they can be left to cool under a press, brushed with melted butter and coated in breadcrumbs, grilled (broiled) served with a tartare sauce.

Calve's feet a la custine

Soak 2 pigs' caluls (pieces of caul fat) in cold water: Place the calv'es feet in a large pan, cover them with cold water and bring to the boil. Boil for 5 minutes, remove the calve's feet, drain and leave to cool. Add 4 tablespoons flour, 4 tablespoons oil, the juice of 2 lemons, 4 litres (7 pints, 4 quarts) cold water, some salt and calves' feet. Bring to the boil and simmer gently for about 2 hours 2(hours (the feet must be very tender).

Mix 4 chopped shallots with 800 g (1 ¾ lb.) chopped button mushrooms; season with salt and pepper and sprinkled with the juice of half a lemon. Cook the resulting duxelles over a brisk heat until the mixtures is dry. Add a small glass of Madira.

Drain the calves' feet, remove the bones and dice the flesh finely. Mix it the duxelles. Divide the forcemeat into 6 equal portions. Wipe the cauls, spread the out flat on the work surface and cut into 6 equal pieces. Shape the portion of forcemeat into rectangles and wrap each one in a piece of caul. Brown them lightly in hot butter. To serve, sprinkle with the butter in which they have been cooked.

Pigs' Trotters

Cooking pigs' trotters

Buy blanched trimmed pig's trotters (feet). Tie them in pairs and place them in a pan of cold water. Bring to the boil, skim and add carrots, turnips, leeks, celery, an onion studded with cloves and a bouquet garni. Simmer gently for 4 hours. Drain and leave to cool. If they are to be grilled (broiled), place them between 2 thin boards tied with string, while still hot, to press them as they cool.

Daube of pig's trotters

Cut 3 pigs' trotters (feet) in half and place the 6 halves in a stewpan, together with a slightly salted knuckle of veal and 2 slightly salted pig's tails. Cover with cold water and leave to soak for 3 hours. Drain and rinse the meat, then place in a flameproof casserole. Cover with cold water. Bring to the boil, skim and cook gently for 10 minutes with the lid off. Drain the meat.

Rinse and wipe the pan. Add 3 tablespoons groundnut (peanut) oil and return to the heat. When the oil is hot, add 4 diced carrots, 3 diced onions, and 2 chopped celery sticks. Cook for about 6 minutes until the onions are transparent, 3 or 4 crushed garlic cloves, a few chopped sage leaves, 1 tablespoon flour, 1 tablespoon tomato puree (paste) and 4 peeled diced tomatoes. Cook for 2 minutes. Add 3 tablespoons dry white wine, 2 pinches of caster (superfine) sugar and 3 pinches of curcumin seeds tied in a muslin (cheesecloth) bag. Add the meat, remove from the heat, cover the casserole with a lid and cook in a preheated oven at 140°C (275°F, gas 1) for at least 3 hours.

Arrange the meat on a heated serving dish, cover it with the sauce and vegetables and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Pigs' trotter sausages

Soak a large pig's caul (caul fat) in cold water. Cook the trotters (feet) in stock until really tender and bone them completely. Dice the flesh and mix it with an equal quantity of the fine pork forcemeat (diced truffle may be added if wished). Add salt pepper, a pinch of mixed spice and a dash of cognac. Divide the mixture into 4 portions of about 4 oz (113 g). Shape into little flat sausages (crepinettes) and top with a slice of truffle if wished. Wipe the caul, spread it out on the work surface and cut it into pieces. Wrap each crepinette in a piece of caul, coat with melted butter, roll in fresh breadcrumbs and cook gently under the grill (broiler).

Sheep's Trotters

Fricassee of sheep's trotters with pieds-de-mouton mushrooms.

Boil 10 trimmed blanched sheep's trotters (feet) gently for 4 hours in a mixture of water, white wine and lemon juice, with an onion studded with cloves, a bouquet garni, 2 garlic cloves, salt, pepper and curry powder. Place 800 g (1 3/4 lbs.) sliced mushrooms (use the variety known as pieds-de-mouton, if available) in a strainer and plunge them for 3 minutes in boiling vinegar and water.

Pour 300 ml (1/2 cup) boiling water into a saucepan containing 6 tablespoons chopped parsley and 1 tablespoon chopped fennel. Cover the pan and boil for 45 minutes to reduce by three quarters. Strain through muslin (cheesecloth) and twist the muslin to squeeze out the maximum quantity of liquid. Lightly brown 50 g (2 oz. 1/3 cup) chopped onions and 2 tablespoons chopped shallots in butter. Add sheep's trotters, sauté them for 5 minutes, then add 2 tablespoons skimmed stock and a dash of lemon juice. Add 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, 1 tablespoon chives, 1 1/2 tablespoons chopped fennel, salt and curry powder. Mix and cook for 1 1/4 hours, uncovered, over a gentle heat. Drain the cooked sheep's trotters, bone them completely and slice the flesh. Keep hot.

Make the sauce as follows; prepare a roux with 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter, 25 g (1 oz., 1/4 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, and 300 ml (1/2 pint, 1 1/4 cups) boiling salted water. Whisk and incorporate the cooking liquid together with 1 tablespoon double (heavy) cream. Mix the trotters with the mushrooms, arrange them in a vegetable dish and coat them with the sauce.

Sheep's trotters à la rouennaise

Blanch the trotters (feet) whole and braise them in a good strong stock until really tender. Drain, then remove all bones.

Fill the boned trotters with sausage meat mixed with 1 lightly browned chopped onion, chopped parsley and the stock left over from the braising reduced and strained. Dip the trotters in egg and fresh breadcrumbs and deep fry in sizzling fat. Alternatively, bake until crisp and golden, turning once. Serve immediately, garnished with fried curly parsley.

FEIJOA A fruit native to South America, but now grown mainly in New Zealand. Sometimes called pineapple guava, the fruits, which is 2-8 cm. (3/4-3 1/4 in) long, has thin green skin (turning yellow as the fruit ripens) and coarse white flesh containing edible seeds. The fejoa is aromatic and similar in flavour to strawberries with a hint of pineapple. It can be eaten raw when ripe or it can be poached. It can also be used to make sorbets, jams and jellies.

FEIJOADA A Brazilian speciality whose basic ingredient is the black bean (frífol negro). It is a complete dish served on special occasions, not dissimilar to cassoulet. A large pot is used to cook slightly salted and previously soaked pork meat, such as shoulder, trotter (feet), rib and tail, and black beans, flavourings include chopped onions, celery, garlic, (bell) pepper and bay leaf; other meat may be added, such as smoked streaky (slab) bacon, dried beef and cooked sausage.

Feijoada is served as follows; a mixture of meat and beans is poured into the centre of the plate and surrounded by rice au gras, green cabbage (thinly sliced and fried) and a few slices of orange (peel and pith removed). A mixture of grilled (broiled) manioc flour, onion and other ingredients, together called farofa, is sprinkled over the whole plate. The dish is served with a very spicy sauce, molho carioca, made with cayenne pepper, vinegar, the cooking liquid from the beans, chopped tomatoes and onions.

RECIPE

Feijoada

Soak 1 kg (2 1/4 lb) black beans in cold water for 12 hours and in another container, 1 semi-salted pig's tail and 500 g (1 lb. 2 oz) lean, smoked bacon, changing the water in both containers several times. Peel 5 garlic cloves. Drain the beans and put them in a large braising pan. cover with plenty of water and season with salt. Add 4 garlic cloves and 3 bay leaves. Bring to the boil and simmer gently for 1 hour. Drain the meats and boil for 10 minutes, then set aside. Seed 2 sweet (bell) peppers and cut into strips. Scaled 500 g (1 lb 2 oz) tomatoes, peel, seed and crush. Finely chop 1 small bunch parsley and 1 small bunch chives. Heat 3 tablespoons oil in a frying pan. add 1 chopped onions and fry until golden. Add the peppers, tomatoes, the remaining garlic clove and the parsley. Cook for 20 minutes over a medium heat, stirring all the time. Season to taste. When the beans can be crushed between the fingers, remove a ladleful of them and a ladleful of cooking liquid. Puree the beans and return to the frying pan. sprinkle with chives and set aside. Slice 6 small 1 fresh sausages. 6 small smoked sausages and 1 chorizo. Place the various meats in the braising pan, hour, adding the tomato and onion puree halfway through the cooking process. Stir well.

Prepare the farofa, soak 100 g (4 oz. 2/3 cup) raisins in lukewarm water for 10 minutes. melt 40 g (1 1/2 oz. 3 tablespoons) butter in a frying pan and fry 1 large chopped onion. Add salt and 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) manioc flour, then 40 g (1 1/2 oz. 3 tablespoons) butter to obtain a kind of light, sand-coloured mixture. Add 1 sliced banana, the drained raisins and 50 g 92 oz. 1/2 cup) grilled (broiled) cashew nuts. Serve with rice mixed with slices of orange and onion, allowing each person to sprinkle over more farofa.

PENDANT A Swiss white wine, produced mainly in the Valais in the upper Rhone valley. It is made from the Fendant, a local name for the Classelas grape, and is a dry, elegant and refreshing wine. Fendant is sometimes slightly sparkling (petillant), which accentuates its freshness. It is generally sold under the name of the commune in which it is harvested, or, more rarely, under the name of a vineyard.

FENNEL An aromatic umbelliferous plant of Mediterranean origin, which is now widely cultivated. It is a hardy perennial which grows to ½-1.5 m (4-5 ft) high. The feathery leaves and seeds have a slight aniseed flavour and both are used as a herb and spice in a variety of recipes. The herb goes particularly well with fish and chicken the spice is good with lamb and vegetables particularly in marinades for wild mushrooms. The leaves are also used as a garnish.

Florence fennel resembles ordinary fennel as a plant but it produces a swollen leaf base which is eaten as a vegetable. Known as bulb or head of fennel, the overlapping stem bases are closely packed around a small tough, central core, Fennel is similar in texture to celery. The feathery leaves, which grow to about 60 cm (2 ft), are used as a herb or as garnish. The fennel bulb be used raw in salads or cooked in salads or cooked in a wide variety of dishes.

RECIPES

Braised fennel

Trim, halve and core fennel bulbs. Put them in an ovenproof dish. Sauté 2 diced bacon rashers (slices), 1 chopped onion and 1 diced carrot in a little olive oil until slightly softened, then sprinkle over the fennel. Moisten with a few tablespoons of chicken stock or dry white wine (or a mixture of both). Season to taste. Cover and cook in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) for about 1 hour or until tender. Turn the fennel halfway through cooking and add a little extra stock or wine, if necessary, to keep the vegetables moist.

Fennel salad

Hard-boil (hard-cook) 2 eggs and shell them. Boil 100 g (4 oz. ¾ cup) long-grain rice. Leave to cool. Peel 12 small pickling (baby) onions. Clean 1 large bulb of fennel and slice it finely. Cut 4 small tomatoes into quarters. Add a little well-seasoned vina-grette to the rice and put into a salad bowl. Place all the other ingredients on top of the rice, together with some black olives. Sprinkle with chopped herbs and serve with anchovy sauce.

FENUGREEK An aromatic leguminous Mediterranean plant originating in the Middle East. Belonging to the pea family, it produces long slender curved pods containing oblong flattened brownish seeds. The seeds, which have a slightly bitter taste, are roasted and ground, then used as flouring in curries. Their flavour is distinct and easily recognized as one of the ingredients of curry pastes and powders. They are very hard – resembling tiny stones - and can only be ground using a heavy pestle and mortar or a special grinder.

In north Africa, the seeds were traditionally used to fatten women, who regularly consumed a mixture of fenugreek flour, olive oil and caster (superfine) sugar. The leaves have a very strong smell and in turkey, various Arab countries and India, they are used either fresh or dried, as a vegetable or herb.

FERCHUSE A culinary speciality of Burgundy, made from pig's offal (variety meat), traditionally prepared on the day the pig was killed. (Ferchuse is a corruption of the French word fressure, offal.) The heart, lungs and liver are cut into pieces, browned in lard with shallots and garlic, then floured and moistened with 2 parts red wine and 1 part stock. The dish is simmered for 1 hour. A bouquet garni, some sliced onions and slices of sautéed potato are added and the dish is cooled for a further 45 minutes.

FERLOUCHE also known as forlouche. Tart filling from Quebec; It is made by boiling 300 g (11 oz. 1 cup) molasses, 200 g (7 oz., 1 cup) brown sugar and 750 ml (1 ¼ pints, 3 ¼ cups) water with a pinch a nutmeg and some orange zest. Off the heat, add 3 tablespoons cornflour (cornstarch) mixed with a little cold water, then cook over a low heat until thick, stirring continuously. The hot mixture is poured into a pre-cooked flan case (pie shell) and decorated with chopped hazelnuts or raisins.

FERMENTATION The biochemical change brought about the action of certain yeast or bacteria on certain food substances, particularly carbohydrates. These micro-organisms are either naturally present in the food or are added because of the requirements of a particular process. The type of fermentation varies depending on the type of food, the nature of the fermenting agent and the length of time the process. For example, alcohol is produced by the fermentation of natural sweet juices such as grapes and sugar cane. Vinegar is a dilute solution of acetic acid produced by the fermentation of various dilute alcoholic liquids, such as wine or beer. Lactic acid is produced in the souring of milk by bacteria.

The main foods that are fermented include dough, milk products (curds, yogurt and cheese), meat (raw sausage) and alcoholic drinks, such as beer, wine and cider, certain cereal preparations are also fermented, especially in India and Africa. Fermented vegetables includes sauerkraut, cucumber and beetroot (in eastern Europe) and mixed, thinly sliced vegetables (in China)

The greatest variety of fermented foods can be found in the Far East. They are based on soya, rice, leguminous plants and even fish (nuoc-moran). In the Middle East, cereals and milk are fermented and in eastern and northern Europe, vegetables, alcohol, bread and cheese. Fermentation is an excellent method of preservation.

FERMIERE, A LA a special method of preparing braised or pot-roasted meat, poultry or fish, using a garnish of vegetables that have been cooked slowly in butter until tender and are some times added to the main ingredients while it is being cooked. Vegetables prepared in this way can also be used to garnish omelettes and soups.

RECIPES

Brill a la fermiere

Thinly slice 2 carrots, 2 onions, the white part of 2 leeks and 3 or 4 celery sticks. Cook them slowly in 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter. Place half the vegetables in a greased ovenproof dish. Clean and season a medium-sized brill and place it on top of the vegetables. Cover with the remaining vegetables and add a few tablespoons of dry white wine or better still, a concentrated fish stock made with white wine. Top with small knobs of butter and cook in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7), basting frequently. When the brill is cooked, place it on a serving dish and keep warm. Add 2-3 tablespoons cream to the cooking liquid from the fish and reduce by half. Pour the sauce over the brill and allow it to caramelize for a few moments in the oven.

Omelette a la fermiere

Slice 2 medium carrots, 1 large onion, the white part of 1 large leek and 2 or 3 celery sticks and cook gently in 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter. Season with salt and pepper; Lightly beat 8 egg, add the vegetables and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, beat again and adjust the seasoning. Brown 2 tablespoons diced ham in 20 g (¾ oz. 1 ½ tablespoons) butter in a frying pan. Pour the egg and vegetables mixture into the pan and cook the omelette. Serve very hot with crusty bread.

Sautéed chicken a la fermiere

Sauté a chicken in some butter until brown. Prepare 200 ml, (7 fl. oz. ¾ cup) of the vegetable mixture used for brill a la fermiere, ensuring that the vegetables remain fairly firm. Add the vegetables 15 minutes before the chicken is cooked. Place all the ingredients in an ovenproof casserole and add 2 tablespoons diced ham. Cover and cook in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) for about 10 minutes. the cooking liquid can be deglazed at the last moment with 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) thick gravy or thick veal stock.

Soup a la fermiere

Finely shred 2 or 3 small carrots, 1 small turnip, 1 leek (white part only), 1 onion and 75 g (3 oz. 1 ¼ cups) cabbage heart. Season and cook gently in 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cups) water in which white beans have been cooked, and 600 ml (1 pint, 2 ½ cups) white consommé. Cook gently for 1 ¼ hours. Add 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) single (light) cream, 4 tablespoons cooked white beans and some chervil leaves.

FERN The young shoots or fronts (also called 'violin scrolls') are harvested in Quebec and New Brunswick in early spring. They are shaken to remove the fine reddish dust covering them, then blanched for a few minutes. The shoots are either eaten cold or reheated in butter and sprinkled with lemon. They are a good accompaniment for meat and fish.

FERVAL A garnish for main courses consisting of braised artichoke hearts and potato croquettes filled with finely diced ham.

FESTONNER A French culinary term meaning to arrange decorative items in festoons around the edge of a serving dish. This is a garnish to add on the dish, rather than on the food. Croutons, slices of aspic and half slices of fluted lemon can be used for this purpose.

FETA The best-known Greek cheese, made from ewe's milk, cow's milk or goat's milk and containing 45% fat. It is made by traditional methods, even though it is now manufactured on an industrial scale. The curdled milk is separated and allowed to drain in a special mould or a cloth bag. It is cut into large slices that are salted and then packed in barrels filled with whey or brine. Feta is often crumbled over the top of mixed salads and may be cut into cubes and served as a snack with olives and farmhouse bread.

FEUILLE D'AUTOMNE Round cake consisting of meringue and chocolate mousses, presented in a container made of fine pleated dark chocolate leaves. Made popular by the patissier Gaston Leontre, feuillette d'automne is made of two layers of vanilla-flavoured French meringue and one layer of almond-flavoured meringue, sandwich with a butter-based chocolate moussée.

FEUILLETTE A piece of puff pastry cut into the shape of a finger or triangle and filled or garnished with cheese, ham or seafood. Feuillettes are served hot as an entrée.

The name is also given to small sticks of flaky pastry brushed with a little egg yolk and sprinkled with cumin seeds, cheese or paprika. They are served hot or cold as cocktail snacks.

RECIPES

Feuillettes of chicken or duck liver

Make the feuillettes with puff pastry and warm them in the oven. Clean the chicken or duck livers. Separate the lobes and cut into very thin escalopes (scallops). Season with salt and pepper and sauté them briskly in butter, then use of draining spoon to remove them and set aside. Sauté a small quantity of finely chopped shallots, fines herbs, and a few tiny bottom mushrooms or wild mushrooms, thinly sliced if large. In the butter remaining in the pan. use the draining spoon to remove the mushrooms, then boil the cooking juices until virtually dry. replace the mushrooms and livers, then add sufficient. Madeira sauce to coat all the ingredients. Cook until the livers are heated through. Cut the middle out of the feuilletes, reserving the top as a lid. Fill the feuilletes with this mixture and replace the pastry lids; serve piping hot.

Feuilletes with calves' sweetbreads.

Prepare some feuilletes as in the previous recipe. Braise some calves sweetbreads in well-seasoned white stock and use to fill the feuilletes. Serve very hot with cream sauce.

Roquefort feuilletes

Prepare some puff pastry. Mix together 200 g (7 oz) roquefort cheese, 200 g (7 oz) soft cream cheese, 200 ml (7 fl. oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) double (heavy) cream, some chopped herbs and some pepper. Then add 4 eggs, one by one, beating the mixture continuously. Adjust the seasoning. Roll out the dough into 2 rounds about 3 mm ($\frac{1}{8}$ in) thick. Line a tart plate with one of the rounds and prick with a fork. Spread it with the cheese filling and cover with the second round. Seal the edges carefully. Bake in a preheated oven at 230°C (450°F, gas 8) for about 35 minutes, protecting top with a sheet of foil about halfway through cooking if it is browning too quickly. Cut into triangles before serving.

Scallop feuilletes

Open, trim and clean 16 scallop. Sauté them over a brisk heat in a sauté pan with 200 g (7 oz. 1 cup) butter and some freshly ground pepper for 3 minutes, turning them once. Put 2 tablespoons finely chopped shallots into a frying pan with 250 ml (9 fl oz., 1 cup) vermouth and boil to reduce to a syrupy consistency. Add 750 ml (1 $\frac{1}{4}$ pints. 3 $\frac{1}{4}$ lb), cut 10 thin slices from a noix or sous-noix (loin) of veal and flatten them into rectangles with a mallet. Season with salt, pepper and a pinch of mixed spice. Prepare a fine pork forcemeat and add one-third of its weight of a gratin forcemeat an equal amount of dry duxelles. Bind the forcemeat with egg. Cut a thin slice of pork fat slightly larger than the slices of veal and spread it with a layer of forcemeat. Top with a piece of veal and spread it with some forcemeat. Continue to build up the feuilleton in this way, ending with a layer of forcemeat. Coat the slices of the feuilleton with the remaining forcemeat and cover with a second strip of pork fat that is also larger than the slices of veal. Fold the edges of the bottom slice of pork fat upwards and the edges of the top piece of pork fat downwards so that the feuilleton is covered.

Tie the feuilleton into a neat shape. Put it in a buttered casserole lined with bacon rinds, sliced onions and carrots. Add a bouquet garni. Cover and simmer for 20 minutes. moisten with 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) white wine and boil to reduce by half. Add 250 ml (9 fl. oz. 1 cup) veal stock and boil to reduce to a concentrated glaze. Moisten with 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) good stock. Cover and cook in preheated oven at 190°C (375°F, gas 5) for 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ hours, basting frequently. Drain the feuilleton, untie and arrange it on an ovenproof serving dish. Pour over a few tablespoons of braising stock and glaze in the oven, basting frequently.

Feuilleton of veal l'Echelle

Season a bone fillet of veal and brown it quickly in very hot butter to seal. Leave it to cool. Cut it into slices lengthways, but do not cut completely through the joint. Prepare a forcemeat with a mixture of dry mushroom duxelles, chopped lean ham, diced truffles, and a vegetable mirepoix, bound with a beaten egg. Spread each of the slices with the forcemeat and reshape the fillet.

Cover the feuilleton with mirepoix and wrap it in a pig's caul (caul fat). Braise the feuilleton for 2-3 hours in butter, very slowly, then place it in an ovenproof dish. Garnish it with lettuce potatoes that have been braised in butter. Four over a little of the pan juices and return it to the oven to glaze. Make a sauce with the remainder of the juices in the pan by adding some Madeira and some veal stock.

This feuilletton may be served cold in aspic in this case, a boned calf's foot is cooked in the stock.

FIADONE Several recipes exist for this Corsican cake, one of which consists of blending stiffly whisked egg whites with a mixture of the egg yolks, sugar, mashed fresh Broccio cheese and lemon zest. The cake is sometimes flavoured with a little brandy.

FIASQUE The French word for a type of Chianti bottle. It is derived from the Italian Fiasco, meaning flash or straw-covered bottle. The bottle has a long narrow neck and is usually partly wrapped in woven straw.

FICIELLE A long thin loaf of French bread (the word literally means 'string').

FICELLES PICARDES Savoury pancakes filled with a slice of ham and chopped creamed mushrooms with cheese. They are rolled up, arranged in an ovenproof dish, covered with cream and grated Gruyere cheese, and then browned in the oven, a speciality of northern France, they are served as a hot entrée.

FIG Pear-shaped or globular fruit that is eaten fresh or dried. Probably originating in Asia Minor and now widespread throughout the Mediterranean region, figs are mentioned in the Old Testament, and were highly prized by the Ancients.

- Fresh figs There are three types of fig: the white one (including green figs), the purple and the red. These types are subdivided into a large number of varieties. The best-known varieties of French figs are buissone, belone, bourjasotte, celestine, col de dame and dauphine violette. These figs are grown in the Midi, mostly in Var, and separated from the flesh between June and November. Figs are also grown throughout the Mediterranean basin. Algeria is the principal supplier of dried figs.

Fresh or canned figs are usually eaten in their natural state. They can be served as an hors d'œuvre with raw ham (parma ham) in the same way as melon. Figs can also be cooked in various ways. All recipes for apricots are suitable for figs.

A fermented drink is made from figs, and also a European roast fig is used to flavour coffee, as chicory is in France.

- Dried figs. Very ripe autumn fruits are used. The figs, spread out on trestles, are exposed to the sun. They have to be turned several times during drying and before they are completely dry, they are slightly flattened. Treated in this way figs will keep for a very long time. The best dried figs are sold tied up with a piece of raffia and selected for their size and ripeness. They may be eaten plain or stuffed with almonds or walnuts. Dried figs are also sold in blocks. Figs, like prunes, are improved by soaking for 24 hours before use. They are eaten in compotes, cooked in wine, accompanied by milky rice pudding and vanilla cream. They are also used in savoury cooking; for example with pork or rabbit, like prunes, and are particularly delicious with braised pheasant and guinea fowl (soaked in port until swollen, then added to the pan at the end of cooking). A drink is also made from them.

RECIPES

Savoury recipes

Corsican anchoiade with figs

Soak 5 anchovy fillets in cold water to remove the salt, then dry. Pound them with 450 g (1 lb) fresh figs and 1 small garlic clove. Spread this paste on slices of bread moistened with olive oil. Sprinkle with chopped onions and serve.

Figs with Cabecou en coffret

Coarsely chop a small bunch of chives. Cook 400 g (14 oz.) very fine green beans in salted water, keeping them all dente. Soak 65 g (2 ½ oz. 1/3 cup) sultans (golden raisins) in 60 ml (2 fl. oz. ¼ cup) vinaigrette until very soft.

Cut 2 cabecou goats cheeses into quarters. Cut 8 figs 1.5 cm (¾ in) from the top, reserving the tops, and remove one-third of the flesh. Fill each fig with one quarter of Cabecou. Using a pastry (cookie) cutter with a fluted edge, cut out 6 cm (2 ½ in) rounds of very thinly rolled puff pastry and coat with beaten egg. Place a fig on piece of puff pastry and bake in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 20 minutes. After 15 minutes, replace the tops of the figs.

Toss the green beans with the sultana vinaigrette and add the chives. Arrange 2 figs in puff pastry on each plate and add some of the bean salad. Sprinkle with toasted flaked almonds and serve at once.

Fresh figs with Parma ham.

Choose some very fresh or purple figs that are ripe but still slightly firm. Split them into four without completely separating the quarters (these should be held together by the stalk). Gently loosen the skin near the stalk. Roll some very thin slices of Parma or Bayonne ham into cornets, arrange the figs and ham in a dish and serve cold.

Lamb cutlets with figs and honey

Wash and wipe 1 kg (2 ¼ lb.) fresh figs, but do not peel. Place them, stalks upwards, in a generously buttered ovenproof dish. Cover with a glass of water, add some pepper and a little ground cinnamon and grated nutmeg, and cook in preheated oven at 200°F (400 °F, gas 6) for 30-35 minutes. About 10 minutes before the end of the cooking time, melt 40 g (1 ½ oz. 3 tablespoons) butter in a frying pan and fry 4-8 lamb cutlets (depending on their size) for 3-4 minutes per side. Season with salt and pepper and arrange the cutlets in a warmed serving dish. Keep hot. Melt 2 tablespoons honey in a little hot water and add the pan juices from the cutlets to make a sauce. Adjust the seasoning. Arrange the figs around the meat. Coat the cutlets and the figs with honey sauce. Serve immediately.

Sweet Recipes

Fig jam

Peel and quarter some large white figs that are just ripe but firm. Prepare a syrup, using 200 g (7 oz. 1 cup) sugar and 4 tablespoons water per 1 kg (2 ¼ lb.) fruit. Add the figs to the boiling syrup and cook until the gelling stage is reached. Pot and cover in the usual way.

Fig tart

Prepare 350 g (12 oz) shortcrust pastry (basic pie dough, see short pastry) and use to line a 23 cm flan ring. Prick and bake blind. Allow it to cool. Peel and halve some fresh figs and leave for 30 minutes. Mix a little run with some apricot jam, sieve the mixture and spread it over the base of the flan. Arrange the drained fig halves on top, coat them with apricot jam and decorate with Chantilly cream.

Figs with raspberry mousse

Peel some fresh ripe figs and cut them into quarters. Make a raspberry mousse with 200 ml (7 fl oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) chantly cream for each 250 g (9 oz. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups) sieved sweetened raspberries. Arrange the fig quarters in a shallow bowl, cover with the mousse and chill for 30 minutes. before serving.

Roast figs with a coulis of red fruits

Melt 50 g (2 oz. $\frac{1}{4}$ cup) butter in a frying pan. add 16 fresh ripe figs and 3 tablespoons icing (confectioner's) sugar. Fry until lightly golden, then cook in a preheated oven at 200°C 9400°F, gas 60 for 8-10 minutes. remove from the oven and, using scissors, cut the figs open to look like flowers. Fill the figs with 200 g (7 oz.) fresh raspberries. Pour 300 ml 91/2 pint, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ cups) strawberry or raspberry coulis on 4 plates and decorate with the figs. Place 1 scoop of vanilla ice creams in the centre of each plate. Serve immediately.

FICATELLI A Corsican characturie product in the form of long thin sausage, smoke and very spicy, made with liver (fegato), lean and fat pork, and are eaten raw or grilled (broiled).

FIGUETTE A drink made from dried figs and juniper berries soaked in water for a week, using 5 juniper berries per 450 g (1 lb) figs in 5 litres (8 $\frac{1}{2}$ pints, 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ quarts) water. The liquid is then strained, bottled and left for 4-5 days before drinking.

FILBERT Fruit of the hazel, a small tree of the Corylaceae family, known in the French grocery trade as noisette franche. It has a hard shell covered by a foliated envelope. There are several species, the best known coming from Piedmont and Sicily. Filberts (also known as hazelnut or colonuts) are eaten fresh or dried. They provide hazelnut oil (not much used) and are used to make the sugared almonds known as avelines.

FILET MIGNON Piece of a small section of beef, positioned within the thoracic cage, along the first dorsal vertebrae. When trimmed, the filet mignon makes one or two steaks.

In relation to pork, it corresponds to a piece of beef; it can be roasted or fried, cut into medallions, or cut into small pieces for kebabs.

FILLET – The undercut of the sirloin of beef, also used for the same cut in pork, veal and lamb. In Britain the word can also refer to the fleshy part of the buttocks of other animals. Either cut is prime meat, tender and with a delicate flavour.

If it is to be served whole, fillet of beef must be trimmed, larded or barded, and secured with string. It may be roasted in the oven or on a spit, fried or braised, according to the recipe. The fillet may alternatively be cut into steaks and grilled (boiled) -- chateaubrinds are cut from the middle of the fillet and tournedos from the end. The end of the fillet also provides pieces of meat suitable for kebabs.

In France, fillet of veal is used for genadins and for fillet chops (cotes-filet), which are broader than ordinary chops, and fillet of lamb provides filet cutlets (without knuckle) and mutton chops. Pork fillet (tenderloin). Provides particularly tender cuts of meat, especially from the middle or end of the fillet. The boned end of pork fillet provides a slightly dry roast joint, which it is advisable to band with rashers (slices) of bacon. Filet de Saxe (Saxony filled) is a fillet of smoked salted pork wrapped in a caul. It resembles bacon but is smoother.

- BEEF AND VEAL. The filet mignon is a small, choice cut of meat from the end of the fillet. Pork filet mignon is cut from the boned fillet and is particularly tender. It may be lightly braised in a single piece, sliced into two lengthways and stuffed, or cut into pieces for kebabs.
- POULTRY AND GAME BIRDS. The fillet is the underside of the breast, or the entire breast, cut off before cooking and prepared in various ways. However, the breasts of poultry and game are more often known as supremes. (The fillet of a duck is reared for its foie gras.)

- called. A magret.)
- FISH. The fillets are cut lengthways off the backbones. (there are four in a flatfish, and two in a round fish.) They may be removed before cooking and poached, fried, marinated or rolled into paupietes. When a fish is cooked whole, fillets are removed at the time of serving.

RECIPES

Cold fillet of beef a la nicoise

Garnish the cold roasted fillet with small tomatoes that have been marinated in olive oil and stuffed with salpicon of truffles, small artichoke hearts filled with a salad of green asparagus tips, large olives, anchovies and pieces of aspic jelly.

Cold fillet of beef a la russe

Surround the cold fillet with halves of shelled hard-boiled (hard-cooked) eggs stuffed a la russe and covered with aspic jelly, artichoke hearts stuffed with vegetables in mayonnaise and chopped aspic.

Cold fillet of beef in aspic.

Cold roasted fillet either whole, or cut into thin slices, may be covered with aspic jelly. If the piece is big enough to be served whole, place it on a rack and coat with several layers of aspic jelly, which may be flavoured with Madeira, port or sherry. (it must be placed in the refrigerator between each coating.

The arrange it on a serving dish and garnish with chopped aspic for with croutons and watercress. Slices of fillet are either coated separately or placed in a row on the serving dish and coated with aspic. They are garnished in the same way.

Serve with a cold sauce. Such as mayonnaise or tartare sauce, and cold vegetable barquettes or a salad.

Fillet of beef a la perigourdine

Trim the fillet of beef, stud it with truffles. Cover it with bacon rashers (slices), tie it with string and braise in Madeira-flavoured stock. Drain, remove bacon, glaze in the oven and arrange it on the serving dish. Surround it with small slices of foie gras that have been studded with truffles and sautéed in clarified butter. Reduce the braising stock by half, strain it and pour it over the fillet.

Fillet of beef en brioche

Prepare some brioche dough without sugar, using 500 g (1 lb 2 oz. 4 ½ cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, 20 g (¾ oz) fresh yeast (1 ½ cakes compressed yeast), 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) water, 2 teaspoons salt, 6 medium-sized eggs, and 250 g (9 oz 1 cup) butter. Melt 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter and 3 tablespoons oil in a pan and lightly brown a piece of fillet of beef weighing about 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb), tied with string to maintain its shape. Then place the pan, uncovered. In a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) and cook for 10 minutes, basting the meat 2 or 3 times. Drain it, season with salt and pepper and leave to cool completely.

Lower the temperature of the oven to about 220°C (425°F, gas 7). Roll out the brioche dough into a fairly large rectangle. Remove the string from the beef and place it in the centre of the dough lengthways. Brush the meat with beaten egg and fold one of the sides of the dough over it. Brush the other side of the rectangle with beaten egg and wrap the fillet completely in the dough, tucking in the edges. Trim and cut both ends of the dough just beyond the meat and seal the edges with beaten egg. Brush the top with beaten egg. Garnish the top with the remaining pieces of dough. Brush with beaten egg. Place on a floured baking sheet and bake in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) for about 30 minutes. Fillet of beef en brioche is traditionally served with a Périgueux sauce.

Fried fillet steaks.

Cut the fillet into thick 125-150 g (4-5 oz) steaks. Slightly flatten the steaks, then seal in very hot butter. Season with salt and pepper. Remove the steaks and keep them hot. Make a sauce with the pan juices mixed with a little Madeira; reduce and coat the steaks.

Grilled beef fillet steaks

Cut the trimmed fillet into thick steaks, each weighing 125-150g (4-5 oz). Slightly flatten each steak, sprinkle with pepper, brush with oil, season with herbes de Provence (or mixed dried herbs) and cook under a hot grill (broiler) or over glowing embers, so that the outside is sealed while the inside remains pink or rare. Top each steak with a pat of maître d'hôtel butter.

Grilled filets mignons

Slightly flatten some filets mignons of beef, each weighing about 125-150 g (4-5 oz.). Season with salt and pepper, dip in melted butter and coat with fresh breadcrumbs. Moisten them with clarified butter and cook under a low grill (broiler). Serve with maître d'hôtel butter. Charon sauce, lemon butter or tarragon-flavored, tomato sauce mixed with white wine.

Roast fillet of beef.

Trim the fillet, bard it top and bottom (or brush with melted butter) and tie with string. Cook it in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9), allowing 10-12 minutes per 450 g (1 lb) and basting it several times with the meat juices, to which a very small amount of water has been added. Drain the meat, remove the barding strips and keep it hot on a serving dish. Make a sauce with the pan juices mixed with stock or reduced veal gravy. Reduce and serve with the filets.

Sautéed filets mignons

Slightly flatten some filets mignons of beef, season with salt and pepper and sauté them quickly in very hot clarified butter. Garnish as for tournedos.

Spit-roasted fillet of beef

Trim the fillet, put it on the spit, season with salt and pepper and coat with melted butter. Roast allowing about 10-12 minutes per 450 g (1 lb.) remove from the spit and leave the meat to rest for a few minutes. Cut it into even slices and serve with the reserved meat juices.

FILLETING FISH The process of removing the fillets from a whole fish that has been cleaned by cutting the flesh off the main backbone. Small bones and some stray larger bones may remain in the fillet, but this is essentially a boneless cut. Stray bones should be removed before cooking. A filleting knife, known in France as a couteau à filets de sole. Has a long, narrow and flexible blade.

FILLO PASTRY Also known as phyllo, this is a paper-thin pastry made from flour and water. The pastry is either rolled very thinly or stretched with the hands until paper thin. Similar in style to strudel pastry, it is used several layers thick. The layers are brushed with melted butter or oil so that they adhere but form crisp and flaky layers when baked. Fillo pastries can also be fried.

This type of pastry is used throughout the Mediterranean for making a variety of savoury and sweet dishes. In Greece it is used to make fetsi cheese and spinach pies, known as spinakopita, or it is layered with nuts to make baklava, the famous sweet drenched in honey syrup. Baklava is also popular in Turkey, where yufka is the same type of pastry, used for savoury pastries called boreks. In north Africa, a similar type of thin pastry, known as maisouqaa or ourka (meaning paper), is used to make brik, a fried large semi-circular pastry filled with spicy vegetables with an egg nestling in the filling.

- Buying and handling Filo is available fresh or frozen and ready to use. However, exposed to air, the sheets rapidly dry out, becoming crumbly and unusable, so it's important to unwrap only the required number of sheets and to keep the remainder covered with cling film (plastic wrap) or in a polythene bag until they are to be used.

Dampening the pastry to a sticky paste, so the work surface must be clean and dry. Brushing the pastry with melted butter or oil (or a mixture of both) will stick the layers of pastry together, sealing the fold to keep the filling in place and preventing the pastry from becoming flaky and dry around the edges. When cooked, the fat makes the pastry layers crisp and separate. Although many traditional recipes use generous quantities of melted butter, a light brushing is sufficient to give good results, especially through the middle layers, with more brushed over the outside or to seal folds.

Contemporary cookery, filo is brushed very lightly with oil (olive is good with savoury fillings) and used as an alternative to fat-rich short and puff pastries. It makes an excellent casing for fillets of fish, chicken, meat or vegetables. It is also popular for savoury finger snacks as little filled parcels and bundies.

FILTER A utensil or a material that is porous or perforated, enabling the separation of solid matter from a liquid by retaining the former and allowing the latter to pass through. In cookery, liquids can be filtered through a clean cloth strainer or a piece of muslin (cheesecloth), a colander or a sieve.

A coffee filter holds ground coffee and near boiling water is poured over it. It can be made of perforated metal, earthenware, porcelain or cloth (la chaussette), or a cone of filter paper that is placed in a special cone-shaped holder. Café-filtre (or filtre) is coffee made this way filtered directly into the cup.

FINANCIER A cake made from a sponge mixture using ground almonds and whisked egg whites. Small financiers are oval or rectangular in shape; they may be used as a base for iced petits fours.

Large cakes made with the same mixture are decorated with shredded almonds and crystallized (candied) fruits. These large financiers may be cooked in cake tins (pans) of decreasing size and then built up in layers to form a large gateau.

RECIPE

Almond financiers

Butter 16 tins (pans), each 10 x 5 cm (4 x 2 in). Put 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour into a mixing bowl. Add 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) ground almonds, 300 g (11 oz, 1 1/3 cups) caster (superfine) sugar, 2-3 tablespoons vanilla sugar and a pinch of salt. Mix everything thoroughly. Add a pinch of salt to 8 egg whites and whisk them into very stiff peaks. Fold them carefully into the cake mixture. Quickly fold in 150 g (2/3 cup) melted unsalted butter. Divide the mixture between the tins and bake in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 15-20 minutes until the financiers are golden brown, then turn them out and cool on a wire rack. They may be coated with kirsch- or chocolate-flavoured fondant icing (frosting).

FINANCIERE, A LA A very rich classic garnish for joints of meat, calves' sweetbread or braised poultry. It may also be used as a filling for croustilles, timbales, bouchees or vol-au-vent. It consists of a ragout of cockscombs, chicken quenelles, finely sliced mushrooms and shredded truffles flavoured with Madeira, all bound with a sauce containing Madeira and truffle essence. The same ingredients are used to make atteraux a la financiere, the quenelles being optional. There is also a financiere sauce flavoured with Madeira and truffles.

RECIPES

Calve's sweetbreads a la financiere

Soak the sweetbreads in cold water until they become white. Poach in salted water, drain and trim, removing skin and membranes. Place between 2 cloths in a meat press. Cut some truffles and some cooked tongue coated with aspic into matchstick shapes and use them to stud the sweetbreads. Braise the sweetbreads in a brown stock. Arrange them in courstades of puff pastry and cover with financiere garnish.

Financiere garnish

Prepare some poached children querelles and some cockscombs. Slowly cook some finely sliced mushrooms and shredded truffles in butter. Add 1 little Madeira. Bind all these ingredients with financiere sauce.

Financiere sauce (1)

(from Careme's recipe). Put some shredded lean ham, a pinch of mignonette (coarsely ground white pepper), a little thyme and bay leaf, some shredded mushrooms and 2 glasses of dry Madeira into a saucepan. Simmer and reduce over a gentle heat. Add 2 tablespoons chicken consomme and 2 tablespoons well-beaten espagnole sauce. Reduce by half, press through a fine sieve, strain, then heat again, stirring in 3 tablespoons Madeira. Reduce to the desired consistency and serve in a sauceboat (gravy boat).

When this sauce is intended for a game entrée, the chicken consomme is replaced by game fumet. Add a little butter just before serving.

Financiere sauce(2)

(modern recipe) Make 200 ml (7 fl. oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) Madeira sauce, adding 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) truffle essence while it is reducing. This sauce is usually used to bind the financiere garnish.

Stuffed quails a la financiere

Prepare some stuffed quails in cases coat them with a sauce made with their cooking juices mixed with Madeira, and glaze them in the oven. Arrange on fried croutons or coursades of puff pastry. Garnish with finely sliced truffles and surround with a financiere garnish.

Supreme of chicken a la financiere. A La a very rich class c garnish for joints of meat, calves' sweetbreads or braised poultry. It may also be used as filling for courtes, timbales, boutchees or vol-au-vent. It consists of a ragout of cockscombs, chicken queeles. Finely sliced mushrooms and shredded truffles flavoured with Madeira, all bound with a sauce containing Madeira and truffle essence. The same ingredients are used to make atterauce a la financiere, the quenelles being optional. There is also a financiere sauce flavoured with Madeira and truffles.

RECIPES

Calves' sweetbreads a la financiere

Soak the sweetbreads in cold water until they become white. Poach in salted water, drain and trim, removing skin and membranes. Place between 2 cloths in a meat press. Cut some truffles and some cooked tongue coated with aspic into matchstick shapes and use them to stud the sweetbreads. Braise the sweetbreads in a brown stock. Arrange them in a croustade of puff pastry and cover with financier garnish.

Financiere garnish

Prepare some poached chicken quenelles and some cockscombs. Slowly cook some finely sliced mushrooms and shredded truffles in butter. Add a little Madeira. Bind all these ingredients with financier sauce.

Financiere sauce (1)

(frome Careme's recipe). Put some shredded lean ham, a pinch of mignonette (coarsely ground white pepper), a little thyme and bay leaf finely shredded mushrooms and truffles, and 2 glasses of dry Madeira into a saucepan, simmer and reduce over a gentle heat. Add 2 tablespoons chicken consomme and 2 tablespoons well-beaten espagnole sauce. Reduce by half, press through a fine sieve, strain, then heat again, stirring in 3 tablespoons Madeira. Reduce to the desired consistency and serve in a sauceboat (gravy boat).

When this sauce is intended for a game entrée, the chicken consomme is replaced by game fumet. Add a little butter just before serving.

Financiere sauce (2)

(modern recipe) Make 200 ml (7 fl. oz. ¾ cup) Madeira sauce, adding 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) truffle essence while it is reducing. The sauce is usually used to bind the financier garnish.

Stuffed quails a la financiere

Prepare some stuffed quails in cases, coat them with a sauce made with their cooking juices mixed with Madeira, and glaze them in the oven. Arrange on fried coustons or croustades of puff pastry. Garnish with finely sliced truffles and surrounded with a financier garnish.

Supremes of chicken a la financiere

Sauté some supremes of chicken in clarified butter.

Arrange them on fried coustons or puff pastry croustades. Coat with financier sauce and surround with a financier garnish.

FINE The French word for a brandy distilled from wine (as opposed to another alcoholic liquid). It should be distinguished from marc, which is distilled from the grape debris left after preserving.

FINE CHAMPAGNE A category of cognac coming from the delimited regions of Grande and Petite champagne and containing not less than 50% Grande Champagne cognac in the blend (it has nothing to do with the delimited area producing champagne).

FINES HERBES A mixture of chopped aromatic herbs, such as parsley, chervil, tarragon and chives, in various proportions. The mixture is used to flavour sauces, cream cheeses, meat, sautéed vegetables and omelettes. In the past chopped mushrooms were added, and today celery sticks, fennel, basil, rosemary, thyme and bay leaf may be added.

RECIPES

Omelette garnished with fines herbs

Add enough coarsely chopped parsley, chervil, tarragon and chives to the beaten eggs to colour the omelette green - allow 3 tablespoons chopped fines herbs for 8 eggs.

Sauce with fines herbe

Make 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) demi-glace sauce or brown stock and add 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon. Reduce, press through a very fine sieve, add a few drops of lemon juice and adjust the seasoning. This sauce is served with poached poultry.

Veal chops with fines herbs

Sauté some veal chops in butter in a frying pan (skillet). Drain them and arrange on a hot serving dish. Add some chopped shallots and white wine to the butter and cook for a few minutes to reduce. Then add some chopped parsley, chervil and tarragon, adjust the seasoning, stir and pour the sauce over the chops. Formerly, demi-glace sauce was added to the white wine to make a richer, smoother and creamer sauce.

FINGER BOWL A small individual metal, glass or china bowl filled with warm water, usually perfumed with lemon, and used for rinsing the fingers at the table. It is an essential component of the table setting when serving shrimps or prawns, which need to be shelled with the fingers, or asparagus or artichoke, which are eaten with the fingers. The finger bowl is placed to the left of the dinner plate towards the end of the course and is removed as soon as the course is finished and the guest has rinsed his or her fingertips, an operation which should be carried out rapidly and with the minimum of fuss.

FINISH to complete the preparation of a dish for example by adjusting the seasoning or the consistency and adding decorations or garnishes. Certain soups are finished by adding herb leaves, fresh butter or cream. A civet (rich game stew) is generally finished by thickening it with the blood of the animal used in the recipe. A dish coated with Mornay sauce is finished by browning. A sweet dish is finished by adding a decoration.

FISH Aquatic vertebrates with fins (for swimming) and gills (for breathing), which represent an important source of food. At present, more than 30,000 species are known (as many as all other vertebrates put together). Most fish live in the seas and oceans, at varying depths. Freshwater fish are much less numerous. Some fish, such as eels and salmon, are migratory, spending part of their life in the sea and part in fresh water.

Fish are classified into two broad groups, according to their skeletons cartilaginous fish (sharks, rays, dogfish, skate) and bony fish (the vast majority). Several basic body shapes can be distinguished.

- tapering adapted to swimming in the open water (herring, cod, salmon, mackerel, carp, pike) – these are the most numerous;
- flatfish compressed vertically, with the eye on the ventral (lower) surface is white;
- flatfish compressed laterally, with both eyes either on the right side of the head (plaice, flounder, dab, sole) or on the left (turbot, brill), the blind side usually being without pigment.
- Elongated and eel-like (eels).

Fish can also be differentiated by colour, the number and shape of the fins, the width of the mouth, the presence or absence of teeth, the thickness of the skin and any spines, spurs and barbel

- Buying fish There are three main factors to consider when buying fish: its freshness, its availability (depending on the season) and the percentage of waste. The season is less important now than it used to be, because fish caught off the African or northern coasts are sold almost all the year round. However, it is always preferable to eat fish in sense it tastes better and is cheaper.

Freshness is extremely important. Fish is subjects to speedy decay by bacterial action and often causes food poisoning if it is not absolutely fresh. It is at its best when first caught, but the speed of modern transport and the excellent methods of preservation mean that fish can be enjoyed far from the fishing grounds without loss of flavour. Fish is refrigerated for transport and sold in melting ice, care being taken that the melting water drains off properly. This practice is sometimes considered to detract from the flavour, but it still remains the only method of transporting fresh fish for long distances from the fishing grounds.

Most methods of preserving fish date back to ancient times, freezing (practiced by the Romans), drying (especially for herring and cod), smoking (salmon, haddock eel) and salting in casks or barrels. Preservation by canning has considerably increased the consumption of tuna, sardines pilchards and salmon in particular and freezing has enabled many more types of fish to be made available all the year round. The process of freezing ; freshly caught fish in factory ships has greatly improved the quality of frozen fish. High-quality frozen fish is often superior to 'fresh' fish from some shops where poor handling impairs the quantity. When selecting frozen fish, the price and quality are good indicators of the standard to expect. Packing is also important as poor wrapping leads to freeze burn and deterioration in texture, moisture content and flavour.

For culinary purposes, fish can be divided into white fish, including all the cod family (haddock, whiting), the white flatfish (place, sole), and the perch family (including bass, red mullet and skate); and oily fish including sardines, mackerel, herring, and trout, tuna, salmon, moray and lamprey.

- Preparing fish this depends on the type of fish the dish and the cooking method. Large fish are usually sold prepared reads for cooking in the form of cleaned whole fish. Fillets, steaks or cutelts. Some smaller fish may be displayed whole and have to be gutted, but the fishmonger will usually do this. Some very small fish are cooked and eaten whole, such as whitebait, and small sardines may be grilled (broiled) whole, then the fish is picked off the carcassas if it eaten

Scaly fish, such as salmon are described or scaled before cook by scraping the skin with a knife to remove all the scales. This is messy task, which is easier when carried out under cold running water. Whole flat fish or fillets may be skinned before cooking the skin may be cut off cutlets or steaks.

Round fish, such as mackerel or truot, may be boned with or without their heads in place, alternatively, the fillets can be off the bones of small or large fish. Smaller fat fish, such as place or sole, are often sold whole the bones may be removed to leave a pocket in the fish or the fillets can be cut off the bones may be removed from the middle of cutlets or steaks.

- Cooking fish. This requires care, to avoid overcooking, when the flesh becomes very flaky and dry. Fish may be grilled (broiled) or baked, poached in water or stock. Cooked in fat, steamed or wrapped in buttered paper or foil, before cooking in the oven. Raw fish, either lightly cured, marinated or with carefully selected condiments, is considered to be a delicacy by some, but it needs to be absolutely fresh and carefully prepared. Such dishes include ceviche from Mexico and Ecuador, gravad lax from scandinavia and sashimi from Japan
Hot or cold fish dishes can be accompanied by a wide variety of sauces, flavoured butters, vegetables and even fruit. Fish can also be cooked in soups (chaudree, bouillabaisse, cotrivade), in pies (koulibiaca), in mousses quenelles sapics, salads, in scallop shels or gratin dishes on skewers curreid, as a matelote, and in many other ways.
- History in the middle, Ages, river fish were much more common than they are today, but even then coasted fish from the English Channel, especially mackerel and herring, were being sold in Paris. However the eels of Maine, France the barbels of Saint-Florentin, the pike of Chalon, the lampreys of Nantes and Bordeaux, the louch of Bur-sur-Seine, the dace of Aisne and the carp of the lakes of Bondy continued to be highly regarded. During the Renaissance period, haddock, archovies, turbot, skate and whiting were eaten more frequently, but the river continued to supply most of the fish markets, the following is an extract from Blasons domestiques (by G. Corrozet, 1539); 'there you can see the eel and the lamprey... the fresh salmon, the sub-nosed carp, the large pike, the frisky sole, the fat propoise, the savoury shad. Then the sturgeon and the amorous trout, some boiled the others roasted to sharpen human appetites.

In the 15th century, salt cod was considered to be worthy of the best table, while the so-called 'royal fish' (basically dolphin, sturgeon and salmon) were reserved for the king's table.

In France certain fish, especially river species, are now becoming rare (pike, char, shad. And dace), while others are less frequently cooked (eel and sturgeon). On the other hand, some are in greater demand than in the past (red mullet, sea bass and sea bream). Concerns about fish stocks and overfishing the wide variety of 'exotic' species, for example from Africa and New Zealand, offered as alternatives to traditionally popular seafood; and fish farming are contemporary issues that influence the availability and promotion of fish.

FISH AND CHIPS Fried battered fish and chips (French fries), widely considered to be Britain's national dish. As such, there is great regional variation – and debate – over the way fish and chips should be prepared. The most popular fish are cod, haddock and plaice, in that order. Haddock is predominantly caught on the east coast of Britain and cod on the west, which reflects local preferences. The cooking fat varies, with the North favouring lard or beef dripping the Midlands and the south opting for vegetable oil. Certain potato varieties are said to give superior results, with the floury Désirée and Maris Piper being the most popular.

FISH KETTLE A long, deep cooking receptacle with two handles, a grid and a lid. The fish kettle is used to cook whole fish, such as salmon, pike, in a court-bouillon. The removable grid enables the fish to be taken out without breaking it. The wide turbot kettle is specially designed for cooking large flat fish.

FISH SLICE A table utensil, in the form of a silverplated or stainless steel spatula, for serving fish. It is usually perforated. Since fish cooked in a courtbouillon, even if it has been drained, is often still rather watery. The blade is rounded, pointed or has its corners cut off. The French word truelle may also be applied to a cake slice.

FITOU A real AOC wine from Languedoc, produced around Corbières, south of Narbonne. The appellation divides into two areas-Fitou Maritime producing supple, lighter wines less tannin, best drunk young, and Fitou Montagneux where the wines have firmer structure and longer ageing potential. Both styles must be kept for a minimum of nine months before bottling. The main grapes are Carignan, Grenache and Syrah.

FIVE SPICES. A mixture of five Chinese spices star anise, clove, fennel, cinnamon and Szechuan pepper. It is widely used in Chinese cookery. The flavour is strong, particularly anise, and the spice is used with care, in small amounts.

FIXIN A fine red Burgundy (AOC), from the most northerly of the Côte-de-Nuits vineyards. The finest climats or terroirs are considered to be les Arvelets, Les Hervelets, Le Chapitre, La Perrière and Clos Napoleon. Other wines may be sold as Côte de Nuits Villages. Fixin wines are particularly fragrant, capable of long lives and appreciated for their finesse and pedigree.

FLAMANDE, A LA The name given to various preparation derived from the regional cookery of northern France. The Flamande garish consists of stuffed braised balls of green cabbage, shaped pieces of glazed carrot and turnip, potatoes à l'anglaise and, sometimes, diced belly of pork (salt pork) and slices of sausage that are cooked with the cabbage. It is also the name of garnish and a hot pot which is used especially for large cuts of meat (such as rump of beef) or for braised goose. The entire dish is coated with demi-glace, veal stock or a sauce made with the pan juices from the meat.

Among other preparations described as a la flamane are Brussels sprouts (pureed, mixed with an equal of potatoes or used to garnish a consommé) and chicory (endive), either raw in a mixed salad, or cooked in a chiffonnade for garnishing an omelette served with cream sauce. A la flammande is also a method of preparing asparagus with sieved hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolks.

RECIPES

Asparagus à la flammande

Cook some asparagus in salted boiling water. Serve hot with melted butter to which sieved yolks of hard-boiled (hard-boiled) eggs and chopped parsley have been added.

Flemish salad

Cook some peeled potatoes in salted water and blanch some large peeled onions. Cut the potatoes into slices and chop the onions coarsely. Clean some chicory (endive) and cut the leaves lengthways and across. Place all the ingredients in salad bowl and mix with a fairly well-seasoned vinaigrette. Arrange in a dome and garnish with fillets of salt herring cut into strips. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and chervil.

FLAMBER A French culinary term meaning to pour spirits over food; then ignite it, both to enhance the flavour and for culinary showmanship.

When flaming a savoury dish, the spirit must be warmed and then ignited, preferably with a long taper. As it catches fire, it is poured over the dish. Brandy, rum or whisky are the spirits most commonly used, and the procedure is usually carried out when making a sauce from the pan juices.

In some restaurants, sweet dishes, such as crepes or sweet omelettes, are flamed with a rum or a liqueur at the serving table on special hotplates.

FLAMBE TROLLEY A small table on castor, fitted with one or two burners (spirit or butane) and used in restaurants for flaming dishes at table. The flambe trolley often has a bottle rack and cabinet for cutlery.

FLAMICHE also known as flamique. A type of sweet or savoury tart made in northern France and Flanders (flamiche is the Flemish word for cake). Formerly, it was a cake made of bread dough and eaten freshly baked, spread with butter. Nowadays, a flamiche contains vegetables or cheese. The vegetables are cooked slowly in butter, then mixed with egg yolks and seasoned. The best-known flamiche is made with leeks, in Picardy, where it's known as flamique à perions, it is also prepared with pumpkin or onions.

Cheese flamiches are usually made with a Maroilles or similar full-flavoured cheese. Flamiche à l'ancienne is made with a three-turn puff pastry mixed with semi-matured

Maroilles cheese and butter. It is cooked in a very hot oven and is eaten as a hot entrée with beer. Another way of making a flamiche is to line a pie plate with bread dough and fill it with slices of Maroilles cheese, alternating with cream seasoned with black pepper and butter. Yet another variation is prepared in Hainaut, where cheese flamiche is made as a pie (with a pastry lid). In Dinan the tart tin is lined with shortcrust pastry (basic pie dough) but the covering is a mixture of strong cheese, butter and eggs.

RECIPE

Leek flamche

Make 500 g (1 lb 2 oz) shortcrusts pastry (basic pie dough, see short pastry). Roll out two-thirds of dough to line a 28 cm (11 in) pie plate. Cut and thinly slice 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) leeks (the white parts only) and slowly cook them in butter. Add 3 egg yolks and adjust the seasoning. Spread the mixture over the pastry on the pie plate. Roll out the remaining dough large enough to cover the top of the dish. Dampen and pinch the edges together to seal and mark a criss-cross pattern on the top with the tip of a knife. Glaze with beaten egg. Make a slit in the centre and bake in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) until the pastry is golden brown.

FLAMMENKUCH An Alsatian specialty, whose name means literally flame cake. Traditionally prepared by the baker, it consists of a large rectangle of very thin bread dough with a raised edge; it is filled with finely sliced lightly fried onions mixed with fresh cream and topped with small strips of fried smoked bacon. Flammenkiche may also be filled with a mixture of cream cheese, cream and egg yolks and topped with onions and strips of bacon. It must be cooked very quickly in a very hot oven.

FLAMRI also known as flamery. A baked semolina pudding prepared with white wine instead of milk and served cold. It is coated with a puree of sweetened red fruit.

RECIPE

Flamari

Place 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) sweet white wine and 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) water in a saucepan and bring to the boil. Gradually stir in 250 g (9 oz. 1 ¼ cups) fine semolina and simmer gently for 25 minutes. remove from the heat and add 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, 2 beaten eggs and a generous pinch of salt. Then stir in 6 stiffly and generous pinch of salt. Then stir in 6 stiffly whisked egg whites. Pour the mixture into a buttered charlotte mould in a bain marie. Cook in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 30 minutes. allow to cool, then turn out on to a serving dish and coat with a sauce made from a puree of uncooked red fruit that has been sweetened with sugar.

FLAMUSSE An apple pudding made in the same way as clafuotis. It is a speciality of burgundy and Nivernais.

RECIPE

Apple flamusse

Put 65 g (2 ½ oz. 2/3 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour in a mixing bowl. Make a well in the centre and add 75 g (3 oz. 6 tablespoons) caster (superfine) sugar, a generous pinch of salt and 3 beaten eggs. Mix with a wooden spoon until smooth. Gradually add 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) milk and mix well. Peel 3 or 4 dessert (eating) apples and cut them into thin slices.

Arrange them on a buttered pie plate so that they overlap. Pour the butter mixture over the top and cook in a preheated oven at 150°C (300°F, gas 2) for 45 minutes. when cooked,, turn that lamusse over to serve, and sprinkle the apples generously with caster sugar.

FLAN an open tart filled with fruit, a cream or a savoury mixture. A flan may be served as a hot entree or as a dessert. The word comes from the old French flacon, from the Latin flado (a flat cake).

Flans have been in existence for centuries. They are mentioned in the words of the Latin poet. Fortunatus (AD 530-609), and featured in medieval cookery – Taillevent gave numerous recipes for flans.

The word flan is also used in France and Spain for an egg custard, often caramel-flavoured, that is made in a mould, turned out and served cold.

RECIPES

Flan case baked blind

Prepare 350g (12oz) pastry dough (short on shortcrust, sweet fine lining or puff) and roll out to a thickness of 3mm (1/8 in). grease and flour a 28 cm (11 in) pie plate or flan ring and line it with the pastry, pressing firmly around the edges to ensure that it stays in place and taking care not to stretch the pastry. Leave a thicker edge of pastry at the top so that it does not shrink while it is being baked. Trim off the excess pastry by rolling the rolling pin around the rim of the plate or by trimming with a sharp knife. Prick the bottom with a fork and completely cover the pastry with lightly buttered greased proof (was) paper or foil, greased side down. to keep the base of the flan flat, sprinkle the surface of the paper with baking beans or dried peas. Bake in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for about 10 minutes. remove the paper or foil and baking beans, glaze the crust with beaten egg, and return to the oven for 3-4 minutes, or until the pastry is cooked and dried out. The flan case (pie shell) may then be filled.

Savoury Flans

Cheese flan

Bake a flan case (pie shell) blind. Heat 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) double heavy) cream with 50 g (2 oz. 1/4 cup) butter. Season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg and add 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour. Whisk over a gentle heat to obtain a fairly smooth cream. Remove from the heat and add 4 egg yolks and 150 g (5 oz. 1 1/4 cups) grated cheese. Whisk 4 egg white into very stiff peaks and fold them into the cream mixture. Fill the flan case and bake in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for about 30 minutes, or until set and browned.

Chicken liver flan chavette.

Baked a flan case (pie shall blind. Thickly slice 500 g (18 oz) trimmed chicken livers. Season and sauté quickly in hot butter. Drain and keep warm. Sauté 200 g (7 oz. 2 1/2 cups) sliced mushrooms in the same butter. Season, drain and keep warm with the chicken livers.

Make a sauce by adding 200 ml (7 fl oz. 3/4 cup) Madeira to the juices in the pan in which the chicken livers and mushrooms were cooked. Reduce a little. Add 350 ml (12 fl. oz. 1 1/2 cups) thin bechamel sauce and 200 ml (7 fl. oz 3/4 cup) single (light) cream and reduce the sauce until it has a creamy consistency. Strain it, then add the chicken livers and mushrooms. Simmer gently without allowing the sauce to boil.

Prepare some very soft scrambled eggs (using 8-10 eggs) and then add 2 tablespoons grated. Parmesan cheese and 2 tablespoons butter.

Arrange the chicken livers and mushrooms in the bottom of the prepared flan case. Top with the scrambled egg mixture and sprinkle with grated cheese. Pour some melted butter over the top and brown very quickly in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) so that the scrambled eggs are not overcooked.

Seafood flan

Bake a flan case (pie shell) blind. Prepare a ragout of shellfish (such as oysters, mussels and cockles). Blend the shellfish with a fairly thick normande sauce and fill the flan case with the mixture. Sprinkle with toasted breadcrumbs and a little melted butter and brown in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9).

Sweet Flan

Cherry flan

Line a flan ring with sweetened pastry (pate sucee) and bake blind. Remove the stalks and stones (stems and pits) from 400 g (14 oz. 2 cups) black cherries (Bing cherries). Boil 300 ml (1/2 pint. 1 1/4 cups) milk with a vanilla pod (bean) split in two and then stir in 3 tablespoons double (heavy) cream. Beat 3 eggs with 100 g (4 oz. 1/2 cu) caster (superfine) sugar in a bowl, add the vanilla-flavoured milk and whisk until the mixture has cooled completely. Place the cherries in the flan case (pie shell) and carefully pour the mixture over. Cook in a preheated oven at 190°C (375°F, gas 5) for 35-40 minutes. serve either lukewarm or cold sprinkled with sugar if wished.

FLANDERS The cuisine of this northern province has much in common with that of the neighboring provinces of Artois and Picardy. The North Sea provides maritime Flanders with an abundance of fish, particularly mackerel and herrings. Crops and vegetables of the interior include wheat, potatoes, endive (chicory), hops and sugar beet. High-quality livestock is also important and includes pigs and sheep, and also dairy and beef cattle, whose meat is highly regarded. With all these resources, the cuisine of Flanders is a rich one - dishes are usually cooked slowly in a covered part.

The most typical Flemish soups are soupe verte (green soup) and beetroot (red beet) soup. fish specialities include Dunkerque bloaters, wam (dried fish), mackerel stuffed with shallots, spring onions (scallions), parsley and butter, cod a la flamande (sautéed with shallots and cooked in white wine), red herring salad (with potatoes and beetroot) and eels in beer.

Typical meat dishes include smoked tongues of Valenciennes baby chitterlings (ancluillettes) of Cambrai and Armentieres, the traditional Flemish hotch-potch, carbonades, potfevleisch, rabbit a la flamande (with prunes and raisins), cod a la biere (in beer) and poule au blanc (chicken cool in white stock).

Vegetables are used to make flamiches and also to make such specialities as red cabbage a la lilloise (cabbage, apples and onions, simmered for 3 hours, reduced to a puree and cooked briefly in the oven in a souffle mould.)

The best-known cheeses, which all have strong flavour, are Bergues, Mnt-des-cats, coeur d'Arras. Boulette d' Avesnes, Dauphin. Vieux-Lille and Maroilles. Omelettes and flamiches are made with Maroilles cheese, as is the goyere (Maroilles cheese tart) of Valenciennes.

The production of sugar from sugar beet has given rise to a variety of regional pastries and confectionery. The best known are the apple pies of Avesnes, plum tarts, craquelins of Roubaix, carres of Lannoy, galopins (little oblongs of bread dipped in milk mixed with eggs, and fried), couques, and the bettises (mint humbugs) of Cambrai.

The local drink is beer, and good-quality spirits are distilled from beetroot or cereals, often flavoured with unique berries.

FLANK The abdominal muscles of beef, which form a second-category joint. Thick flank steaks cut on the perpendicular from the internal muscles are lean, tasty, coarse-grained and slightly tough (they must therefore be hung); they are eaten grilled (broiled) or sautéed. Thin flank is similar but slightly tougher. Cuts taken from the two external muscles give fibrous, external tougher. Cuts taken from the two external muscles give fibrous, rather tough meat, suitable for broths and stews.

RECIPES

Flank with shallots

Chop some shallots, allowing 1 level tablespoons chopped shallots for each steak. Fry the steaks quickly in butter, add the chopped shallot to the frying pan (skillet) and brown. Season with salt and pepper. Remove the steaks and deglaze the meat juices with vinegar (2 tablespoon per steak) and a little stock, then reduce. Pour the shallots and juice over the steaks.

Grilled flank

Brush some steaks with oil, sprinkle with chopped herbs (fresh thyme and parsley) and grill (broil) quickly for 7-8 minutes. season with salt and pepper at the end of cooking.

FLAN RING A ring of tin-plate of varying diameter (6-33 cm. 2 ½ -13 ½ in). Many pastry cooks prefer it to a mould for preparing tarts and flans. When placed directly on the baking sheet, it ensures better diffusion of heat through the pastry and enables the cooked tart or flan to be easily removed. A loose-bottomed metal flan tin is often used instead particularly by home cooks.

FLAUGNARDE Also known as flagnarde. Flognarde or flougnarde. A flan made in the Auvergne. Lomousin and Perigord regions of France. The name is derived from the Old French fleugne, meaning soft or downy. The flan resembles clafoutis and is made with apples, pears or prunes, flavoured with cinnamon, vanilla, rum brandy, orange-flower water or lemon. It resembles a large pancake and is served lukewarm or cold (curnonsky recommended) the latter, generously sprinkled with icing (confectioner's) sugar and sometimes spread with jam.

RECIPE

Flaugnarde

Beat 4 eggs with 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar in a bowl until the mixture is light and frothy gradually add 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour and a pinch of salt. Slowly beat in 1.5 litres (2 ¾ pints, 6 ½ cups) milk. Mix well, then flavour with 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) rum or 4 tablespoons orange-flower water.. peel and core 3 pears, cut them into thin slices and add them to the mixture. Butter an overproof dish, pour in the mixture and dot the surface with small pieces of butter. Bake in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) for 30 minutes. serve hot or cold.

FLAVOUR The sensation produced when food comes into contact with the taste buds on the tongue. There are four basic tastes – sweet, salty, sour and bitter – which are detected by taste buds on different parts of the tongue. The particular flavour of a dish comes from the combination of several of these tastes; when one predominates, the dish is described as sweet, salty, sour or bitter.

Extreme temperatures (very hot or very cold) temporarily numb the sense of taste. When flavours are mixed they can mask each other or bring each other out. Salt masks the sweetening power of sugar, but a pinch of salt in a sweet dish (especially in pastries and dough) makes it seem sweeter. A little sugar added to some savoury foods (peas, tomatoes, sauces) enhances their flavour. A contrasting taste will modify the flavour of foodstuffs, for example fruit tastes sour after a sweet dish and sweet after cheese or a spiced dish. The skillful cook combines contrasting or similar flavours to produce a harmonious whole, the flavours being enhanced by texture, consistency, colour and temperature.

FLAVOURING A substance added to a preparation to improve its flavour. Before the 13th century it was customary to use exotic flavourings which are now usually reserved for perfumery, such as essence of rose and other flowers, benzoin, amber and musk. Today, the herbs and spices commonly used for flavouring include thyme, bay, savory, coriander, cinnamon, cumin, aniseed, pepper and ginger. Orange-flower water, almond essence (extract), vanilla and the zest of citrus fruits are used for flavouring cakes, pastries and confectionery.

Wines, fortified wines (Madiera, Frontignan, port and sherry), spirits and brandies are used extensively for flavouring sauces and gravies and for enhancing the taste of game stews, sautés of shellfish à la bordelaise or à l'américaine, and flamed meat and poultry dishes. A variety of extracts, essences and fumets are also used. Other methods of flavouring include steam-cooking with aromatic plants, smoking with specially scented wood, and macerating with spices.

FLEURIE One of the ten Beaujolais region distinguished by an AOC Charming and fruity, the wines are sometimes associated with the 'floweriness' of the place name. They are usually at their best when drunk young.

FLEURISTE, A LA Describing a preparation of small cuts of sautéed meat garnished with chateau potatoes. The latter are hollowed out, slowly baked and filled with a jardinière of vegetables mixed with butter.

FLEURON A small puff-pastry shape used to garnish pie crusts or served with dishes of fish cooked in sauce. Fleurons are cut into crescents or other shapes from the leftover pastry trimmings, rolled out very thinly. They are then brushed with beaten egg and baked or fried.

FLICOTEAUX A Parisian restaurant, situated in the place de la Sorbonne, that was frequented in the 19th century by generations of students, journalists and impoverished writers because of its fixed-price menus. Balzac gave a vivid description of the two long low rooms, each with a narrow table. The tablecloths were changed on Sundays in 'Flicoteaux I' and twice a week in 'Flicoteaux II' in order to compete with other restaurants. He made this comment about the cooking; 'The female ox prevails and potatoes are inevitable. When the whiting and mackerel shoals teem on the Atlantic coasts, they rebound into the restaurant of Flicoteaux.'

FLIP Formerly, a flip was a hot alcoholic drink made with beer, rum and beaten eggs. Today it is usually a cocktail made with wine or spirits mixed with beaten eggs, sugar, nutmeg and various flavourings. The best known is the port flip.

FLATTING ISLANDS A cold dessert consisting of a light egg custard topped with egg whites that have been stiffly whisked with sugar, shaped with a tablespoon and poached either in boiling water or in the milk used to make the custard. In the latter case the dish is more difficulty to make successfully and the whites are not as meltingly soft. Floating islands are served drizzled with caramel or crushed praline.

Le flottante, in French, was formerly made with slices of stale Savoy sponge-cake or brioche that were moistened with liqueur and sandwiched together with apricot jam containing chopped almonds and raisins. It was served cold with custard cream or a puree of strawberries, raspberries or redcurrants.

RECIPES

Floating islands

Boil 750 ml (1 ¼ pints. 3 ¼ cups) milk with a vanilla pod (bean) or 1 teaspoon vanilla sugar. Whisk 8 egg whites to stiff peaks with a pinch of salt, then fold in 3 tablespoons caster (superfine) sugar. Using a tablespoon, gently drop portion of the whisked egg whites into the boiling milk. Turn the whites so that they are cooked all over. Remove after 2 minutes and drain on a cloth. Make an egg custard with the same milk, the 8 egg yolks, and 250 g (9 oz 1 cup) sugar. When completely cold, pour the custard into a deep, place the cooked egg whites on top, and chill until ready to serve. Serve drizzled with caramel.

Floating island with pink pralines

Make a custard with 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) boiled milk, 6 egg yolks, 200 g (7 oz. 1 cup) sugar and half a vanilla pod (bean). Pour it into a serving dish to cool completely. Butter a deep cake tin (pan) that has a slightly smaller diameter than the serving dish. Crush 100 g (4 oz) pink pralines with a rolling pin and sprinkle three-quarters over the place it in an ovenproof dish. Arrange the supreme on top, coat with Nornay sauce, sprinkle with grated cheese and melted butter, and brown in a preheated oven at 240°C, (475°F, gas 9)

FLORIAN A garnish for large joints of meat made with braised lettuce, small glazed onions, shaped glazed carrots and small potato croquettes.

FLOUNDER A flatfish that is often found in estuaries, although it is actually a sea fish. The European species, Placitichthys flesus, has a greenish or brownish mottled skin covered with tiny scales and can be up to 50 cm (20 in) long.

In France, the flounder is sometimes known as flandre (or flondre) de riviere or le picard. In former times, it was incorrectly called fletton, which means halibut.

In northern Europe, especially in Norway, flounders are preserved by drying and smoking. Recipes for turbot, brill, dab and plaice are suitable for flounders. In American cuisine, the world flounder is used for a larger variety of flatfish than in Europe.

Flounder is the only flat fish caught in any quantity in Australia. There its quality is on a par with place.

FLOUR Finely ground cereal, such as wheat, barley, oats, rye, rice and maize (corn). In Britain, the word 'flour' usually refers to flour produced from wheat. The milling of grain dates back to prehistoric times and over thousands of years this has developed into an important and highly automated industry. There is evidence that wheat or corn was crushed and used as food at least 6000 years ago. The pounding stones used for this purpose have been discovered in archaeological digs throughout Europe.

The Romans were the first to apply rotary motion to milling. This involved grinding the grain between circular stones, one rotating and the other stationary. The domestic quern mills were turned by hand; the larger mills, by slaves or donkeys. The milled flour was sifted through a bolting bag of linen or rushes, which separated the white flour from the bran and wheatgerm.

The water wheel came to Britain from Rome. The earliest were laid horizontally in the water, later they were set vertically. Windmills first appeared about 1200 and were widely used until the industrial Revolution. After this, steel roller mills were introduced from Hungary. These produce finer flours as we know them today and roller milling is still the system used in all large commercial mills.

The wheat grain is composed of three parts endosperm, germ or embryo and bran. The object of milling is to separate the endosperm from the bran and germ, because white flour is derived from the endosperm, which generally comprises 85% of the grain (compared with 2% germ and 14% bran). Today wheat is cleaned before milling foreign matter being removed on the basis of shape, size and density. After this the wheat is moistened and allowed to temper, a process that toughens the bran and makes separation more complete.

Wheat grains are initially ground on break (or fluted) rolls that are designed to shear open the grains and release the endosperm. The ground material is then sieved; the bran flakes with endosperm still attached to them are reground by finer break rolls, and large endosperm pieces are sent to purifiers which remove small bran particles using air currents. The purified endosperm pieces (semolina) are then ground on mat-surface rolls (reduction rolls) to produce flour. A number of reduction passes are required to convert the semolina into flour. Material is removed from the sifters at various stages throughout the milling process. These various machine flours are blended to produce a range of flours to meet bakery specifications. Wheatgerm is removed during the milling of wheat into white flour and is sold separately.

Hard milling wheats mill easily to give high yields of granular free-flowing flour, whereas soft milling wheats produce fine flours of poor sieving and packing qualities.

- Flour grades Flour is milled to different specifications and consistencies, including soft, hard or strong bread and pasta 00 (Italian grades) and varies from country to country. American flour used to be far finer than its British counterpart, but these days there is little to differentiate them, as roller milling processes have been standardized.

The main types of flour available in Britain are plain (all-purpose), used for general baking and containing 75% of the wheat grain; self-raising (self-rising, which is plain flour with baking powder added); strong or bread flour, used for bread dough; brown flour, which contains 85% of the wheat grain; and wholemeal flour, which is 100% wheat grain. The last two contain more fibre and are less processed and can be used in place of whole flour, where appropriate. Improvements in the form of ascorbic acid (vitamin C) are added to the flour supplied to commercial bakers. This helps to strengthen the gluten, giving better rising properties.

In other parts of the world, flour is made from a variety of cereals and starchy ingredients, including spelt, maize (corn), potatoes and rice. In Italy, pasta is made from 00 flour. Containing 70% of the wheat grain, this flour is milled from the middle part of wheat's endosperm, giving a much whiter result. Whole wheat pasta flour uses 100% of the grain.

FLOURING The process of lightly covering an item of food with flour, or sprinkling a mould, cake tin (pan) or work surface with flour. Items of food are often floured before frying or sautéing, the excess flour can be removed by shaking or tapping. Flouring should not be done too far in advance as the flour becomes dry. Foods may also be floured before being coated with egg and breadcrumbs. Finally, items of sautéed meat or poultry may be floured after being browned as a method of thickening a ragout or casserole (the French word for this process is singer).

A work surface or a pastry board is floured before the dough is rolled out to prevent it from sticking. Some baking tins (pans) and sheets need to be floured lightly before mixtures are poured in or before being lined with pastry. The tin or sheet is usually greased beforehand. This makes it easier to turn out the item after cooking or to prevent a mixture from spreading out too much on a baking sheet when cooking begins.

In bakery, bannetons (wicker moulds lined with cloth) are dusted with a special flour; this process is known as fleurage.

FLOUTES Speciality, of the Jura consisting of mashed potato, flour, eggs and cream, fried in a pan until golden. Traditionally, floutes accompany meats.

FLOWERS Throughout history, flowers have been used in cookery. The Romans used them to flavour certain dishes - the recipes of Apicius include brains with rose petals, sweet marjoram flowers in various hashes, and a sauce with sufflower petals - and Roman wines were flavoured with roses or violets. Today flowers are used mostly in Oriental cookery: dried rosebuds are used as a condiment: jam is made from rose petals, salads incorporate chrysanthemum, nasturtium or marigold petals; jasmine and hibiscus flowers flavor poultry and fish dishes; and yellow lilies provide seasoning for sauces and stocks.

In Europe, flowers are used in aromatic drinks, wines, hyssop syrup and pink ratafia. Some well-known spices and flavourings are made from flowers and buds, notably cloves, capers, nasturtium flowers in vinegar and orange-flower and rose waters.

Several chefs have invented recipes that include flowers, either as an ingredient or as decoration. Jules Maincave, a great French chef at the beginning of the 20th century, declared that seasonings were 'pitifully limited, whereas the progress of modern chemistry would enable us to use rose, lilac and lily-of-the valley'. Alexandre Dumas suggested a recipe for herb soup à la Dauphine containing marigold flowers. Usually flowers are added to soups at the end of cooking. In salads they obviously play a more decorative role, particularly nasturtium, but also red poppy, borage, violet and honeysuckle. They can be arranged in a crown or in bunches, and the colours of the other ingredients. Vinegar changes the colour of flowers, and if they are to be used in salad with a vinaigrette dressing, they must be added at the last movement and the salad must not be tossed until it is time to serve. Certain flowers are especially suitable for fritters: mimosa, gourd, elder and jasmine. Pumpkin flowers can be eaten stuffed and are also used to garnish omelets. Flavoured butters are seasoned with the petals of jasmine, orange, lemon or garlic flowers. Flowering mint is suitable for fish, together with lime and jasmine flowers. The latter may also be used in various forcemeats. Aromatic infusions are also made from flowers and may be drunk or used in certain steamed dishes. Wild violets complement veal; sage is used with pork; and mint and thyme with mutton.

Flowers have always been used in confectionery, for example in rose-water jellies, rose jam, crystallized (candied) violets, mimosa, forget-me-nots and primulas, and praline-floured orange blossoms. These sweet delicacies and decorations were very popular in France at the time of the Second Empire.

FLUTE A long thin French roll, weighing about 100 g (4 oz), midway between a baguette and a ficelle in size, flutes are usually split in half and grilled (broiled) for croques, or served with soups and broths.

In France, a flûte is also a tall thin bottle used traditionally for white Alsace wines.

FLUTE GLASS A glass with a stem and a narrow body, for serving champagne and other sparkling wines. The narrow body (as opposed to a wide one) enables the wine to keep its sparkle as the gas bubbles are not released so quickly.

FLUTING The technique of making V-shaped grooves over the surface of a pure, cream or mousse, using a spatula. Pieces of pastry are described as fluted when they have been cut out with a serrated pastry (cookie) cutter. A toothed piping nozzle is also described as fluted.

FLYING FISH A small fish, 18-25 cm (7-10 in) long, common in warm and tropical seas. It has a blue back and a silvery belly and its pectoral fins are winglike, enabling it to glide above the surface of the water. It is often fished in the Caribbean islands its tasty flesh prepared like mackerel.

FOCCACCIA An Italian olive-oil flat bread, of very ancient origin, since it dates to bakestones days. It is a hearth bread. Traditionally flung into the oven just after the fire has been raked out, when the temperature is still too high to bake a larger loaf without burning the crust. In northern Italy it plays a similar role to that of pizza in the south – eaten as a snack (frequently as street food) or with cheese or antipasti.

Originating from Genoa (and related to fougasse or fouace from the south of France) but now made all over Italy, including the south, foccacia all genouese is made with plenty of olive oil and salt. It is usually baked (traditionally in large round copper baking tins), but occasionally fried. There are many different regional variations, for example with onions, chard, salt cod or mozzarell.

Schiacciata is the focaccia of Tuscany, often with herbs, and pan sciocco (also pane toscano) is the unsalted version, traditionally eaten with salty foods.

FOIE GRAS Goose or duck liver that is grossly enlarged by methodically flattening the bird. The force-feeding of geese was done as early as Roman times when figs were used. As soon as the bird was slaughtered, the liver was plunged into a bath of milk and honey, which made it swell as well as flavouring it. Nowadays the birds are fattened with maize (corn) each liver weighs (675-900 g (1 ½-2 lb) for geese – the record is 2 kg (4 ½ lb.) - and 300 – 400 g (11-14 oz) for ducks.

Foie gras from Toulouse geese savoury-white and creamy from Strasbourg geese, plaker and fiermer. It is a highly prized delicacy, yet opinion vary as to is suitably for culinary preparation in comparison with duck foie gras; the latter is also delicate (but slightly darker in colour than goose liver but melts and breaks down more during cooking and has a slightly more pronounced flavour. André Daguin, a leading chef of Auch, prefers duck foie gras. France also imports foie gras from Austria, the Czech Republic, Hungary, Israel and Luxembroug, as demand exceeds French production.

Charles Gerard, in L'Ancienne Alsace a table, wrote: 'The goose is nothing, but man has made of it an instrument for the output of a marvellous product, a kind of living hothouse in which there grows the supreme fruit of gastronomy. Foie gras is available in four forms in France.

- RAW FOIE GRAS (foi gras crue) Increasingly in demand, this is sold during the holiday season at the end of the year. It must be well-lobed, smooth and round, but not too large (so that no all its fat is rendered down in the cooking process), and putty-coloured (if yellowish, it has a tendency to be grain). Its preparation and cooking must be meticulous, and only worthwhile for fine-quality livers.
- FRESH FOIE GRASS (foie gras froish) this can be purchased cooked from delicatessens, usually in pots. It will keep at the most for a week, covered, in the refrigerator.
- SEMI-COOKED PASTEURIZED FOIE GRAS (foie gras mi-cuit pasteurise) Sold in cans, this will keep for three months in the refrigerator once opened. It retain the taste of fresh foie gras quite well, and its manufacture is governed by very strict regulations. The best-quality products must have a perfect consistency, aroma and flavour, and must not exude fat. The labels 'foie gras 'doie entier' (whole goose foie gras prepared with truffles), foie gras de canard entier truffe (whole goose foie gras prepared with truffles), foie gras de canard entier' (whole duck foie gras), and 'foie gras de canard entier truffe (whole duck foie gras prepared with truffles) apply to pure whole livers (formerly labelled 'foie' gras au naturel') , goose or duck 'parfait de foie gras', with or without truffles, is a liver reconstituted from small pieces (formerly labelled 'block de foie gras). Pate de foie d'oie truffe (goose-liver pate with truffles) is a whole goose liver coated with forcemeat (formerly) called parfait de foie d'oie truffe). This labels 'delice,' 'lingot', 'suprme', 'timbale', 'roulade' and 'tombeau' designate products coated with forcemeat or barding, or both (with a minimum of 20% foie gras). When the foie gras is referred to as 'truffle', with no other indication, it contains at least 35 truffles.

- PRESERVED FOIE GRAS (foie gras de conserve) Sold in jars, this is the most traditional preparation. Sterilized and preserved in its own fat, it will keep for years in a cool dark place and improves like wine.

In addition to the labels for semi-cooked foie gras there is also the label 'puree de foie d'oie'(goose-liver puree). This contains 50-75% finely pounded goose liver, and the term replace, the former 'mouse'.

Tradition and innovation Whether from the goose or the duck, foie has always been considered as a rare delicacy, but the way in which it is served has changed according to a culinary fashion. At one time it was served at the end of the meal. The traditional truffle and aspic accompaniments are now thought to be superfluous by some, who prefer to serve it with lightly toasted farmhouse bread (leavened and slightly acid), rather than with plain slices of toast. Nouvelle cuisine set as much store by foie gras as classic cuisine, and sometimes gave it novel accompaniments, such as green leeks, pumpkin or even scallops. However, the classic recipes, both hot and cold still retain prestige.

Most dishes described as a la perigourdine or Rossini are prepared with foie gras.

RECIPES

Preparation of raw foie gras

Carefully remove all the tubes and skin from the liver, using the point of a thin-bladed knife. First make an incision in each lobe starting from the larger end, where main vein is located. Separate it. Still using the knife, pull on the vein. It will come away by itself, showing the rest of the network, which can then be easily removed. Once the lobes are open, season them with ½ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon freshly ground pepper per 450 g (1 lb). Close up each lobe, wrapping it tightly in muslin (cheesecloth), and chill overnight.

The next day, place the liver in a terrine, cover it with goose fat and poach it, allowing 4 minutes per 100 g (4 oz) foie gras when the fat starts to simmer. When it is cooked, cool and drain the liver on a wire rack, then chill for at least 24 hours. Remove the muslin before serving the foie gras cold, possibly with a hot truffle cooked en popillote.

The taste of the liver can be enhanced by marinating it, for 48 hours in port mixed with 10% Armagnac.

Duck Foie Grats

Cold duck or goose foie gras escalopes with grapes and truffles

Prepare the raw liver and cook as described in the basic preparation above. Cut the liver into equalized slices. On each of these escalopes (scallops) place 1 large slice of truffle dipped in aspic jelly and leave to set, then glaze the whole escalope with aspic. Arrange the escalopes in crown shape in shallow glass bowl. In the middle of the crown heap a dome of fresh peeled seeded grapes which have been steeped in a little liqueur brandy. Coat everything lightly with clear port-flavoured aspic. Cover and then chill well before serving.

Duck foie gras with white pepper and green leeks

Prepare a foie gras weighing 300-400 g (9 1/4-14 oz) as above. Boil some young green leeks in salted water and puree them with a little cream. Put this puree in a small greased cake tin (pan). Season the foie gras with salt and coarsely ground pepper and arrange it on the leek puree. Cover the tin with foil and bake in a preheated oven at 140°C (275°F, gas, 1) for 35 minutes. Leave to cool for 45 minutes (the last 15 minutes in the refrigerator).

Duck or goose foie gras mousse

Press a cooked foie gras through a fine sieve, and place the puree in a bowl. For each litre (1 3/4 pints, 4 1/2 cups) puree, add 250 ml (9 fl. oz. 1 cup) melted aspic jelly and 400 ml (14 fl. oz. 1 3/4 cups) chicken veloute sauce. Beat the mixture lightly over ice. Season, then add 400 ml (14 fl. oz. 1 3/4 cup) partly whipped double (heavy) cream. Line a round mould with aspic jelly and garnish with slices of truffle, the thinly sliced whites of hard-boiled (hard-cooked) eggs and tarragon leaves. Then fill with the mousse up to 1.5 cm (3/4 in) from the top of the mould. Cover the mousse with a layer of aspic jelly, allow to cool, and then chill.

Turn out the mousse on to a serving dish, or a buttered crouton, and surround it with chopped aspic jelly. The foie gras mousse can also be served in a silver dish or a crystal bowl, at the bottom of which a layer of aspic jelly has been left to set. Smooth the top of the mousse, which should be slightly with any remaining aspic jelly.

Glazed duck foie gras

Season a fine duck foie gras with salt and pepper then marinate it in port at least 24 hours. Draw a 2.5 kg (5 1/2 lb) duck through the neck, remove the breastbone and open out the tail end. Put the liver into the duck and truss it up. Brush the duck with oil and cook in a covered casserole in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 1 hour 20 minutes. While the duck is cooking, prick the skin frequently with a fork so that it does not burst. Remove from the casserole and leave to cool. Add the port marinade and some aspic jelly made with the ducks' giblets to the pan juices. Glaze the duck with this clarified aspic and chill.

Poach some prunes in water, some cherries in a red-wine jelly, and some apple quarters in butter. Flavour all these fruits with ginger and glaze with the remaining duck aspic. Stuff some stoned (pitted) green olives with foie gras or harm mousse. Peel the segments of a large orange. Arrange the duck in the serving dish with all the fruits, making the orange segments into a rosette.

Steamed duck foie gras with sauternes

Prepare some stock with duck bones, 1 bottle of sauternes, 2 carrots, 1 turnip, 2 celery sticks, 2 shallots and the white part of a leek (all sliced). Season with salt and pepper. Trim the foie gras and remove the tubes, season with salt and pepper and chill (with the strained stock) for 24 hours. Pour the stock into a steamer, place the foie gras in the steamer basket and cook for about 15 minutes. Cut the foie gras into slices, pour over a little of the stock and serve hot or cold.

Goose Foie Gras

Baked foie gras

Prepare a foie gras weighing about 575 g (1 1/4 lb), season it with coarse salt and keep in a cool place for 24 hours. Wash the liver, wipe it and marinate for 48 hours with ground paprika, spices and Armagnac brandy. Drain the liver, place it in an ovenproof dish and half-fill the dish with melted goose fat. Bake in a preheated oven at 190°C (375°F, gas 5), turnips it over while cooking, for about 15 minutes per 450 g (1 lb). To see it is done, pierce with a skewer, the drop of juice that appears should be only just pink.

Foie gras en broiche (hot)

Soak a pig's caul (caul fat) in cold water. Prepare some unsweetened brioche dough. Take a firm foie gras weighing 675-900 g (1 ½ - 2 lb) and stud it with truffles which have been seasoned and moistened with brandy and leave to marinate for a few hours. Drain the pig's caul, wipe it dry wrap the foie gras in it. Cook in preheated oven at 190°C (375°F, gas 5) for 18-20 minutes, then leave to cool.

Line the bottom of a plain greased timbale mould with a fairly thick layer of brioche dough, then add the liver and cover it with another, thinner, layer of dough. Cover the mould with a piece of buttered greaseproof (wax) paper and tie with string to prevent the dough from spilling out when cooking. Leave the dough to rise for 2 hours in a warm place, then bake in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 50-60 minutes. To see if the brioche is done, pierce with a needle, which should come out clean. Turn out the brioche and serve.

Foie gras puree

Prepare some thick chicken veloute sauce and double its volume of foie gras, cooked and pressed through a fine sieve. Stir together over heat, then bind with egg yolk. This puree can be used as it is for filling bouchees, barquettes, tartlets or brioches. It can also be mixed with white breadcrumbs to stuff artichoke hearts or mushroom caps, or used plain to garnish cold hors d'oeuvre and eggs.

Goose foie gras with sultanas

Prepare a foie gras weighing about 575 g (1 ¼ lb) in the usual way. Cook in a saucepan over a gentle heat for 5-6 minutes, drain and remove the fat. Fry 1 chopped onion in goose fat, sprinkle with a little flour and add the liver cooking juices, a little white wine, 1 chopped tomato, a bouquet garni and some stock. Cook for 30 minutes, then strain. Put the liver in a heavy-based casserole with this sauce, add some sultanas (golden raisins) that have been soaked in warm Madeira until swollen, and leave to simmer for 20 minutes. Serve with croutons fried in goose fat and drain well.

Potted foie gras with truffles

Remove the tubes from a goose foie gras and divide it in half. Trim the lobes and reserve the trimmings. Stud the liver with pieces of truffle. Season with spiced salt. Pour over some brandy and leave to marinate for 5-6 hours. Prepare a forcemeat made of 375 g (13 oz) lean pork meat, 450 g (1 lb) fatty pork, the foie gras trimmings, 150 g (5 oz) diced truffles, 3 tablespoons Madeira and 2 tablespoons spiced salt.

Line the bottom and sides of an oval terrine or ovenproof dish with thin slices of pork fat, then cover the inside with a thin layer of the forcemeat. Place half the remaining foie gras on top of the forcemeat and press down. Cover with another layer of forcemeat, then place foie gras on top. Finish with the rest of the forcemeat. Cover with thin slice of pork fat. Press well to flatten the ingredients and place half a bay leaf and a sprig of thyme on top. Cover the terrine, seal the lid with a flour-and-water paste and place in a bain marie. Bring to the boil, then place in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) and bake for 1 ¼ - 1 ½ hours, depending on the size of the terrine.

Cook, uncover, then leave under a light weight until the next day. Turn out the potted foie gras by standing the dish in hot water for a few seconds. Remove the pork fat and dry the top of the foie gras with a cloth, pressing down a little to firm it. Pour a thin layer of lard (shortening) mixed with goose fat (rendered during cooking) over the bottom of the terrine and leave it to set. Replace the foie gras in the terrine and pour some more lard and goose fat mixture (just warm) over the top. Chill for at least 12 hours and serve in the terrine.

Truffled foie gras with madeira

Trim a foie gras and remove the tubes. Stud with truffle sticks and season with spiced salt. Pour brandy over it and leave to marinate for a few hours. Wrap the foie gras in a pigs' caul (Caul fac) or in thin strips of bacon fat and place in a braising pan lined with fresh pork skin, sliced onions and carrots tossed in butter. Cover and simmer for 7-8 minutes. Add 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) Madeira, port or sherry and simmer for several minutes. Add 200 ml (7 fl. oz. ¾ cup) concentrated brown veal stock (containing some dissolved gelatine if the foie gras is to be served cold) and cook in a preheated oven at 190°C (375°F, gas 5) for 45 minutes.

Drain the foie gras, unwrap it, and place it on a serving dish. Strain the cooking juices and skim off all the fat. Pour over the foie gras and serve hot.

To serve cold, place the drained and unwrapped foie gras in a terrine just large enough to hold it. Pour over the strained cooking juices and leave to cook for 12 hours (of which at least 2 hours should be in the refrigerator). Remove the layer of solidified fat on the surface of the sauce and serve the foie gras from the terrine.

Truffled pate de foie gras

Prepare 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) pate pastry dough, made with butter or lard (shortening), and leave to rest for 12 hours. Prepare 2 firm foies gras in the usual way. Stud the lobes with peeled truffles cut into sticks, seasoned with spiced salt and moistened with brandy. Season the livers well. Soak them in brandy and Madeira for 2 hours. Prepare 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) pork and foie gras forcemeat.

Line a hinged pate mould (round or oval) with some of the bottom and side of the moulds. Put the foie gras into the moule, pressing it well. Cover with a domed layer of forcemeat. On top of this lay a slice of pork fat, half a bay leaf and a small sprig of thyme. Cover the pate with a layer of dough and seal the edges. Garnish the top with decorative pastry motifs shaped with pastry (cookie) cutters (lozenges, leaves, crescents) or strips of plaited dough. In the middle put 3 or 4 round pieces of dough shaped with a fluted pastry cutter. Make hole in the middle of these so the steam can escape during baking. Brush with egg. Bake in a preheated oven at 190-200°C (375-400°F, gas 5-6) until the dough is cooked thoroughly and golden brown.

Cool. When it is lukewarm, pour into it either half-melted lard, if it is to be kept for some time, or Madeira-flavoured aspic if it is to be used at once.

Pate de foie gras must be made at least 12 hours before using. The mould can be lined with a forcemeat made entirely of foie gras instead of with pork and foie gras forcemeat.

FONDANT Sugar syrup containing glucose, cooked to the 'soft ball' stage, then worked with a spatula until it becomes a thick opaque paste. This is then kneaded by hand until smooth, soft and white. In this state, fondant keeps well in an airtight container. Professional-quality fondant is available from specialist cake decorating supplies.

Flavoured fondant is used in confectionery, to fill chocolates and sweet (candies). When heated in a bain marie with a little syrup or alcohol, the fondant is used as an icing (frosting) to coat mazipan, fresh or dried fruits and branded cherries. Diluted in this way and flavoured with chocolate, coffee or lemon, it can also be used to ice (frost) cakes and pastries.

REIPES

Fondant icing

Put the following ingredients in a heavy-based saucepan: 2 kg (4 ½ lb) lump sugar, 75 g (3 oz. 6 tablespoon) glucose and 120 ml (4 ½ fl. oz. ½ cup) water. Cook over a high heat, skimming regularly. Take the pan off the heat when the sugar reaches the 'soft ball' stage, at about 118°C (245°F), see sugar. Oil a marble slab, pour the sugar mixture over it and allow to cool until just warm. Working with a metal spatula. Alternatively spreads out and scrape up the fondant until the mixture is uniformly smooth and white. Place in a bowl, cover and keep cook. When it is needed, heat the fondant gently in a small saucepan and add a little syrup cooked to the 'short thread stage - 101.5°C (215°F) and the selected flavouring (coffee liqueur, essence or extract, or melted chocolate). Alternatively, add a few drops of edible food coloring.

FOND DE PATISSERIE A French term meaning a sweet base or shell used for a gâteau or dessert. It may be made of shortcrust pastry (basic pie dough, flan pastry, puff pastry, Genoese sponge, meringue or various biscuit (cookie) mixture. In the catering trade, the fonde are prepared in advance and filled, decorated, mounted into set pieces or iced (frosted) when required.

RECIPES

Pearl fond

Whisk 350 g (12 oz) egg whites (10-12 whites, depending on the size) into very stiff peaks with a pinch of salt. Mix together 250 g (9 oz 2 cups) ground almonds and 250 g 99 oz. 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar and carefully fold in the whisked egg whites. Place a hot flan ring on a greased and floured baking sheet and fill with the mixture. Spread evenly with a spoon and dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar. Remove the flaming and bake the base in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) until just dried out, crisp and light golden.

Walnut or hazelnut fond Crush 250 g (9 oz. 2 cups) walnuts or unblanched hazelnuts, add 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar and mix together. Work into this mixture 450 g (1 lb) egg yolks (12-13 yolks, depending on the size) and 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) butter softened with a wooden spatula. Mix in 125 g (4 ½ oz. 1 cup) potato starch or cornflour (cornstarch) and then carefully fold in 350 g (12 oz) egg whites (10-12 whites) which have been whisked into stiff peaks with a pinch of salt. Spread the mixture on lightly greased and floured baking sheets (it can be used for large gâteaux or small individual cakes) and bake in preheated oven at 180°C, gas 4) until light golden brown.

FONDRE A French culinary term meaning to cook certain vegetables in a covered pan in a little fat but no other apart from their natural moisture. The contents of the pan should be stirred regularly to prevent them from sticking. This method is also used to prepare fondant potatoes.

FONDU CREUSOIS A Limousin speciality made from cow's-milk cheese melted over a low heat in a saucepan with water and milk. Butter and egg yolks are added with seasoning. This smooth fondu French for melted is served with chips (French fries), which are dipped one by one into the pan. Alternatively, it can be poured over potato puree and browned under a hot grill (broiler).

FONDUE A Swiss speciality consisting of one or more cheeses melted in a special pottery fondue dish with white wine and flavouring. When the mixture becomes creamy, the dish is placed over a spirit lamp on the table to keep it hot. The diners spear pieces of bread on a long two-pronged fork, dip them in the fondue and eat them piping hot.

The fondue recipe which Brillat-Savarin gives in his Physiologie du goût is in fact a dish of scramble eggs with cheese. However, there are several Savory and Swiss recipes that may be considered authentic. Antirouet, in La Cuisine au fromage, mentions several, fondue comtoise is made with mature full-flavoured Comte cheese, semi-measured Comte cheese, dry white wine, kirsch and garlic. Fondue des Alpes from Vaud is made with Gruyere, Appenzell and Bagnes or Talsitt, dried porcini mushrooms, dry white wine, garlic and plum brandy. Swiss jura fondue is made with full-flavoured salty jura Gruyere, dry white wine, kirsch, garlic and nutmeg, Fondue savoyarde uses mature salty Beaufort and 'full-flavoured Beaufort, dry white wine and kirsch. A classic variant is fondue mormande, made from camembert, Pont l'Eveque and Livarot (with the rind removed), cream, milk, Calvados and shallots. Fondue piemontaise is made with Fontina from the Aosta Valley, butter, milk and egg yolks, to which chopped white truffles are added. This fondue is not served in a fondue dish, but poured into dishes garnished with croutons. Swiss radette (melted cheese served with boiled potatoes and pickled) is a rustic variant of fondue.

There are several other dishes derived from, or inspired by, cheese fondue, Fondue bourguignonne, like cheese fondue, is prepared on the table in a metal fondue dish placed over a heating device and filled with hot oil. A long-handled fork is used to skewer cubes of beef (fillet steak, sirloin or rump steak) and dip them in the very hot oil until they are cooked. They are then dipped in one of an assortment of flavoured sauces (bearnaise, barbecue, aioli, Mayonnaise, horseradish, tomato) and eaten. Condiments such as gherkins (sweet dill pickles), pickles, chutneys or pickled onions can also be served at the same time, as well as potato crisps (chips).

Chinese fondue is prepared using the same principle as fondue bourguignonne. Strips of beef and pork, thin slices of chicken breast or little pieces of fish are cooked in a chicken stock kept simmering in a fondue pot over a special charcoal burner incorporated into it. This traditional Chinese dish was introduced to the Far East by the Mongols in the 14th century and was originally made with mutton. It is accompanied by sliced fresh vegetables arranged in bowls (Chinese cabbage, spinach and onion), a puree of haricot (navy) beans and nice vermicelli. This fondue is also served with soy-, ginger- and sesame oil-based sauces. In Vietnam, where this fondue is served on festive occasions, it is made with beef, prawns and fish, cooked in coconut milk and served with a prawn sauce and sweet and sour condiments. Scallops and strips of prepared squid are sometimes also included.

Chocolate fondue consists of chocolate melted in a bain marie and kept liquid over a spirit lamp on the table. It is used for dipping pieces of cake, biscuits (cookies), pastries and fruits.

- Vegetable fondue The name fondue is also given to preparation of finely cut vegetables cooked slowly in butter over a very low heat until they are reduced to a pulp. Vegetable fondue made with chicory (endive), fennel, onion, sorrel, carrots, leeks, celery, or celeriac can be used as an ingredient in another dish (as a braising sauce for ragouts or baked fish) or is an accompaniment. Tomato fondue is most often used in egg dishes, sauces and Mediterranean garnishes (à la madrilène, à la provençale and à la portugaise). It can also be added to certain forcemeats, and when cold can be used to give piquancy to hors d'oeuvre or fish (as can onion fondue). When seasoned with coriander, it is used for preparations à la grecque.

RECIPES

Fondue à la piemontaise

Cut 575 g (1 ¼ lb) Fontina cheese into cubes. Place in a fairly shallow container and cover with cold milk. Leave for at least 2 hours. Put the cheese and milk in a saucepan and add 6 egg yolks and 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) butter. Cook in a bain marie over a medium heat, stirring continuously, until the mixture melts and acquires a creamy consistency. The ideal cooking point corresponds with the first bubbles of the water in the bain marie. Serve in a soup tureen and garnish the bowls with small triangles of toasted bread or bread fried in butter.

Fondue du valais

Rub the bottom of an earthenware fondue dish with garlic. Cut 150-200 g (5-7 oz.) Gruyere cheese per person into very thin slices. (Alternatively, use a mixture of Beaufort, Emmental and Comete). Put the cheese into the fondue dish and just cover it with dry white wine (in Switzerland Fendant is normally used). Stir over the heat until the cheese has melted then add a little freshly ground pepper and 1 liqueur glass of kirsch. In Switzerland this fondue is served with Grisons (air-cured) meat, or raw ham cut into very thin slices.

Brillat-Savarin's chese fondue

(from Brillat-Savarin's recipe) Weigh the number of eggs you wish to use, according to the number of diners. Grate a piece of good Gruyere cheese weighing one-third of this and take a piece of butter weighing one-sixth. Break the eggs into a heavy-based saucepan and beat them well, then add the butter and cheese. Put the pan over a moderate heat and stir with a spatula until the mixture is thickened and smooth. Seasoned with a little salt and a generous amount of pepper, which is one of the distinguishing characteristics of this ancient dish. Serve in a warmed dish.

Tomato fondue

Peel and chop 100 (4 oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) onions. Peel seed and finely chop 800 g (1 $\frac{3}{4}$ lb) tomatoes. Peel and crushed 1 garlic clove. Prepare a bouquet garni rich in thyme. Soften the onions in a heavy-based saucepan with 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter, or 15 g (1/2 oz. 1 tablespoon) butter and 2 tablespoons olive oil, or 3 tablespoons olive oil. Then add the tomatoes, salt and pepper, the garlic and bouquet garni. Cover the pan and cook very gently until the tomatoes are reduced to a pulp. Remove the lid. Stir with a wooden spatula and continue cooking, uncovered, until the fondue forms a light paste. Adjust the seasoning strain through a sieve and add 1 tablespoon chopped parsley or herbs.

FONTAINE BLEAU A soft fresh cow's-milk cheese containing 60-75% fat, originating in Ile-de-France. It is not matured or salted, but wrapped in muslin (cheesecloth) and sold in a small waxed cardboard container. It is prepared from a foamy mixture of whipped cream and slowly coagulating curds, which is drained for 30 hours and then smoothed. It is served with sugar and frequently with strawberries or jam, enthusiasts often add fresh cream.

Fontanebleau is also name of classic garnish consisting of a macedoine of vegetables cut into very small pieces, cooked with butter, and arranged in barquettes made of duchess potato mixture browned in the oven.

FONTANGES A soup probably dedicated to Middle Fontanges, who was a favourite of Louis XIV for a short time. It is made of a puree of fresh peas topped with beef or chicken consommé, and contains shredded some cooked slowly in butter. Just before serving, it is enriched with an egg yolk mixed with double (heavy) cream and sprinkled with chervil.

FONTENELLE, A LA Describing a preparation of asparagus served with melted butter and soft-boiled (soft-cooked) egg. The asparagus is dipped first in the melted butter, then in the egg yolk. The name commemorates the greediness of Bernard Le Bovier de Fontenelle (1657-1757), a philosopher and permanent secretary of the French Academy of Sciences. Once, when he invited his friend, the Abbe Terrasson, to dinner, Fontenelle had arranged to have half the asparagus served with butter (which he preferred) and half with vinaigrette (favoured by Abbe). Approaching the table, the Abbe suddenly dropped dead of apoplexy, and it is said that Fontenelle immediately shouted to his chief, 'Serve them all with butter all with

butter!”

FONTINA an Italian cow's-milk cheese (45% fat content), with a pressed cooked centre and a brushed, sometimes oiled, crust. Elastic to the touch, and with a few small holes, the cheese tastes decidedly nutty. It originated in the Aosta Valley in the Alps, where it has been made since the 12th century, and it comes in rounds 40-45 cm (16-18 in) in diameter and 7 – 10 cm (3 –4 in) high. It is made over almost all northern Italy and even in France (under the name of Fontal and made mainly from pasteurized milk). The name Fontina is reserved for the DOP cheese made with unpasteurized milk from the Aosta Valley. Young Fontina is served at the end of a meal or on crostini; it is also used in cooking particularly in fondue piemontaise. When matured, it is grated and used like Parmesan cheese.

FOOD A substance eaten to sustain life, as part of a well-balanced diet, it promotes growth and maintains health. No one food is nutritionally perfect as it does not supply all the nutrients in the right proportions to support health, so, to satisfy nutritional needs and individual tastes, we need to eat, in moderation a variety of different foods. There are many combinations of foods that supply the right balance of nutrients and energy. A good diet in Mexico, for example, is based on very different foods from an equally nutritious diet in France, Japan or Italy, since the daily diet of a country still reflects its social, religious and family traditions, as well as its agricultural practices. The diet will vary according to the habits and way of life of the individual.

FOOD ADDITIVE A substance added to food during manufacture or processing to help improve its keeping qualities, taste or colour; additives do not necessarily improve the nutritional value of the food.

Under European and American law, each food item must show clearly each food additive on the label or packet under its own E number. Water that has been added to foods (such as ham or bacon) must also be listed clearly on the label. Labelling regulations state that ingredients must be listed in descending order by weight, as a guide to the quantity of additives included.

Without additives many foods would quickly become unsafe to eat and have a very short shelf life. Salt, sugar, spices, vinegar, and such products as caramel or spinach-green have been used for years. The growth of the food industry, however, has considerably enlarged the number of additives and changed their nature and conditions of use. Many food additives are derived from natural sources and are essential and harmless, but many are synthetic and non-essential.

FOOD PROCESSOR Electrically powered item of kitchen equipment that can do many of the time-consuming tasks involved in food preparation. A typical food processor consists of a motor and a bowl in which the accessories operate under a protective lid. The accessories usually include a double bladed curved knife for chopping, pureeing and producing crumbs, a plastic or blunt blade for beating and mixing, slicing discs; grating discs; a chip (French fry) cutter; and a whisk. The appliance generally has sufficient power to chop, mix, puree, grate or grind food (cooking chocolate, Parmesan cheese, nuts); it may even be able to crush ice. Special attachments are available for mixing dough. Some models also have a juice extractor.

The food processor was designed to do the work of several other appliances, including the blender and mixer, and to some extent the food mixer. In practice, results vary and, although the food processor is the most versatile and useful of appliances, some procedures are slightly less successful than others. For example, soups and sauces are far smoother when pureed in a blender and the texture of processed meat is either finely chopped or ground to a near paste consistency rather than being mince.

FOOD SAFE A type of cage with a wooden frame and wire mesh for storing foodstuffs away from flies and other insects. The food safe was often equipped with a handle and hung in the cellar or in a cool place. Sometimes food was stored in an outside larder with shutters or ventilation grilles, installed in big old houses under the kitchen window, square with the wall. Nowadays both types have been replaced by the refrigerator, but they are still sometimes used for cheeses, which are spoiled if they are kept at too low a temperature.

In France in the Middle Ages and up to the end of the 18th century, the world garde-manger was applied to the cool well-aired place where provisions were stored.

FOOD SUBSTITUTE A food product used as a substitute for another, usually because the latter is very rare or expensive but sometimes because of health reasons (artificial sweeteners instead of sugar for example). During wars or times of shortage substitutes are often devised, such as Guinea pepper (seeds from a plant related to the cardamom) for real pepper and safflower for saffron.

In a book of recipes published in 1941, Prosper Montagne suggested malt extract and concentrated grape juice as acceptable substitutes for sugar in pastries, cakes and confectionery. Some substitutes are for emergency use only, until the genuine article becomes available, like roasted acorns for making coffee, others, such as chicory (for coffee, margarine and beet sugar, have acquired universal acceptance. Certain substitutes have remained acceptable in everyday use, though acknowledged as inferior, for example, slices of gherkins (sweet dill pickles) as substitutes for pistachios in mortadella and lumpfish roe for caviar.

Some novel substitutes appeared at the end of the 19th century; at the time of the Paris Exhibition of 1878, machines were introduced for cutting out mare's udders into the shape of tripe for twisting ox lights into the shape of petil-gris (edible brown snails), for graining cheeses with verdures using copper needles to sell them as roquefort, and for making bread with starch or couch-coach-grass powder.

The most famous substitute preparations were cooked by Chuvette, chef of the Breozn. Restaurant, in order to mystify Monselet, a well-known gastronome. Monselet praised the swallow's nest soup, brill, chamois cutlets and capercaille, served with hocks and Tokay wines, which provided to be puree of noodles and small kidney beans, fresh cod cooked on a fine comb (to stimulate the brills' backbone), lamb marinated in bitters and a young turkey sprinkled with absinthe; the 'fokre' Macon wine mixed with punch, and the Johnnisberry an ordinary Chablis flavoured with thyme essence.

FOOL A chilled dessert of English origin, made of fruit puree strained through a fine sieve, sweetened and chilled (but not frozen). Just before serving, the puree is mixed with twice its volume of whipped cream.

FORCED FRUIT AND VEGETABLES. Horticultural products that appear on the market before their normal season. Often expensive and lacking the flavour of fruit and vegetables in season, these forced products are the result of cultivation under glass or shelter of products normally sensitive to weather conditions, such as peas and asparagus. Improved transport facilities have made forcing less necessary in regions with a poor climate.

FORCEMEAT OR STUFFING A seasoned mixture of raw or cooked ingredients, chopped or minced (ground, used to stuff eggs, fish, poultry, game, meat, vegetables or pasta, such as ravioli and cannelloni. Forcemeats are also the basis for several pates, meat pies, terrines, galanties and ballotines, not to mention all the different kinds of sausages. They are also used to make forcemeat balls, quenelles and some borders, and to fill barquettes, vol-au-vent and tartlets, a gratin forcemeats are used to garnish croutes, croutons and hot canapes.

There are three major categories of forcemeats those made with vegetables, those made with meat game or poultry; and those made with fish. In addition, there is a fourth, more minor category of forcemeat, based on egg yolk.

The composition of a forcemeat depends in principle on the food that it is intended to stuff or fill. The basis for a forcemeat is usually minced meat or fish; the additional ingredients, for example, gherkins (sweet dill pickles), herbs, onion, ham, foie gras, crustless bread soaked in milk or egg whites, give it character and consistency. Seasoning is also extremely important. A panada may be added to give it some substance, and most forcemeats made of meat, poultry or game are bound with eggs. The stuffing for a food that is to be boiled needs to be more strongly seasoned than one for food to be roasted. However, in the latter case, the stuffing must contain sufficient fat to prevent the food from drying out, especially in the case of poultry.

RECIPES

Preparation

The ingredients for some forcemeats need to be very finely minced or even ground in a mortar or food processor and then forced through a sieve. Fine forcemeats need to be minced (ground) twice. Sometimes only some of the ingredients need to be minced. Add seasoning to taste and about 6 tablespoons brandy per 1 kg (2 ¼ lb.) forcemeat. Allow 1 large egg to bind 450 g (1 lb) forcemeat.

Forcemeats Made with Egg Yolks

Cold egg yolk stuffing

Sieve 10 hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolks and lace them in a terrine together with 10 g (4 oz. ½ cup) softened butter. Season with salt and white pepper and mix all the ingredients together. This is used as a spread for cold canapes and as a filing for halved hard-boiled egg white and artichoke hearts.

Hot egg yolk stuffing

Add some sieved hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolks to half their weight of hot thick bechamel sauce. Press through a very fine sieve and season with salt and pepper. A teaspoon of dry duxelles and some chopped parsley are usually added as well. This mixture is used to fill halved hard-boiled egg, vol-au-vent or barquettes, or to stuff vegetables prepared au gratin.

Forcemeats made with fish and shellfish

Cram forcemeat

This is mousseline forcemeat made by replacing the meat with either boned and skinned whiting or pike.

Forcemeat for fish mousses and musselins

Skin and bone 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) fish (pike, whiting, salmon, sole or turbot) and season with 4 teaspoons salt, a generous pinch of pepper and grated nutmeg pound the fish in a mortar, add 4 lightly whisked egg whites (one by one), transfer to a blender and then press through a fine sieve. Put the resulting puree in a terrine, smooth out with a wooden spatula and chill for at least 2 hours. Then place the terrine in a bowl of crushed ice or ice cubes and incorporate 1.25 litres (2 ¼ pints, 5 ½ cups) double (heavy) cream, working it in gently with a spatula. Keep in the refrigerator until needed. This forcemeat can also be used for quenelles and to garnish large braised fish or fillets of sole or turbot.

Prawn forcemeat

Cook 125 g (4 ½ oz, ¾ cup) prawns or shrimps in some salted water. Pound them in a mortar with 10 g (4 oz, ½ cup) butter and then press the mixture through a fine sieve. Add to this mixture half its weight of finely sieved hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolks. Mix together well.

Shellfish forcemeat

This is a mousseline forcemeat made with crayfish, lobsters or crab meat. Allow 4 egg whites, 1.5 litres (2 ¼ pints, 6 ½ cups) double (heavy) cream, 1 tablespoon salt and a generous pinch of white pepper for each 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) shellfish meat.

Smoked herring or sardine forcemeat

Make a white roux with 1 tablespoon butter and 2 tablespoons flour. Add 100 ml (4 fl. oz) warm milk and cook for about 10 minutes, stirring continuously with a wooden spoon. Remove from the heat when very thick. Add 1 whole egg and 2 egg yolks. Put either 1 large smoked herring fillet (soaked in a little milk to remove some of the salt if necessary) or 4 medium sardines in a blender and reduce to a puree. Incorporate this into the roux and cook for 3-4 minutes. Press through a sieve. This forcemeat is used as filling for croustade, dertais and small pastry cases.

Forcemeats Made with Meat, Game and Poultry.

A gratin forcemeat

Fry 150 g (5 ½ oz, 1 cup) finely chopped unsmoked bacon in a sauté pan until soft. Add 300 g (11 oz) chicken livers, 2 thinly sliced shallots, 50 g (2 oz, 2/3 cup) finely chopped mushroom, a sprig of thyme and half a bay leaf. Seasoned with a generous pinch of salt, some pepper and a little mixed spice. Sauté quickly over a high heat. Allow to cool completely, then pound in a mortar (or puree in a blender) and press through a fine sieve. Cover with buttered or oiled greasedproof (wax) paper and chill until needed. This forcemeat is spread on croutons of fried bread that are used as a base for small roast game birds or served with salmis or civets.

American stuffing

Cut some smoked belly of pork into very small dice and fry. Add some finely chopped onion and allow to sweat without colouring. Remove from the heat and add fresh breadcrumbs until the fat is completely absorbed. Season with salt and pepper, a little ground sage and the finest thyme. This forcemeat is used for stuffing young cockerels, young pigeons, guinea fowls and poussins.

Brain forcemeat

Cook a calf's brain in a court-bouillon. Drain, pat dry and press through a sieve. Add an equal volume of béchamel sauce, or one-third of its volume of either cream or velouté sauce. This forcemeat is used to fill barquette, vol-au-vent, tartlets or hollowed-cut-croustades.

Foie gras forcemeat

Finely pound in a mortar (or puree in a blender) 375 g (13 oz) lean pork meat, 450 g (1 lb) unsmoked streaky (slab) bacon and 250 g (9 oz) thinly sliced foie gras. Add 1 ½ teaspoons spiced salt and 100 ml (4 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons) brandy, and press through a sieve. This forcemeat is used for making pates and terrines.

Forcemeat for poultry

This consists of fine sausage meat mixed with one fifth of its weight each of fresh breadcrumbs and finely chopped onion cooked in a little butter until finely chopped onion cooked in a little butter until soft, together with chopped parsley, chill until required.

Game forcemeat

Prepare with appropriate game meat in the same way as poultry forcemeat. To make it richer, add thin slices of fresh foie gras or game liver forcemeat. This forcemeat is used for making pates and terrines.

Liver forcemeat

Brown 250g (9 oz. 12 slices) diced unsmoked streaky (slab) bacon in 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter in a sauté pan. Remove and drain. In the same fat, sauté 300 g (11 oz) pig's (pork), calf's game or children liver cut into cubes. Mix 40 g (1 ½ oz. ¼ cup) finely chopped shallots and 75 g (3 oz. 1 cup) finely chopped cultivated mushrooms together. Replace the bacon in the sauté pan, add the mushrooms and shallots and season with salt, ground, white pepper and allspice; then add a sprig of thyme and half a bay leaf. Mix together and sauté for 2 minutes.

Remove the cubes of liver. Deglaze the pan with (50 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) dry white wine, pour the sauce over the cubes of liver and puree all the ingredients in a blender or food processor, together with 65 g (2 ½ oz. 5 tablespoons) butter and 3 egg yolks, until very smooth. Press the forcemeat through a sieve and store covered, in the refrigerator. This forcemeat is used for making pates, terrines or meat loaves. Minced cleaned truffle peelings can be added to it if wished. If game liver is used, add an equal amount of rabbit meat and replace the white wine with 100 ml (4 fl. oz 7 tablespoons) (Madiera).

Mousseline forcemeat

Pound 1 kg (2 ¼ lb.) boned veal, poultry or game in a mortar (or reduce to a puree in a blender). Then press through a fine sieve. Whisk 4 egg whites lightly with a fork and add them to the meat puree a little at a time. Season with 4 teaspoons salt and a generous pinch of ground white pepper. Press through the sieve a second time, place in a terrine and then chill for 2 hours. Remove the terrine from the refrigerator and lace in a bowl of crushed ice. Then work in 1.5 litres (2 ¾ pints, 6 ½ cups) double (heavy) cream using a wooden spoon (it is essential to keep the cream and the pate as cold as possible to prevent curdling). The forcemeat is used for fine quenelles, mousses and mousselines.

Panada forcemeat with butter

Puree 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) minced (ground) veal or poultry in a blender with salt, ground white pepper and grated nutmeg. Also blend 450 g (1 lb) panada with an equal quantity of butter. Add the pureed meat and beat the mixture vigorously. Then add 8 egg yolks one at a time. Press the forcemeat through a fine sieve, place in a terrine and work with a spatula until smooth. Chill, covered, until required. This forcemeat is used for quenelles borders and meat loaves, and to stuff poultry and joints of meat.

Panada forcemeat with cream.

Pound 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) minced (ground) veal or poultry in a mortar (or reduce to a puree in a blender). Season with 2 teaspoons salt, a generous pinch of white pepper and some grated nutmeg. Add 4 lightly whisked egg whites one at a time followed by 400 g (14 oz) bread panada. Beat vigorously until the mixture is very smooth. Press through a fine sieve over a terrine and chill for 1 hour, together with 1.5 litres (2 ¾ pints, 6 ½ cups) double (heavy) cream and 2 tablespoons milk. Then place the terrine in a basin of crushed ice or ice cubes. Add one-third of the cream to the forcemeat, working it in vigorously with a spatula. Lightly beat the remaining cream with the milk and then fold it into the forcemeat. Chill until needed. This forcemeat is used for quenelles.

Poultry forcemeat

Dice 575 g (1 ¼ lb) chicken or other poultry meat, 200 g (7 oz) lean veal and 900 g (2 lb) bacon work together in a blender until smooth. Add 3 eggs, 1 tablespoon salt and 200 ml (7 fl. oz. ¼ cup) brand. Mix well, press through a sieve and chill until required. This forcemeat is used for pates and terrines.

Veal forcemeat

Pound 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) lean minced (ground) veal in a mortar (or reduce to a puree in a blender). Season with 1 tablespoon salt, some white pepper and grated nutmeg. Puree 300 g (11 oz) four panada when really soft, add the veal, together with 65 g (2 ½ oz. 4 ½ tablespoons) butter, and beat the mixture well. Finally beating continuously, add 5 whole eggs and 8 yolks, one by one. Then add 1.25 litres (2 ¼ pints, 5 ½ cups) thick bechamel sauce. Press through a fine sieve and work with a spatula to make the forcemeat is used for borders and large quenelles.

Forcemeats Made with Vegetables

Forcemeat for fish

Crumble 250 g (9 oz. 9 slices) crustless bread and soak it in milk. Sauté 75 g (3 oz. 2/3 cup) chopped onion and 150 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter. Add a small handful of chopped parsley and cook for a few minutes. Meanwhile, add 4 tablespoons white wine to 3 chopped shallots in a separate pan and reduce. Add the shallots to the other vegetables and mix. Squeeze out the bread and place in a terrine. Add the vegetable mixture and work together well. Then bind with 2 egg yolks and season with salt and pepper and, if liked, a generous pinch of grated nutmeg and half a garlic clove. Chopped.

Forcemeat for vegetable terrine

Peel 500 g (1 lb. 2 oz.) celeriac (celery root) and cut into quarters. Steam, drain and puree in a blender. Dry slightly in a warm oven but do not allow the celeriac to colour. In the bowl of a mixer, combine the celeriac puree with 2 egg yolks, 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) single (light) cream and 2 stiffly whisked egg whites. Seasoned to taste with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Other vegetable, in equal quantities, may be added to the stuffing; diced carrots, petits pois, green beans, blanched or cooked in steam. The vegetable terrine can then be cooked in the oven or in a bain marie.

Mushroom forcemeat

Sauté 2 peeled and finely chopped shallots and 175 g (6 oz. 2 cup) button mushrooms also finely chopped, over a high heat in a frying pan, with 40 g (1 ½ oz. 3 tablespoons) butter and a generous pinch of grated nutmeg. When cooked, allow to cool. Make 100 g (4 oz) bread panada and puree it in a blender, add in the mushrooms and shallots. Finally, add 3 egg yolks and mix thoroughly (it is not necessary to sieve this forcemeat). It is used to stuff vegetables, poultry game and fish.

FORESTIERE, A LA a method of preparing small cuts of meat or chicken (or even eggs or vegetables), which are garnished with mushrooms (usually chunterelles, mores or ceps) cooked in butter, generally accompanied by potato noisettes or rissoles and blanched browned bacon pieces. It is served with gravy, thickened veal stock or the deglazed pan juices.

RECIPES

Carrots a la forestiere

Braise some carrots in butter, then add half their volume of mushrooms, also braised in butter. Adjust the seasoning and sprinkle with parsley.

Soft-boiled or poached egg a la

Forestiere

Clean some mushroom and fry them in. Butter Cut some lean bacon into small dice, then scald and brown in butter. Mix the mushrooms and bacon together and spread the mixture over bread croustades. Place a soft-boiled (soft-cooked) or poached egg on top of each one. add a few droops of lemon juice, pepper, a little cayenne pepper and some chopped parsley to some melted butter and pour it over the eggs.

FORK An implement usually made of metal with two, three or four prongs on the end of a handle used at the table either for lifting food to the mouth or for serving food. Forks are also used in the kitchen for turning food in cooking.

The fork has very ancient origins and a mentioned in the Old Testament. It was first used as ritual instrument to grip pieces of meat destined for sacrifices later it was use in the kitchen. According to the 11th-century Italian scholar Damiani. Forks were introduced into Venice by a Byzantine princess and then spread throughout Italy. But it was Henry III of France who first introduced to the French the custom of using a two-pronged fork at the table. Before this time, it had been regarded as a decorative item fashioned in gold or silver, forks were mentioned in 1379 in an inventory of the French king Carles V. After visiting the cour at Venice in 1574, Henri Iii noted that a two-prompted table fork was being used and he launched this fashion among the nobility. It seemed a very useful implement for putting food in the mouth above the high collas and ruffs that were worn at that time! In 14th century England, it is recorded that Piers Gaveston, a Favourine of Edward II, ate a pear with a ford; but it was not until the 18th century that it became widely used. Louis XIV ate with his firtgers and , in the reign of Louis XVI, it was common to eat food from the tip of the knife.

Forks then came to have three prongs, and later four, and their use spread from Italy and Spain into France and England. Nowadays, only a carving fork has two prongs. These may be straight or slightly curved. Table forks the more diversified and are made in many sizes and many metals. They may even be made of wood or plastic. Salad servers consist of a fork and spoon, and carving sets consists of knife, a fork and often, a steel for sharpening the knife. There are table forks, fish forks and fruit forks diminishing in size down to small pastry forks pastry forks. Certain forks are modified for a particular use for example, snail forks, oyster forks, shellfish forks and fondue forks.

Etiquette varies as to the proper way of holding and using a fork. E. Briffault ends his Paris a table (1846) with this assessment: 'the two-proned fork is used it northern Europe. The English are armed with steel tridents with ivory handles – three pronged forks – but in France, we have the four pronged fork, the height of civilization.

FORM D'AMBERT A semi-hard blue cheese from the Auvergne, now factory-produced from pasteurized milk but with a firm ivory paste and a good fruity flavour. The cheese (45% fat content) is shaped into cylinders about 20 cm (8 in) high 12-15 cm (4-5 in) diameter. Form de Montbrison and forme de Forez are similar cheese from neighbouring regions. They have AOP STATUS.

FORTIFIED WINE Wine to which a certain quantity of spirit is added in the course of production. Increasing the alcoholic strength has the effect of interrupting the work of the yeast in the fermentation of the must, so the grape sugar cannot be converted into alcohol. The resulting wine may be dry or retain a considerable proportion of its natural sugar. Fortified wines include port, sherry and Madiera.

FOUACE Also known as fouasse or fougasse. One of the oldest of French pastries. It was originally a pancake made of fine wheat, unleavened, and cooked under the cinders in the hearth (in Latin focus, hence the name focaccia pasta, which in turn became fouace, fouasse or fougasse). Rabelais gave the recipe for it in his (Gargantua: Best-Quality flour mixed with best egg yolks and butter, best saffron and spices, and water ' The fouaces from the region of Chinon and Touraine have had a fine reputation for centuries.

Fouaces are still will produced in many areas of France Nowadays they are usually rustic dough cakes baked in the oven, sometimes salted and flavoured, and usually made for Christmas or twelfth Night . they used to be very widespread in western and central France (Caen, Vannes. La Fleche and (Tours), but are now most common in the south. At Najac, in rouergue, a 'fouace festival' is held every year. In Languedoc, a fouace aux graloux is eaten with frontignan wine. In Auvergne, the fouace is made with crystallized (candied) fruits. In Provence, where it is called fougasse, sometimes a little orange-flower water is poured on to the pastries and brushed over the top and sides. This is one of the desserts traditionally eaten at Christmas. The fougassette, which is made of brioche dough, is a speciality of the Nice area. This small fougasse is shaped like a plaited loaf and flavoured with orange-flower water and saffron. It sometimes contains candied citron.

RECIPE

Fouace

Dissolve 15 g (1/2 oz) fresh yeast (1 cake compressed yeast) in a few tablespoons of warm milk or water. Add 125 g (4 1/2 oz. 1 cup) strong plain (bread) flour and then enough milk or water to make a slightly soft dough. Cover the dough with a damp cloth or greased cling film (plastic wrap) and leave to rise until it has doubled in volume.

Heap 375 g (13 oz. 3 1/4 cups) strong plain flour on a work surface. Make a well in the centre and add a large pinch of salt. 100 g (4 oz. 1/2 cup) softened butter, 1 liqueur. 1 liqueur glass of rum, brandy or orange-flower water, 4 tablespoons sugar (optional) and 4 beaten eggs. Knead this mixture together adding a little milk or water to obtain a smooth dough. Then add the risen dough and (if wished) a filling of 150-200 g (5-7 oz. 1 1/4 cups) crystallized (candied) fruits. Work the dough again until it is elastic. Knead it into a ball, cut a cross in the top and leave it to rise, loosely covered (it should double in volume).

Place the fouace on a lightly buttered baking sheet, in a ball, loaf or crown shape, glaze with beaten egg and bake in a preheated oven at 230° (450°F, gas 8) for about 40 minutes or until golden (the base should sound hollow when tapped).

FOUGERU Soft cow's-milk cheese from Brie (45% fat content) with a reddish crust, Fougeru is a disc about 13 cm (5 in) in diameter and 3-4 cm (1 1/4- 1 1/2 in). thick, weighing 500-600 g 918-21 oz). Packed in fern fronds. Its taste is similar to coulommiers.

FOUQUET'S A restaurant and café on the Champs-Élysées in Paris. Originally (in 1901) it was a small public house for cab drivers, which bore the name of its owner, Louis Fouquet, in 1910 Leopold Mourier, well-known in the Parsian restaurant trade and the tutor of the founder's children, purchased it, anglicized as name to 'Fouquet's' (like Maxim's). redecorated it in the Belle Époque style (which survived until 19(1) and set up an English bar and a grill room, where the Longchamp racegoers were accustomed to meeting before or after the races, with their grey top hats over their ears, and their binoculars in deerskin cases over their shoulder' (R. Heron de Villefosse). A restaurant was also opened on the first floor. Since World War II, most of Fouquet's regular customers have been actors.

FOUR FRUITS quatre-fruits The phrase used in French to designate four red summer fruits - strawberries, cherries, redcurrants and raspberries - which are cooked together to make jams, syrups or compotes. The phrase 'four yellow fruits' (quatre fruits jaunes) is sometimes used to refer to oranges, lemons, Sevilla (bitter) oranges and citrons. In practice, 'four-fruits' jams and compotes may be made from a combination of any four fruits, fresh or dried.

RECIPE

Four-fruits compote

Wash and seed 2 bunches of Muscat grapes. Peel 4 bananas and cut them into thick rounds. Peel and finely dice 4 apples and 4 pears. Put all the fruit into a saucepan's with the juice of 1 lemon, a pinch of ground cinnamon, 300 g (11 oz. 1 2/3 cups) caster (superfine) sugar, the juice of 2 oranges and 100 ml 94 fl. oz. 7 tablespoons). Water. Bring to the boil, cook very gently for 30 minutes and then pour into a glass fruit bowl. When the compote is cold, chill until ready to serve. If wished, liquid caramel can be poured over it just before serving.

FOURME Any of various cow's-milk cheeses from central France that usually contain parsley and are used in the same way as blue cheese. The French word fourme is derived from the Latin forma (a mould); it then become formage and later fromage.

FOURME D'AMBEET (45% fat content). This has a special label of origin (an AOC) and comes from the Loire, Puy-de-Dôme, and the district of Saint-Flour. It has a firm paste flavoured with parsley and a dry dark-grey crust mottled with yellow and red. It has a strong flavour and is shaped into tall cylinders, 13 cm (5 in) in diameter and 20 cm (8 in) high. It is usually served cut horizontally. Fourme de Pierrestir-Haute. Fourme de Montbrison are similar cheese.

- FOURME DU MEZENC (30-40% fat content). This is also known as Bleu du Velay, bleu de Loudes or Bleu de Costaros. It is flavoured with parsley and has a natural crust. Like fourme d'Ambert, it is cylindrical and has a promoted flavour. The name 'Fourme' is also used, albeit incorrectly, for Cantal, Salers and Laguiole.

FOURRER The French term meaning to insert a raw or cooked filling into a a sweet or savoury item. For example, omelettes and pancakes may be filled with various mixtures before being folded. Choux pastries and sponge' cakes can be filled with butter cream, almonds cream, confectioner's custard (pastry cream) or a fruit filling. Bread rolls can be filled with various savoury mixtures.

FOUR SPICES A mixture of spices, usually consisting of ground pepper, grated nutmeg, powdered cloves and ground ginger or cinnamon. T s used in stews, civeis, charcuterie, terrines and game dishes. This spice mixture is also used in Arab cookery. It should not be confused with five spices (cinq-epices) or all spice (toute-epice).

FOUTOU A traditional African dish based on casava (manioc root) together with plantains (green bananas) or yams. The cassava and plantains or yams are boiled in water, drained and then pounded into a smooth paste that is shaped into several small rounds or a single large one. Foutou is always served with very rich and highly spiced sauces, based on meat and vegetables or on fish. These sauces are actually more like ragouts, and their composition is very varied. Foutou is very common in Africa, particularly in Benin and the Ivory Coast.

FOYOT A Parisian restaurant which was situated on the corner of the Rue de Tournon and the Rue de Vaugirard. It was originally a hotel, and the Emperor Joseph II, brother of Marie Antoinette, once stayed there, in 1776 it was converted into a restaurant, known as the Café Vahette, and in 1848 it was bought by Foyot, the former chef of Louis-Philippe, and renamed.

The proximity of the palais du Luxembourg meant that the clientele included many senators. The specialities served by Foyot at that time included the famous veal chops Foyot, sheep's trotters (fee) à la poulette, pigeons Foyot and Ernestine potatoes. No-one is certain that these dishes were actually invented by Foyot himself, but they certainly made the restaurant very famous. It was while breakfasting at Foyot in 1894 that the poet Laurent Tailhade was seriously injured by an anarchist's bomb.

The restaurant was finally closed in 1938 and the building was demolished.

Recipes

Foyot sauce

Make 200 ml (7 fl. oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) béarnaise sauce and strain it. Add 2 tablespoons meat glaze or stock, stirring well. If the sauce is not to be served immediately, keep it warm in a bain marie. (The meat glaze is made by boiling down a concentrated meat stock until it becomes thick and syrupy).

Veal chop Foyot

Make a thick cheese paste with dried breadcrumbs, 25 g (1 oz., $\frac{1}{4}$ cup) grated Gruyère cheese, and 20 g ($\frac{3}{4}$ oz. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ tablespoons) butter. Season and flour a large veal chop, weighing about 250 g (9 oz) and roast it in a preheated oven at 150°C (300°F, gas 2) with 20 g ($\frac{3}{4}$ oz. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ tablespoons) butter for 20-30 minutes. Half-cooked, turn it over and cover with the cheese paste. Stuff a small tomato with a mixture of breadcrumbs, parsley and butter and place it in the roasting pan. Finish cooking the chop and baste regularly with the butter. Drain the meat and the tomato and arrange them on a very serving dish. Add a peeled and chopped shallot to the cooking juices and deglaze with 4 tablespoons dry white wine and an equal quantity of veal stock. Boil and reduce by half. Add 10 g (1 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoons, $\frac{1}{4}$ oz) butter and pour the sauce over the veal.

FRAISIER A gâteau consisting of two squares of Genoese sponge moistened with kirsch syrup and sandwiched together with a layer of kirsch-flavoured butter cream and strawberries. The top of the gâteau is covered with a layer of butter cream coloured red with cochineal and decorated with strawberries. When the gâteau is cut the strawberries can be seen, cut in half.

There are several variations of this gâteau, which is also called fragaria or fraisalia. The sponge may be made with ground almonds and covered with several layers of kirsch-flavoured strawberry jam. It is then brushed with apricot glaze, covered with pink fondant icing (frosting) and edged with sugar and chopped blanched almonds. The top is decorated with a large strawberry made from red maizipan (almond paste) and leaves made from boiled sugar. Another method is to fill the sponge with a layer of strawberry cream and ice it with a pink frondant icing containing crashed strawberries. Fresh strawberries are then used for the decoration, finally, it may be filled with strawberry jam, covered with a thin layer of pink almond paste, dusted with icing (confectioner's) sugar and edged with chopped roasted almonds

FRAMBOISE A spirit made from raspberries, especially in the Alsace region.

FRANCAISE, A LA Describing a preparation of joints of meat served with asparagus tips, braise lettuce, cauliflower flortes coated with hollandaise sauce and small dachess-potato nests filed with diced mixed vegetables. The sauce served with dishes a la francaise is a thin demi-glace-or a clear veal gravy.

Peas a la francaise are prepared with lettuce and onions.

FRANCIACORTA Region in Lombardy producing good quality white, red and sparkling wines. DOCG Franciacorta is applied to sparkling wines produced by the traditional method (see methode champenoise) from Chardonnay, Pinot Noir, Pinot blanc and Pinot Gris, whilst DOC Terre di Francia corta refers to the quality still wines.

FRANCILLON A mixed salad consisting of potatoes marinated in a white wine vinaigrette, mussels cooked a la mariniere, and chopped celery, garnished with sliced truffles. The original recipe was given by Dumas fish in his play Francillon, first performed at the Comedie-Francaise on 9 January 1887. The paris restaurateurs took advantage of the event by putting the new salad on their menus. The restaurant Brebant-Vachette substuted Japanese artichokes for the potatoes, and Francillon salad was renamed Japanese salad (is it often called Japanese salad even when it s made with potatoes).

There follows passage from the play, in which annette, a cordon-bleu cook, gives the recipe to Henri, the leading man, who intends to make the salad as a special treat.

Annette

Boil some potatoes in stock, cut then into pieces as for an ordinary salad, and while they are still warm, season them with salt pepper, very good-quality fruity olive oil. And vinegar...

Henri

Tarragon vinegar?

Annette

Orleans vinegar is better, but that's not important. What is important is to add half a glass of white wine. Chateau-Yquem if possible, and plenty of herbs, chopped very, very small. At the same time cook some very large mussels in stock with a celery stick, drain then thoroughly, and add them to the seasoned potatoes. Mix everything together gently.

Therese

Less mussels than potatoes?

Annette

One-third less. One has to become gradually aware of the mussels. They must be neither nor imposed.

Annette

Cover it with rounds of truffle. That puts a finishing touch to it.

Henri

Cooked in champagne.

Annette

That god without saying. Do all this two hours before dinner so that this salad will be cold when served.

Henri

We could surround the salad bowl with ice.

Annette:

No! it mustn't be rushed. It is very delicate, and all the flavours have to combine together slowly for this mother, a great gourmand. In the modern recipe. The truffles are omitted and the vinaigrette is flavoured with Chablis.

A bombe glaze coated with coffee ice cream and filled with a champagne-flavoured bombe mixture is known as bombe Francillon.

FRANGIPANE A pastry cream used in the preparation of various desserts, sweet, cakes and pancakes. It is made with milk, sugar, flour, eggs and butter, mixed with either crushed macaroons (to give a lighter cream) or with ground almonds). A few drops of bitter almond essence (extract) may be added to intensify the flavour. The name is derived from that of a 16th-century Italian nobleman, the Marquis Muzo Frangipani, living in Paris. He invented a perfume for scenting gloves that was based on bitter almonds. This inspired the pastrycooks of the time to make an almond-flavoured cream which they named frangipane. La Varenne mentions tourtes de franchipanne (frangipane tarts) several times in his treatise on patisserie.

In classic cookery, frangipane is also the name of a kind of savoury panada made with flour, egg yolks, butter and milk and cooked like a choux pastry. It is used in poultry and fish forcemeat.

RECIPES

Frangipane

Combine 75 g (6 oz. 1 ¼ cups) icing (confectioner's) sugar, 175 g (6 oz. 1 ½ cups) ground almonds and 2 teaspoons cornflour (cornstarch). In a mixing bowl, soften 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) butter without making it foam (which would make the cream rise during its shape). Add the sugar, almonds and cornflour mixture, then 2 eggs one by one, stirring with a wooden spatula. Next add 1 tablespoon brown rum and finally 300 g (11 oz. 1 ½ cups) confectioner's custard (pastry cream). Cover with cling film (plastic wrap) and place in the refrigerator.

Frangipane cream

Boil 750 ml (1 ¼ pints. 3 ¼ cups) milk with a vanilla pod (bean or 1 teaspoon vanilla sugar). Put 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, 200 g (7 oz. 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, 4 beaten eggs and pinch of salt in a heavy based saucepan and mix together thoroughly. Gradually add the hot milk and cook slowly for about 3 minutes, stirring all the time, until the cream thickens. Pour the cream into a bowl and stir in 75 g (3 oz. ¾ cup) crushed macaroons and 50 g (2 oz. ¼ cup) softened butter. Mix well.

Crepes a la frangipane

Make some crepes and prepare some frangipane cream, using 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) milk for the cream and an equal quantity for the crepe batter. Coat the crepes with the cream and fold into four. Arrange in a buttered ovenproof dish, dish with icing (confectioner's). sugar and lightly caramelize in a very hot oven or under the grill (broiler). Serve very hot.

FRANGY Appellation white wine from Savoury, entitled to the prefix 'Roussette de Savoie' and made from the Roussette grape. Pleasantly fragrant, it can have a slightly honeyed flavour, although it is essentially a dry wine.

FRANKFURTER A German smoked sausage originating from the Frankfurt area, made of finely minced (ground) pork. Beef or veal may be used with the pork and kosher frankfurters are made with beef without any pork. Frankfruters are sold blanched or fully cooked, reading for reheating, and are available fresh (loose), vacuum-packed or in cans. In Germany they are typically served accompanied by sauerkraut and hot or cold potato salad. Elsewhere, they are often placed in rolls, smeared with mustard or tomato ketchup and served as hot dogs.

FRANKLIN, ALFREDO-LOUIS-AUGUSTE French writer (born Versailles, 1850; died Paris, 1917). He spent most of his working life in the Mazarine library in Paris, becoming successively librarian, chief librarian and, finally, administrator. He published 2 "reference life in bygone days": these serious works contain numerous details about the table menus, kitchens and domestic economy of bygone days subjects to often neglected by historians.

FRASCATI A gaming house-cum-restaurant situation on the corner of the Rue de Richelieu and the Boulevard des Italiens in Paris. It was founded in 1796 by the Neapolitan ice-cream merchant Garchi, who named it after one of the most famous holiday resorts for well-to-do Romans. Its gardens were illuminated at night and during the Directory and the Empire it had the reputation of being the most famous gaming house in Paris. In addition, the clientele could dine, eat ice cream and watch the fireworks displays. It was also frequented by women of easy virtue. The restaurant was eventually closed after 50 years with the suppressions of gaming houses and was subsequently succeeded by the patisserie Frascati.

The name Frascati is used for a garnish for meat dishes and for various dessert. It is also the name of a famous Italian dry white wine.

RECIPE

Fillet of beef a la Frascati

Prepare a demi-glace sauce flavoured with port. Sauté some very large mushrooms in butter or bake them in the oven. Cook some very short green asparagus tips in butter and quickly sauté some small slices of foie gras (preferably duck) in butter. Keep all these ingredients hot. Roast a fillet of beef and place it on a serving dish. Fill two-thirds of the mushroom caps with the asparagus tips and the remainder with a salpicon of truffles braised in Madeira. Arrange the mushrooms and the slices of foie gras around the meat. Pour the demi-glace over the top.

FRASCATI Famous white wine produced in Lazio, Italy, almost at the gates of Rome. It has been known and enjoyed since antiquity. Mostly made from the Malvasia di Candia and Trebbiano and Toscano grape varieties, the wines of Frascati may be dry, sweet or sparkling. The best of them add the description 'superiore' to the label, so long as the alcohol content is over 11.5%

FREEZE-DRYING A method of preserving food, known also as cryodesiccation and lyophilization, in which the product is frozen and then dehydrated. The food is treated in three stages; first the product is deep-frozen; next it is subjected to a vacuum, which sublimates the ice trapped in it; and finally the water vapour is removed, leaving the product dry and stable. A solid food that has been processed in this way becomes extremely light because it contains only 1-2% of its original water content; but it retains its volume, cellular structure and shape, allowing rapid and even rehydration. The nutritional qualities remain more or less the same as those of fresh food. As it is a costly process it is only used for quality products. The best results are obtained with liquids and small pieces of food. Coffee is still the principal freeze-dried product, but mushrooms, onions and prawns are also preserved successfully in this way.

FREEZER An electric appliance for freezing food and storing ready frozen food. Either in chest or cupboard form, a freezer is used to store food at a temperature of -18°C (0°F) after it has been frozen at a -24°C (-11°F) minimum. The size and type varies widely, from large chest or upright models to a small compartment in combination with a separate refrigerator (a fridge-freezer).

Features include fast-freezer settings, thermometers, alarms to warn of a rise in temperature (for example if the door is accidentally left open), frost-free operation (no need to defrost the appliance); and fan-assisted cooling to allow optimum operation in a warm environment (for example in the average kitchen). Quality of the cabinet and level of insulation (which influences running cost) vary according to the type and cost of the appliance. These are some of the facts to consider; the space available for the appliance and its likely use should also be assessed before purchase.

The icebox in a refrigerator is not a freezer as such a storage compartment for the preservation of ready frozen foods; it is unsuitable for deep-freezing.

FREEZING submitting a perishable foodstuff to extreme cold to preserve it. The temperature at the centre of the food must be reduced to between -10° and -18°C (14°F and 9°F) as quickly as possible.

- What to freeze. Almost all foods can be frozen, although some require preliminary preparation; eggs, for example, cannot be frozen in their shells but can be stored when lightly beaten. The main rule is that the food is fresh and of good quality. Prepared ingredients and meals and cooked dishes can be frozen successfully. The possibilities are broad and depend as much on personal preference and eating patterns.
- Preparing for food for freezing always prepare ingredients as though they are to be cooked – for example, trim and peel vegetables, if necessary; gut and clean fish; and trim and cut up fruit
- VEGETABLES FOR long-term storage, blanching is recommended. Blanch quickly in boiling unsalted water (except for tomatoes and mushrooms), then drain, wipe, plunge into iced water, drain again and dry thoroughly. However, the majority of vegetables keep well without blanching, especially for up to 2 months.
- FRUIT Peel and remove the stones (pits), wipe thoroughly without washing.
- MEAT Remove excess fat and cut into joints or serving-sized pieces.
- POULTRY Pluck, draw, singe, remove fat, stuff with crumbled foil and truss (or cut into pieces).

- FISH Gut (clean) scale, dry, stuff with crumpled foil if whole (or cut into slices), trim and dry.
- Soft-fat (soft-ripened) CHEESES Choice when just ripe and wrap.
- COOKED DISHES Reduce cooking time by 10-20 minutes.
- PASTRY (DOUGH) Wrap portions of pastry or roll out and shape on to foil trays.
- Packaging The package must be impermeable to smells; it should be light and not bulky. Heavy-smells; it should be light and not bulky, heavy quality polythene bags' are practical as are rigid plastic containers. Foil wrapping and containers are also useful. Some oven proof glassware is also freezerproof. Food that is inadequately wrapping foods closely, then sealing bags with wine ties, helps to prevent surface damage.
- Defrosting frozen food preliminary defrosting is not necessary for small cuts of meat, fish or vegetables. They should be heated immediately to maximum temperature in boiling water or a preheated oven or under a grill (broiler) so that they are defrosted, sealed and cooked in one. In general, frozen vegetables cook more quickly than the same fresh vegetables (since the former have been blanched before freezing), while frozen meats require longer cooking than fresh meats. Precooked dishes which are placed directly in a saucepan or in the oven in their container always heat very quickly. Defrosting is, however, essential for larger items (whole birds, roasts), shellfish, pastry, pastry dishes and cheeses. This should preferably take place in the refrigerator (2-20 hours according to the type and size of the product). No defrosted food should ever be refrozen.

FRENCH BEAN Variety of thick, fleshy, stringless green or yellow bean (haricot beurre). When picked young, they are known as dwarf French beans. The yellow beans are usually juicier than the green ones.

FRENCH COOKING Throughout history, bread has always been an important part of the French diet. In ancient Gaul, which was essentially an agricultural region, the peasants used to prepare flat cake of millet, oats, barley and wheat. They were good hunters and ate game, poultry and also pork, that fat of which was used in various culinary preparations. Because of the abundance of herds of wild pigs in the forests, the Gauls perfected the art of preserving meat by salting and smoking and the pork butchers (lardarii) of the time had such a high reputation that they even exported their pork to Rome. Meals were washed down with cervoise (barley beer), and in the Marseilles region wine was drunk as well. Centuries earlier, the Greeks had introduced vines into the region and Marseilles also imported wine from Italy.

- From the Romans to the barbarians The Romans with their refined habits and their tradition of great cookery, exerted a profound influence on the Gauls from the 1st century onwards, above all on the wealthy classes the recipes of Apicius were handed down until the Middle Ages. Whereas their ancestors took their meals seated around the table, the Gallo-Roman noblemen dined on reclining couches and enjoyed, as had the Romans, beans, chick peas, grilled (broiled) snails, oysters, dormice stuffed with walnuts, and jam made from violets and honey. Cooking food in olive oil 'gained ground, and orchards were developed. It is even recorded that fig trees used to grow in Lutetia (ancient Paris). However, the most important and influential factor of all was the widespread establishment of vine growing areas: Italian vine plants were introduced into the Bordeaux region, the Rhone valley, Burgundy and Moselle. Soon, the wine merchants of Gaul invaded the markets of the Empire to the detriment of Roman wines, all the more successfully since the Gauls had discovered that wine could be kept longer if it was stored in casks. Competition became so lively that in AD 92 the emperor Domitian ordered half the vineyards of Gaul to be destroyed.

After the Germanic invasions, Gaul went through a tragic period of food shortage and famines that marked the beginning of the Middle Ages. The Merovingian and, later, the Carolingian nobles imitated the luxurious example set by the Romanized Gauls and feasted on a wide variety of highly spiced game (boar, wild ox, reindeer and even camel), while the masses contented themselves with oatmeal gruels, and the basic dish was a beauty soup made with root vegetables enriched with bacon. Meat was eaten only on special occasions. Agriculture techniques regressed, the economy became autarkic - self sufficient - and until the 8th century, there was a massive slump in trade.

- The influence of the church What remained of the ancient culture had found a refuge in the monasteries. The great religious orders extolled manual labour and vast areas of land were cleared for cultivation, Kilns, workshops and hostels for pilgrims were also established near the abbeys. The monks undertook the essential responsibility of reselecting vine plants, and also supervised the manufacture and maturing of cheeses. Above all, however, the Church altered the diet of the population by forcing people to abstain on certain days in the year from eating any kind of animal fat or meat which 'kindle lust and passion's as a result, this encouraged both fishing and the breeding of pike, eels and carp in the fish ponds. Whale blubber, a greatly prized food, was permitted during Lent; furthermore, he increased consumption of fish brought about improved methods of salting and smoking.

Consequently, the attics and cellars of the great Carolingian cities and those of the abbeys were always well stocked, and the banquets were sumptuous. The emperor Charlemagne personally supervised the good management of the imperial estates. Above all, he enjoyed hunting, and the word gibier (game) dates from this time. But abundance was still preferred to culinary elegance, and serious food shortage continued. The study of monastic meals reveals impressive rations of leguminous plants rich in proteins: 200 g (97 oz). Dried vegetables, 2 kg (4 ½ lb) bread, 100 g (4 oz) cheese, together with honey, salt and wine. Such a keen appetite can be explained by the struggle against the cold, by fear of food shortages and by the lack of protein and other fortifying foods with a small volume. The population which had dropped to perhaps 8 million inhabitants, lived mainly as its ancestors had done, but in a world where insecurity and lack of communication often caused shortages, or even famine. The absence of methods of food preservation meant that food frequently went bad: for example, flour infected with ergot caused ergot poisoning.

- The opening up of the Mediterranean region
The setting up of the feudal society in the 8th and 9th centuries contributed to the restoration of relative security. The resumption of trade caused new cities to be built and a new class to develop – the middle class or bourgeois, a group dominating the poorer citizens, such as journeymen, laborers and unskilled workers. The cities needed regular provisions, which brought about the establishment of fairs and markets.

The take for fish and poultry predominated, but products became more varied with the gradual expansion of trade in the Mediterranean region and also because of the pilgrimages and the Crusades. Plums from Damascus (damsons), figs from Malta, dates, pomegranates, pistachio nuts, rice, buckwheat and above all spices (cinamon, ginger, amiseed, cloves and nutmeg) appeared on the tables of the rich together with various seasoned dishes whose freshness sometimes left much to be desired soon condiments become indispensable aids to cooking and the citizens of Dijon added their contribution in the 12th century by discovering mustard, and adaptation from an old Roman recipe. Also, by the 10th century, the sugar trade was established in the Mediterranean region, centered on Venice.

City dwellers are traditionally eaters of bread and meat and guilds of butchers and bakers were powerful organizations in the cities, where people's fortunes were assessed by the quantities of bread that they bought. Pork was the main type of meat, but joints of mutton and beef formed part of the menus of the rich, and at the same time, rotisseurs (sellers of roast meat) and pie makers multiplied. Cheese were made in all parts of France and, gradually, wine outstayed beer in popularity, except in Flanders and Picardy, Cider, which had been made for several centuries, gained ground in Brittany from the 14th century onwards.

- Prestigious meals Because of his rank, the nobleman was obliged to keep open house in his chateau: he was responsible for feeding his maison, which included not only his family but also his équerries and vassals. The menservants set up the table with trestles and planks of oak in the communal rooms. There was no tablecloth and the plates and dishes were very basic, made by baked clay, wood or tin. The cutlery consisted of spoons and knives, and in the 12th century a type of two-pronged fork came into use. As the kitchen was separated from the keep through fear of fires, the servant brought the dish to the table covered with a cloth to keep it warm. The meal consisted of either game or roast pork, poultry of some kind, eggs prepared in various ways, either cheese or curdled milk, and cooked fruits.
- These meals were sometimes veritable feasts. The elaborate arrangement of the dishes on the table, following the recipes of Apicius, demonstrated the power, generosity, taste and prestige of the nobleman. The famous 14th-century chef Guillaume Tirel, known as Taillevent was head cook to Charles V. he was the author of Le Viandier, a collection of his recipes and a complete record of the cuisine of that period. The edible game at that time include almost all species of feathered or furred animals, including the cormorant, swan and whale. The royal meals consisted of five dishes, with roasted peacocks and herons, partridges with sugar, young rabbits in spiced sauce, stuffed capons and kids, together with pies, cress, creams, pears, walnuts, honeyed wines and nuelles (dessert creams).

The discovery of the Americas at the end of the 15th century resulted in the introduction of a new variety of foods, including sweetcorn, game fowls, turkeys, tomatoes and potatoes. At the same time, table manners became more refined, individual plates were used and the tables were beautifully decorated with various items of silver.

- The splendour of the Renaissance. The Renaissance heralded a new way of life. The marriage of Catherine de Medici and the future Henri II marked the beginning of the Italian influence on French cuisine, destined to play an important role. It had only very slightly impinged in the reign of Francois I, a great lover of veal and poultry who according to Rabelais, had revived the days of feasting and drinking. The middle-classes had also acquired an interest in cooking. Whale meat and even donkey were still popular and garlic was widely used as a flavouring, but new foods had also become part of the diet: pasta (such as macaroni and vermicelle), Italian sausage, vegetables which had gradually become more popular than the traditional herbs inherited from the Romans, such as cardamom and cumin.

French cooking in the 17th century . The reign of Henri IV is symbolized by the famous poule au pot, which the king promised that his subjects would enjoy once a week, as a symbol of modest comfort and an improvement in the condition of the serfs. In fact, the beginning of the 17th century was marked by the contribution of the agronomist Olivier de Serres, who introduced all garden vegetables into cookery, for example, cauliflowers and asparagus. However the king had a preference for sweet things and so sugared almonds, marzipan (almond paste) and tarts with musk and ambergris became fashionable, together with all kinds of jam. As early as 1555 the Italian condemners had taught the French how to make sorbets, and ice creams followed a century later. Heavily spiced food declined in popularity and a number of cookery books were written, the best known of which appeared in 1651. It was the first book to fix rules and principles and thus to establish some order in cooking. It included recipes for cakes and also for the first mille feuilles. In 1691, the cuisineier royal et bourgeois by Massaliot was published. Its instructions were precise and it showed that the cuisine was becoming more varied.

In the reign of Louis XIV, cooking was spectacular rather than fine or delicate, and the festivities of the Prince of Condé at Chantilly, for example, were particularly sumptuous. The famous Vatel was maitre d'hotel of Condé.

the Great, a very important position. A great number of dishes were served at each meal and there are many descriptions of the meals served at the table of Louis XIV, who ate too heavily for a true gourmet.

French cooking from the Regency to Louis XVI The Regency and the reign of Louis XV are regarded as the golden age of French cookery. At the same time, the produce of rural France slowly improved both in quality and quantity and there was no further famine. The Age of Enlightenment united the pleasures of the table with those of the mind, and gastronomy, a new word, was the main topic of conversation, the petit soupers (little suppers) of the Regent and the choice meals prepared for the king and his great noblemen did more to perfect the culinary art than the showy banquets in the reign of Louis XIV. Great chefs rivalled each other in imaginative cookery. They discovered how to make stocks from meat juices and began to use them to add flavour to sauces. Mahonnaise sauce appeared at the table of the Marshal de Richelieu., the conqueror of Port Mahon, pate de foie gras garnished with truffles might have been the idea of Nicolas Francois Doyen chef of the first president of the Parliament of Bordeaux, La Chapelle the chef of Marie Leszcynska, prepared bouchees a la reine (chicken volauvent) and Marin., the butler of the Marshal de Soubise, was the first to glaze meat and deglaze (make a sauce from) the juices. It was in the mansions of rich financiers that the culinary art expanded. Food shops, pastrycooks and confectioners achieved perfection and people also learnt how to recognize foreign specialities, such as caviar.

The 20th century At the beginning of the 20th century, French cooking gained supremacy throughout the world. Its chiefs reigned supreme in the kitchens of Buckingham Palace, the Winter Palace of St. Petersburg and the great international hotels. Paris became the Mecca of gastronomy. The Edwardian era was the age when great books were written about cooking by such authors as Urbain Dubois, Augustine Bernard, Escoffier and Bignon. The Academic Goncourt organized its first dinner in 1903, and Prosper Montagne, the most famous chef of the first half of the century opened the most luxurious restaurant of this frivolous era. There was also a fashion for local bistros, run by natives of the Auvergne and Perigord, and also by gastronomic associations. At the end of the 20th century the influence of Curimonsky still prevailed and the great classic dishes of the cuisine of provincial France continued to uphold the reputation of French cookery, with such dishes as pot-au-feu, blanquette, tripe, bouillabaisse, cassoulet, bourguignon and tarts Tatin. France cookery has also been introduced to and influenced by, other culinary traditions, with the result that exotic and foreign restaurants flourish. The great classics of European cuisine have long been incorporated, but the French are now discovering Chinese, Indian and Scandinavian cookery.

FRENCH FAIRS AND MARKET foires et marches The oldest market in Paris, in the heart of the city, was established at the beginning of the 12th century for the sale of wheat. Not long afterwards Louis le Gros established another market in the place where Les Halles operated right up to 1969, when it moved out to Rungis. The art of selecting the right ingredients and looking for top-quality food is still practised. All over France, markets take place on fixed days, once or twice a week, in the open air or in market buildings. No matter how small the purchase, the customer is keen to obtain the best produce that is available. Careful inspection of the foods on offer is still available. Careful inspection of the foods on offer is still part of the shopping process.

The great annual fairs used to be held in the church square on the parish saint's day. In Paris, the ham fair, which began on the last Tuesday of Lent, was held in the church square of Notre Dame before being moved to the Boulevard Richard Lenoir and then to Pantin. The Lendit fair, established by King Dagobert, was held on the Paline Saint Denis for a fortnight in June. The products sold at this fair came from all over France and even from abroad, especially Flanders. The Saint German fair, established by Louis XI in 1482 near the church of Saint Germain des Pres, started on 3 February and lasted until Holy Week, it flourished until 1785 and sold all types of goods in small wooden booths. Plays were also performed and coffee was served for the first time in France by an Armenian called Pascal. The Saint Laurent fair, the Saint Ovide fair and the Temple fair were the fore-runners of the great annual exhibitions now known as the Salon de l'Agriculture and the Foire de Paris. Several other towns in France specializing in certain types of products also hold fairs, including Arpajon (beans) and Excideuil (foies gras)

FRENCH TOAST pain perdu A dessert consisting of slices of bread soaked in milk, dipped in eggs beaten with sugar, then lightly fried in butter. French toast is served hot and crisp. It was formerly called pain crotte, pain à la romaine or croutes dorées. In the south of France, it was traditionally eaten on feast days, particularly at Easter. Originally intended to use up crusts and left over pieces of bread, French toast today is usually made with milk bread. It may be accompanied by custard cream, jam or compote.

RECIPE

French toast

Boil 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) milk with half a vanilla pod (bean) and 100 g (4 oz, ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar, then leave to cool. Cut 250 g (9 oz) stale brioche into fairly thick slices. Soak them in the cooled milk, without letting them fall apart, then dip them in 2 eggs beaten as for an omelette with a little caster sugar. Heat 100 g (4 oz, ½ cup) butter in a frying pan and fry the slices. When golden on one side, turn them over to cook the other side. Arrange them on a round dish, dust them with caster sugar and decorate with strawberries.

FRENEUSE A soup made with turnips and potatoes in light stock or consommé, thickened with fresh cream. It can be garnished with small turnip balls.

FRIAND A small puff pastry case filled with sausage meat, minced (ground) meat, ham or cheese, baked in the oven and served as a hot hors d'œuvre.

A friand is also a small sweet pastry—a barquette often made with an almond paste filling and elaborately decorated.

RECIPE

Sausage rolls

FRICASEE.

A preparation of chicken in a white sauce (veal and lamb may be prepared in this way). Formerly in France, the term denoted various kinds of ragout of chicken meat, fish or vegetables in white or brown stock. Now a days, the meat is cut into pieces, an aromatic garnish is added and it is then sautéed over a low heat, without browning. The meat is then coated with flour, some white stock is added and the meat is cooked in the thickened liquid. A fricassee is usually cooked with cream and garnished with small glazed onions and lightly cooked mushrooms. Fricassee's are also made with fried fish which is subsequently cooked in sauce.

In the 17th century, when La Varenne referred to fricassees of calves liver, calves feet, chicken, young pigeon, potato and asparagus, this method of cooking was very common and not highly regarded. Subsequently, the word became distorted to tofricot, which, in popular parlance, designates any simple but popular tasty dish.

RECIPES

Eel fricassee

Skin and prepare a large eel weighing about 800g (1 ¾ lb) or several small eels totaling the same weight. Cut the eels into pieces about 6 cm (2 1/2 in) long. Season with salt and pepper. Peel 12 small onions-if they are spring onions (scallions), trim them first-and blanch them for 3-4 minutes. Place the eel in a buttered frying pan (skillet, together with the onions and a large bouquet garni. Add a mixture of half dry white wine, half water until the ingredients are just covered. Cover the pan, bring to the boil and simmer for 10 minutes. In the meantime, prepare some small croutons fried in oil or butter. Then add about 12 thinly sliced mushrooms to the frying pan and cook for a further 7-10 minutes. Drain the pieces of eel, the onions and the mushrooms, place in a dish and keep hot. Strain the cooking juices and reduce by two-thirds. Blend 2 egg yolks with 100 ml (4 fl. Oz, 7 tablespoons) single (light) cream and chicken carefully. Pour the sauce over the eel pieces, garnish with the fried crotons and serve immediately.

Fricassee of chicken a la ber richonne

Joint a chicken. Brown 350 g (12 oz, 3 cups) new carrots in 50 g (2 oz, 1/4 cup) butter in a pan. Drain them, and then brown the chicken pieces in the same butter. Add 250 ml (8 fl. Oz, 1 cup) chicken stock, the carrots, a bouquet garni and some salt and pepper. Bring to the boil, reduce the heat, cover the pan and cook gently for 45 minutes. Remove the chicken pieces and keep them hot. Mix 2 egg yolks and a pinch of cassia (superfine) sugar with 200 ml (7 fl. ¾ cup) double (heavy) cream, 1 tablespoon white wine vinegar, and a few drops of the chicken stock. Pour the mixture into the pan and mix thoroughly with the pan juices. Heat without boiling so that the sauce thickens a little. Serve the chicken coated with the sauce and sprinkled with chopped parsley.

Fricassee of chicken cardinal la balue

Cut a chicken into 8 portions, season and brown in 40-50 g (1 1/2-2 oz, 3-4 tablespoons) butter in a flameproof casserole. Put the casserole in a preheated oven at 220 °C (425°F, gas 7) and cook for about 40 minutes. Prepare a stock with 1 sliced carrot, 1 sliced onion, a bouquet garni, 140 ml (1/4 pint, ¾ cup) white wine, 740 ml (1 1/4 pints, 3 1/4 cups) water and some salt and pepper. Cook for about 30 minutes. Clean a dozen crayfish, wash them and cook them for 5 minutes in the stock. Drain the crayfish and shell the tails. Pound the shells and press through a fine sieve to make a puree. Mix the puree with 50 g (2 oz, 1/4 cup) butter.

Drain the cooked chicken pieces and place them in another casserole, with the thighs at the bottom. Add the crayfish tails, cover and put the casserole in the oven, which should be either turned off or at a very low heat, so that the chicken does not become tough. Pour 500 ml (17 fl. Oz, 2 cups) double (heavy) cream into the casserole in which the chicken was cooked, heat up and reduce the cream (but do not boil), then add the crayfish butter and whisk. Arrange the chicken pieces on a heated serving dish and coat with sauce. Serve very hot.

Fricassee of chicken with and joy wine

Cut a large chicken into medium-sized portions and season with salt and pepper. Peel 24 button onions and 24 button mushrooms. Brown the chicken portions in butter, then add the onions and wine to just cover the chicken, cover the pan and simmer gently for 30-35 minutes.

Add 200 ml (2 fl oz, ¾ cup) double (heavy) cream and adjust the seasoning. Serve very hot, with small steamed new potatoes, or a mixture of carrots and glazed turnips. A small turkey can be prepared in the same way.

Fricassee of sea fish with Bellet zabaglione

To serve 6, you will need 800 g (1 3/2 lb) young turbot, 1.5 kg (3 1/4 lb) John Dory, 4 slices of moakfish. 2 red muller, 4 scampi and 500 ml (7 fl. Oz. 2 cups) white Bellet wine or a good Provençal wine. Fillet the turbot and the John Dory. Wash the fillets wine season with salt and pepper. Heat 3 tablespoons olive oil and 40 g (1 1/2 oz. 3 tablespoons) butter in a large frying pan. When the mixture foams, add the fish and the scampi. Add a large chopped shallot and cook for a few seconds. Add about 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) Bellet wine. Remove the red mullet, fillet them and replace in the pan. Add 3 tablespoons concentrated fish stock and finish cooking. Arrange the fish on a dish and keep hot.

Make a zabaglione with 8 egg yolks and 400 ml (14 fl. Oz. 1 3/4 cups) white Bellet wine. Season with salt and pepper and add 500 ml (17 fl. Oz, 2 cups) hot double (heavy) cream. The zabaglions should be hot and foamy, but must not boil, adjust the seasoning. Coat the fricassee with the zabaglione. Sprinkle with fresh chervil and serve with lightly cooked (al dente) French (green) beans, with a knob of butter on top.

Lamb fricassee

Wash and wipe some pieces of lamb (fillet, 1 lean leg or shoulder), fry in butter without browning and season with salt and pepper. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons flour and stir over the heat. Add some white stock or consommé and a bouquet garni, and bring to the boil. Simmer with the lid on for 45-60 minutes. Fry some mushroom in butter and glaze some button onions. Remove the pieces of lamb from the pan, replace with the onions and mushrooms, and stir them into the pan juices. Take off the heat and add an egg yolk to chicken. Pour the sauce into a large heated dish, add the lamb and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Serve hot.

Minute fricassee of chicken

Joint 2 chickens in the usual way and put them in a saucepan with 175 g (6 oz. 3/4 cup) good-quality melted butter. Fry the chicken without browning, add 2 tablespoons flour and season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg, then add sufficient water to make a lightly thickened sauce. Add 6 blanched onion and a bouquet garni and cook over a brisk heat, ensuring that the chicken pieces do not burn and the sauce is gradually reduced. After 25 minutes test one of the thighs to see that it is cooked. Add 250 g (9 oz. 3 cups) button mushrooms and skim the fat off the sauce. Blend in 4 egg yolks to thicken the sauce and add a dash of fresh lemon juice.

FRICHTI.

A colloquial French name for a light meal or snack cooked at home. The word was probably introduced into the French language in the 1860s by Alsatian soldiers and is derived from the German Frabstick (breakfast).

FRITELLE.

A Corsican fritter made with leavened dough containing egg yolks and oil. It contains a mixture of chopped beef, mint and marjoram leaves, or a slice of Corsican sausage, or a square of Broccio (a fresh cream cheese). Fritelles can also be made with chestnut flour and flavoured with fennel seeds. They are then sweetened with plenty of sugar.

FRITON

A charcuterie speciality from southwestern France. Resembling a rilette, it is made with the residue of melted pork fat and fatty pork pieces, such as belly, which is mixed with pieces of offal (tongue, heart, kidneys or even head) and cooked in lard (shortening)

The word fritons is also used for the crisp residues of goose fat and cubes of pork fat, although the more usual word is grattons or gratterons.

FRITOT

Also known as friteau. A kind of savoury fritter made from small pieces of cooked marinated food that are dipped in a light batter and deep-fried. Fritots are usually made with frogs legs, shellfish, leftovers of fish, poultry or meat, various types of offal (variety meats), or vegetables. They are usually arranged on a paper napkin, garnished with fried parsley and slices of lemon, and served as a hot hors d'oeuvre, accompanied by a spicy tomato sauce.

Recipes

Fritots of meat or poultry

Bone some poached or braised meat or poultry (or use leftovers), cut into even-sized pieces and marinate in a mixture of oil, brandy, chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Finish as for frogs-leg fritots.

Frogs' leg fritots

Trim the frogs legs and marinate them for 30 minutes in a mixture of oil, chopped garlic, chopped parsley, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Then dip them in a light batter and deep-fry until they are golden brown. Drain on paper towels and serve with fried parsley, quarters of lemon and either curry sauce or gribiche sauce. The frogs' legs can also be threaded on to small skewers before being dipped in the batter and fried.

Mussel fritots

Prepare the mussels a la mariniere, remove from their shells, drain and dry. Finish as for oyster fritots.

Oyster fritots

Remove the oysters from their shells and poach gently in their own liquor. Drain and dry, then marinate as for frogs'-leg-fritots, but add a pinch of cayenne pepper to the marinade. Finish as for frogs'-leg fritots and serve with Italian sauce.

Salmon fritots

Cut some raw salmon into thin slices or large dice and marinate in a mixture of oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper, finish as for frogs-leg fritots and serve with tomato or hollandaise sauce or sauce verte.

Sole fritots

Cut some sole fillets in two (or four if large gillnets) and prepare as for frogs-leg fritots. Serve with a flavoured mayonnaise sauce, for example with grated lemon zest and chopped capers.

FRITTER.

A preparation consisting of a piece of cooked or raw food coated in batter and fried in deep fat or oil. Other types of fritter can be made using choux paste, yeast dough or waffle batter. Some believe that fritters were of Saracen origin and were brought back by the Crusaders. They are served, according to their ingredients as in hors d'oeuvre, a main course or a dessert, almost always hot and dusted with fine salt or sugar.

When cooking fritters, plenty of oil must always be used because the fritters drop to the bottom of the pan when they are placed in the oil and then rise to the surface as the heat cooks the batter. Fritters should be turned halfway through cooking. The temperature of the oil is usually moderate but can vary considerably according to the type of batter used, whether the food coated in the batter is raw or cooked, and whether the fritter is sweet or savoury.

The principle of the fritter is simple, but the dishes vary enormously in shape and taste and range from regional specialties to classical dishes.

- Fritters made with batter. Some foods containing a large amount of water must be coated with batter for making fritters. Raw ingredients are cut small so they cook quickly; ready-cooked ingredients may or may not be marinated. Savoury fritters (made with vegetables, fish or cheese) are served as an hors d'oeuvre, a main course (sometimes with a sauce) or as a cocktail snack, such as prawn (shrimp) fritters.

Sweet fritters are made with fruit or flowers. The best known of the former are apple fritters, but they can also be made with bananas and apricots. Flower fritters were very popular in the Middle Ages, using violets, elderflowers and lilies; today mimosa flowers, elderflowers and marrow (squash) flowers are practically the only ones still used. Sweet fritters can also be prepared with a cold cream sauce, cold rice pudding or semolina cut into squares or rectangles and coated in batter.

Fritters made with choux paste. Fritters made using sweet or savoury choux paste are known as soufflé fritters and are usually called beignets (French for fritters); they are served as hors d'oeuvre or desserts. In savoury recipes, the pastry can be flavoured with grated cheese, diced ham and almonds. Sweet choux paste gives a basic sweet fritter.

Fritters made with yeast dough. These fritters are made of sweet dough rounds. Sometimes filled with jam, plunged into boiling oil. When puffed and golden they are removed from the oil and dusted with sugar.

Fritters made with waffle batter. Fritters made of waffle batter are moulded in long-handled waffle irons of various shapes (stars, boats, hearts, roses). In France they are mostly used for decoration, but in the USA they are served for breakfast or as a dessert, often with maple syrup.

Fritters are among the most ancient and wide-spread of regional dishes. Made of special flavoured dough, they are often associated with traditional celebrations. For instance, bagnes from Lyons, merveilles and orellettes from Montpellier, eugnons from Berry, bignes from Auvergne, roussettes from Strasbourg, fourtesseaux from Anjou and bottereaux from Nantes.

Recipes

Fritter batter (1)

Sift 250 g (9 oz 2 1/2 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour into a bowl. Heat 200 ml (7 fl oz. 3/4 cup) water until just lukewarm. Make a well in the flour and add 150 ml (1/4 pint, 2/3 cup) beer, the warm water and a generous pinch of salt to the middle of it. Mix, drawing the flour from the sides to the center of the well. Add 2 tablespoons groundnut (peanut) oil and mix. Leave to rest for 1 hour if possible. When required for use, stiffly beat 2 to 3 egg whites and fold into the batter. Do not stir or beat. For sweet fritters, flavour the batter with Calvados, Cognac or rum. The batter may also be sweetened with 1 1/2 tablespoons sugar and the oil replaced with the same amount of melted butter.

Fritter batter (2)

Put 250 g (9 oz. 2 1/4 cups) sifted plain (all-purpose) flour in a mixing bowl. Make a well in the center and add 1 teaspoon salt, 2 whole eggs and 300 ml (1 1/2 pint, 1 1/4 cup) groundnut (peanut) oil. Whisk the eggs and oil together, incorporating a little of the flour. Add 250 ml (8 fl. Oz, 1 cup) beer and, stirring well, gradually incorporate the rest of the flour. Allow to stand for about 1 hour. A few minutes before using the batter, whisk 3 egg whites stiffly and fold into the batter using a wooden spoon or rubber spatula.

Savoury Fritters Anchovy fritters

Soak anchovy fillets in milk to remove all the salt. Mix together with a fork (or in a blender) some hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg yolk, a little butter and some chopped parsley. Spread the mixture on the anchovy fillets and roll up. Dip in batter, deep-fry in hot oil and serve with fried parsley.

Artichoke fritters

Trim some small, young globe artichokes (harvested before their chokes have formed) Blanch for 5 minutes until just tender, then drain and cut each one into four. Sprinkle with plenty of lemon juice and a little oil, season with salt and pepper and leave to marinate for 30 minutes. Drain dip in batter, deep-fry in hot oil, drain and serve on a napkin. (Brussels sprout fritters are prepared in the same way).

Ambergine fritters

Peel some aubergines (eggplants), slice them and marinate for 1 hour in oil, lemon juice, chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Continue as for anchovy fritters. The same methods may be used for broccoli, cardoons, celery, celeriac (celery root), courgettes (zucchini), cauliflower, marrow (squash) flowers, salsify, tomatoes and Jerusalem artichokes.

Gernese fritters

Cut some Gruyere cheese into rounds 6 cm (2 1/2 in) in diameter. Chop some ham and add to a thick béchamel sauce; spread on the Gruyere rounds and sandwich the rounds together in pairs. Dip in batter and continue as for anchovy fritters.

Cheese fritters (1)

Cut some Gruyere or Comte cheese into 5 cm (2 in) squares about 4 cm (1 1/2 in) thick. Dip in batter and continue as for anchovy fritters. Serve with highly seasoned tomato sauce.

Cheese fritters (2)

Add grated cheese (Gruyere or Parmesan), chopped parsley and pepper to a thick bechamel sauce. Allow to cool completely. Divide into 25 g (1 oz) portions and roll into balls. Dip in batter and continue as for anchovy fritters.

Chicken liver fritters

Remove the gall from the chicken livers (if present) and marinate for 30 minutes in oil seasoned with salt, pepper and chopped herbs to taste. Then dry and dip in batter. Continue as for anchovy fritters.

Lamb's or calf's brain fritters

Poach the brains in stock. Slice them and marinate in oil, chopped parsley and lemon juice. Dip in batter and continue as for anchovy fritters.

Mushroom fritters

Wash some small, fresh, tightly closed button mushrooms. Pat dry and coat with flour. Dip in batter and continue as for anchovy fritters. They can be served with a highly seasoned tomato sauce.

Salsify fritters

Cut some cooked salsifies into short lengths. Dry, dip in flour and then in batter. Continue as for anchovy fritters. These fritters make a particularly good accompaniment to roast beet, pork or veal.

Scampi fritters.

Shell cooked scampi tails (discarding the heads) and marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice and cayenne pepper. Dip in batter and continue as for anchovy fritters.

Soft roc fritters

Poach some soft roes (herring, carp or mackerel, for example) in fish stock, drain and marinate for 30 minutes in oil, lemon juice and cayenne pepper. Dip in batter and continue as for anchovy fritters.

Souffle fritters

Prepare 250 g (9 oz) unsweetened choux paste. Using a spoon, divide the paste into small balls the size of a walnut. Plunge into hot oil until the fritters are puffed and golden. Drain on a cloth and arrange in a heap on a napkin. The following are some alternative recipes for soufflé fritters.

- with anchovies. Add 2 tablespoons finely chopped anchovy fillets (previously soaked in milk) to the choux paste.
- A la hongroise. Add 3 tablespoons onions lightly fried in butter and seasoned with paprika to the paste.
- With cheese. Add 50 g (2 oz, 1/2 cup) grated cheese (preferably Parmesan) seasoned with a little nutmeg to the paste.
- A la toscane. Add a little cooked lean ham and a little chopped white truffle to the paste.

Sweet Fritters apple fritters

Core the apples with an apple corer, peel and cut-into rounds about 3 mm (1/2 in) thick. Sprinkle with lemon juice and macerate for 30 minutes in Cognac or Calvados. Drain, dip in batter and continue as for apricot fritters.

Apricot fritters

Stone (pit) some ripe apricots and macerate for 30 minutes in sugar and rum (or kirsch or Cognac). Drain thoroughly, dip in sweetened or unsweetened batter and deep-fry in hot oil. Remove the fritters and drain. Dust with caster (superfine) sugar and arrange on a napkin. Fritters may also be served dusted with icing (confectioner's) sugar and glazed in a hot oven or under a grill (broiler)

Banan fritters

Peel some bananas and cut in half lengthways. Macerate for 1 hour in white or dark rum with sugar. Dip in batter and deep-fry in hot oil. Drain and continue as for apricot fritters.

Dauphine (or Viennese) fritters

Sift 500 g (1 lb. 2 oz., 4 1/2 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour. Set aside three-quarters of the flour, place the remaining quarter in a bowl and make a well in the center. Put 20 g (2/3 oz) fresh yeast (1 1/2 cakes compressed yeast) in the well and stir with a little warm milk or water. Then add enough warm water so that the mixture can be kneaded into a softish dough. Shape the dough into a ball, make a cross in the top with a knife, cover and leave in a warm place.

Make a well in the remaining flour on the table. Put 4 eggs and 2 tablespoons warm water in the centre of the well and work together to form a dough, pounding it several times. Dissolve 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) sugar and 15 g (1/2 oz) salt in a very small quantity of water and add to the dough. Soften 200 g (7 oz, 1 cup) butter and work this into the dough. Then add 2 eggs, one at a time, working the dough continuously. Pound several times, then flatten out on the table and put the yeast dough in the centre. Mix both doughs together, kneading well. Put in a bowl, cover with a cloth and leave in a warm place to rise for 5-6 hours. Knead the dough again and leave, covered, in a cool place until required.

Divide the dough in half and roll each piece out to a thickness of 5 mm (¼ in) On one half, arrange at regular intervals small blobs of apricot jam, not more than 4 cm (1 ½ in) in diameter. Moisten the dough around each blob of jam with water and cover the other piece of dough. Press down well between the jam to stick the dough together and cut with a plain 5 cm (2 in) diameter pastry (cookie) cutter.

Spread a cloth on a plate. Dust with flour and arrange the fritters on the cloth. Allow to rise for 30 minutes and then deep fry the fritters in oil at 180 °C(356 °F) When they have puffed and are light golden on one side, turn and cook the other side. Drain the fritters. Arrange on a napkin and dust with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

Elderflower fritters with honey

Put 250 g(9 oz. 2 ¼ cups) plain (all-purpose) flour into a mixing bowl. Make a well in the centre and add 1 teaspoon salt, 4 teaspoons sugar and 4 egg yolks. Very gently incorporate 325 ml (11 ft. oz. 1 ½ cups) light beer to make a smooth dough, but without working it. Allow to rest for 1 hour in a cool place. Heat oil in a deep-fryer to 180 °C(356 °F) Whisk 4 egg whites until stiff and fold into the mixture very carefully. Dip the flowers of 24 racemes of elder-flower into the mixture, holding them by the stem. Turn them between the fingers to remove excess dough and fry them head downwards. Drain on paper towels. Sprinkle the fritters with icing (confectioner's) sugar and pour a little acacia honey over them. Serve hot.

Fig fritters

Peel and quarter some figs and macerate for 30 minutes in brandy (or liqueur) and sugar. Dip in batter and continue as for apricot fritters.

Nanette fritters

Cut a stale brioche into round slices. Prepare a confectioner's custard (pastry cream) and add to it some chopped crystallized (candied) fruit which has been macerated in kirsch or rum. Spread a little of this mixture on each slice of brioche and sandwich together in pairs. Moisten with a little sugar syrup favored with kirsch or rum. Dip in batter and continue as for apricot fritters.

Pineapple fritters

Slice a peeled fresh pineapple (or use canned pineapple). Sprinkle the slices with caster (superfine) sugar and kirsch or rum and macerate for 30 minutes. Continue as for apricot fritters.

Rice fritters

Prepare a thick rice pudding. Spread in layer 1.5 cm (½ -3/4 in) thick and allow to cool completely. Cut into small squares, rectangles or lozenges. Dip in batter and continue as for apricot fritters.

Semolina fritters

Add some small raisins soaked in rum to thick semolina pudding and proceed as for rice fritters. Semolina and rice fritters may also be made of two rounds of the chilled mixture spread with confectioner's custard (pastry cream) and sandwiched tightly together.

FRITTO MISTO An Italian speciality (meaning literally fried mixture) made from an assortment of savoury fritters, sliced chicken calves brains or sweetbreads, chicken livers, cauliflower, asparagus tips, artichoke hearts, rice or macaroni croquettes. The ingredients are sometimes marinated, then dipped in a light batter and plunged into very hot deep fat. They are served hot, with lemon quarters, and sometimes accompanied by very small marinated veal escalopes (scallops) coated in breadcrumbs and sauteed in butter. Fritto misto may use an assortment of seafood and fish.

FRIULI The region is situated in the north of Italy, bordering Austria and Slovenia, and the wines reflect the melange of cultural influences with a wealth of different grape varieties planted. Mainly white wines are produced in a crisp, dry fruity style.

FROG A web footed amphibian found in damp marshland or alongside ponds and streams. Certain species are edible but only the leg meat. Frogs legs were regarded as a tasty dish in the Middle Ages, particularly during Lent. In France two main species are found the green or common frog, and the rusty or mute frog (so called because the male has no larynx) The green frog has three dark bands on its back and is considered to taste better. The draining of marshlands has considerably reduced its numbers, but it can still be found in the Dombes (hence its fame in Lyonnais gastronomy) in Auvergne Sologne, Brittany and Alsace. The rusty or mute frog is darker and only approaches the water to mate. It generally inhabits cool places, not necessarily near water. Its flesh is rather less delicate than that of the common frog.

Most of the frogs eaten in France are imported from central Europe and Yugoslavia. They tend to be larger and have more meat than the local species. Frozen frogs legs, from bullfrogs, are also imported from Cuba or the United States. These are nearly as big as the legs of guinea fowl but they have very little flavour.

The delicate flavour of the meat is enhanced by seasoning, and frogs legs are often prepared with herbs, garlic and chopped parsley. They are also made into blanquettes, soups, omelettes and incuselines, and can be fried or sauteed. The most highly regarded recipes come from Lyons, Alsace and Poitou. The Menagiere de Paris contained recipes for cooking them in soups and in the pie.

Frogs legs are also eaten in Germany and Italy but they have usually filled the British with disgust. When Escoffier was chef of the Carlton Hotel in London, he managed to have them accepted at the table of the Prince of Wales by calling them cuisse de nymphes aurore.

RECIPES

Preparation

Skin the frogs by slitting the skin at the neck and pulling it back. Cut the backbone so that the legs are still joined to it and can be cooked in pairs. Cut off the feet. Skewer the legs and soak them in very cold water. Change the water 3 or 4 times over a period of 12 hours, so that the flesh softens and swells. Dry the legs and cook them according to the recipe. Usually 3 pairs per serving are allowed.

Brochettes of Frogs legs

Marinate the frogs legs for at least 2 hours in a mixture of olive oil, lemon juice, grated garlic, finely chopped parsley and a pinch each of cayenne pepper, powdered bay leaf, salt and pepper. Drain dry and thread them on to skewers. Fry for 7-10 minutes in the oil in which they were marinated, or grill (broil) them gently for 15-20 minutes. Test with a fork to see if they are cooked. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve very hot garnished with slices of lemon.

Fried frogs legs

Season the prepared frogs legs with salt and pepper and dip them in flour (or in egg and breadcrumbs) Saute them in butter or olive oil in a shallow frying pan for 7-10 minutes over a brisk heat. Drain and arrange in a heated serving dish. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and lemon juice. If they were cooked in butter, pour it over them, otherwise use matre d'hotel butter. Serve with boiled potatoes.

Frogs legs ala lyonnaise

Prepare the frogs legs and saute them in butter as for fried frogs legs. Add 2 tablespoons finely chopped onion to the frying pan and brown the ingredients. (A finely chopped shallot may be added to the onions.) Arrange on a heated serving dish and sprinkle with chopped parsley and vinegar.

Frogs legs a la meuniere

Prepare the frogs legs season with salt and pepper and dip them in flour. Saute them in butter for 7-10 minutes over a brisk heat. Place in a timbale dish and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Keep hot. Heat some butter in the saute pan until it turns brown, add the juice of half a lemon and, if necessary, a little fresh butter. Pour this over the frogs legs and serve immediately.

Frogs legs with garlic puree and parsley juice

Remove the stalks from 100 g (4 oz. 2 cups) parsley and wash. Cook for 3 minutes in boiling water, leave to cool and then puree in a blender. Poach the cloves of 4 heads of garlic for 2 minutes in boiling water seasoned with salt. Remove the garlic from the water, peel and return to the boiling water to cook for another 7-8 minutes. Repeat 6-7 times until the garlic is soft. Puree the garlic in a blender and put in a casserole with 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) milk. Season with salt and pepper. Season the frogs legs with salt and pepper. Heat some olive oil and a knob of butter and fry the frogs legs for 2-3 minutes until golden. Heat the parsley puree with 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) water. Drain the frogs legs on paper towels. Pour the parsley sauce into a warm serving dish. Arrange the garlic puree in the middle and surround with the frogs legs.

FROMAGE DES PYRENEES Uncooked pressed cow's milk cheese (50% fat) with a naturally brushed crust, made in Ariège, Béarn and the Basque country. It is drum shaped, 30 cm (12 in) in diameter and 10 cm (4 in) thick weighing 3.5-4.5 kg (7 ¾ -10 lb) A supple, cheese prickled with little holes, it has a slightly acid taste. Fromage des Pyrenées can also be made from sheep's milk using the same method.

FROMAGE FRAIS The French term for unripened fresh cheese. Made from whole or skimmed milk fromage frais has a thick creamy consistency. Depending on its fat content, it can be rich and creamy or very light and slightly tangy in flavour. It is used in sweet or savoury dishes, in dips and salad dressing to make ourec a la crème, with fruit or fruit preserves to make simple desserts, or plain as a dessert topping.

FROMAGE GLACE A cone shaped ice cream of the 18th and early 19th century. They originally consisted simply of ice cream in various flavours, but later became what we now call bombes. At that time, the name fromage (cheese) was used not only for fermented milk products but for all preparations based on milk, cream and sugar, provided they were shaped in a mould, thus a Bavarian cream was known as a fromage bavarois. Grimé de la Reynière stated that it was in error that this name is given to all sorts of ice cream made in large quantities in moulds. Whatever one calls them, however, these fluted iced cheeses are the most beautiful ornamental desserts. They have the advantage over ice cream served in sundae dishes that they keep longer without melting, and they are better than slabs of ice cream because they are softer.

Among the fromages glaces popular during the Second Empire were fromage a la italienne (flavoured with lemon marmalade and orange blossom) fromage de parmesan (with cinnamon and cloves, poured into a mould and sprinkled with grated Parmesan) and fromage a la chantilly (with whipped cream and citron peel)

FROMENT A French term for various types of wheat soft, hard and spelt. In cookery, the word froment is used in preference to ble to avoid any confusion with buckwheat, commonly known as ble noir (black wheat) Fine fleur de fromenti traditionally denotes a superior quality flour used for baking.

FROMENT A French term for various types of wheat soft, hard and spelt. In cookery, the word froment is used in preference to ble to avoid any confusion with buckwheat, commonly known as ble noir (black wheat) Fine fleur de froment (fine wheaten flour) traditionally denotes a superior quality flour used for baking.

FRONSAC Fruity and well rounded AOC red wine from Libournais. The appellation canon fronsee is limited to the communes of Fronsac and Stint Michel de Fronsac FRONTIGNAN A vin doux naturel made from the Muscat Blanc a Petits Grains grape grown around the town of Fronignan in the Herault. Very popular at one time as Frontigna or Frontinlac.

FRONTON AOC red and sometimes rose, supple fruity and with little tannin, made from the Negrette grape on a plateau between the Tarn and Garonne rivers.

FROST To shake some ice cubes in an empty glass so that an opaque mist forms on the sides of the glass before a cocktail or a fruit based spirit is poured in Alternatively, a glass is frosted by moistening the rim with lemon juice or egg white then dipping it upside down in caster (superfine) sugar chocolate powder or vanilla sugar.

Frosted fruit is whole pieces or cluster of fruit brushed with egg white or lemon juice, then dusted with caster sugar.

Frosted fruit is whole pieces or clusters of fruit brushed with egg white or lemon juice, then dusted with caster sugar.

FROSTING The American term for icing used as a noun to describe the mixture applied as a cake covering and filling, and as a verb to describe the process of applying it. Frosting covers soft icing and cake fillings, such as buttercream, chocolate icing, or glaze icing, but not royal icing which is known by the same name. Outside America, the soft cake covering and filling made by whisking sugar syrup into egg whites is usually called American frosting. The quick version, made by whisking egg whites and sugar over hot water, is seven minute frosting.

Frosting is also term for applying sugar coating to fruit or mint leaves by first brushing them with egg white or water, then sprinkling with caster (superfine) sugar and allowing to set. The rims of drinking glasses are also frosted with sugar for some cocktails. Frosting also describes the way chilled glasses become cloudy when removed from the refrigerator or freezer.

RECIPES

American frosting

Make a sugar syrup using 225 g (8 oz. Generous 1 cup) sugar and 5 tablespoons water. Bring to the boil and cook until the syrup reaches 121 °C (250 °F) Meanwhile use an electric beater to whisk 2 egg whites and a pinch of cream of tartar until stiff in a heatproof bowl over a saucepan of hot, not boiling water. Remove the syrup from the heat. Whisking continuously pour the syrup into the egg whites in a slow, steady stream. Whisk in ½ teaspoon natural vanilla essence (extract) Remove from the heat and cool slightly, then spread the frosting over the cake.

Quick frosting

Place 225 g (8 oz. Generous 1 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, 3 tablespoons water, 2 egg whites and a pinch of cream of tartar in a heatproof bowl. Using an electric beater, whisk the mixture over a pan of water that is barely simmering, not boiling for 5 minutes, until the mixture will begin to cook on the hot bowl . Remove the bowl from the pan and add ½ teaspoon natural vanilla essence (extract). Whisk for 2 minutes, then use immediately.

FRUIT Botanically speaking the fruit is the part of the plant that develops from the ovary of the flower and contains the seeds. This definition covers not only the sweet fleshy fruits but also certain vegetables courgette (zucchini) aubergines (eggplants), cucumbers and nuts.

Fruit can be divided into three main groups.

Fleshy fruits with a high water content (up to 90%) These include citrus fruits, pears, pineapples, apples, peaches, mangoes and strawberries.

Fleshy fruits with a high sugar content. These includes dates and dried fruits.

Dry fruits with a high fat contents and low water content. These include nuts (walnuts, hazelnuts, almonds) and are usually considered in a separate category.

Exotic fruit. The term covers a wide variety of fruit and includes many that are now familiar, such as mango, kiwi, papaya, passion fruit and lychee. Others are still sporadic in availability and not widely used either as dessert fruit or in cooking. These fruit vary widely in appearance, texture flavour and culinary characteristics.

Desserts. Raw fruit for dessert should always be sound and just ripe. Fresh fruit can also be served chilled flamed with rice, somolina or soft cheese, in fritters or kebabs, or baked (apples bonne femme, apricot meringue). Fruit is also used for a wide range of mousses, creams, ice creams, sorbets, charlotte, souffles, jellies, pies and tarts. Finally diced fruit can be used in omelettes, pancakes and puddings and as a sauce or puree to accompany ice creams and desserts.

Preserving fruit. Various preservation methods are used for fleshy fruit, depending on the type. Many fruits can be sterilized and then preserved in bottle or jars. This method does not alter the vitamins content very much but the mineral content may be affected. Fruits preserved in this way may be used for a wide range of mousses, creams, ice creams, sorbets, charlotte, souffles, jellies, pies and tarts. Finally, diced fruit can be used in omelettes, pancakes and puddings and as a sauce or puree to accompany ice creams and desserts.

Fruit in cookery. Fruit can be used for making jam, marmalade, compotes and jellies, as well as for drinks, either alcoholic or non alcoholic fruits ulcers. Natural fruit extracts are used in confectionery, baking dairy products and drinks.

Although fruit is mostly used in sweet preparations, it also goes well with meat, fish, poultry or vegetables. Apart from lemon, the following fruits can be used in cooking pineapples and bananas with game and turkey, figs with cured ham and partridge grapefruit with crab and fish, cherries with duck and game, quince with taffines, mango with beef, orange with duck and calf's liver grapes with quail and fish, prunes with rabbit and pork, and apple with black pudding and red cabbage.

RECIPES

Fondant coated or marquise cherries

Thoroughly drain about 50 cherries (complete with their stalks) preserved in brandy or eau-de-vie. Pat dry, removing any excess liquid. Put 375g (13 oz) fondant into a small heavy based saucepan and heat rapidly, adding 4 tablespoons kirsch, mix well with a wooden spatula. When the fondant is liquid, remove from the heat and incorporate 3-4 drops of red food colouring, mixing briskly. Hold each cherry by the stalk and dip it in the fondant, let any excess drip back into the saucepan. Then lay the cherries on a work surface or marble slab sprinkled lightly with icing (confectioner's) sugar to prevent the fruit from sticking. Transfer each cherry to a small paper case.

Alternatively, add colouring to only half the fondant, to give 25 pink and 25 white cherries. (The same method can be used for large blackcurrants preserved in brandy use pink fondant).

Fruit brochettes en papillotes

Peel some orange, remove the pith and seeds, and cut the segments into pieces, peel some pears, apple, and bananas, cut into cubes or slices and sprinkle with lemon juice, cut some fresh or canned pineapple into cubes. Macerate all these ingredients for 30 minutes with some sugar to taste and liqueur or spirit (Curacao, brandy, rum or Grand Marnier) then thread the pieces on to small skewers, mixing the various fruits. Lay each skewer on a piece of lightly buttered foil or greaseproof paper and dot the fruit with small pieces of butter. Wrap the brochettes in the foil or paper, lay them on the shelf (rack) in a preheated oven at 240 °C (474 °F, gas 9) and cook for about 15 minutes. Serve the brochettes in their wrapping. To microwave, use buttered greaseproof paper and cook the brochettes for about 3 minutes on full power.

Glace cherries filled with almond paste.

Prepare some almond paste with (125 g 4 ½ oz, 1 cup) ground almonds, 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) sugar, 4 tablespoons glucose powder, 5 tablespoons water and some kirsch. Split 50 glace (candied) cherries in half, but without separating the halves completely. Shape the almond paste into small balls and insert one into each cherry. Serve on a tray sprinkled with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

FRUIT GIVRE A dessert consisting of a hollowedout fruit skin filled with ice cream, sorbet or iced soeffle made with the flesh of the fruit.This method is particularly suitable for citrus fruit (such as oranges, lemons or tangerine) pineapple, melon and persianmon.

FRUITIER During the Ancien Regime, the member of the royal household charged with supervising the supply of fruit, as well as tapes and candles.

FRUIT JUICE The liquid extracted a fruit by pressure or by certrifugal force. Fruit juice is a refreshing drink, often rich in vitamins, which can be drunk plain or diluted with water or soda water. Concentrated fruit juices have been developed, either in liquid form or in crystals, which can be diluted to taste. The fruit juices most widely consumed are apple, grape, orange, grapefruit, mango, pineapple and tomato. For fruits that are more fleshy (apricots, mangoes, pears) or more acid (gooseberry, blackcurant raspberry) the juices have a larger proportion of added water and sugar.

Fruit juices are used mainly as drinks but they are also used to make ices and sorbets, as well as in more general cooking.Lemon juice has its special uses, in many diets, natural fruit juices are complemented by vegetable juices served as nonalcoholic aperitifs.

RECIPES

Fermented cherry juice

Remove the stones (pits) from 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) red cherries and 100 g (4 oz) black cherries. Press the fruit into a sieve placed over a mixing bowl, crushing then hard, put the crushed pulp in a fruit press to extract all the juice, then add this to the juice in the bow and leave to ferment at a temperature of 12-15 °C (54-59 °F) until the juice is no longer cloudy (about 24 hours) Strain through muslin (cheesecloth) or a jelly bag then add 450g (1 lb. 2 cups) caster (superfine) sugar to every 600 ml (1 pint 2 ½ cups) juice. Stir until dissolved, strain again, bottle and seal.

Raspberry, gooseberry or blackberry fermented juices is prepared in the same way.

FRUIT PASTE A confectionery item made with fruit pulp sugar and pectin. It is prepared in a similar way to jam, but is a much drier mixture. The fruit pulp represents 50% of the finished product (40% for quinces and citrus fruits) In industrially manufactured fruit paste, this pulp usually consists of one third apricot pulp, one third apple pulp and one third pulp of the fruit that give its name to the paste, usually with a flavouring and sometimes a colouring. The pulp is cooked with sugar, glucose syrup and pectin, then flavoured, coloured and poured into moulds of starch (or on to trays to be cut into shapes later) After 12-24 hours the fruit pastes are turned out, brushed if they have been moulded in starch) and dried, then relied in caster (superfine) sugar or icing (confectioner's) sugar. They are stored at a moderate temperature in a slightly humid atmosphere.

Certain French regional specialities have a basis of fruit paste. Vosges apricots Dijon cassissines Auvergne and Dauphine mulberries.

RECIPES

Apple paste

Peel and core some good dessert (eating) apples. Put them in a pan with about 750 ml (1 ¼ pints, 3 ¼ cups) per 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) apples and cook, turning them over occasionally with a wooden spoon, until they are soft.. Remove the apples and put them in a sieve over a bowl. When they are cold, press them through the sieve and reduce the pulp by half over the heat. Pour the thick pulp into a glazed earthenware dish or a terrine. Make a syrup with the same quantity of sugar, cook it to the soft ball stage, take the pan off the heat and pour in the apple pulp. Stir well over a low heat with the mixture gently bubbling, until the bottom of the pan can be seen. Pour into a mould (as for apricot paste).

Apricot paste

Stone (pit) some very ripe apricots, put them in a pan, just cover them with water and bring to the boil. Drain and peel the fruits, then pass them through a vegetable mill. Weigh the pulp obtained,. For 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) pulp, weigh 1.1 – 1.2 kg (2 ½ - 2 ¾ lb) caster (superfine) sugar. Mix 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) of this sugar with 60 g (2 oz. ½ cup) powdered gelatine. Pour the pulp into a heavy based saucepan and bring to the boil. Add the sugar gelatine mixture and bring back to the boil, stirring with a wooden frame, specially for making fruit paste. Pour the paste inside the frame smooth the surface and leave to cool completely (about 2 hours) Then cut the paste out into squares or rectangles, roll them in caster sugar and store them in an airtight tin, separating the layers with grease proof paper.

Cherry paste

Stalk and stone (pit) the cherries and put them through a vegetable mill. Prepare as for apricot paste but use equal weights of sugar and cherry pulp and 65 g (2 ½ oz, 2 ½ tablespoons) powdered gelatine per 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) pulp.

Plum paste

Use ripe plums or greengages and the same procedure as for apricot paste.

Quince paste

Peel 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) quinces, seed and cut into pieces. Put in a saucepan with 150 ml (¼ pint, 2/3 cup) water and cook until the fruit is reduced to a puree. Strain through a vegetable mill using the disc with medium sized holes. Return the puree to the pan. Add 1.25 kg (2 ¼ lb) sugar and cook for about 45 minutes, until the mixture comes away from the bottom of the pan. Stir continuously to make sure the mixture does not stick. Pour the mixture into a frame placed on a marble slab coated with granulated sugar. The next day, when the quince paste is very cool, cut into pieces. Dip into granulated sugar and leave to dry.

Strawberry paste

Wash and hull the strawberries and put them through a vegetable mill. Use equal weights of sugar and strawberry pulp and 65 g (2 ¼ lb) pulp. Prepare as for apricot paste but note that the brisk boiling stage should last only 5 minutes.

FRUIT SALAD A dessert consisting of pieces of sliced or chopped fruit or whole small fruit( such as grapes) stored (pitted) and peeled if necessary macerated in sugar and often in alcohol (sweet wine or liqueur) and served in a fruit dish. Traditionally a syrup was used to coat the fruit, but fruit salads are often served unsweetened, moistened with fruit juice. The dish is placed on crushed ice or chilled and the fruit, salad may be served with cream or ice cream.

The fruit used varies according to the season, sometimes exotic fruit are used, such as lychees, kiwi fruit, mangoes, or passion fruit. The fruit can be raw, poached and cooled, or dried, soaked and poached. Canned fruit can also be used (in this case the fruit juice or syrup is used instead of sugar) and crystallized (candied) or dried fruit can be used as decoration.

RECIPES

Exotic fruit salad with lime

Peel a very ripe pineapple and dice the flesh. Peel and stone (pit) 3 mangoes, cut the flesh into strips. Peel 3 bananas, slice them and roll (but do not soak) the slices in the juice of a lime. Put all these ingredients in a bowl, sprinkle with 3-4 tablespoons sugar and chill for at least 3 hours before serving.

Fruit Salad a la maltaise

Macerate an assortment of sliced bananas, stoned (pitted) cherries and cubes of fresh pineapple in a mixture of Curacao and sugar. Chill. Put a layer of orange flavoured ice cream in the bottom of glass fruit bowl, arrange the drained fruit on top. Decorate with whipped cream and peeled orange segments. Alternatively, the ice cream can be omitted and orange juice mixed with Curacao poured over.

Fruit salad a la normande

Peel and core a pineapple and cut the flesh into cubes. Peel and slice some bananas. Peel and core some apples, cut them into cubes and sprinkle with lemon juice. Macerate all the fruit in some Calvados mixed with sugar. Chill. Arrange the fruit in a glass bowl and pour the fruit liquid over it. Cover with single (light) or Chantilly cream.

Fruit salad a l'occitaninne

Peel and core some pears, slice thickly and sprinkle with lemon juice. Peel and slice some figs. Peel some large black and white grapes. Arrange the ingredients in layers in a glass bowl, sprinkle with sugar and pour over some Blanquette de Limoux (sparkling white wine) and a little brandy. Chill for at least 1 hour. Cover with Chantilly cream and decorate with peeled grapes.

FRUIT STONER (PITTER) A special utensil designed to remove the stones (pits) from certain fruits particularly cherries and olive, without spoiling the flesh it is a type of pincers with a cupshaped depression at the end of one arm in which the fruit is held and a short rod at the end of the other arm that acts as a pusher and inserts itself in the fruit. When the pincers are squeezed together, the stone is pushed out. The stones are removed from olives before stuffing them. A type of cherry stoner with a receptacle for catching the stones is quicker and more efficient to use.

FRUMENTY A very old country dish, consisting of a porridge or gruel made from wheat boiled with milk, then sweetened and spiced. Originating in Touraine it is mentioned as a dessert in Le Menagier de Paris (1383) being made with milk in which almonds have been boiled to give flavour and served either warm and semi-liquid or cold and set.

In the Berry region, frumenty was made with water and served with butter or fresh cream.

FRYING Cooking food in hot fat, Different types of fat may be used, including lard, dripping, butter or oil. Fat can be heated to a far higher temperature than water so this is often a fierce cooking method. The type of amount of fat used depends on the particular method and the result required. The minimum fat can be used to prevent food from sucking to the pan, a shallow layer can be used or the food can be submerged in fat. When the minimum of fat is used it may form the base for a sauce or in the case of butter or olive oil, it may be used to dress the cooked food.

FRYING PAN (SKILLET) A round or oval shallow pan with a long handle, used for frying or sauteeing food. The French word pode comes from the Latin patella, meaning a small dish. Meat, fish vegetables, eggs and various mixrure (croquettes, omelettes, pancakes) may be sauteed or fried. The classic frying pan, made of steel with a mart black finish, is thick and heavy so that it does not buckle and food does not burn. To prevent it from rusting, it must be dried thoroughly after cleaning and lightly oiled using a cloth pad or paper towels.

There is now a wide choice of pans and finishes. Many people prefer lighter pans because they are easier to work with and maintain, pans of glazed aluminium with a ceramic interior are light and good conductors of heat.

FUDGE A very soft caramel that melts in the mouth and is not sticky. It originated in the 19th century from an error made during the manufacture of normal toffee, when the sugar recrystallized. It can be flavoured with fruit, nuts, chocolate, or coffee, and is cut into squares when cold.

RECIPE

Vanilla fudge

Heat 150 g (5 oz) unsweetened condensed milk and 1 vanilla pod (bean) in a large heavy based saucepan. Add 400 g (14 oz, 1 ³/₄ cups) caster (superfine) sugar, 65 g (2 ¹/₂ oz, 5 tablespoons) butter and 1 teaspoon vinegar. Bring slowly to the boiled stirring all the time. Cover and simmer over a low heat for 2 minutes then remove the vanilla pod and cook until the mixture starts to form a plabble fall. Place the bottom of the pan in cold water and heat until the mixture thickens, lightens in colour and loses its shine. Pour immediately on to a marble work surface or a greased baking sheer. Smooth over with a rolling pin and cut the fudge into pieces before it has completely cooked.

FUFU Also called fonfou or fontou a traditional starchy African savoury pudding or thick poridge. Fufu may be made from vegetables, such as cassava, yam, sweet potato and or plantain a flour or meal ground from root vegetables or corn (maize) or rice. The starchy ingredient is cooked in water to make a smooth, thick porridge or mixture as thick as a dough which can be shaped in a dish. Fufu is served as an accompaniment to rich and spicy fish, meat and/ or vegetable stews or soups .

FUGU Japanese name for a fish of the Tetraodontidae family, also called blowfish or puffer. The species valued in Japan is notorious for its poisonous liver and other innards. The fish has to be prepared with skill to avoid contaminating the edible flesh with poisons from the internal organs. Chef's are specially trained in the preparation of fugu and only those who are qualified are allowed to prepare the fish, which is served in licensed restaurants. The excitement of possibly dicing with death by eating the fish is one of the reasons for its popularity (deaths are occasionally recorded as a result of preparation by unqualified home cooks) Fugu is served as sashimi, cut in fine slices. It is also served, simmered, with tofu, and a dipping sauce. The fins are dried, salted and toasted, then used to flavour sake.

There is a related northern swellfish, puffer or blowfish that is not poisonous, found in the North Atlantic.

FULBERT-DUMONTEIL, JEAN CAMILLE French journalist and writer (born v ergi, 1831, died Neuilly sur Siene, 1912) He was the author of numerous articles and about 30 books, starting his career with the Mousquetaire newspaper (owned by Dumas pere) and later moving to Le Figaro. In 1906 he published a collection of articles on gastronomy entitled La France gourmande, which reflect his Belle Epoque spirit and love of food. He chose as his coat of arms truffles and smiles on a field of roses. Besides gastronomy, he was passionately interested in zoology and travel which inspired some flights of lyricism on exotic cookery.

FUL MEDAMES Also known as fowl medames. The name of the Egyptian national dish, and of the type of bean in which it is made, a bean as old as the Pharaohs comes from the same root as ful in Egypt also embraces the dried brown broad bean. But the name is specifically identified with a smallish, squat smooth brown bean, unusual in that the contact point with the pod is on the end. In Egypt it is an important source of nutrition in the average diet. It is eaten throughout the Middle East, commonly seasoned with olive oil, garlic and lemon juice, and eaten with bamine eggs and or bread. Traditionally the beans are long cooked in a pot buried overnight in the fire ashes. As such it is Egypt's national breakfast, and an essential mezze.

FUMET A liquid obtained by reducing a stock or cooking liquid that is added to as sauce or cooking stock to enhance its flavour or give it extra body. Literally meaning aroma, the word fumet is used for concentrated mushroom, and fish stocks, for meat poultry and game stock the word fond is used.

Mushroom fumet The concentrated cooking liquid obtained by boiling cultivated mushrooms in salted, lemon flavoured water with butter, it is used to improve the flavour of some sauces and can be kept, in a well sealed bottle, in the refrigerator or freezer. Truffle fumet can be made by cooking truffle peelings with Madeira and reducing the liquid.

RECIPES

Fish fumet

Crush 2.5 kg (5 ½ lb) bones and trimming of white fish (sole, lemon sole, whiting brill, turbot) Peel and thinly slice 125 g (4 ½ oz, 1 ½ cups) onions and shallots, clean and thinly slice 150 g (5 oz. 1 2/3 cups) mushrooms or mushroom stalks and trimmings, squeeze the juice from half a lemon tie 25 g (1 oz) parsley sprigs into a bundle. Put all the ingredients in a saucepan and add a small spig of thyme, a bay leaf, 1 tablespoon lemon juice and 1 tablespoon coarse sea salt. Moisten with 2.5 litres (4 ¼ pints, 11 cups) water and 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) dry white wine (or red for some recipes) Bring to the boil, then skin and boil very gently for 30 minutes. Strain through muslin (cheesecloth) and leave to cool.

Mushroom fumet

Bring 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) water to the boil with 40 g (1 ½ oz 3 tablespoons) butter, the juice of half a lemon, and 1 teaspoon salt, add 500 g (1 lb 2 oz) cleaned mushrooms to this mixture and leave to boil for about 10 minutes. Remove the mushrooms (which can be used as a garnish) and reduce the cooking liquid by half. This fumet will keep in the refrigerator, covered, until required.

FUNGUS, CHINESE The white fungus has a sponge like texture and is brilliant white in colour. Wood ear (black fungus) is a grey black curly fungus used in soups or chopped up in spring rolls. It is almost flavourless , but retains its texture after cooking.

FUNNEL A utensil for filling bottles or other containers. Generally conical (oval for brandy) with a long narrow stem, funnel are made of glass, stainless steel, tin plate, enamelled metal or plastic. There is sometimes a tap for controlling the flow. An icing funnel has a wooden stick to control the aperture and is used to pour certain types of confectionery into moulds.

FUSION COOKING A term used to describe cooking styles making use of techniques, ingredients and seasoning from Asian and Western cuisines for any one dish. Fusion food, the description often applied to the resulting dishes may consist of European ingredients cut and cooked by a Chinese method, seasoned with Asian or Southeast Asian herbs or spices. Stir frying and steaming are typical cooking methods, noodles dim sum wrappers and Chinese pancakes are versatile ingredients, dipping sauces are likely accompaniments, and salads bring together hot and cold. Western and Oriental vegetables or dressings. Fusion cooking reflects the fashion for meals that are light, but satisfying and full of contrasting flavour and textures. Dishes often have a high proportion of vegetables and a comparatively small amount of fish, meat or poultry, with a small quantity of thin, but full flavoured sauces and dressings.

FUZZY MELON Also called fuzzy squash or hairy melon, this vegetable is used in Chinese and Asian cooking. This long green squash is covered with short hairs, and the peel has to be removed before cooking. The flesh is firm and mild, and it readily takes on the flavour of ingredients with which it is cooked. It is braised with meat or seafood, stir fried in a variety of Chinese dishes or seasoned with curry spices in Indian dishes.

G

GAILLAC Wine from southwestern France produced on both banks of the Tarn from some of the oldest vineyards in France.

The appellation Gaillac applies to white, red and rose wines, White Gaillac can be dry, sweet, sparkling or perle (slightly petillant) and is predominantly made from the Muzac grape. The spicy, full-bodied red wines are mainly produced from the Duras grape.

GALANGAL A spice from India the Far East, obtained from rhizomes of two plants in the ginger family, with orange or whitish pulp and a reddish skin. Both resemble ginger in appearance but have a more aromatic and peppery flavour. The more commonly used greater galangal has white flesh, and is used fresh, dried and ground in Indonesian, Malaysian and Thai cooking. The ground form is also known as Laos powder. Lesser galangal is smaller, has reddish skin and orange flesh and a stronger flavour.

GALANTINE A dish made from lean pieces of poultry, game, pork, veal or rabbit, mixed with a forcemeat containing eggs spices and various other ingredients and pressed into a symmetrical shape. The term is commonly used to describe a homed stuffed bird, in which the trimmings and forcemeat are cooked in an aspic stock and served cold as an entrée, glazed with aspic (the name comes from the old French galantine, meaning 'jelly').

Galantine are sometimes cooked wrapped in a cloth, which gives them a cylindrical shape, they should be, strictly speaking be made with fish, a souppresse of fish, which was cooled under a board with a weight on top was a form of galantine.

Galantine of chicken

Cut the wings tips off a 2 kg. (4 ½ lb) chicken. Slit the bird along the back and, with a small, sharp-pointed knife bone it completely without tearing the flesh. This operation, which at first sight seems awkward, is actually fairly simple: follow the joints of the chicken and work inwards towards the carcass, shaving off the flesh as close to the bone as possible. This separates the carcass from the body of the chicken. Now remove the bones from the legs and wings. Now remove the bones from the legs and wings, still being careful not to tear the skin. Spread out the bird on the table and cut away the breast and the flesh of the thighs and wings, then cut these pieces into squares.

Now prepare the forcemeat finely mince (grind) 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) boned loin of pork and 250 g (9 oz. 1 cup) shoulder of veal. Dice 150 g (5 oz. ¾ cup), fat bacon, 150 g (5 oz. ¾ cup) ham, and 150 g (5 oz. ¾ cup) pickled tongue into 1.5 cm (1/2 in) cubes, mix with the chicken squares. 150 g (5 oz. 1 ¾ cups) blanched pistachios, the minced meat, 2 beaten eggs, 6 tablespoons brandy, salt, pepper and ¾ teaspoons all spice. Wet your hands in order to work this mixture and blend it together shape it into a ball, then into a rectangular block.

To prepare the gelatine, place the block of forcemeat over the central third of chicken and enclose it by folding over the parts of the chicken skin that project at the sides and ends, stretching it without tearing. Soak a coarse linen cloth in water and wring it out, then spread it flat on the table. Place it so that a flap about 25 cm (10 in) wide hangs over the edge of the table. Place galantine lengthways on this cloth, about 10 cm (4 in) from the edge of the table and breast upwards. Wrap the gelatine in the cloth securely. Tie the gelatine with string in 3 places to keep it in shape.

Prepare an aspic stock with 2 partly boned calf's feet, 500 g (18 oz) fresh pork skin, 2 kg (4 ½ lb) knuckle of veal, 2 large sliced carrots, a large onion studded with cloves, 2 shredded leeks, a bouquet garni enriched with celery, 5 litres (8 ½ pints, 5 ½ quarts) white stock, 400 ml (14 fl oz. 1 ¾ cups) Madeira (optional), salt and pepper. Cook the stock for 1 ½ hours, then add the gelatine, bring rapidly to the boil and simmer for 2 ¾-3 hours. Remove the gelatine. Let it stand for 15 minutes before unwrapping it. Remove the cloth, rinse in lukewarm water and wring thoroughly. Spread it on the table and carefully wrap the gelatine in it as before, taking care to keep the slit part of the children underneath. Tie up gelatine. Press it on a slab, covering it with a wooden board with a weight on top. Allow to cool for at least 12 hours; it can be kept for several days if it is stored in a cool place.

The galantine is served garnished with its own clarified aspic jelly.

GALETTE A flat, round cake of variable size. The gelatte probably dates from the Neolithic era, when thick cereal pastes were cooked by spreading them out on hot stones. In ancient times people made galettes from oats, wheat, rye and even barley, sweetened with honey. Then came the hearth cakes of the Middle Ages and all the regional varieties: the gelatte of Correze, made with walnuts or chestnuts; the galette of Roussillon, made with crystallized (candied) fruits, the matzipan gelatte of the Nivernais the cund cheese gelette of the Jura; the puff pastry gelette of Normandy, filled with jam and fresh cream; the famous galette of Pergia, a delicate yeasted pastry, like brioche, flavoured with lemon rind (zest) and topped with butter and sugar; and, of course, the traditional puff pastry Twelfth Night cake (galette des Rois or gateau des Rois).

Galettes are not always sweet. In rural France galettes are traditionally made with potatoes (finely sliced or pureed) or with cereals (maize, millet, oats)

- Buckwheat crepes in Brittany, Basse-Normandie and the Vendee, galettes are crepes traditionally made with buckwheat flour. They may be savoury, filled with ham, cheese, an egg, a sausage or grilled (broiled) sardines, or sweet with fruit or a jam filling.
- Butter biscuits. The word galette also applies to a small shortbread biscuit (cookie) made with butter, which is a great Breton speciality, an to dry, round, crunchy cakes, sometimes with crimped edges, which are variously flavoured, filled or iced (especially with coffee or chocolate).

RECIPES

Galette de plomb

Make a well in 300 g (11 oz. 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ cups) sifted plain (all-purpose) flour and add 1 teaspoon caster (superfine) sugar, 2 teaspoon salt dissolved in 1 tablespoon single (light cream, and 200 g (7 oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) softened butter cut into small pieces (dot these pieces all over the flour). Mix all the ingredients together with the tips of the fingers. Beat together 1 whole egg and 1 yolk. Add them to the dough and knead towards the centre. If necessary, add another tablespoon of cream. Work the dough into a ball, cover with a cloth and leave to stand for 30 minutes.

Flour the work surface, spread out the dough with the flat of the hand into a rectangle, fold it 3 times upon itself, roll it into a ball again and flatten it into a round shape, 2-3 cm (3/4- 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ in) thick. Place it on a buttered tart dish, trace rosettes on the top with the point of a knife, brush it with beaten egg and bake in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) for about 30 minutes. Serve lukewarm or cold.

Galette fondanete

Mix 300 g (11 oz. 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ cups) sifted plain (all-purpose) flour with 50 g (2 oz, $\frac{1}{4}$ cup) softened butter. Add 1 beaten egg and 1 yolk, 6 tablespoons single (light) cream, 20 g (3/4 oz. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ tablespoons) sugar and a generous pinch of salt. Roll the dough into a ball and leave to stand for 30 minutes. Roll it out and incorporate 200 g (7 oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) butter, as for puff pastry. Fold and roll the dough a further 4 times, as for puff pastry, allowing it to rest for 10 minutes between the first 2 turns but rolling the final 2 turns without resting. Roll the dough out into a circle and score a lattice pattern on the top with the point of a knife. Brush with beaten egg and bake in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) until golden brown. Sprinkle the galette with icing (confectioner's) sugar and put it back in the oven for a moment to glaze it.

Potato galette

Bake 6 large floury (baking) potatoes in the oven for 45-60 minutes until soft. Cut them open and remove that flesh, then mix 400 g (14 oz. 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ cups) of this with 4 egg yolks, added one by one, and 1 teaspoon salt soften 150 g (5 oz 2/3 cup) butter with a spatula and mix it in. Roll the potato dough into a ball and flatten it with the palm of the hand. Shape it into a ball again and repeat the operation twice more. Butter a baking sheet and flatten the dough to form a galette 4 cm 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ in) thick. Trace a pattern on the top with point of a knife, brush it with beaten egg, and bake in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) until golden brown, if the galette is to be served as a dessert, add to the dough 125 g (4 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) sugar, orange-flower water and chopped blanched orange and lemon rind (zest).

Small orange galettes

Make a well in 250 g (9 oz. 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ cups) sifted plain (all-purpose) flour. In the centre place 125 g (4 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) sugar, 150 g (5 oz. 2/3 cup) butter, a pinch of salt, the rind (zest) of 2 oranges rubbed on lumps of sugar and 6 egg yolks. Mix these ingredients together and gradually blend the flour into the mixture. Knead the dough into a ball and allow it to stand for a few hours in all cool place. Roll out the dough to a thickness of about 5 mm (1/4 in.). Cut it into rounds with a fluted cutter 5-6 cm (2-2 $\frac{1}{2}$ in) in diameter. Place the galettes on a buttered baking sheet, brush with egg beaten with a pinch of sugar and bake in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9) for about 6 minutes until lightly golden.

Twelfth Night cake

Galette des rois Roll out 500 g (18 oz.) puff pastry and cut out 2 circles. Place one on a baking sheet and brush the edge with beaten egg. Mix 100 g (4 oz. $\frac{1}{2}$ cup) sugar, 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) ground almonds, a few drops of vanilla essence (extract) and 1 tablespoon rum. Mix in 200 g (7 oz) crème patissiere. spread the almond on the pastry on the baking sheet, leaving the glazed edge uncovered, and put in a dried bean. Cover with the other circle of pastry and press the edges together, then with a pastry cutter. Brush with beaten egg. Allow to rest for 1 hour in the refrigerator and bake in a preheated oven at 190°C (375°F., gas 5) for 25 minutes.

GALICIEN A type of sponge cake filled with (pistachio-flavoured cream, iced (frosted) green and decorated with finely chopped pistachio nuts. It was apparently created at the old Patisserie Frascati in Paris.

RECIPES

Galicien

Prepare a round Genoese sponge cake using 40 g (1 ½ oz. 3 tablespoons) butter, 3 eggs, 90 g (3 ½ oz. ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar, 90 g (3 ½ oz. Scant 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, and a pinch of salt. Slice the cake in half horizontally, then sandwich it back together with a layer of confectioner's custard flavoured with finely chopped pistachio nuts. Spread the cake with apricot jam. Make an icing (frosting) with 3 egg whites. The juice of 1 lemon, 300 g (11 oz., 2 ¾ cups) icing (confectioner's) sugar, and 3 drops of green colouring. Cover the cake with the icing, decorate with chopped pistachios and keep cool until ready to serve.

GALINGALE A perennial Mediterranean plant that produces scaly brown tubes the size of hazelnuts, the sweet, white, farinaceous pulp of which earned them French name amandes de terre (earth almonds). They may be eaten dry, raw or roasted like chestnuts.

In North Africa the tubes are generally ground and used in forcemeats for poultry, meatballs and spice mixtures.

In Spain the galingale is called cufa; grown in the Valencia region, it is used for making a popular drink, borchata, which is similar to orgeat. It also yields an oil, which has a lower freezing point than water and which does not turn rancid, and a flour used in confectionary.

GALL BLADDER The organ that stores bile, a greenish, very bitter substance secreted by the liver. When poultry or game birds are drawn, care must be taken not to pierce or break the gall bladder attached to the liver, because the bile is so bitter that it would taint the flesh.

GALLIMAUFREY galimafree In the Middle Ages a dish of finely sliced cooked meat (usually chicken or mutton), fried in lard or goose fat, mixed with finely chopped onions and then moistened with wine and erjuice sauce spiced with ginger. At that time galliaufrey was the feast dish of the people (its names from gatlre, to enjoy oneself, and mafrer, to eat ravenously). It was only in the 17th century that the word took on the pejorative meaning that it has today: a badly prepared and unappetizing dish.

GAMAY RED grape with white juice, hardy and fertile, mostly grown in Beaujolais, but also in Burgundy, Auvergne, the Loire valley and Savoie-dauphine. It is also well established in United States, Brazil and Austria.

GAME All wild animals and birds that are hunted and those that are or were hunted and now are farmed. The French word comes from the old French gibecer (to hunt), which derives from the Latin gibbosus (hunchback). Hunters brought home the game they killed in a bag that they usually carried on their backs. Thus, the hunter's bag was called a gibeciére, from which it was an obvious step to gibier (the contents of the bag).

Hunting was once an important means of providing meat for the table. Today, in industrialized countries, game is only a minor and occasional food, but hunting countries to be enjoyed as a sport.

Game appears on the market only during the open season, when hunting is permitted unless the animals or birds have been specially bred, as in the case of quails and pheasants, for example. In Britain several birds are protected all year round, including blackbird, bustard, cygnet, heron, lapwing, Lark, rail, swan and swift. Other birds and animals, such as crow, beaver and dormouse, are no longer hunted at all, tastes having changed.

- Ground and winged game Games can be divided into two broad categories: ground and winged. Ground game is subdivided into large game (deer, roebuck, wild boar and, in North America, bison) and small game (hare and wild rabbit). The French term bête fauve applies specifically to the large herbivorous game (deer of both sexes) as distinct from the bête noire (wild boar) and bête rousse (fox badger). Winged game in France includes woodcock, pheasant, hazed grouse, grouse, partridge, partridge poult, rail, wood pigeon, capercaillie and black grouse, small game birds include lark, garden warbler, thrush. Blackbird, ortolan and plover, while water game includes godwit, wild duck, curlew, wild goose, moorhen, teal and lapwing.
- Digestibility of game The way of life and the feeding habits of game are reflected in the texture and flavour of its flesh, which has a strong, fragrant aroma, which becomes stronger with age. The flesh is more compact and almost leathery in all animals with a strong colour and less fat than other meat.

Before cooking, game meat is generally hung for a certain length of time to allow it to mature, which makes it tender and gives it a stronger flavour.

The length of time for which the game is left to mature varies according to its age and type for example, 4 days for a woodcock or a pheasant, 3 for a thrush or a duck, 2 for a hare, and 6-8 days for large game. During the maturing process the flavour and tenderness of the game improves.

Game sold commercially is already matured. When purchasing, it is advisable to choose a young animal or bird that is not 'high'.

- Cooking game The cuts of meat and the culinary methods are the same for large game as for other meat, except that game is often marinated: haunches, saddles and loins are roasted. Breasts, shoulders and necks are eaten in ragouts and civets; noisettes and cutlets are sautéed or grilled (broiled). Winged game is prepared like poultry. Terrines and pates can be also made from game. A sweet accompaniment (apples, chestnuts, grapes, red fruits, whortleberries) is sometimes chosen in order to bring out the strong taste of the dark meat, which is often served with highly seasoned sauces (grand veneur, poivrade, Perigueux, Cumberland). Full-bodied wines with a distinct bouquet are usually served with game.

GAMMELOST A Norwegian semi-soft, yellowish-brown cheese made from cow's or goat's milk. Its rind is brown and becomes darker as it ages. Maturing can take up to 6 months, but Gammelost, which has a strong, aromatic flavour, can also be eaten after 1 month. It is made in 15 cm (6 in) block either rectangular or cylinder in shape, depending on whether it is made of goat's or cow's milk.

GANACHE A flavoured cream made with chocolate and fresh cream, sometimes, with butter added, used to decorate desserts, to fill cakes or sweets and to make muffles or petits fours. It was created in Paris in about 1850 at the Patisserie Siraudin.

RECIPES

Ganache

Melt 250 g (9 oz. 9 squares) plain (unsweetened) chocolate over a low heat and add 65-75 g (2 ½-3 oz. 5-6 tablespoons) unsalted butter. Cool, then fold in whipped cream, either 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) whipping cream or 200 ml (7 fl. oz. ¾ cup) double (Heavy) cream whipped with 3 tablespoons milk.

Whipped ganache

Bring 100 ml (4 fl oz ½ cup) double cream to the boil. Remove from the heat and add 225 g (oz. 8 squares) plain (unsweetened) chocolates, broken into squares. Stir until the chocolate has melted and is thoroughly combined with the cream. Leave until cool, but not set, then whip until pale, thick and light. Alternatively, the cooled, but not whipped, ganache may be stirred and poured over cakes as a chocolate icing (frosting).

GAPERON Also known as Gapon. A cheese from the Auvergne region of France made of skimmed cow's milk or buttermilk (gape in the local dialect) shaped like a ball flattened at one end, 9 cm (3 ½ in) in diameter. The cheese is composed and flavoured with garlic and pepper, which give it a pronounced flavour, but a strong smell is a sign that it is overripe. The best season for Gaperon is between October and March.

GARAM MASALA A spice mixture used in Indian cookery. The exact mix varies according to the cook's taste and requirements, but mild, warm-flavoured spices are used, typically cardamom, cinnamon, cloves, cumin and black pepper. The whole spices are roasted together before being ground. Because it is roasted, unlike raw spices that are cooked in the first stages of preparation, garam masala is one of the spice mixtures that may be added to dishes in the final stages of cooking or sprinkled over as a final seasoning before serving. The spice mix may be prepared especially for each dish, or a slightly larger quantity can be made and stored in an airtight container.

GARBURE in the Beauvais region of France a kind of stew based on vegetable stock, cabbage and confit d'oie (preserved goose). However, there are several versions of varying richness, including briscat (maize garbure). According to some authors, the word comes from the Spanish garbias (ragout or stew). This etymology is disputed by Simin Palay: The root is undoubtedly garbe (a sheaf or bunch). And indeed it is a bunch of vegetables which is the very basis of the garbure.

RECIPE

Garbage

(from Simin Palay's recipe). Boil some water in an earthenware pot glazed on the inside (cast-iron or iron pots spoil the delicacy of the flavour). When it is boiling, throw in some potatoes, peeled and cut into thick slices. Add other fresh vegetables in season: haricot (navy) or broad (fava) beans, peas or French (green) beans. Season with salt and pepper. Cayenne may be used in place of white pepper. Flavour with garlic, a sprig of thyme, a parsley or fresh marjoram. Leave the stock to cook, making sure that the water is constantly on the boil.

Shred tender green cabbage as finely possible, cutting across the width of the leaves and removing any tough portions. When the rest of the ingredients are thoroughly cooked, throw the cabbage into the boiling stock. Cover the pot to keep the cabbage leaves green and, 30 minutes before serving, add a piece of pickled meat, preferably goose (lou trebuc); the fat on this will be sufficient. If pickled pork trebuc is used, the addition of a little goose fat will enhance the flavour of the stew. Cut stale wholewheat (whole-wheat) bread into thin slices and add to the stock and vegetables. The mixture must be thick enough for the ladle to stand up when it is set in the centre of the tureen.

It is possible to make a good garbure without trebuc, but in that case it is necessary to put a piece of ham bone or a sausage or, at the very least, lean bacon (thin flank) in the cold water. White cabbage may be used instead of green cabbage. For an everyday garbure it is usual to make do with a piece of bacon or ham, or bacon chopped with crushed garlic. According to the time of year, a few slices of swede (rutabaga) or roast chestnuts are added.

If dried beans are used, they have to be cooked in advanced and drained after cooking, because, because their water would destroy the characteristic flavour of the garture. To thicken the broth, the cooked beans are sometimes crushed and rubbed through a sieve. The meat is served separately from the broth, either by itself or with the vegetables. Some cooks brown this case, some fat must be added, but the fat in which the trebuc was browned should not be used.

Simin Palay concludes: 'A good groudale is an indispensable complements to every garbure.' (A goudale is the broth remaining when the vegetables have been eaten, which is enriched with red or white wine.)

GARDE-MANGER in a classic French kitchen the member of the staff in charge of cold items, hors d'oeuvres, some desserts and al decorative work.

GARFISH orphie An elongated sea fish with a long, spear-like snout, which has earned of sea-snipe. The garfish has a bluish-green back, a whitish belly and can reach a length of 80cm (3 in) and a weighted of 1.5 kg (3 lb). The flesh has a delicate flavour and is prepared in the same way as conger eel; it can also be fried. Unfortunately, its strong smell and the fact that it bones, green in their natural state, become mauve when cooked are disconcerting to some people.

GARGOTE Originally, a gargote was an in where it was possible to each inexpensively. Since the 19th century the word has come to mean any small, cheap, dirty resturning serving poor quality food, as proprietor being called a gargotier. The word appears to come form the Old French gargatte (throat). R Dumay, in Du silex an barbecue, gives a more amusing etymology; according to him, the word is derived from cargator, the cook on board the boats carrying pilgrims to Jerusalem, who were packed together uncomfortably.

GARCOULETTE A porous earthen vessel in which water is cooled by evaporation. The gangoulette usually has handle and a spout, which makes it possible to drink form it without the vessel touching the drinker's lips.

GARLIC A bulbous plant and, like onions, a member of the Allium genus. It probably originated in central Asia and has been known since ancient times for its curative properties. The Greks and Romans held garlic in high esteem; Hippocrates classified as a sudorific medicine, stating that garlic was 'hot, laxative and dituretic'. The crusades helped to make it known in Europe, where it soon took on the role of a panacea, even against the plague and possession by devils, Its culinary use is probably as old as its medicinal use. One of the most widely used medieval sauces was sauce d'aulx, in which crushed garlic was mixed either with parsley and sorrel to accompany fish dishes or with vinegar and breadcrumbs to go with grills.

- Varieties. Garlic is grown and used as a condiment in most parts of the world. The bulb or 'head' of garlic is formed of 12-16 bulbets, commonly called 'cloves', each protected by a parchment-like skin, which is white, violet or reddish according to variety. The most widely used garlic in France, for example, has a white or grey skin and is grown in Provence and southwest France. The smaller variety of garlic cultivated in the Auvergne has a violet-or rose-coloured skin (billom pink garlic); garlic from the Douai region has a red-brown skin. Garlic from the Charentes is considered to be less pungent, while Spanish garlic, or rocambole, is similar to a shallot. The most widely used garlic in the United States is grown in California
- Storing The bulbs must be throughly dry. They can be sotred in a cold place (fro -0.5°C to +1°C, 31-34°F) or at a moderate temperature (18°C, 64°F)., either laid out flat or hanging in bunches to improve aeration. If spots appear on them or the cloves become soft, the garlic is no longer usable. In general, white garlic keeps for about 6 months, pink garlic for nearly a year.

RECIPES

Garlic oil

Blanch and crush garlic cloves, add olive oil and press through a sieve. Alternatively, add grated garlic to olive oil and press through a muslin cloth (cheesecloth). Garlic oil is used to season salads and raw vegetables.

Garlic puree

Blanch some garlic cloves, then gently sweat them in butter. Add a few spoonfuls of thick béchamel sauce and either press through a sieve or liquidize in a blender. Garlic puree is used in sauces and stuffings.

Garlic stuffing

Crush the yolks of hard-boiled (hard-cooked) eggs in a mortar with an equal quantity of blanched garlic cloves. Add fresh butter (half the volume of ingredients in the mortar), season with salt and pepper and press through a sieve or crush in a blender. Chopped herbs may also be added. This stuffing is used to garnish cold hors d'oeuvres, to spread on canapés and in various other dressings.

Roast garlic

Remove any loose outer layers of papery covering from a large head of garlic and trim off the stalk at the top. Brush with a little oil and wrap in foil. Prepare 1 head for 2 portions. Cook in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 30-40 minutes. Use a sharp knife to slice the head of garlic horizontally in half, serve with salt, olive oil and warm crusty bread.

GARLIN, GUSTAVE French chef. Born in Tonerre in 1839, he worked for wealthy private households and said of himself: "I taught myself in the embassies, in the Senate, in the ministries and in some of the better houses of the Faubourg Saint Germain." He is the author of a basic cookery book, published in 1887, le Cuisinier moderne, ou les Secrets de l'art culinaire.

GARNISH A single item or combination of items accompanying a dish. The garnish can be placed around meat, chicken, fish or game, or served separately.

Whether simple or composite, the garnish always blends with the flavour of the basic dish and the sauce (if there is one). The range of garnishes in French cookery is very diverse, although the blending of flavours necessitates the use of certain traditional garnishes (leg of mutton with small kidney beans, poached fish with boiled or steamed potatoes, venison with chestnut puree).

Simple garnishes consist of a single element, usually a vegetable (braised, sautéed, bound with butter, or cooked in cream), rice or pasta.

Composite garnishes are made from several ingredients whose flavours blend both with each other and with the main dish. They consist of ordinary items (such as pieces of bacon, small onions, fresh vegetables, mushrooms prepared in a variety of ways) or more elaborate ingredients (such as cockscombs, crayfish tails, truffles, filled croustades, quenelles, croutons) depending on the nature of the dish.

The garnish may also be a kind of ragout, made of a composite salpicon (chicken, calves' sweetbreads, quenelles, mushrooms), blended with brown or white sauce and arranged in small pastry shells.

In all cases, the garnish should be placed around a dish so as to achieve an overall harmony of shapes and colours pleasing to the eye.

Some garnishes were invented by chefs of old (Choron, foyot, Laguipiere); some are dedicated to historical figures. (gavour, conde, Du Barry, Meyerbeer, Rossini, Talleyrand), some bear the name of the town or region where their main ingredient originates (anversoise, Argenteuil, bordelaise, clamart, Nantua, Perigueux), while others evoke either the preparation of which they are part (bateliere, commodore, grand veneur) or their own arrangement (bouquetiere, jardiniere).

GARUM A condiment widely used by the ancient Greeks and Romans, obtained by soaking intestines and pieces of fish in brine with aromatic herbs. (pissalat from Nice and the Vietnamese nuoc-man have a similar formula.) according to contemporary writers, the best garum was made in Carthage using mackerel, but it was also made with fry, salmon, sardines and shad, and there were many variants with wine, vinegar or water, or strongly seasoned with pepper. Garum had a very strong smell and flavour and formed part of most recipes, it was also used as a condiment added at the table.

GASCONY BUTTER beurre de gascone A mixture of fine melted and pureed blanched garlic cloves. This condiment is badly named since it does not contain butter. It is served with grills, breadcrumb preparations and boiled vegetables.

GASTRIQUE A reduced mixture of vinegar and sugar used in the preparation of hot sauces accompanying dishes made with fruit (such as duck with orange). Gastrique is prepared by heating together (seasoning as necessary) until the liquid has almost entirely evaporated.

GASTRONOME, A LA A term used to describe a dish of pot-roasted stuffed chicken or calves' sweetbreads with small potaged truffles, chestnuts and morels in butter, garnished with cockscombs and kidneys. The cooking pot is deglazed with champagne and demi-glace, seasoned with truffle essence and used as a sauce.

The name is also given to a dish of sautéed potatoes accompanied by truffles, attributed to the marquis of Cussy.

GASTRONOMIC TESTS eprouvettes gastronomiques 'some dishes are of such indisputable excellence that their appearance alone is capable of arousing a level-headed man's degustatory powers. All those who, when presented with such a dish, show neither the rush of desire, nor the radiance of ecstasy, may justly be deemed unworthy of the honours of the sitting, and its related delights.'

This test, described by Brillat-Savarin in Meditation XIII of the Physiologie du gout, was intended to identify the true gourmet. However, the test would have to be adopted according to the gourmet's income and social status. Brillat-Savarin, therefore, suggested three series of tests, according to the gourmet's prescribed income (mediocre, comfortable or large). The first was fillet of veal larded with fat bacon and cooked in its own juices, or a dish of garnished sauerkraut, followed by œufs à la neige (floating islands); the second was leg of salt-meadow lamb à la provençale and petits pois, or haunch of venison with chopped gherkin sauce; and the third was a pheasant à la Sainte-Alliance, or a seven-pound fowl stuffed with Périgord truffles until quite round.

GASTRONOMY The art of good eating, which Monselet defines as the joy of all situations and of all ages. Derived from the Greek gastros (stomach) and momos (law), the word came into general use in France in 1801, the year that la Gastronomie ou l'Homme des champs à table by J. Berchoux was published. Two years later, Le Gastronomes à Paris by Croze Magnan appeared.

In 1835 the Académie Française made the word gastronomie official by including it in its dictionary; it therefore rapidly gained currency despite being rather pedantic and unwieldy.

Rabelais introduced the Greek stem word into his play Pantagruel through the character of the god Gaster, honoured by gluttons. Various neologisms have been coined from the same model, such as gastrolatrie and gastromamie, which designate various degrees of excessive love of eating, and gastrotechnie, invented by E. de Pomiane, meaning the science of cooking. But the best verbal invention is attributed to Curnonsky, the founder of the Academie des Gastronomes, who coined the term gastronomades to designate tourists who are lovers of regional specialties.

True gastronomes, while appreciating the most refined products of the culinary art, enjoy them in moderation; for their normal fare, they seek out the simplest dishes, which are, however, the most refined products of the culinary art, enjoy them in moderation; for their normal fare, they seek out the simplest dishes, which are, however, the most difficult to prepare to perfection. Although they are not themselves practitioners of the culinary art, they know enough of its methods to be able to pass judgement on a dish and to recognize the ingredients of which is composed. In addition, they are familiar with the history of cooking and food and interested in foreign and exotic dishes.

On the other hand, as J-F Revel says in Un festin en paroles. 'The gastronome is at the same time inquisitive and timid; he explores faint-heartedly. He spends half his time remembering past satisfactions and the other half sceptically calculating future possibilities.

Often, however, gastronomy is reduced to following fashion and reflects contemporary social attitudes. In 1925 a well-known journalist, Clement Vautel, wrote a report on 'snobbish gastronomy': The curious thing is that snobbish gastronomes look for a traditional classic – even rough and rustic – simplicity. They leave the bourgeois eating swallows' nests in pseudo-Chinese restaurants and go to inns with a Norman décor to enjoy blanquette de veau served unpretentiously by skilled cooks.'

GAEAU A LA BROCHE a speciality that is chalmied to come from both the Avenyron and the ariege regions. It is made with a thick, oily paste flavoured with rum or orange-flower water, which is gradually poured over a special rotating spit. The spit rod is a long cone of wood wrapped in oiled paper, the mixture is ladled on to this as it turns slowly in front of a very hot fire. The cake cooks in a series of layers, which are wound in a long jagged band. When the cake mixture is used up, the cone is carefully withdrawn and the cake is left to cool. It keeps perfectly well for several days.

GAE-SAUCE Now synonymous with scullion', this term originally designated the gars de sauce, the kitchen assistant or cooks' boy whose job was to prepare the sauces under the instructions of the sauce chef or head chef.

GATIS A speciality of the rouergue region of France, made of a yeasted dough. It was created in about 1900 in Saint-Affrique by leonie Cazes. Today the gatis is made of bal of brioche dough in the centre of which a mixture of laguiole and Roquefort or Roquefort and Cantal cheese is inserted; the whole is covered with a silce of Laguiole or Cantal. The Brioche is then left to rise, brushed with egg and baked in the oven.

GAUDEBILLAUX an old French dish akin to tripe, which Rabelais describes in Pantagruel: Gaudebillaux is fatty tripe from coiraux. Coiraux are oxen fattened at the manger and in guimaux meadows. Guimaux meadows are those which have two crops of grass a year.' Rabelais states that this tripe, prepared immediately the ox was slaughtered, did not keep for very long. 'from which it was concluded that people should stuff themselves with it, so as not to waste anything'.

GAUDES A cornmeal porridge that used to be the traditional evening meal in Burgundy, Franche-Comte and Bree. The word is derived from gaude, a plant yielding a yellow dye, which was grown in France in the 19th century. However, some inhabitants of Franche-Comte claim that it comes from the Latin gaudeamus (let us rejoice)

Gaude is served hot in a soup plate or a bowl, and topped up with milk, cream or even wine. Sometimes pieces of larding bacon are added. The thick porridge may also be poured into a large dish, spread out and left to cool. It can then be cut up into pieces, browned in a frying pan in butter and served as a dessert with caster (superfine) sugar, jam or honey

GAULOISE, A LA The term applied to a number of quite elaborate dishes incorporating cockscombs and kidneys. These include a chicken consome blended with tapioca and garnished with poached cockscombs and kidneys; soft-boiled (soft-cooked) eggs on eroutons with a salpicon of ham in tomato sauce. Garnished with browned kidneys and cockscombs, and a garnish for bouchees or tantlets, made of cockscombs and kidneys with a salpicon of truffles and mushrooms added, thickened with supreme sauce flavoured with Madeira.

However, cockscombs and kidneys are not included in the garnish a la gauloise for large braised or poached fish. This consists of barqueates filled with a salpicon of truffles and mushrooms in cream thickened with matelote sauce, and trussed crayfish cooked in court-bouillon.

GAZELLE'S HORN An Oriental crescent-shaped pastry made from two types of paste. One is a mixture of ground almonds, sugar, butter and orange-flowered water, which is rolled into small sausage shapes about the size of a finger. The other is a very smooth and elastic dough, which is rolled out to a thickness of 2-3 cm (about 1 in.) this dough is cut into 10-12 cm (4-5 in) squares, on each of which is placed an almond-paste sausage, diagonally across. Each square is then, rolled into a crescent shape. Gazelle's horns are cooked in a warm oven and sprinkled with icing (confectioner's) sugar.

GAZETIN DU COMESTIBLE A periodical that appeared between January and December 1767, the object of which was to tell its readers how to obtain all the necessary foodstuffs to eat well. Although this forerunner of modern culinary guides ran for only 12 issues, it provides valuable information on the provisioning of Paris in the 18th century and the prices that were charged.

GAZPACHO A Spanish soup, originally a labourers' dish, made with bread and vegetables, including cucumber, tomato, onion and red (bell) pepper. Seasoned with olive oil and garlic and sharpened with vinegar, the soup is served ice cold. It is commonly served with bowls of garnished, such as chopped black olives, red pepper, hard-boiled (hard-cooked) egg and croutons rubbed with garlic. Its name of Arabic origin, means 'soaked bread'. Traditionally prepared in a large clay bowl, which gives it a characteristic taste, gazpacho originally came from Seville but there are numerous variants. In Jerez it is garnished

It is garnished with raw onion rings, in Mahalaga it is made with veal bouillon and sometimes garnished with grapes and almonds, in Cadiz it is served hot in winter; in Cordoba it is thickened with cream and maize flour (commeal); in Segovia it is flavoured with cumin and basil and prepared with a mayonnaise base.

Alice B. Toklas, in her Cookery Book, states that a Chilean writer of Catalonian origin, Marta Brunei describes gazpacho as the meal of the Spanish muleteers, who take with them on their travels an earthen dish, garlic, olive oil, tomatoes and cucumbers, as well as some dry bread, which they crumble up. By the side of the road, they crush the garlic between two stones with a little salt, then add some oil. They coat the inside of the dish with this mixture. Then they cut up the cucumbers and tomatoes and place them in the dish in alternate layers with breadcrumbs, finishing with a layer of breadcrumbs and oil. Having done this, they take a wet cloth, wrap the dish in it and leave it in the sun. the contents are cooked by evaporation and when cloth is dry, the meal is cooked'.

RECIPES

Sevill gazpacho

Put 4 crushed garlic cloves, 1 teaspoon, ½ teaspoon ground cayenne and the pulp of 2 crushed medium-sized tomatoes in a bowl. Thoroughly mix these ingredients and add 4 tablespoons olive oil drop by drop. Then add a Spanish onion cut into slices as thin as tissue paper, a green or red (bell) pepper (cored and diced), and cucumber (peeled, seeded and diced) and 4 tablespoons croutons. Add 750 ml (1 ¾ pints, 3 ¼ cups) water and mix well, Serve chilled.

Lobster gazpacho

Peel and slice 100 g (4 oz.) cucumber. Wash the white part of 4 leeks and 4 sticks of celery and cut them in Julienne strips. Blanch all these vegetables in boiling salted water (5 minutes for the cucumber, 10 minutes for the leeks and celery). Drain, cool under cold water and dry thoroughly. Remove the leaves from a bunch of chervil. Peel, seed and slice 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb.) tomatoes. Seed and slice 350 g (12 oz.) red (bell) peppers. Peel and seed 250 g (9 oz) raw cucumber, peel and crush 5 garlic cloves. Cook 4 lobsters for 5 minutes in court-bouillon, shell them, put aside the coral and cut the flesh into slices. Arrange the slices on a large dish.

Liquidize the raw vegetables (tomatoes, peppers, garlic and cucumber) with pursley, salt, pepper and 1 tablespoon vinegar. Put the vegetables puree into a saucepan and bring to the boil to make a bouillon. Separately, bring to the boil 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) single (light) cream. Mix the vegetable bouillon and cream together, adjust the seasoning and boil the mixture for 2-3 minutes. Take off the heat, blend in the reserved coral and strain. Pour this puree over the lobster slices and leave to cool.

Refrigerate until well chilled before serving. Garnish with the slices of cucumbers, the blanched jullence of leeks and celery and the chervil leaves.

GEFILTE FISH A classic Jewish cold fish dish, suitable for the Sabbath, when, according to the strict rules of the religion, cooking is not allowed. Originally is stuffed freshwater fish-pike or carp-with the cooked flesh carefully removed and boned, then combined with matzo meal and seasonings before being stuffed back into the skin and poached. (Gefilite means stuffed) in Yiddish.) the modern version differs in the fish mixture is shaped into the skin. The poached fish balls are glazed with a little of the cooking liquor, which sets in the same way as aspic, and are served cold with a beet-root (beef) and horseradish sauce. White sea fish may be used instead of pike or carps.

GELATINE A colourless, odourless substance extracted from the bones and cartilage of animals and from certain algae (agar-agar, alginates). Gelatine can be in the form of powder or translucent leaves. It is soaked in cold water until it swells and is then dissolved either over or with a little boiling water and blended with the mixture for which it is intended. Gelatine is used for making jellies, numerous cold or iced desserts, and for the fining of wines and fruit juices. It is also used in industrial confectionery.

- Using gelatine leaf gelatine should be soaked in cold water until soft, then drained and dissolved in a measured quantity of hot water, stirring occasionally, until the liquid is clear. Powdered gelatine should be sprinkled evenly over the surface of a small amount of cold water and left, without stirring, until it swells and becomes spongy. Then it should be dissolved over a pan of simmering water until clear.

Adding a small amount of dissolved gelatine to a very cold or chilled liquid or mixture will make it set almost immediately into strings or lumps. Dilute the dissolved gelatine with liquid or a liquid mixture at room temperature before combining it with any chilled mixture or ingredients.

The amount gelatine to use depends on the set required, which may be soft and slightly creamy or firm enough to support the shape of a moulded mixture. As a guide, 1 sachet powdered gelatine usually contain 7 g (1/4 oz.), the equivalent of 2 ¼ teaspoons. This is sufficient to set 600 ml (1 pint, 2 ¼ cups) liquid, giving a soft set. For a firm set – for example to support pieces of fruit in a moulded jelly or terrine – allow 4 teaspoons powdered gelatine to 600 ml (1 pint, 2 ½ cups). When using leaves, allow 3 leaves to set the equivalent of 7 g (3/4 oz) or 2 ¼ teaspoons powdered gelatine.

GELLING AGENT A food additive used to give a preparation a jelly-like consistency. The main gelling agents are pectins, alginic acid and its derivatives (E400-405), agar-agar, carrageen, starch and carob bean gum, which are used in a variety of products, including flans, ice creams, jams and porridge.

GENDARME A popular French name for pickled herring, referring to the stiffness of the fish when it is dried and smoked.

The name is also given to a small, flat sausage of Swiss origin (called landiager), which is common in Germany and Austria. Rectangular in shape, it is made of lean beef and pork fat, dried and smoked, and eaten or cooked.

GENEPI An alpine species of wormwood, well known for its tonic properties. It is used in the preparation of herb teas and is the main ingredient in a number of plant liqueurs, including the famous genepi des Alpes.

GENEVOISE, A LA A term used to describe fish dishes served with genevoise sauce, made of fish fumet, mirepoix and red wine; thickened with butter. Genevoise sauce was originally called geneise (Creme's recipe is made with consommé and espagnole sauce), the name being changed to avoid confusion with Genoese sponge cake. Nevertheless, some cookery books still include a 'geneise sauce', made in the same way as genevoise sauce but with white wine. A variant of genevoise sauce, called gourmet sauce, includes lobster butter, crayfish tails, quenelles and truffles, and is used to coat slices of eel cooked in court-bouillon.

RECIPES

Genevoise sauce

Crush 500 g (18 oz) salmon trimmings. Peel and dice a large carrot and a large onion. Cut 10 parsley sprigs into small pieces. Sauté all these in 15 g (1/2 oz. 1 tablespoon) butter for 5 minutes over a low heat. Add a sprig of thyme, half a bay leaf, pepper and the fish trimmings. Cook very slowly in a covered saucepan for 15 minutes. Add a bottle of red wine (Chambertin or Cotes-du-Rhone) and a little salt to the pan juice. Boil down slowly for 30-40 minutes. Strain the sauce, then thicken it with 1 tablespoon beurre manie (1 tablespoon anchovy butter may also be stirred in). adjust the seasoning.

Geneise sauce

Pour into a saucepan 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) red Bordeaux wine. Add 2 tablespoons fines herbes (consisting of mushrooms, truffles, parsley and 2 shallots, all blanched and chopped), a small pinch of quatre-épices (a mixture of white peppercorns, nutmeg, cinnamon or ginger and cloves), and a pinch of finely ground pepper. Boil down almost completely, add 2 tablespoons consommé. 250 ml (8 fl oz. 1 cup) espagnole sauce and 120 ml (4 ½ fl. oz. ½ cup). Bordeaux wine. Boil down to the desired consistency and transfer the sauce to a bain marie. Blend in a little unsalted butter just before serving. (Traditionally, high quality butter from isigny, Normandy, would be added.)

GENOA CAKE pain de genes A. types of rich sponge cake made with ground almonds, not to be confused with genese sponge cake. Of varying degrees of lightness, depending on whether or not the beaten egg whites are incorporated separately, Genoa cake is traditionally cooked in a round mould with a fluted edge. It is served plain or with various decoration and filings.

RECIPE

Genoa cake

Work 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) butter into a soft paste with 150 g (5 oz. 2/3 cup) caster (superfine) sugar, then whisk until the mixture becomes white. Blend in 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) ground almonds, then add 3 eggs, one bay one, 40 g (1 1/3 oz. ½ cup) cornflour (cornstarch) and a pinch of salt. Work everything well together. Flavour the mixture with 1 tablespoon liqueur (such as Curacao). Butter a round cake tin (pan), line to bottom with a circle of buttered greaseproof (wax) paper, and pour in the mixture. Bake in a preheated oven at 180°C.(350°F, gas 4) for 40 minutes turn out immediately on to on to a wire rack and remove the paper.

GENOESE SPONGE Genoese a light sponge cake that takes its name from the city of Genoa. Genoese sponge is made of egg and sugar whisked over heat until thick, then cooled and combined with flour and melted butter. It can be enriched with ground almonds or crystallized (candied) fruits and flavoured with liqueur, the rind (zest) of citrus fruits or vanilla. Genoese sooner (which should not be confused with Genoa cake) differs from ordinary sponge cake in that the eggs are beaten whole, whereas in the latter the yolks and whites are usually beaten separately. Genoese sponge is the basis of many filled cakes. Cut into two or more layers, which may be covered with jam, cream or fruit puree, it is cooled, iced (frosted) and decorated as required.

Recipes

Genoese sponge

Melt 125 (4 ½ oz, ½ cup) butter gently without allowing it to become hot. Put 275 g (10 oz, 1 1/3 cups) caster (superline) sugar, 8 beaten eggs, 2 large pinches of salt and 1 teaspoon vanilla sugar into a basin and place it in a tepid bain marie; whisk the mixture until it becomes thick, pale and foamy. Remove from the heat and continue to whisk until it cools down completely. Carefully fold in 250 g (9 oz, 2 1/4 cups) sifted flour and then trickle in the tepid melted butter at the side of the bowl. Mix in gently until it is evenly blended. Pour this mixture into a large buttered sandwich tin (layer cake pan) and bake in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 25-30 minutes. Make a syrup with 150 g (5 oz 2/3 cup) water and boil for 4-5 minutes. When cool, add 2 ½ tablespoon white rum and pour this syrup over the cake while it is still warm.

GENTIAN. A plant from the mountains of Europe, picked especially in the Jura and the Alps. The root is used as a substitute for cinchona. Before the latter was introduced into the Old World (1639), the large yellow gentian (Gentiana latea), the panacea of the mountain dwellers was prescribed as an infusion or a syrup as a tonic, stimulant and fehrifuge. Nowadays it is mainly used for its aperitif and digestive properties properties. Gentian essence, amber yellow in colour is an excellent bitter tonic with a strong pungent flavour; it is an ingredient of many aperitifs.

GEORGETTE A name given to various dishes at the end the 19th century. It was the title of a play by Victorien Sardou, which had a successful run at the Vaudeville Theatre in Paris in 1885. Pommes Georgette, which were served for the first time at the Paillard restaurant near the theatre, are potatoes cooked whole, hollowed out, then stuffed while still hot with a ragout of crayfish tails a la Nantua. Poached or scrambled eggs Georgette are served in potatoes with the same garnish. There is also a georgette soup cream of tomato and cream of carrot mixed and blended with perles da japon (tapioca). Finally, crepes Georgette are sweet pancakes filled with a salpicon of pineapple in rum thickened with apricot jam. Sprinkled with sugar and glazed in the oven.

GERBAUDES A traditional festival held at the end of the harvest in the central provinces of France, also called 'Revolle' in Dauphine and Lyonnais and 'chien de Mosson' "Tue-Chien' or Chien' in Franche-Comte, Lorraine, Cote-d' Or and Champagne. Elsewhere, there were different festivals to mark the end of other great agricultural events, such as walnut gathering. The common feature of all these festivals was a gargantuan communal meal, accompanied by singing and dancing ceremonial dishes were served on these occasions roast cockered in Sologne, rabbit au sang in Cher and Indre, and tripe in Creuse, collection of legends, religious precepts and rules for practical living, in which the human body is represented in the form of circle associated with primordial foods palm sugar, wine, ghee, milk, yogurt and water. The best ghee is made of butter from buffalo's milk (which is twice as rich in fat as cow's milk). It is used as an ingredient in patisserie, as a cooking fat and to enrich vegetable purees, rice and dal. Among poorer people ghee is made of sesame oil or mustard. In Nepal it is made of yak's milk.

RECIPES

Gherkins a la russe

Boil some salted water with caster (superfine) sugar, using 1 tablespoon salt and 1 teaspoon sugar per 1 litre (1 ¾ pints, 4 1/3 cups) water. Allow to cool completely. Wash some large fresh gherkins in warm water and cool them in cold water. Drain and pat dry. Lay them in a jar in layers, separating each layer with a few fragments of fennel sprigs and, if available, a few fresh blackcurrant leaves (taken from the ends of the twigs). Press down well. Fill the jars with salted water (it should completely cover the gherkins) and leave to marinate in a cool place for at least 24 hours serving.

When preserving these gherkins, they can be sterilized, but they become softer in the process.

Gherkins pickled in vinegar (prepared cold).

Prepare and marinate the gherkins with salt as in the previous recipe. Then wash in vinegared water; wipe them dry one by one and place them in jars. Add peeled white pickling onions, some fragments of bay leaf, sprigs of thyme and tarragon (which have been scalded, cooled and dried), 2-3 cloves, 1 - 2 small garlic cloves, 1 small chill, a few black pepper-corns and a few coriander seeds. Cover with white vinegar, seal the jars hermetically and store in a cool place. These gherkins can be eaten after 5-6 weeks, but they will improve with time (up to a year).

Gherkins pickled in vinegar (prepared hot)

Rub the gherkins with a rough cloth, then place them in a terrine. Add some coarse salt, stir and leave for 24 hours. Remove the gherkins and dry them by one. Place them in a terrine and cover with boiled white wine vinegar. Marinate for about 12 hours. Strain off the vinegar and add 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) fresh vinegar, bring to the boil and, while still boiling, pour over the gherkins. Repeat the process the next day, then leave to cool completely. Scald some jars with boiling water and let them dry lay the gherkins in them in layers, adding seasoning every 2 layers (fragments of bay leaf, sprigs of thyme and tarragon, which have been scalded, cooled and dried, cloves and 1 - 2 chillies per jar). Cover with vinegar, seal the jars with cork stoppers and store in a cool place.

GIANT GRANADILO Known as barbadine in Africa. This is a climbing plant originally from South America, introduced to the West Indies in the 19th century. Related to the passion flower, its green avoid fruits are 20-30 cm (8-12 in) long. When unripe they are used as vegetables in the same way as squashes or vegetable marrow. As they ripen they become yellowish, and their tart, whitish flesh is then used as for passion fruit, for example in the preparation of drinks, jams and sorbets. The bark of the plant is used to make a jelly.

GIBELOTTE A savoury stew of rabbit in white or red wine. The word derives from the Old French gibelet (platter of birds), which was prepared in this way. Pieces of rabbit are browned in the fat of blanched and sautéed bacon. They are then floured, put in a cocotte with the bacon, some small onions and a bouquet garni, and moistened with bouillon and wine. Mushrooms are added during cooking, and pounced liver when the rabbit is cooked. In Quebec a gibelotte is a ragout of various vegetables and fish.

GIBLEST The edible inner parts of poultry, including the gizzard, heart, liver and kidneys, plus the external giblets - the head, neck, pinions (wingtips) and feet.

The external giblets of large poultry (chickens, turkey, geese) can be bought separately in France and are used to make ragouts, fricassees and pot-au-feu. Giblets are a common ingredient in French home cooking, the internal giblets being used in stuffings, garnishes, terrines, pies and even kebabs or fritters.

- Duck and goose giblets. Only the neck, gizzard, liver and heart are used. The feet are not cooked, and the pinions are not separated from the body. Heart: simply take it out. Neck, cut it off close to the head and the body, then remove the skin. Liver, separate it from the entrails, then remove the gall bladder, taking care to cut generously around it in order not to burst the bladder because the bitter bile would make the liver inedible. Gizzard: remove the thick skin with the tip of a sharp knife and use only the two fleshy parts.
- Chicken and turkey giblets. These are prepared in the same way, but while the head and feet of the chicken are eaten, only the turkey's pinions, heart, liver, gizzard and neck are used. Pinions separate them from the bird at the first joint and cut them off at the second. Neck slice it off close to the head and body, then remove the skin. Heart and liver prepare these as duck. Gizzard; slit it on the flesh side without piercing the gizzard-sac, which should be thrown away, chicken's feet. Cut off the claw-joint, then singe and skin the rest. Head singe the head of a chicken (do not use a turkey)

RECIPES

Giblet à la bourgeoise

Dice 100 g (4 oz) thick streaky (slab) bacon and blanch for 5 minutes in boiling water. Strain and leave to cool. Prepare (800 g (1 ¾ lb) turkey or chicken giblets. Peel 100 g (4 oz) small onions, 300 g (11 oz) baby carrots and a garlic clove. Brown the diced bacon in a sauté pan in 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter, lard or goose fat, then strain and remove from the pan. In the same fat cook the onions until golden, strain and remove. Next brown the giblets (except the liver) in the pan, then add the crushed garlic. Stir well, sprinkle on 25 g (1 oz. ¼ cup) flour, and mix in until coloured. Add 100 ml (4 fl oz. 7 tablespoons) dry white wine and let it reduce for a few minutes. Season lightly and add a bouquet garni, the bacon, onions and carrots, and 1.15 litres (2 pints, 5 cups) water or poultry stock to cover the giblets. Cover and bring to the boil, then reduce heat and simmer for about 30 minutes. Add the liver and stir gently, then continue cooking for about 10 more minutes until the liver is cooked. Place the giblets and vegetables in a shallow dish and pour the sauce over.

Giblets a la bourguignonne

Prepare as for giblets a la bourgeoise but replace the carrots by 100 g (4 oz. 2 cups) buttons mushrooms and the white wine by red Burgundy.

GIGONDAS Red or rose AOC wine from vineyards at the foot of the Dentelles de Montmirail in the Rhone valley. The red wines, produced mainly from Grenache, Syrah, Mourvedre and Cinsaut grapes, are powerful, spicy and tannic, and the best can be bottle-aged for at least ten years. Roses, however, are usually drunk young.

GIGOT A French cut of meat corresponding to a leg of mutton or lamb. The name derives from the word for an ancient musical instrument (gigue), which had the same shape. The whole gigot (haunch or long leg) consists of the actual leg itself (or gigot racourici, short leg) and the muscles extending from it, which form the French out quasi or selle de gigot (chump end – not to be confused with the English saddle). The two pieces can be cut and cooked separately: the chump end, tied up with string, can be a very fine roast, whereas the short leg may be roasted, boiled, pot-roasted, braised or even sliced and grilled (broiled). By steeping a short leg of mutton in a marinade before cooking in the oven, it is transformed into gigot chasseur, tasting of venison. The flavour of lamb combines well with garlic, and roast gigot of lamb studded with garlic and garnished with kidney beans is the French traditional dish for family celebrations and special meals. The leg can also be cooked with white wine, bacon and onions with juniper berries, garnished with red cabbage; or with caper sauce, garnished with steamed potatoes and turnips. Other recipes include brochettes a la turque (lamb on skewers) and daubes or braised dishes, such as the famous gigot de sept beures or a la cuiller, which is cooked for a long time over a very gentle heat, so it can be cut with a spoon, and served with the braising liquor strained and boiled down. Gigot of lamb can also be served cold with aioli, in aspic with a green salad or with a spicy tomato salsa.

Let of lamb is carved either paralleled to the bone (the slices are all equally cooked) or perpendicular to the bone, slightly on the side (the meat is more tender, but cooking is graduated) lamb cooked in.

Braised leg of lamb a la bordelaise

Cook a leg of lamb in a mixture of butter and oil in a covered casserole in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4), allowing 40 minutes per 1 kg or 20 minutes per 1 lb., plus an additional 40 or 20 minutes. When one-third done, add 575 g (1 ¼ lb.) tiny potato balls and 250 g (9 oz.) fresh cep or button mushrooms, lightly tossed in oil. Season. When the leg and garnish are cooked, sprinkle with noisette butter in which 4 tablespoons breadcrumbs and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley and garlic have been fried.

Braised leg of lamb with spring onions

Calculate the cooking time for a leg of lamb at 40 minutes per 1 kg. 20 minutes per 1 lb. Plus an additional 40 or 20 minutes. Cook the lamb in a covered flameproof casserole in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 25 minutes, then drain. Melt some butter in the casserole. Lightly coat 1 kg (2 ¼ lb.) spring onions (scallions) in sugar, then fry them in the butter. Place the leg of lamb on the onions and put the casserole back in the oven. When the onions have softened, add 2 tomatoes, peeled and cut into 8 pieces, and 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) white wine. Complete the cooking process, turning the leg to make sure it is browned all over and basting it as required with reduced beef stock.

Remove the leg of lamb from the casserole, draining off all the cooking liquor. Drain the spring onions. Cover both and keep hot. Thicken the cooking juices with beurre manie. Carve the lamb. Arrange the spring onions on plates and coat with the sauce. Arrange the lamb on the plates and serve.

Lea's roast leg of lamb

Crush 4 anchovy fillets in 4 tablespoons olive oil mixed with 2 level tablespoons mustard, sage, basil, rosemary and crushed garlic. Rub the meat with this mixture and marinate for 2 hours, turning from time to time. Calculate the cooking time for the lamb at 30-40 minutes per 1 kg. 15-20 minutes per 1 lb. Plus an additional 30-40 or 15-20 minutes according to how well cooked you require the meat to be when served. Drain and roast in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6).

While the meat is cooking, boil down the marinade with some butter, gradually adding half a bottle of champagne. Strain and thicken with softened butter.

Roast leg of lamb

Stud the leg near the projecting bones with 2-3 cloves of garlic. Cook it on a spit or in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7), allowing 20-22 minutes per 1 kg (9-10 minutes per 1 lb). Place it on a long serving dish and serve with a sauce made from the cooking juice, kept quite fatty, with slices of lemon and chopped watercress. Roast leg of lamb is accompanied by Franch (green) beans in butter, white haricot (navy) beans in juice, or vegetables prepared a la jardiniere or as a pouree.

This is the French method for roasting lamb, and the flesh will be pink. For fully cooked meat, reduce the oven temperature to 190°C (375°F, gas 5) when placing the joint in the oven and allow 45 minutes per 1 kg (20 minutes per 1 lb) and add 20 minutes to the total time.

Roast leg of lamb en chevreuil

Completely skin a very fresh leg of lamb and lard with lardons. Then put it in a special marinade; see chevreuil, en. Leave it to steep for some time, depending on the tenderness of the meat and the temperature (2 days in summer, 3-4 days in winter). Dry the leg with a cloth, then roast. Serve a roebuck sauce or a poivrade sauce separately.

Roast leg of lamb with 40 cloves of garlic

Desalt some anchovy fillets. Trim a leg of lamb as necessary. Stud it with silvers of garlic (2-3 cloves) and the anchovy fillets cut into fragments. Brush with a mixture of oil, thyme, powdered rosemary and pepper. Roast on a spit or in the oven as for roast leg of lamb, basting occasionally with a little of the herbs and oil. As the meat starts to cook, put 250 g (9 oz) unpeeled garlic cloves into boiling water after boiling for 5 minutes, drain the garlic and put into a saucepan with 200 ml (7 fl oz. ¾ cup) stock. Simmer for 20 minutes. Add a small cup of this liquor to the meat juices and pour over the meat. While completing the cooking wash some watercress thoroughly in running water and chop coarsely. Arrange the leg on a serving dish, surround by the cloves of garlic and chopped watercress. Serve the juice in a sauceboat.

Split-roast leg of lamb with parsley spit-roast a leg of lamb. Before cooking is completed, cover it evenly with a layer of fresh breadcrumbs mixed with chopped parsley and possibly some chopped garlic. Finish cooking the lamb until the surface turns golden brown. Put it on a long serving dish and garnish with chopped watercress and halved lemons. Serve the juice separately.

GIGUE Haunch of roebuck or deer, also called cuissot in Franch. Once the sinews are drawn a haunch is usually studded with lardons, marinated if necessary, then roasted in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6). Allow 30 minutes per 1 kg. 15-18 minutes per 1 lb. Celery or chestnut puree, mushroom fricassee and red- or whitecurrant jelly are the conventional garnishes.

GILBERT, PHILEAS French cook (born la Chapelle-surDreause, 1857; died Couilly-Pont-aux-

Dames, 1942. After an apprenticeship as a cook/ astrycook in Sens, he travelled around France, working with Escoffier, Emile Bernard, Ozanne and Monagne. He became a great practitioner, theoretician and scholar. The author of numerous books, including la Cuisine retrospective, 1 Cuisine de tous les mois and L'Alimentation et la Technique culinaire a travers les ages, he collaborated in the writing of Escoffier's Guide culinaire. He wrote numerous articles in professional magazines and cookery journals, becoming known for raging controversies with his colleagues.

GILLIERS. The official chef of King Stanislas Leszezynski. In 1751 he published Le Camameliste francais (camamelisie comes from cammamelle or came a mel, an old French term for sugar canel. This is a valuable document both for its history of friandises (sweet delicacies) and for its illustrations by Dupuis, engraved by Lotha, which depicted the masterpieces of 18th-century glassware and gold smiths' work.

GIMBLITTE A small ring biscuit (cookie) in the shape of a crown, a speciality of Albi. The word seems to come from the Italian ciambella (a ring shape cake similar to an echaude). The dough-made from flour, ground almonds, sugar, egg yolks yeast and grated citron, orange lemon rind (zest) - is not the same as that for echaudes, but the cooking principles is the same the biscuits are first immersed in boiling water, then drained, dried and browned in the oven. Fernande Moliniet, a pastry-cook in Albi and author of Recberches historiques sur les specialities gourmandes du Tarn, thinks that gimblettes were invented by the monks of Nonterre, who entrusted the recipe to the canons of Albi in the 15th century.

RECIPE

Orange gimblettes

Grate the rind (zest) of half an orange on a lump of sugar, crush the sugar to a fine powder and mix it with caster (superfine) sugar so that the whole amount measures 175 g (6 oz., $\frac{3}{4}$ cup). Pound thoroughly 100 g (4 oz. $\frac{2}{3}$ cup) fresh almonds. Place 225 g (8 oz. 2 cups) sifted plain (all-purpose) flour in a circle around this mixture, and in the centre put 15 g (1/2 oz. 1 cake) fresh yeast dissolved in 70 ml (2 $\frac{1}{2}$ fl oz. $\frac{1}{4}$ cup) milk. Add 50 g (2 oz, 4 tablespoons) butter, 2 egg yolks, a pinch of salt, the almonds and the orange-flavoured sugar. Knead all these ingredients in the usual way and leave the dough in a warm place for 5-6 hours to allow the yeast to ferment.

Knock back the dough and divide it into 5-6 strips, each the width of a little finger. Cut the strips diagonally into pieces 13 cm (5 in) long. Make these into little rings so that the joins are invisible. Drop the rings into a large saucepan of boiling water. Stir gently with a spatula for a few minutes to prevent the rings from sticking and to bring them to the surface. Drain them and drop them into cool water. When cold, drain again, then toss to dry them.

Dip each ring in a little beaten egg (2 eggs should be used in all) 2-3 times. Leave them to drain for a few minutes. Arrange them carefully on 3 lightly greased baking sheets and bake them in a preheated oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for 20-30 minutes, until they are a good colour.

Little plaited biscuits (cookies) or little rolls about as long as a thumb can also be made this way. These gimblettes may also be flavoured with the rind (zest) of lemon, citron or Seville (bitter) orange, or with aniseed, vanilla or orange-flower water.

GIN pure alcohol, distilled usually from grain, into which are infused aromatic plant products, particularly oil of juniper. The two basic types are Dutch and British. Dutch gin (genever), directly stemming from medicinal compounds evolved in the Netherlands in the 16th century, is heavily aromatic, it is usually drunk chilled and neat. Dry gin, the universal style, originated in London in the 1870s. Much lighter and more popular than the older genever, it is essentially a versatile mixing spirit – with tonic water, juices and in numerous cocktails. Dry gin is made in many countries, with many premier brands carrying English names flavoured gins have declined, but sloe gin is still popular in Britain and the United States. Gin's culinary uses are confined mainly to offal and game dishes.

GINGER A plant of South-east Asian origin that is cultivated in hot countries for its spicy, aromatic rhizomes (underground stems), which are used fresh, preserved in sugar or powdered. Widely appreciated in the Middle Ages ginger was used as a flavouring and as a sweetmeat. Since the 18th century it has fallen out of use in classic European cookery, except in patisserie and confectionery, biscuits (cookies), cakes, pickles and jams, particularly in Britain, Alsace and the Netherlands, and for flavouring drinks. However, it continues to be an important seasoning in eastern cookery – fresh or dried, grated or preserved in sugar, syrup or vinegar. In India and Pakistan it is used to flavour curries, meat, fish in sauce, rice and vegetables purees, and to flavour tea. In China and Japan it is widely used fresh, shredded in court-bouillon, marinades and soups. It is an essential seasoning for fish and whale fillets. It is also eaten pickled between courses. In south-east. Also crystallized (candied) ginger is the most widespread sweetmeat.

RECIPE

Ginger cake

Cut 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) preserved ginger into very small cubes. Soften 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) butter with a wooden spatula. Vigorously whisk together 3 large eggs, 1 tablespoon rum and 2 tablespoons hot water. When the mixture is thick and foamy, gradually add 175 g (6 oz. ¼ cup) caster (superfine) sugar, continuing to whisk. Sift together 250 g (9 oz. 2 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour and 2 teaspoons baking powder, make a well in the middle and blend in the beaten eggs, the softened butter and the ginger. Mix well and pour into a buttered marigule mould or deep sandwich tin (layer cake pan) 22 cm (8 ¼ in) in diameter. Bake in a preheated oven at 220°C (425°F, gas 7) for about 40 minutes.

GINGER ALE Aerated water to which colouring and ginger essence are added, often used to make gin or whisky into a long drink.

GINGER BEER A fizzy soft drink, traditionally widely consumed during summer months in Britain. One traditional method of making home-made ginger beer is from a ginger 'plant', by fermenting ground ginger and sugar with yeast in a small amount of liquid for about a week. Sugar is added daily to 'feed the plant'. At the end of this fermentation, the plant is strained and the liquid diluted with lemon juice, water and sugar, then bottled. The bottles have to be stored with their caps loose initially then, when fermentation has subsided, the caps are tightened and the bottles stored in a cool place. The result is a bubbly, spicy, lemon drink.

GINGERBREAD British Gingerbread is a cake flavoured with ginger and treacle (molasses). The French equivalent (pain d'épice), whose name means literally 'spice bread', is a cake with a basis of flour, honey and spices (it need not contain ginger). The use of honey as the only sweetening product for breads or cakes goes back to ancient times. Aristophanes mentions melitunta, which was made with sesame flour, eggs and fresh cheese, and coated generously with honey after cooking. The Romans prepared panis mellitus with German wheat flour, honey, pepper and dried fruit. The Chinese making (honey bread) is mentioned as part of the rations of the horsemen of Genghis Khan. It is generally believed that Gingerbread was introduced to Europe during the time of the Crusades. At Pithiviers, however, it is held that Gingerbread was introduced into the city by St. Gregory, an American bishop who took refuge there in the 11th century. Whatever the case, it was from that time that the manufacture of Gingerbread spread into the Netherlands, Britain, Germany, Belgium, France and Italy.

The guild of pain d'epiciers, founded at Reims, was officially recognized by Henri IV in 1596. According to A. Sloamovici in Ethnocuisine de la Bourgogne (1973), pain d'epice 'was the monopoly of the city of Reims, and at first manufactured exclusively with rye flour. In Burgundy, however, the boichet or boichee, made with wheat flour, honey and leaven, had been known since the 14th century, and gauldery bread, made of honey and millet flour, was known in the 25th century.' Reims retained the monopoly until the Revolution, then Dijon, where the local production gave rise to a flourishing trade, took it over.

Gingerbread was formerly regarded primarily as a fairground delicacy. In Paris the Gingerbread Fair, which became the Throne Fair in the 19th century, had been held since the 11th century on the site of the present Saint-Antoine Hospital, where there was then an abbey. The monks sold their won ginger bread cakes there, in the shape of the little pigs. Gingerbread was sold in many different shapes (animals, little men, flowers) as well as the large traditional pure or the ball. Belgium speculos, which are made of gingerbread, depict all kinds of popular characters (harlequin, Columbine, Saint Nicholas).

Today two types of gingerbread are made in France that of Dijon, made with wheat flour and egg yolks; and couque, made with rye flour. The demi-couque, or couque batarde, made with a mixture of flours, is used mainly for the large gingerbread pure loaves. In industrially manufactured products, the honey is totally or partially replaced by other sweetening agents (invert sugar, glucose, grape must) and the spices are often artificial essences. However, it is always prepared according to the traditional method: the flour and sweetening agents are mixed together and matured in a cool, dry place for about a month (formerly for several months). It is then mixed with baking powder and spices, shaped, glazed with mil and eggs, and baked in the oven Ordinary gingerbread is baked in pave loaves, while fancy gingerbread is cut into hearts and various other shapes.

Although it is eaten mainly at teatime or at festivals (particularly in Belgium and Germany), gingerbread also has some uses in cookery, for thickening sauces, ragouts and carbonades, especially when beer is used in the recipe.

Gingerbread can easily be made at home. The best results for pain d'epice are achieved with a strongly flavoured honey, traditionally buckwheat or heater honey. Wheat flour is generally used (sometimes mixed with rye flour), and flavourings can include orange-flower water, orange or lemon rind (zest), star anise or cinnamon, or a mixture of spices as well as ginger. Orange or apricot a mamalade may also be added to the mixture. After baking the top of the cake may be decorated with pieces of angel green walnuts or candied orange peel.

RECIPES

Gingerbread

Warm together 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) margarine or lard (shortening) and 200 g (7 oz. ¾ cup) milk and allow to cool. Sift 200 g (7 z. 2 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, 1 teaspoon mixed spice, 2 teaspoons ground ginger and 1 teaspoon bicarbonate of soda (baking soda) into a bowl. Add the treacle mixture, 50 g (2 oz. ¾ cup) brown sugar and 2 eggs. Beat well. Pour into a 18 cm (7 in). square tin (pan) lined with greaseproof (wax) paper. Bake in preheated oven at 150°C (300°F, gas 2) for 1 ¼-1 ½ hours, until firm to the touch

Pain d'epice

Heat 500 g (18 z. 1 ½ cups) honey to boiling point, then skim it. Place in an earthenware bowl 500 g (18 oz. 4 ½ cups) sifted plain (al-purpose) flour make a well in the centre, pour the honey into it and mix a wooden spoon. (some flours absorb more liquid than others; it may be necessary to add more liquid in order to obtain a firm paste.) Gather the paste into a ball, wrap it in a cloth and let it stand for 1 hour. Then add 2 ½ teaspoons baking powder and knead the paste thoroughly. mix in 2 teaspoons aniseed, a generous pinch of cinnamon, the same amount of powdered cloves and ½ teaspoon grated lemon or orange rind (zest).

Alternatively, mix the sifted flour directly with the same weight of liquid honey. Let the paste sand, then knead it hard with 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) caster (superfine) sugar, 2 teaspoons bicarbonate of soda (baking soda). 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) skinned and chopped almonds and 65 g (2 ½ oz. ½ cup) mixed and chopped candied orange and lemon peel.

Pour the mixture into a 23 cm (9 in) square cake tin (pan) or a buttered manque mould. Bake in a preheated oven at 190°C (375°F, gas 5) for about 30 minutes, as soon as the cake is cooked, quickly brush the top with some milk sweetened to a thick syrup or with sugar cooked to the fine thread stage (see sugar) and glaze for a few seconds in a cool oven.

GINGER WINE Water, ginger, yeast, sugar, lemon, raisins, pepper and sometimes alcohol; mixed with whisky to make Whisky Mac.

GINKGO NUT The oval, pale green fruit of the Asian ginkgo tree. The olive-sized kernel is much used in Chinese and Japanese cooking, either roasted or grilled (broiled), as a garnish for fish or poultry or, in the autumn, simply as a dessert nut. A typical dish consists of large prawns (shrimp mixed with ginkgo nuts, pieces of chicken and mushrooms cooked on hot cooking salt in an earthenware casserole).

GINSENG The root of a plant growing in mountainous regions of Korea and Manchuria. It is considered to be the 'root of life' by the Chinese, who have attributed many therapeutic, magical and aphrodisiac properties to it. Used mainly in a tonic drink, ginseng is also used to make a herbal tea, sweets (candies), pastilles, dyes and ointment. It can also be presented whole in alcohol or dried and used as seasoning in the same way as ginger. Its taste is similar to that of fennel.

GIRAUMON A type of ground cultivated mainly in the West Indies and some tropical countries. There are two varieties: one with a large fruit (3-4 kg. 6 ½ - 9 lb.), the other with smaller fruit (about 1 kg 2 ¾ lb.), the latter being preferred, because giraumons do not keep once they are opened. Its firm flesh is sweet and slightly musky. Also called bounnet turc (Turkish bonnet) and citrouille iroquoise (Iroquois pumpkins), giraumons can be eaten raw like cucumbers, but are usually cooked like pumpkins, especially in West Indian cookery (in a ratatouille called giraumonade and in ragouts). When green, they are used to make jam, and the leaves are sometimes used like sorrel.

GIRELLA girella a small, brightly coloured Mediterranean rock fish, with spiky rays on its dorsal fin. Its flesh is delicate and tasty but full of bones. Girella is sometimes served fried, but it is used mainly in bouillabaisse.

GITE A LA NOIX A French cut of beef from the top of the leg. With the round of beef, which extends from it, it was formerly classified as braising meat but is now used for grilling (broiling) and roasting. The round of beef is lean, tender and tasty, Gite a la noix is also used to make steak tartare and beef on skewers. For roasting, it is larded and tied with string.

GIVRY Red and white AOC wines from the Cote Chalonnaise in southern Burgundy. The reds are made from Pinot Noir, the Whites from Chardonnay. The Cote Chalonnaise has a proud history and is said to have been planted with vines since Roman times.

GIZZARD A digestive pouch in birds, consisting of a thick muscle. If the gizzard is not cooked with the bird or if it is not minced in the stuffing, it can be fried or roasted separately (particularly duck or goose gizzard) or prepared in a ragout of giblets. It is also often preserved. When a chicken is drawn, the gizzard is slit in two to remove the small stones and the thick envelope that surrounds them.

GJETOST originally made in Norway from goat's milk whey, this sweet, brown cheese is now factory made from pure goat's milk or a mixture of cow's and goat's milk, which is cooked until caramelized. The designation Ekete Gjetosi on the label means that the cheese is made solely from goat's milk-gjet means goat in Norwegian. It is moulded in blocks weighing between 200 g (7 oz) and 4 kg (9 lb.).

GLACE Describing fruits that are crystallized (candied) or in liqueur and petits fours that are coated with a syrup cooked to the 'crack stage' so that they have a hard, shiny layer. The word is also used for fruits and chestnuts (marrons glacés) preserved in syrup.

In France the term is also applied to many iced desserts and drinks, and to cakes and pastries covered with icing (frosting).

GLASSWARE Common soda glass is transparent or translucent materials made from the fusion of silica (sand, sodium carbonate (soda) and calcium carbonate (lime). Crystal glassware is made from flint glass a very clear glass containing lead oxide, silica, potassium carbonate and potassium nitrate, good quality crystal glass makes a clear ringing sound when struck. Common and crystal glassware may be engraved, coloured or gilded. In spite of its fragility and poor resistance to sudden changes in temperature, glass is widely used for table- and kitchenware, not to mention bottles, because of its transparency and resistance to chemicals.

The history of glass. Egyptian paintings show that the art of glass-blowing was known as far back as the 4th century BC, and glass objects have been in existence for more than 5,000 years, until the Middle Ages, however, pottery utensils were more common in ordinary households, glassware being rather rare and served for luxury use. The glass industry in France dates from the Gallo-Roman era. In the 6th century the glassware of Clotaire I consisted of concave, stemless goblets, their borders decorated with a fine strip of coloured glass. There were also bottles and white-enamelled dessert cups. But the use of glass in tableware as we know it today did not come until the 14th century. The 16th-century Venetian glass-blowers were the first to obtain a colourless glass which they named cristallo. Shortly afterwards, the glass-makers of Bohemia discovered that clear glass could also be made by adding limestone to the glass paste. However, it was an Englishman, George Ravenscroft, who in 1675 discovered lead crystal. In France the Cristalleries de Baccarat dates, in its present form, from 1816.

- The industrial and technical progress made during the 19th and 20th centuries has produced a wide range of drinking glasses. Venetian glass ornamented with filigree work, heavily patterned Bohemian crystal, coloured and engraved tall wine glasses from the Rhine and wide-mouthed flute glass from Dutch glassworks have become collectors' items. Coloured glass is not often used for wine glasses, so that the natural colour of the wine may be appreciated. The wine glass should never be completely filled, and it must be wide enough for the aroma of the wine to be appreciated, since part of the pleasure of drinking wine is to sample its bouquet.
- Glassware for a formal meal, three matching glasses are required (in decreasing size) for water, for red wine and for white wine. The set is sometimes completed by a champagne flute. However, it is inadvisable to set out too many glasses, because they can get in the way of the cutlery and the setting is, therefore, often reduced to two glasses, one for water and the other for wine. For an informal meal, the latter may be used for several different wines or be changed in the course of the meal.

Glasses come in a wide range of shapes and sizes. Most wine-producing regions have designed thin-walled glasses of a particular shape to allow the best possible tasting of their wine. Glasses are used for Cognac, Armagnac and marc brandy; liqueur glasses are usually short and narrow, made of thicker glass and often without a stem. Beer is served in a tankard or tall glass. 'short' cocktails are served in a cocktail glass of 80-120 ml (2 ½ - 4 fl. oz ¼- ½ cup) capacity, while long drinks are served in a tall 300 ml (10 fl. oz., 1 ¼ cups) Collins glass. Large glass goblets may be used for mineral water and fruit cups, medium goblets for wines and for aperitifs with water or a mixer, and small goblets for dry aperitifs, port and short drinks, such as sherry. There are also various specially designed glasses, such as champagne tulips and brandy goblets. A mixing glass may be used instead of a cocktail shaker to prepare cocktails, it has capacity of 600-700 ml (20 fl oz., 2 ½ cups).

GLASSWORT A small fleshy plant, also called marsh samphire, with salty sap. It grows in European salt marshes as far north as Norway and also in the camargue (mistral calls it sans-souiro). It is similar to rock samphire. The plant is harvested in summer for its tender green tips, which can be eaten in a salad, cooked like French (green) beans or pickled and used as a condiment, like gherkins (sweet dill pickles.).

GLAZE OR STOCK GLAZE glace de cuisine A syrup substance obtained by boiling down an unthickened stock of meat, poultry, more rarely game, or even fish. Stock glazes are used as an essence to be added to certain sauces in order to enhance their flavour or to baste dishes to be browned in the oven. They are also used as the base for a sauce when adding other ingredients.

Stock glazes may be used to speed up the preparation of soups, coulis and aspics. Ready-made meat glazes, marketed as 'extracts' or 'essences', are available, they are mostly made of beef and vegetable matter. They offer a more limited range of flavours than cooked glazes, but the latter no longer play as important a role in cooking as they used to because they take a long time to prepare, as is demonstrated in this impressive recipe taken from secrets de la nature et de l'art concenant les alimets (1769).

'Take a quarter of large ox, a whole calf (or a party only, depending on its size), two sheep, two dozen old hens and two old cocks, or a dozen old turkeys, plucked and drawn. After defatting all this meat and scalding and cleaning the calf's and sheep's feet separately, put it all in a large boiler. Add the hot liquor from 12-14 litres of stag's horn gratings, boiled separately, and put through the press. Then pour four buckets of spring water over it all. Put the lid on the boiler, sealing the edge with a flour-and-water paste. Apply a weight of 50-60 pounds. Boil the meat over a low even flame; without skimming it, for 6 hours or more if necessary, until it is sufficiently cooked, when the bones can be easily detached. Remove the largest bones, leaving the boiler over the heat to keep the meat very hot. Take the meat out as quickly as possible; chop it up immediately and then part it in large press with hot iron planes to extract all the juices as soon as the operation is completed, add the extracted juices to the hot stock left in the boiler and strain immediately through a large horsehair strainer'

The word 'glaze' is also used for any substance used to give food a glossy surface

RECIPE

Meat glaze

Glaze de viande Remove all the fat from a brown stock. When it is as clear as possible, boil it down by half. Strain through a muslin cloth (cheesecloth), then boil it down again and strain. Continue this process until it will coat the back of a spoon, each time reducing the temperature a little more as the glaze becomes more concentrated. Pour the meat glaze into small containers and keep them in the refrigerator.

A similar method is used with a poultry or game stock to obtain a poultry or game glaze.

By boiling down a fish fumet to a syrupy consistency, then decanting it and straining it through muslin a light-coloured fish stock is obtained, which is used to enhance the flavour of a fish sauce or to pour over fish before putting it in the oven.

GLAZING The process of creating a glossy surface on food. This may be achieved by several methods according to the effect required.

Gold food is brushed with such glazes as arrowroot, aspic, jelly, stock glazes and sugar syrup.

Desserts, such as fruit tarts and flans, babas and savarins, are coated with a fruit glaze, a liquid jelly made from finely sieved apricot jam or redcurrant jelly, usually with gelatine added. As well as being decorative, this prevents the fruit from drying out or oxidizing.

Food that is to be baked, particularly pastry, is coated with whole beaten egg, egg yolk only, milk or milk and sugar.

Hot cooked food, particularly vegetables, can be glazed either by cooking with butter, sugar and very little liquid or by brushing with melted butter when cooked.

Food coated with sauces that are rich in egg yolk, cream or butter is grilled or broiled under, or baked in, a very high heat to form a shiny brown surface.

In France the term glacage is also used for glazing cakes with icing (frosting) and for the preparation of many cold or frozen desserts and chilled drinks.

CLOUCESTER A traditional English cow's-milk cheese, with a firm, close texture. Double Gloucester is larger than Single Gloucester, which is seldom made now. The main difference is that Single Gloucester is made with skimmed evening milk and whole morning milk, while Double Gloucester is made with whole milk. Gloucester is compact and smooth, with a delicate and creamy flavour. It is used for making sandwiches and canapes, but it is also sometimes served as a dessert, with a salad or a fruit compote.

GLUCOS The simplest of the carbohydrates and the end product when carbohydrates are digested by the body. Glucose is present in the blood and is used as a source of energy by the body. It is found naturally in ripe fruit and honey.

Glucose is made industrially by heating starch with various acids. This produces dextrins first and then an impure form of glucose itself. Two forms of glucose are used commercially, viscous and semi solid. Glucose has many industrial uses, notably to increase the sugar content of wine and beer, and in the manufacture of syrup, confectionery and jam. Liquid glucose (corn syrup or clear corn syrup in America) is a clear syrup of glucose and other sugars. It is used in the preparation of sugar paste and to prevent sugar syrup from crystallizing.

CNOCCHI Small dumplings made of flour, semolina (semolina flour), potato or choux pastry. They are usually poached, then they may be cooked au gratin in the oven and served as a hot entrée. This dish is Italian in origin (the word means 'lumps') and is classified with pasta, but it is also found in Austro-Hungarian and Alsatian cookery in the form of Knepfle, knodel, noques or quenelles, which are all quite similar.

Italian gnocchi alla Romana are made with semolina, egg and cheese; gnocchi à la parisienne are prepared from choux pastry with milk and cheese; and gnocchi à la piemontaise or à l'alsacienne are made with potato puree, eggs and flour. The basic ingredients can be varied by incorporating various cooked vegetables (pumpkins, spinach, green vegetables, beetroot), which colour the gnocchi, by varying the cheese (Emmental, Parmesan, Ricotta) or the flour (maize, wheat); and by including chicken liver or brains, herbs and condiments (nutmeg, fines herbes, paprika, oregano, parsley).

RECIPES

Potato gnocchi

Cook 3 medium-sized potatoes in boiling salted water for about 20 minutes. Meanwhile grate 6-7 medium-sized peeled potatoes and squeeze them in a cloth to extract as much water as possible. Peel and mash the cooked potatoes, then mix them with the grated raw potatoes. Add 100-125 g (4-4 ½ oz. 1 cup) plain (all-purpose) flour, a little grated nutmeg, salt and pepper, then 2 whole eggs, one after the other. Mix thoroughly. Boil some salted water use 2 spoons to shape the paste into small, round portions. Drop them into the water and leave to simmer for 6-8 minutes. Drain the gnocchi and place them on a cloth. Butter a gratin dish and arrange the gnocchi in it, coated with 200 ml (7 fl. oz. ¾ cup) crème fraiche and sprinkled with grated cheese. Brown in a very hot oven.

Gnocchi a la parisienne

Make some choux pastry using milk instead of water and flavour with grated nutmeg. Add 75 g (3 oz. ¾ cup) grated parmesan per 500 g (18 oz) dough. Boil some salted water, using 1 tablespoon salt per 1 litre (1 ¾ pints. 4 cups). Push the dough through a piping (pastry) bag fitted with a large plain nozzle so that it drops into the water in pieces measuring about 3 cm (1 ¼ in.). Poach for a few minutes, then drain and arrange on a cloth. Line a gratin dish with Mornay sauce, place the gnocchi in it, cover them with more sauce, place the gnocchi in it, cover them with more sauce, sprinkle with grated Gruyere, and pour over melted butter. Brown quickly in a preheated oven at 250°C (480°F, gas 9).

Gnocchi alla Romana

Pour 125 g (4 ½ oz. ¾ cup) semolina into 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) boiling milk and stir to obtain a very thick smooth porridge. Add salt, pepper and grated nutmeg, then 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) freshly grated parmesan cheese and 25 g (1 oz. 2 tablespoons) butter. Allow to cool slightly and then beat in 1 lightly beaten egg and 1 yolk.

Spread the paste evenly on a moistened slab or in a tin (pan), leave to cool completely, then chill until firm. Cut with a pastry (cookie) cutter into rounds about 5 cm (2 in) in diameter. Arrange the rounds in a buttered gratin dish and sprinkle with extra grated Parmesan cheese. Pour over melted butter and brown slowly in the oven. Alternatively, deep-fry small balls of this paste, drain on paper towels and serve immediately, with tomato sauce if liked. (The paste can also be made without butter or grated cheese.)

Gnocchi with herbs and tomatoes

Wash 500 g (18 oz). Potatoes and bake them in their skins in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) for 40 minutes. Peel them while still hot and mash them to a puree. Arrange them with a well in the middle and allow to cool. Peel and seed 500 g (18 oz). Ripe tomatoes and cut into small cubes. Chop up ½ onion, 1 shallot and 1 small celery stick. Heat some olive oil in a sauté pan and stir in the onion, shallot, celery and 1 garlic clove. Remove the later when it is golden. Now add the tomatoes, fry for a few minutes, then add a little basil, rosemary sage and mint. Season with salt and pepper and reduce the cooking juices. Then add 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) plain(all-purpose) flour 2 pinches nutmeg. 3 egg yolks and 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) freshly grated Parmesan cheese to the potato puree. Add a little flour to make a ball that is neither too dry nor too moist divide into 100 g (4 oz). Chunks and shape into cylinder on a floured surface. Cut the cylinders into small pieces and press them to the back of a fork to make a slightly concave shape with ridges. Poach the gnocchi for 6-8 minutes in boiling salted water.

GOAT A domestic animal bred mostly for its milk. In France, where a wide variety of goat's-milk cheese is produced, the main rearing areas are Poitou, Berry, Dauphine and Touraine.

Goat's meat is fairly firm. With a pleasant flavour but a strong smell. It is consumed principally in the regions where the goats are bred; when the animal is young, it is eaten roasted or marinated, sometimes even smoked and dried (in the mountains). The male (bouc) is today eaten only when a kid, but for centuries, in spite of its leathery flesh and pungent smell it was a basic meat of the poor, the word boucherie (butcher's shop) is derived from bouc.

GOAT'S-MILK CHEESES Cheveres in France cheeses prepared exclusively from goat's milk contain at least 45% butterfat. Mic-chevre cheeses are made from a mixture of cow's milk and goat's milk (at least 25%). Among the best known French goat's-milk cheeses are cabecou, Chabichou, Chevreton, Crotin, Pouligny-Saint-Pierre, Saitne-Mure, Selles-sur-Cher, valencay.

Goat's milk is increasingly being used in other countries to make both hard and soft cheeses include MinGabhar from County Wexford in Ireland, Forroche, Tymshoro, Vaulscombe and Wigmore from England and Wales; and Coach Farm and Cypress Grove in the United States of America. Firm goat's – milk cheeses include Ticle More from Devon and Ribblesdale from Yorkshire in England, from Yorkshire in England; Pen y Bont from Wales; and Idaho Goatster in the United States of America.

GOBLET A wide-mouthed drinking vessel. Antique goblets were made of gold and silver, often exquisitely engraved and embellished with precious stones

GOBO A root of a variety of burdock. It is long, thin and brown, and is commonly used in Japan as a condiment, finely chopped usually blanched. Gobo has a flavour similar to that of cardoon and is used in cooking stocks and vegetable mixtures.

GOBY gobie A small sea fish, known in France as goupon de mer, of which there are numerous types. Its flesh has a delicate taste, but because it is so small it is usually served fried.

GODARD A classic garnish for large cuts of meat, poultry, and calves' sweetbreads. According to the dictionaries de l'Academie de gastronomes, it was dedicated to the farmer-general and man of letters Godard d'Aucour (17-16-95), but other authorities say that it is named after the chef de cuisine of the Elysee Palace at the time of Sadi-Carnot. The garnish consists of quenelles (Lamb's sweetbreads and glazed), cockscombs and kidneys, small truffles and fluted mushroom caps. These are covered by a sauce made of white wine or champagne with a ham mirepoix.

RECIPE

Godard sauce

Cook 2 tablespoons ham mirepoix in butter, add 200 ml (7 fl. oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) champagne, and boil down by half. Moisten with 200 ml (7 fl. oz. $\frac{3}{4}$ cup) demi-glace sauce and 7 tablespoons mushroom essence and boil down again by one-third strain.

GODIVEAU The delicate forcemeat, consisting of veal and fat, used to make quenelles, which are served as hot entrée or used to fill vol-au-vent or used to accompany meat dishes. The word seems to be a corruption of gogues de veau (gogues of veal). Godiveau can also be made from fish (pike in particular) or poultry. The mixture, which must be very smooth, springy and yet firm, requires quite a long preparation time, because the raw meat and fat are pounded with cream or panada, eggs and seasoning.

RECIPES

Godiveau Yonnais

Pound together in a mortar 500 g (18 oz) trimmed diced beef suet, 500 g (18 oz) frangipane panada and 4 egg whites (these ingredients may first be put through a blender). Add 500 g (18 oz) pike flesh and season with salt and pepper. Work vigorously with a spatula, then with a pestle, rub through a fine sieve, place in an earthenware dish and work with a spatula until smooth.

The forcemeat is shaped into quenelles and poached in salted water when served as a garnish for pike.

Godiveau with cream

Chop up 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) fillet of veal and pound it. Also chop up and pound 1 kg (2 ¼ lb) beef suet. Mix these ingredients together and add 1 tablespoon salt, ¼ teaspoons pepper, a pinch of grated nutmeg, 4 whole eggs and 3 egg yolks, grinding vigorously with a pestle the whole time, rub the forcemeat through a fine sieve and spread it on a board. Leave on ice or in the refrigerator until the next day. Put the forcemeat back in the mortar and pound it again, gradually adding 750 ml (1 ¾ pints, 3 ¼ cups) single (light) cream.

To test the consistency of the godiveau, poach a small ball and rectify if necessary, adding a little iced water if it is too firm or a little egg white if it is too light. Shape into quenelles and poach.

GOGUES Savoury black puddings (blood sausages) that are specifically of Anjou. Made of vegetables, bacon, cream and blood, they are poached in boiling water, then cut into slices and fried.

RECIPE

Gogoues

Chop 250 g (9 oz) onions, 250 g (9 oz) spinach beet leaves, 250 g (9 oz) spinach leaves and 250 g (9 oz) lettuce leaves. Season with salt and pepper, leave to stand for 12 hours, then braise over a very gentle heat with 40 g (1 ½ oz. 3 tablespoons) lard in a casserole. Dice 250 g (9 oz) fat bacon and cook without browning. Add to the chopped vegetables and season with a pinch of cinnamon and mixed spice. Take off the heat and add 7 tablespoons double (heavy) cream and 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) pig's blood. Adjust the seasoning. Fill a pig's intestine with this mixture, twisting it very 10-15 cm (4-6 in) after filling. Poach the gogues in salted water, just below boiling point, for about 30 minutes. When they rise to the surface, prick them with a pin to prevent them from bursting, drain and leave to cool. When they are cold, cut the gogues into thick slices and brown them in butter or lard in a frying pan.

GOLD a precious metal used for decorative tableware or as a veneer, in the form of silver gilt. Gold also has some culinary uses. In the Middle Ages pates and roast birds were wrapped in thin gold leaf. Even today, chocolates (palets d'or) are decorated with a tiny piece of gold leaf, and minute pieces of gold are suspended in the liqueur Danziger (goldwasser, which is used to flavour soufflé Rotchshild. It is also an authorized food additive (E175), a colouring agent for confectionery and cake decorations.

GOMPHIDE A fleshy, viscous mushroom that grows under conifers. It is edible if peeled carefully, although its flesh turns black when cooked. It is usually sautéed in oil and served with noisette butter and a little fresh cream.

GONDOLE A decoration consisting of a stiffened white table napkin, reinforced by a sheet of greaseproof (was) paper or foil and foled using a particular technique into the shape of a curved horn. In catering gondoles are used to decorate the two ends of a long dish when serving fish.

GOOSE A migratory bird originally prized as a game bird and later domesticated. The Romans practised the forcefeeding of geese; the preparation of foie gras therefore has a long history.

All breeds of domesticated goose are probably descended from the greylag goose. In France geese providing foie gras may weigh up to 12 kg (26 ½ lb) after fattening; they are found mainly around Toulouse, Landes and Strasbourg. White geese, from Bourbon or Poitou, are descended from the snow goose, and they weigh less (5-6 kg. 11-13lb.). Laying birds may be kept until they are five or six years old; because the meat is by then very tough and dry, it is usually stewed or preserved. Table geese are killed at three months, by which time the breast is well developed and the meat has a delicate flavour. In areas where geese are bred primarily for foie gras, the remainder of the bird (the meat and carcass, called the paletot) is sold as it is, or cut up and preserved, or made into rillettes. The gizzard, heart, tongue, neck and giblets are all used in various savoury dishes. Today, in spite of competition from the turkey, roast goose is still the typical dish cooked at Christmas and New Year in Scandinavia and Germany. Formerly in Britain roast goose with sage and onion stuffing was served at Christmas and Michaelmas. Two famous recipes for cooking goose come from northern Europe: goose à la Pinstar de Vise from Belgium and smoked goose from Pomerania. Many of the recipes given for cooking turkey and chicken can be used for goose.

RECIPES

Balotine of goose with Savigny-les-Beaune Take a young goose weighing about 3.5 kg (8 lb) and cut off the wings and legs. Bone the legs and remove the meat from the wings to make the forcemeat. Remove the Supremes from the carcass and refrigerate until required.

Stuffed goose legs en ballotines Grind the reserved wing meat and the liver very finely. Place in a bowl over a dish of ice and work the mixture until smooth. Then blend in an egg white followed by 300 ml (½ pint, 1 ¼ cups) double (heavy) cream. Add salt, pepper and a pinch of cayenne pepper, and 50 g (2 oz. ½ cup) boiled diced chestnuts, stuff the boiled legs with this mixture, shape them into ballotines and tie them. Spread some slices onion over the base of an ovenproof dish and lay the carcass of the goose on top. Then place the ballotines on top of the carcass and braise them in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4) for 45-60 minutes, basting frequently so that they remain moist. (The remainder of the stuffing can be used to make godiveau.)

Chestnut custards (Mix 300 ml (½ pint, 1 ¼ cups) single (light) cream 3 whole eggs, 150 g (5 oz. ½ cup) chestnut puree and 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) boiled diced chestnuts. Butter 8 small dariole moulds and divide the mixture among them. Cook in a bain marie in preheated oven at 170° C (325°F, gas 3). Leave for a few minutes before unmoulding.

Onions stuffed with garlic puree Blanch 8 medium sized Spanish onions in fast-boiling salted water, refresh them and drain them carefully. Peel 500 g (18 oz) garlic cloves, cook them in milk, drain them and rub them through a fine sieve. Reheat them with a little cream. Stuff the onions with the garlic puree, filling them to the top.

Accompanying sauce Remove the fat from the liquor in which the ballotines were braised and deglaze the pan with a bottle of Savigny-les-Beaune. Reduce by one-third, strain and thicken the sauce with 200 g (7 oz. Scant 1 cup) butter. Adjust the seasoning.

Fried Supremes Fry the Supremes in the goose fat until the outside is golden brown but the inside is still pink.

Presentation On each plate, place a thin slice of supreme, a slice of ballotine, a stuffed onion and a chestnut custard. Pour the sauce around the items without covering the sliced meat. Serve the rest of the sauce separately.

Goose à la bourguignonne

Dice 100 g (4 oz) blanched lean bacon and fry it in 25 g (1 oz, 2 tablespoons) butter. Using the same pan, fry 20 small onions and then 20 sliced mushrooms. Remove them and brown the goose all over in the same butter. Remove the goose, deglaze the pan with 500 ml (17 fl oz, 2 cups) red wine, boil down to reduce it by half and then add 400 ml (14 fl oz, 1 ¾ cups) demi-glace sauce (or reduced stock). Boil for 5 minutes and add a bouquet garni. Put the goose back into the pan. Start the cooking over a high heat, then reduce the heat, cover the pan and cook gently for 30 minutes. Add the bacon, onions and mushrooms and continue to cook over a moderate heat, with the pan still covered, for 45-60 minutes. Remove the bouquet garni, and either serve the goose and its accompaniments in the cooking dish or arrange it on a large serving dish and pour the sauce over it.

Goose à l'alsacienne

Braise some sauerkraut with a small piece of lean bacon, stuff a goose with 1 sausage meat seasoned with salt, pepper, a pinch of allspice and a little chopped onion and parsley. Truss and roast the goose as for roast with sage and onion stuffing, basting it frequently. When the goose is half-cooked, add a little of the goose fat to the sauerkraut and continue cooking. Poach Strasbourg sausages gently in hereby simmering water. Spread the sauerkraut over a long serving dish and place the goose in the centre. Cut the bacon into pieces and arrange them around the bird, alternating the bacon with the sausages. Keep everything hot. Skim the fat from the goose cooking juices and deglaze the pan with white wine and an equal quantity of stock. Boil down to reduce. Serve the sauce separately.

Goose à l'instar de Vise

Take a 3.5 kg (8 lb) goose that has not yet started laying and poach it in white stock flavoured with 2 heads (bulbs) of garlic for 1 ½ hours. Drain it, cut into pieces and place these in a sauté pan. Moisten with goose fat and simmer, with the lid on, until cooked.

Meanwhile, prepare a veloute sauce using the goose fat (for the roux) and the cooking juices from the goose. Cook over a low heat for 1 hour. Thicken the veloute with 4 egg yolks, then pass it through a very fine strainer. Add a few tablespoons cream and a purée of the garlic that was cooked with the goose.

Drain the pieces of goose and add to the sauce. Heat well and serve in a deep dish.

Goose en dube Capitole

Stuff the goose with a fine forcemeat mixed with foie gras and diced truffles. Truss and braise it in the usual way. When it is almost cooked, remove the string used for trussing and pour the braising liquid through a fine strainer. Put the goose back into the pan with 250 g (9 oz.) small mushrooms, an equal quantity of stoned (pitted) blanched olive and 250 g (9 oz) small fried chopolatas. Pour the cooking juices over the goose and finish cooking in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4).

Goose hearts en papillotes

Cut 4 large squares of foil. Place 3 carefully cleaned goose hearts in the centre of each square together with 100 g (4 oz) cleaned and sliced cep mushrooms. Season generously with salt and pepper and fold the foil into parcels, sealing the edges thoroughly. Place them on a gril over very hot embers. Cook for about 20 minutes on each side.

Goose in the pot

The day before it is required, stuff a young goose weighing about 3.5 kg (8 lb) with the following mixture: the chopped liver and heart, 2-3 diced apples and 3-4 desalted anchovy fillets pounded to a paste. Leave the goose in a cool place for 24 hours. The following day make a stock with 20 unpeeled garlic cloves, a bouquet garni and an onion studded with 2 cloves. Stud the goose all over with garlic and poach it in the stock for 1 ½ hours, skimming the pan when it comes to the boil.

Stew some dessert apples and add to them 2 desalted, pounded anchovies and 1 cup of the strained cooking stock. Prepare some small gougeres: for every 2 eggs used for the dough, add 100 g (4 oz) Gruyere cheese and 1 pureed anchovy fillet.

Serve the goose very hot, accompanied by the apple and garnished with the gougeres.

Roast goose with fruit

Stuff a goose and roast it as of roast goose with sage and onion stuffing. While it is cooking poach some quartered pears in boiling syrup until translucent. Peel and core some small apples and sprinkle them with lemon juice. Fill the centres with redcurrant jelly. Half an hour before the goose is cooked, place the apples around it and baste with the goose fat that has collected in the pan. Complete the cooking. Place the goose on a long serving dish and arrange the apples and the drained pear quarters around it. Keep hot at the front of the oven. Eglaze the cooking pan with a little of the pear syrup, reduce the liquid by half and pour it into a sauceboat (gravy boat).

Stuff the goose with this mixture and sew up the vent. Calculate the cooking time at 40 minutes per 1 kg. 20 minutes per 1 lb. in, in a preheated oven at 180°C (350°F, gas 4). Drain off excess fat during roasting. Place it on a long serving dish, pour over the deglazed cooking juices and serve with unsweetened or very slightly sweetened apple sauce.

GOOSE BARNACLE A type of barnacle, which is permanently attached to a rock by a long, stalk-like foot. In Biarritz it is called operne, in Brittany it is called poche-peze; while in saint-jean-de-Luz it is known as lamperna. It is found in large numbers on rocky reefs battered by the sea but is so difficult and dangerous to harvest that it rarely appears on the dining table. However, the natives of Biarritz, insist that it is delicious when cooked for 20 minutes in a court-bouillon (only the foot is edible). It is the emblem of a gastronomic society, les chevaliers de l'Operne, which is dedicated to increasing the consumption of seafood.

GOOSEBERRY The fruit of the gooseberry bush, a large berry with a slightly hairy, green, ambergreen or pink skin. The French name, grosseille a maquereau, derives from the use of the fruit to prepare a sauce traditionally served with mackerel. Gooseberries are grown on a small scale in France and on a large scale in the Netherlands and Britain.

Depending on type, gooseberries may be eaten raw with sugar or used to make tarts, sorbets. Fools, jellies and syrups. The larger, pink, fruit are sweeter than the small green varieties and are known as dessert gooseberries. They are used in puddings, chutneys and fruit salads and in sauces to complement fish and duck. They freeze well.

RECIPES

Gooseberry jelly

Remove the stalks from 3 kg (6 ½ lb) gooseberries and put them in a pan. cover and heat them, shaking them from time to time until the skins burst. Puree the fruit in a blender, then strain. Pour the juice obtained back into the pan. add 2.5 kg (5 ½ lb. 11 cups) granulated sugar and the juice and grated rind (zest) of 2 lemons. Cook over a high heat for 5 minutes, then lower the heat and cook for 15 minutes. Skim and pot.

Gooseberry sauce

Cook 500 g (18 oz) gooseberries in a saucepan with 500 ml (17 fl. oz. 2 cups) water and 6 tablespoons sugar. When the pulp becomes very soft, strain and serve piping hot. If the gooseberries are very ripe, add a few drops of lemon juice.

Gooseberry syrup

Mix a few tablespoons of water with 1 kg 92 ¼ lb. 4 ½ cups) caster (superfine) sugar and cook to the large ball stage (see sugar). Add 500 ml (17 fl. oz., 2 ¼ cups) strained gooseberry juice. Bring to the boil once more and then leave to stand, skim, then cook until the temperature reaches 103°C (217°F). Strain, bottle and seal.

GORENFLOT The name of one of Alexandre Damas's heroes, a larger-than-life monk who appears in La Dame de Monsoreau and les Quarante-Cinq. In the middle of the 19th century, this name was given to a large hexagonal baba, created by the Parisian pastrycook Boubonneux, and also to a garnish for pieces of braised meat, consisting of a julienne of red cabbage, slices of saveloy sausage and stuffed potatoes.

GORGONZOLA A DOP Italian cow's-milk cheese (48% fat), white or light yellow and streaked with blue Gorgonzola should be delicate and creamy with a natural grey rind, pitted with red. It has a distinct smell and can have a mellow, strong or sharp flavour, depending on its degree of maturity (it is ripened dry, in a cold, damp cellar. Cylindrical in shape, 25-30 cm (10-12 in) in diameter and 16-20 cm (6 ¼ - 8 in) high, it is wrapped in silver paper bearing its trademark due to the special manufacturing techniques that hot curds from the morning milking are used to line the moulds, while the cold curds from the evening milking are placed in the middle. Contrary to the normal manufacturing technique for blue cheeses, the mould Penicillium glaucum is not included.

The history of Gorgonzola is connected with the migration of cattle from the Alps to the south of the plains of the Po. Tired from their journey (structure in the Lombard dialect), the cattle were rested in the small town of Gorgonzola in the region of Bergamo. Their milk was used to make a soft cheese, Stracchino di Gorgonzola. Apparently, it was not until the beginning of the 11th century that this cheese became blue-veined, although the exact circumstances of this innovation are not known. In Lombardy they still make Panerone, a cheese similar to Gorgonzola, but not a blue cheese.

Gorgonzola is served in small cubes with appetizers, included in mixed salads, spread on canapés or presented as sauces for forcemeats and to flavour gratins, soufflés and flaky pastries. In Lombardy hot polenta may be served with a piece of melted Gorgonzola in the middle. In the Trieste area a mixture of Gorgonzola, mascarpone (a fresh creamy cheese), cream, anchovy, paste, cunin, chives and sweet mustard is served as a dessert.

TOTTSCHAL, ALFRED Swiss doctor and scholar born Geneva, 1873; died Paris, 1954). Founder of the medical gastronomy review Grandgousier (1934-48), he also published Histoire de l'alimentation et de la gastronomie (1984) in two volumes. This is a lively and well-documented study, which describes the way in which people have eaten and cooked from prehistory up to the 20th century. He collaborated with Prosper Montagne in the first edition of the Larousse Gastronomique. Published in 1938.

GOUDA A DOP Dutch cow's-milk cheese (30-40% fat) with a compressed paste. Firm to the touch, it is light yellow to yellow ochre, depending on whether it has matured for two or three months waxed rind, tinged with yellow or colourless), has been semi oven dried (golden rind) or oven dried (yellow rind). Its flavour can be mellow or pronounced. Gouda owes its name to a small Dutch port near Rotterdam, from which it was originally exported. It is made in flat rounds with a curved edge, 25-30 cm (10-12 in) in diameter and 7 cm (2 ¼ in) high, weighing 3-5 kg (6 ½ - 11 lb.) in France and Belgium it is usually made in a rectangular block (galantine) weighing 2-3 kg (4 ½ - 6 ½ lb.) 'Genuine', originating in the south of Holland, is protected by a label. Limited all over the world, factory-made Gouda is very similar to Edam both in taste and in the way it is used. The rare farmhouse cheese has a good fruity tang to its flavour on when he saw his skill in producing pieces moulees (decorative set pieces). Between 1840 and 1855 Gouffé ran a famous restaurant in the Faubourg saint-Honore. Later. Although Gouffé was semi-retired, Emperor Napoleon III always called upon him to prepare banquets, and Alexandre Dumas and Baron Brisse managed to persuade him to become the head chef at the Jockey Club. It was at this time that he published various culinary works.

His most important work, livre de cuisine (1867), was republished several and eventually revised and enlarged by Prosper Montagné. His other works include le Livre de conserves (1869), Le Livre de pâtisserie (1873) and le livre des soupes et des potages (1875).

His name has been given to a dish consisting of small pieces of sautéed meat coated with a Madeira-flavoured demi-glace sauce and garnished with potato nests filled with morels in cream and buttered asparagus tips.

GOUGERE Savoury choux, usually in round or ring shapes, flavoured with cheese (Gruyere, Comte or Emmental). In Burgundy cold gougères traditionally accompany wine-tasting in cellars. Individual or large gougères are also served warm as an entrée.

RECIPE

Gougères

Make 500 g (18 oz) unsweetened choux paste. After adding the eggs, blend in 100 g (4 oz. 1 cup) grated Gruyere cheese and a pinch of white pepper. Butter a baking sheet and shape the dough into small balls using a spoon or into a ring using a piping (pastry) bag. Brush with beaten egg, sprinkle with flakes of Gruyere and cook in the oven at 200°C (400°F, gas 6) for about 20 minutes until golden brown. Leave to cool in the oven with the heat switched off and the door half-open.

Gougères with celeriac, celery and cream of caviar.

Fit a piping (pastry) bag with a large fluted nozzle. Prepare 250 ml (8 fl. oz. 1 cup) gougère pastry. Pipe 4 rings 10 cm (4 in) in diameter and bake in a preheated oven at 240°C (475°F, gas 9). Slice in half horizontally and cool on a wire rack.

Coarsely chop some frisée; season with salt, pepper and lemon juice. Cut celery and celeriac (celery root) into matchsticks. Mix the frisée, celery and celeriac with 200 ml (7 fl. oz. 1 cup) whipped whipping cream and 25 g (1 oz. 1 generous tablespoon) caviar, working very gently with two forks in order not to damage the caviar.

Arrange a circle of lamb's lettuce on each plate and place the gougère, bases in the middle. Spoon the cream mixture on the bases and cover with the gougère tops. Serve freshly filled, garnished with diced tomato.

GOUJON Small strips of fish, typically plaice or sole, coated and fried. The name is derived from gadgeon, a small freshwater fish. The term is also used to describe strips of poultry coated in breadcrumbs and fried.

GOULASH A Hungarian beef soup named after the keepers of Magyar oxen (gulyas). The origin of this dish, which is not made with onions and paprika and garnished with potatoes, dates back to the 9th century, before the foundation of the Hungarian state, when nomadic tribes prepared a meal that was in keeping with their way of life. At that time goulash consisted of chunks of meat stewed slowly until the cooking liquid completely boiled away. The meat was dried in the sun and could be used later to prepare a stew or a soup by boiling it in water.

Traditionally, goulash is made in a special cauldron (bogrács). There are a number of regional variants of the recipe according to the cut of beef and the cooking fat used (pork fat or lard), but purists agree that goulash should not include flour or wine, not should soured (sour) cream be added just before serving. Hungarians regard Vinnese Goulash as a flour-thickened version of genuine goulash soup; in Hungary the latter is sometimes served with potatoes and csipetke (small quenelles of egg pasta, poached in stock).

RECIPE

Hungarian goulash

Peel 250 g (9 oz) onions and slice them into rings, cut 1.5 kg (3 ¼ lb) braising steak (chuck beef) into pieces of about 75 g (3oz). Melt 100 g (4 oz. ½ cup) lard in a casserole. When it is hot, put in the meat and onions and brown them. Add 500 g (18 oz) tomatoes, peeled, seeded and cut into quarters, then 1 crushed garlic clove, a bouquet garni, salt, pepper and finally 1 tablespoon mild Hungarian paprika. Add enough stock to cover the meat, bring to the boil, then reduce the heat, cover cook very gently for 2 hours, add 600 ml (1 pint, 2 ½ cups) boiling water and 800 g (1 ¾ lb) potatoes, peeled and cut into quarters. Again bring to the boil and continue boiling until the potatoes are cooked. Adjust the seasoning. Serve very hot.

GOUMI A wild berry that originated in the Far East but is now grown in the United States. The gourmi has a fleshy red or orange skin covered with silvery dots. When raw, its flesh is rather sour; it is therefore usually cooked and used in compotes or as a filling for tarts.

COURD (SQUASH) The fruit of several plants of the family Cucurbitaceae. Originating in tropical Asia and Africa, they have a thick skin and watery flesh and were used as vegetables marrows, courgettes (zucchini) and various squashes. Pumpkins are large, round fruits with yellow or red skin and flesh. They are eaten in winter in soups, gratin dishes, purees, souffles and pies. The courgette is a summer vegetable, but can now be obtained all year round. Squash melons have firm flesh and a flavour rather like an artichoke. The very small varieties can be pickled in vinegar. Custard marrows are eaten mostly in the West Indies. Winter and muscat squashes (the later do not keep well) are longer and wider, and tend to be more insipid and watery than courgettes, but they can be cooked in the same way. Their seeds must always be removed.

Calabashes and colocynths are grown as ornamentals because of their attractive colours, shapes and patterned skins.

RECIPES

Marrow au gratin

Peel a large marrow (summer squash) and cut it into several medium-sized pieces. Blanch them in salted water for 4-5 minutes, drain and pat them dry. Place them in a greased gratin dish on a layer of grated cheese. Pour some melted butter over the top and brown them in a medium oven.

Marrow au gratin may also be prepared with alternating layers of pieces of marrow and sliced onion (softened in butter) or with rice cooked in meat stock.

Marrow flower fritters

Pick very fresh marrow (summer squash) flowers and wash them only if really necessary. Pat them dry, dip them in a light batter and deep-fry them in hot fat at 180°C (350°F) until golden brown. Drain the fritters, sprinkle with salt and serve very hot as an hors d'oeuvre.

GOURD-MELON An oriental plant, the fruit of which looks like a marrow (squash), taste something like a cucumber and is eaten as a vegetable in South-east Asia and China. It is cooked in water and preserved in vinegar.

GROUMANDSAND GOURMENTS Synonymous until the 18th century, these two words later became clearly differentiated a groumand merely enjoy good food, whereas a gourmet knows how to choose and appreciate it. In Caracteres, la Bruyere described the gourmand as follows: 'Above all, he has a discerning palate which is never deceived, and so he never experiences the ghastly problem of eating a had stew or drinking a mediocre wine. In fact, there is a hierarchy that starts at the bottom with the goinfre (greedyguts), progress to the goulu (glutton, then the gtrmand, the friand (epicure) and the gourmet, and finally the gastronome.

GROUTER A light meal eaten in France between lunch and dinner. Until the 18th century, gouter was eaten at about 5 p.m. and constituted a proper meal, generally cold, with cakes, cheese, fruit and wine. With the change in mealtimes following the revolutions, gouter was increasingly omitted as noted by Grimod de la Reyniere: 'Now that people dine at six o'clock, they hardly ever have a guoter, except children.' Indeed, nowadays the gouter or quatre-beures is eaten only by chicken, and consists of fruit juice, bread, chocolate, biscuits (cookies) and milk.

Even when it was a full meal, the gouter was always considered common and unstylish. It was replaced by the English meal of afternoon tea, with tea and cakes. But in the countryside, gouter alinatoire (high tea) was traditionally served at the end of the Afternoon, when work in the fields was over. It was so substantial that it took the place of dinner, a simple snack of soup or milk and bread being served at night. In Spain, where mealtimes are later, 6 p.m. marks the middle of the afternoon and is the time for the mirienda, which usually consists of a cup of coffee or chocolate and cakes. Dinner is eaten at about 10 p.m.

GOYERE a speciality of the north of France, particularly Valenciennes. Its origin dates back to the Middle Ages. It was originally a cheesecake made with cream cheese, eggs and cassonade (or honey) flavoured with orange-flower water. Today it is a Maroilles cheese flan: a mixture of matured and white Maroilles, or of maroilles and drained cream or curd cheese. It is eaten very hot, as a entree with fairly strong beer or red wine. Some think that goyere owes its name to a pastrycook called Gohier (hence the old spelling gobiere). Others maintain that the name is derived from the Old French goguer, meaning to enjoy oneself.

RECIPE

Goyere

Make a short pastry with 250 g (9 oz., 2 cups) plain (all-purpose) flour, 1 egg, 125 g (4 ½ oz. ½ cup) butter and a generous pinch of salt. Roll it out to a thickness of 3 mm (1/8 in), line a flan (pie) dish with it and bake blind for 10-12 minutes. Leave to cool.

Remove the rind from half a Maroilles cheese, cut the cheese into cubes, and rub through a sieve with 200 g (7 oz., scant 1 cup) well-drained curd cheese. Add to this mixture 3 beaten eggs, 2 tablespoons crème fraiche and a pinch of salt. Seasoned generously with pepper and mix well. Pour the filling into the flan case (pie shell), level the surface and bake in a preheated oven at 220° (425°F, gas 7) for 20 minutes. Take the goyere out of the oven and trace a diamond pattern on the top with the tip of a sharp-pointed knife. Dot with cubes of butter and put back in the oven for about 15 minutes. Serving piping hot.

GOZETTE A small pocket made of puff, shortcrust or yeast pastry in which are placed slices of apple with cinnamon, fried in butter and sprinkled with soft brown sugar. The gozette pastry is closed and glazed with egg yolk, then baked.

GARDIN A tiered plinth, usually cut from sandwich bread, used for the presentation of cold dishes (such as chanuds-froids), particularly for buffets. In former times gardins were widely sued for the presentation of set pieces of confectionery; they were carved wooden stands, decorated with sugarwork (pastillage), almond paste, sugar motifs and nougat. Careme describes this decoration:

‘Let us suppose, for example, that you wish to decorate a gradin with laurel leaves. You first cut out a laurel wreath in paper. Next you give the base of the gradin a light coating of icing and stick the paper wreath to it. Now you cover the rest of the gradin with a medium grade of coarse sugar. When this is done, you remove the paper after which you sprinkle the imprint of the leaves with green pistachio sugar. Now, you have a laurel crown surrounding the base of the gradin.

‘For a large set piece with three gradins, each one can be individually decorated. This creates a graceful and elegant effect.

I have also sometimes embellished my gradins with laurel crowns made from biscuit pastry shaped like laurel leaves and coloured green, or with garlands of spun sugar. This last decoration has both brilliance and elegance.

‘I have also created gradins out of almond paste, moulded in basket moulds.

But although he favoured the presentation of set pieces on gradins, Careme maintained that young practitioners should not forget ‘that gradins of German or Italian waffles, of nougat, of glazed duchesse cakes, of puff pastry... of Genesecake or of corquembourg are immensely effective and truly belong in the realm of the great pastry-making establishments.’

And, in fact Careme was right all types of gradin mentioned above are edible, whereas the other types, regardless of how decorative they might be, were mere pieces of wood..

GRAHAM, SYLVESTER, American nutritionist (born West Suffield, Connecticut, 1894; died Northampton, Massachusetts, 1951). He became the leader of a crusade against the bad eating habits of his compatriots, denouncing excessively spicy condiments and overindulgence in meat. For him, the cure-all was bran and it was essential to make bread exclusively from wholemeal (whole-wheat) flour under his trademark name. Graham bread, containing all the original bran, marketed in the United States and in Europe since the mid-19th century, was the first internationally consumed bread. It is a wholemeal bread with a very dense texture and it keeps extremely well. Graham crackers, still one of the most popular American biscuits (cookies), are made with wholemeal flour and are named after Sylvester Graham.

GRAINER The French word grainier applies to cooked sugar tending to crystallize and turn cloudy or to a fondant mixture that has been overheated. The word also described whisked egg whites lacking cohesion and the property of holding air. Instead of becoming thick and foamy, the egg whites form a multitude of small particles when beating stops. This defect is often due to greasy equipment. It may be possible to correct this by adding 2-3 drops of vinegar just as the egg whites are beginning to form small bubbles before rising.

GRIMMONT A style of serving shellfish cold, usually reserved for lobster and crayfish. The shellfish are first cooked in court-bouillon, then cooked. The flesh of the tail is made into escalopes (scallops), garnished with slices of truffle and glazed with jelly. The shell is filled with a mousse made from the flesh of the claws and the coral. The escalopes are placed on top, alternating with poached, glazed oysters. The dish is decorated with lettuce hearts and parsley.

The word is also used for a classic preparation of poached chicken, from which the breasts and breastbone are removed. The cavity is filled with lark fillets, mushroom tops, and cockscombs and kidneys, bound together with a béchamel sauce flavoured with truffle oil, on which the breast filets, cut into thin strips, are laid. The dish is then covered with sauce suprême, sprinkled with Parmesan cheese and browned in the oven.

GRAMOLATE Also known as gramolata. A type of sorbet made from a granita mixture . it is served between main courses of as a refreshment during an evening party. It should not be confused with gremolata, a condiment in Italian cookery, which is made of a mixture of orange and lemon rind (zest), chopped parsley and garlic and is used in ragouts and, mot often, in osso bucco.

GRANA PADANO Cooked pressed AOC Italian cheese made from partly skimmed cow's milk (32% fat), with a natural crust coated with oil. It is a lightly convex cylinder weighing 24-40 kg (53-88 lb.). known since the 12th century, it has a very hard, granular texture, and a smoky, slightly rancid taste. In cooking it is often used grated.

GRANCHER, MARCEL ETIENNE Gastronomic writer and chronicler (born Lons-le-Saunier, 1897); died Le Cannet, 1976). He settled in Lyn and founded the Academie Rabelais and the Academe Rabelais and the Academie des Gastronomes Lyonnais. In 1937, together with Curnonsky, he published a work called Lyn, capitale de la gastronomie. He also wrote a number of novels in which food plays an important part, such as Le Charcutier de Machouville (1942), and was a connoisseur of wines, which he describes in De vins d'Ileure IV a ceux de Brillat-Savarin (1952). In Cinquante Ans a table (1953), he describe the achivement of perfection in gastronomy, after centuries of cookery, in the following terms: 'We did not immediately come up with bearnaise, Bercy and poivrade sauces. It took more than a single attempt to discover reduced cream, marinade and forcemeat. We did not straightway invent barding fat, the touch of garlic, and the thin slice of truffe under the skin... While genius is spontaneous, its manifestations nevertheless require the passage of time before glorious perfection is achieved, this is particularly true in the area of food and drink.. Magical dishes, magical words : a great cook is, when all is said and done, a great poet... for was it not a visit from the Muses that inspired the person who first had the idea of marrying recipe and chicken, grape and thrush, potatoes and entrecote, Parmesan and pasta, aubergine (eggplant) and tomato's, Chambertin and cocked, liqueur brandy and wood cook onion and tripe?

GRAND-DUC The name given to various dishes created in the Parisian restaurants frequented by the Russian aristocracy during the second Empire and at the turn of the 20th century. These dishes contain asparagus tips and truffles. Poached fillets of sole covered with Mornay sauce, arranged in a ring around asparagus tips and crayfish tails and garnished with thin slices of truffe,; soft0boiled (soft-cooked) or poached eggs covered with Monray sauce, browned, garnished with a slice of truffe, placed on a bed of fried croutons or puff-pastry croustades and surrounded by asparagus tips in butter; sautéed meat served with the cooking liquid mixed with Madeira an dperigourdine sauce, topped with thin slices of truffl an dsurrounded with bundles of asparagus tips. Stuffed turkey grand-duc is a very elaborate recipe created in 1906 by M. Valmy-Joyeuse, while he was a change of kitchens of the Marquise de Mazenda.

RECIPE

Stuffed turkey grand-duc

Slit open a turkey along the pack and stuff with the following mixture: 500 g ml (18 oz) chicken rubbed through a fine sieve, 500 ml (17 fl oz. 2 cups) double (heavy) cream, 250 g (9 oz) foie gras poached in port wine and rubbed through a sieve. Mix all these ingredients throughly and season. Add 12 truffles, peeled and cooked for 10 minutes in a little liqueur brandy, and 24 chicken hearts with the blood vessels removed, which have been soaked in water, steeped in white Malaga wine, drained, dried in a cloth, stuffed with a puree of York ham and poached for 15 minutes in truffe essence.

Carefully reshape the stuffed turkey. Cover with slices of raw ham or bacon, and enclose in a large layer of lining pastry, taking care to keep the shape of the bird as far as possible. Bake in a preheated oven at 180°C (250°F, gas 4) for 2 ½ hours. During cooking, cover the turkey with greaseproof (wax) paper folded into four, so that it will cook all through without browning the pastry too soon. Serve the turkey freshly cooked, with a demi-glace sauce flavoured with truffle essence.

GRAND MARINIER A liqueur evolved by the Mariner-Lapostolle family firm in 1880. It is based on oranges, and there are two types. Cordon rouge includes Cognac, cordon jaune is slightly lower in strength. Grandi mariner is often used in sweet dishes, such as souffles or with crepes or in whipped cream.

GRAND-MERE Describing dishes similar to those called bone femme or en cocotte. The term is applied particularly to a chicken casserole served with pieces of fried bacon, small brown-glazed onions, sautéed mushrooms and fried new potatoes. The same garnish can accompany fried entrecote (sirloin) or rump steak.

RECIPE

Entrecote grand-mere

Prepare 12 small glazed onions, 12 blanched mushroom caps and 50 g (2 oz. 1/3 cup) diced blanched salt pork or bacon. Sauté the steak in butter, browning both sides, then add the vegetables and bacon to the pan and cook all together. Meanwhile, prepare and fry some small new potatoes until browned. Arrange the steak on the serving dish surrounded by the garnishes and keep hot. Dilute the pan juices with a little stock, bring to the boil and pour over the steak. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and served with the potatoes.

GRABD VEFOUR A Parisian restaurant situated in the Galerie de Beaujolais in the Palais-Royal. Founded by Aubertot in 1784 and initially called the Café de Chartres, it was first taken over by charrier, who served English breakfasts and whose scallops with mushrooms were famous, and then (in 1820) by Jean Vedour. Bonaparte, Brillat-Savarin, Murat, Grimod de la Reyniere, Lamartine, Thiers and Sainte-Beuve frequented this well-poultry mayonnaise. Other proprietors succeeded Jean Vefour, but the restaurant kept his name. When, under the Second Empire, one of the Vefour's brothers opened his own restaurant in the Palais-Royal, a distinction was made between the Grand Vefour and the Petis Vefour (which closed in 1920). At the end of the 19th century the Vefour ran into difficulties, but after World War Ii Louis Vaudable (whose restaurant, Maxim's, closed) took it over and in 948 went into partnership with a young chef, Raymond Oliver, who became the maitre of the restaurant two years later. Jean Cocteau and Colette, to whom several recipes are dedicated, frequented the restaurant and helped to establish its excellent reputations; its 18th-century décor has remained intact.

GRAND VENEUR A term used to describe dishes of ground game, roasted or sautéed, covered with grand veneur sauce (also called venison sauce). This is poivrade sauce (sometimes made with the blood of the animal) with redurrant jelly and cream added. Grand veneur dishes are usually accompanied chestnut puree.

RECIPES

Grand veneur sauce

Prepare a poivrade sauce using the trimmings of a piece of cooked venison, and boil it down to obtain at least 200 ml (7 fl. oz. ¾ cup). Strain, then blend it with 1 tablespoon reducrant jelly and 2 tablespoons cream. Whisk, if the sauce is to accompany hare, mix 1 tablespoon hares' blood with 2 tablespoons strained marinade and add this mixture to the reduced and strained sauce.

Saddle of roebuck grand veneur

Trim the saddle, then lard it with strips of bacon that have been marinated in Cognac with chopped parsley, salt, pepper and a little oil, Roast it and arrange on a serving dish surrounded by braised chestnuts or chestnut puree and dauphine potatoes. Serve with a grand veneur sauce.

GRANITA A type of Italian sorbet popularized by Tortoni in Paris in the 19th century. It is a half-frozen preparation with a granular texture's (hence its name), made of a lightly sweetened syrup or a oil a syrup flavoured with coffee or liqueur. Unlike sorbet, granita does not contain any Italian meringue.

It is served in sundae dishes or a glass bowl, either between courses or as a refreshment.

RECIPE

Granita

Make a light syrup with fruit juice (such as lemon, orange, tangerine, passion fruit or mango) or very strong coffee. Cool the syrup, then pour it into an ice tray and freeze for 3-4 hours, without stirring. The granita will then have a granular texture.

GRAPES. The fruit of the vine, which grows in bunches on a stalk. The skin, which may be green, yellow or purple, encloses a sweet pulp with one to four seeds. Both white and black varieties are used to make wine. There are also varieties cultivated as desert grapes, which are served as fresh fruit or used in cooking, and other varieties are dried to produce raisins, sultanas (golden raisins) and currants.

It is known that in the stone Age wild vines were already established in the Caucasus where they originated, as well as in the Mediterranean region. Very early on people discovered how to make a fermented drink from grapes. The cults of Osiris and Dionysus, as well as the biblical story of Noah, evidence of the antiquity of the cultivation of vines and the manufacture of wine. After the Greeks and Romans, who learned the technique of drying grapes, came the Gauls, inventors of the cask. The Gauls made great progress in the cultivation of vines, while later still monks throughout Europe became progressively more adept in the art of winemaking. Throughout this period, fresh and dried grapes were always available.

